This indulgent and amicable frame of mind was suddenly changed to wrath and bitterness of spirit by the discovery of the letter, with its valuable inclosure, which Miss Cynthia had deposited in a conspicuous place upon the kitchen table.

"My wages, an' fifty dollars extry fer long an' faithful services!" snorted Abby. "Well, I want-to-know! I c'n leave the key under the door mat, kin I? Well——"

Her grim face paled slowly as the inexorable nature of the communication forced itself upon her attention. "W'y—w'y!—she reely wants I should go—an' I a-livin' here in this house sence she was a baby! I remember it's 'o it was yiste'd'y. I was livin' to home when Mis' Day come after me. 'We've got a little girl three years old,' she says; 'but she's a good, obedient child,' she says. An' she cert'nly was, poor little thing! I never did care much fer childern; but she was sech a white-faced, scared-lookin' little mite, an' her ma was always so up-an'-down with her, let alone her pa an' Gran'ma an' Gran'pa Breyfogle. All of 'em took a han' at fetchin' her up, off an' on. None of 'em b'lieved in sparin' the rod, neither. My! how she us't to holler some days! Then agin, she'd creep 'round like a little lamb, 's quiet an' good 's could be. They kep' her dressed jes' so clean an' neat, an' she wa'n't never 'lowed to muss her clo'es, or to play out overmuch. They kep' her busy a-doin' her stints an' learnin' her cat'chism. She cert'nly was a good child. An' t' think of her a-breakin' out now—after all those years!"

"A FIRE OF INQUISITIVE EYES WAS CENTRED UPON THE CROWN OF MISS CYNTHIA'S BLACK BONNET"

Abby Whiton scorned the display of sentiment of any sort; but alone in the familiar kitchen, painful tears crowded her dry, old eyes and coursed salt and bitter down her lean cheeks, as she again perused Miss Cynthia's brief and decisive communication. Could she have known it, there were other drops scarce dry among the few words of dismissal and farewell. Thirty years of life together in any relationship knits bonds that are bound to hurt when they are broken.

"Mebbe I was kind of foolish to undertake t' cross her so," acknowledged poor Abby. "Come to think of it, she's reely the boss here, an' her Gran'pa Breyfogle's ways are a-growin' on her, I guess. Course she can't help that! But it cert'nly is queer how it come on her all of a sudden. 'W'y,' only last week she says to me, 'Abby,' she says, 'don't you think we'd better invite the minister an' his wife to tea pretty soon?' 'Land, no!' I says, 'not this spring. We've had 'em twict a'ready sence Mis' Buckthorn had 'em to her house. The' ain't no sense in bein' too lavish,' I says. 'It costs money every time we hev comp'ny.' I says. An' she give right in without a word, same as she always done."

"My! ef I ain't saved an' scrimped fer her! I'll bet I ain't wasted a bit of victuals the size o' my thumb-nail sence her ma died. I've jest took the hull r'sponsibility right onto my shoulders, an' I hain't shirked m' duty neither. I reelly couldn't ha' done more fer her ef I'd 'a be'n a blood relation o' hern, an' now——. Well, I'll hev to go; that's all the' is 'bout it. But what in under the sun she'll do 'ithout me is more'n I c'n tell. More'n likely she'll git in some slack, young girl at'll throw her money out the back door faster 'an she c'n bring it in at the front. I know 'em, with their good-for-nothin', shif'less ways! Well, I'm a-goin; I can't help what happens to her now."

In pursuance of this resolution, Miss Whiton produced a long-cherished stump of lead pencil from its chosen niche atop the kitchen clock, and painfully scrawled a few words on the back of the paper upon which the farewell words of her mistress were inscribed.

"Miss Cynthy," she wrote, "I ain't in the habit of takin' no money I don't earn. I don't want no fifty dollars extry fer doin' right. You can spend it on wall-paper, if you want to. But if I was you, I should lay it up for a rainy day that ain't fur off. You won't git anybody in a hurry that will do fer you what I done. Yours resp'fully, Abby Whiton."

This done, she sealed up the unshed balance of her tears with two or three vigorous sniffs of self-righteous approval; packed her belongings with a long-armed energy, approaching fierceness; donned her best black alpaca and her old-fashioned black hat, trimmed with purple asters, the gift of Grandmother Breyfogle.

The kitchen was painfully clean and silent, as she stood and looked about it for the last time. The loud-voiced clock, which had ticked a faithful accompaniment to her many labors during thirty years, sounded solemnly in her ears, as it had done on the days when some member of the family had lain dying above stairs.

"Oh, my!" wailed Abby Whiton, suddenly throwing up her hands. "Seems 's 'o I couldn't stan' it nohow!"

She whirled blindly about and went out of the door, turned the clumsy, old key in its worn lock, drew it out and thrust it under the mat. Then she walked steadily down the path and out into the street, her head high, her eyes fixed straight before her.

CHAPTER VII.

If Miss Cynthia had cherished any unpleasant doubts as to the warmth of her reception at the hands of George Blossom's mother, these doubts were immediately put to rest at the sight of Mrs. Blossom herself, rosy, stout and smiling, her voluminous purple calico skirts and spotless apron flying wide on the April wind, as she hurried down the path to meet her guest.

"Well, now I call this reel kind and neighborly!" she cried, enthusiastically kissing Miss Cynthia's thin cheek. "I'm kep' in so constant with the milk an' all I don't get out much; but I do enjoy to see folks. Our George, he's been tellin' me 'bout the job you've given him at your house, and I wanted to tell you how glad I am. He's so ambitious, our George is. I don't know as I c'n make out just what he doos want to do; I sh'd think he' be pretty well satisfied to be gettin' along as well as he is, with a good trade an' all. But I suspicion there 's a girl at the root of the matter."

The good woman winked [illegible] jovially at Miss Cynthia, who found herself in quite a pleasant flutter of anticipation. She had [illegible] lowed to visit or to [illegible] her younger days, [illegible] the feeble stirrings of [illegible] tions had been [illegible] suppressed

CONTINUED ON PAGE [illegible]

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

THE WAY TO GLORY FOR BOTH WORLDS

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

"THE intercessory prayer" which Christ uttered at the close of the Lord's Supper, before leaving the "upper room" to go to Gethsemane, has a peculiar significance when laid upon the background of the great atonement day of the Jews. Once a year the Jewish high priest entered into the Holy of holies to intercede for his people, sprinkling the blood of beasts upon the mercy-seat, and accompanying his prayers in their behalf with the burning of incense. He was clothed from head to foot in pure white linen, emblematic of the fact that he had offered sacrifices for his own sins, and been forgiven before he could intercede for others. His "golden clothes," consisting of the blue robe of the ephod, with its golden bells, and the ephod with its embroidery of blue, purple and scarlet, and the gorgeous breastplate of twelve precious stones, had been laid aside for the pure white linen clothes before he entered into the Holy of Holies, and were resumed when he came out.

The Cross was the mercy-seat upon which our High Priest sprinkled his own blood. He needed not to be arrayed in white linen, for his character was spotless. And thus he could intercede for his apostles looking toward the sacrifice he was to make rather than looking backward to it. And he prayed not only for the apostles, but for all who in all time should believe on his name. He prayed that they should be kept from all evil; that they should be helped to all right living; that they should be sanctified through the truth; that they should be used of God to spread his Gospel, the truth; that they should work together in harmony; that they should be perfect in every good word and work. And after that prayer, which was the true "Lord's prayer," he with his apostles left the upper room, and came through the valley of the Kedron to Gethsemane.

Illustration and Application

With this last prayer of Christ we may fitly study all the prayers recorded of him, and out of all construct a breastplate of the proper objects and subjects of prayer. We should live as a child ever near his father, "talking with God" as Moses did, "as a man talketh with his friend," yet coming not in our own worthiness but "in his Name" to whom angels cry, "Thou art worthy"; and speaking not our own words but through the Spirit, always submissively, glad to remember "If we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us," and trusting Him to refuse us in love when we ask the thing that should not be.

The "Lord's Prayer," commonly so called, gives a needed reproof to the selfishness that invades even our prayers in putting the larger prayers for the spread of God's kingdom before our personal petitions for bread or even forgiveness. The spirit of that example would also place before our own personal affairs the prayer for our country, for Christian unity, for those in special need of divine and human sympathy. But our "daily bread" is a subject of prayer in its subordinate place, and also our greater personal need of deliverance from sin, and full self-development for useful service.

"Forgive, as we forgive"—that forgiveness of injuries on our own part must precede the very beginning of prayer (Matt. 6: 12). A poor, ignorant, colored man, who had been a slave, came to a missionary and asked to be taught to pray. She began to teach him the Lord's Prayer, sentence by sentence, explaining it to his entire satisfaction until she came to the one on forgiveness. "What dat mean?" said he. "That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you." "Stop, teacher; can't do that," and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying, "Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Ole massa once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crowbar, an' trow me out for dead, and I met him on de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him, an' said, 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer."

As to the subordinate place that selfish requests should have in prayer here is a good illustration: There was an old Bible woman in Leicester, England, whose custom it was to carry flowers to the hospital, and talk about their souls to patients, nurses, and even doctors. One of the doctors standing in the doorway one day remarked, "Do you believe God will hear your prayer? I'm hard up. If I ask him would he send me five pounds?" The old lady answered, "If you were introduced to the Prince of Wales, would you put your hand in his pocket at once?" "No," he said, "not till I knew him better." "You will need to be a great deal better acquainted with God before you can expect such an answer as you wish." But we may be so well acquainted with God that it will be perfectly natural to bring to him, as to our nearest and best friend, every need of our bodies as well as our souls.

While a dominant thought of getting may spoil a prayer, giving will help it forward. When a minister was called on to pray in a missionary convention, he first tossed a coin into the plate, and said, "I cannot pray until I have given something." That gift was itself the prayer, "Thy kingdom come." Dr. T. L. Cuyler says on that incident: "The prayer that has power with God must be prepaid prayer. If we expect a letter to reach its destination we put a stamp on it; otherwise it goes to the Dead-letter Office. There is what may be called a Dead-prayer Office. and thousands of well-worded petitions get buried up there. All of God's promises have conditions. In prayer we must first be sure that we are doing our part if we expect God to do his part." And, it should be added, our part includes not only a gift of money but the better gift of service, the gift of our very selves to God and man. "Here am I; send me."

"THESE ARE IN THE WORLD, AND I COME TO THEE"

In this last prayer of Christ, which is our special theme to-day, the characteristic word is "glorify." It shows the way to glorify not only God but ourselves, in both worlds. Mr. Moody, commenting on the words, "They that be wise shall shine," once said, "We all want to shine." This chapter tells us how we may.

. . .

1. Glorified by Self-Sacrificing Service (17:1). One of the plainest lessons on the face of history, that the way to shine is not by being served, but by being of service. Glory can not be bought with money, nor won with the selfish spoils of ambition. The most glorious name of the ages is that of One who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and give his life a ransom for many." Hear him in the opening word of his last prayer: "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son." What is this "hour" to which he has been looking forward as the consummation of all his purposes? What else but that hour to which he looked forward in the glory of the Mount of Transfiguration and coronation, as something grander yet, as he "spake of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem." Let those who talk proudly of "accomplishments," note that to give his life for others was the consummate accomplishment of Christ, of which he said to the Father, "I have finished the work that thou gavest me to do." That is success to finish the work God gives you to do, whether to die for men or to live for them. Never more pertinently than here can we quote the song of dying Helen H. Jackson, who did a great work in the last part of her life for the defense of the Indians, but who recalled sadly that the former part of her life had been given to the aimless small talk of literature.

Father, I scarcely dare to pray,
So clear I see, now it is done,
That I have wasted half my day,
And left my work but just begun;

So clear I see that things I thought
Were right or harmless were a sin;
So clear I see that I have sought,
Unconscious, selfish aims to win;

In outskirts of thy kingdom vast,
Father, the humblest spot give me;
Set me the lowliest task thou hast,
Let me, repentant, work for thee!

Right here, in the presence of these contrasted last prayers, we may well face the great problem, best presented in a book by Rev. Hugh Black, of Edinburgh. Is self-sacrifice, or self-development the true religious ideal? In other words, is the asceticism of the monk or the lesser asceticism of the Puritan, the true Christian path? Or is the Greek's pursuit of self-culture as modified by Christianity in such men as Matthew Arnold, a better way? He finds that self-culture by itself is but a subtle form of self-indulgence. And asceticism, apparently fighting the externals of religion, he shows to be itself but a subtle form of externalism, that rests too much in mere penances and self-denials, too little regardful of the inner spirit. He finds the true ideal in the thought of service dominating both self-culture and self-denial, taking from the first its selfishness and giving to the second the spirit of Christ. We are to develop ourselves to the utmost in body and mind, for the sake of being of greater service, and to deny ourselves in turn, when by such self-denial we can help another. Even the best self-development requires more or less of asceticism, denying the lower self for the sake of the higher self.

Then, welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sit, nor stand, but go!
Be our joys three parts pain!
Strive, and hold cheap the strain;
Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge
the throe!"

Let us also learn that self-denial and self-sacrifice is social service, kindred to that which glorified Christ, and has glorified the martyrs and patriots, and heroes of history.

. . .

2. Glorified by Christian Unity. (vs. 11, 21). Not only is God glorified by the spirit of unity in his people, but it is thus the Church is glorified also. And it is by lack of unity that God and the church are both dishonored. Think of Africans whose religious ideas are of the crudest sort, being confused by seventeen sectarian banners. Bothered with explanations of the microscopic differences between three kinds of Methodists and ten kinds of Presbyterians. When Porto Rico, tired of Spanish Catholic domination, opened to us through the war, it was hardly less than a sin that Protestant conflicts were at once represented by seven denominations.

It is clearly our duty to seek both unity and union. To that end let us emphasize the agreements and accomplish union wherever possible, especially in home and foreign missionary fields, where division is most harmful. A notable step in church union has been taken in India. The work of all the Presbyterian Churches in that country has been united under one General Assembly. This includes the Church of Scotland, United Free Church of Scotland, Presbyterian Church of England, Presbyterian Church of Ireland, Presbyterian Church of the United States, Reformed (Dutch) Church of America, and the Presbyterian Church of Canada. The Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in the United States are also working toward a federation, with special reference to preventing duplication in missionary work at home and abroad.

*International Sunday School Lesson for May 14. "Jesus Prays for his Followers" John 17: 15-26. Golden Text: "I pray for them" John 17: 9. HOME READINGS from Prophecies of Christ, in Red Letter Bible—Sunday, May 14: Deut. 18: 15-19. Monday, Psa. 22. Tuesday, Psa. 45. Wednesday, Psa. 89: 1-37. Thursday, Psa. 110. Friday, Psa. 118: 22-29. Saturday, Isa. 2: 1-4.

It is Certainly a Gem

Please accept my thanks for your beautiful Calendar; also for Mrs. Sangster's Good Manners for All Occasions. It is certainly a gem. I wish there could be a copy in every home. As for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we simply could not get along without it. It has been a welcome guest in our home for the last nine years.

Eagle River, Wis. MRS. JAMES FLANAGAN.

Our Household Circle

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Trying to do Too Much

If one were asked to name the almost universal weakness of good and sensible women, she might easily do it in the phrase, Trying to do too much. This is the rock on which splits the ship of home serenity, far too often. Very few of us understand or accept our limitations. We live in a period of intense activity, and the contagion of haste is in the air we breathe. We have almost reached the point of condemning out of court the woman who carries with her everywhere an atmosphere of leisure, who is never in a hurry, and who seems equal to the day's demands.

"You are such a busy woman," is the usual formula when some favor is asked, or the suggestion made that a new office be undertaken, while the speaker goes on to add, "But only busy women have time for what there is to do in this busy world." In a measure this is true. Yet between the languor and laziness that waste time in unprofitable idleness, and the rushing haste and frantic effort to accomplish more than one has time or strength to meet, there is a wide and vital difference. Partly, no doubt, the difference is temperamental. One person is naturally quick and impulsive, energetic and ambitious, and delights in being incessantly occupied. Another is sluggish, apathetic, and inert. It is troublesome for her to think and hard for her to act. Behind the impetuous energy there must be a quick brain, or the hand would not be so ready to perform, nor the heart so ready to accept new tasks. However this may be, there is grave reason for urging women to be cautious.

* * *

Sanitariums spring up on every side and there is no lack of patients to fill them. Women prematurely break down from nervous exhaustion. The strength and vigor that ought to last unimpaired to four score, are used up before the meridian has been reached. A woman, unless she possesses uncommon staying power, cannot keep house, make clothes for children, mend for a family, send cakes and candy to the Woman's Exchange, embroider doilies for pin-money, write letters to a large circle of kindred, undertake a great amount of church work and belong to three or four clubs, without perilously risking her health and very possibly endangering her life. Yet in every street of every town there are women who not only do their own work, or manage incompetent servants, which is a more difficult task, and besides do some part of everything else that is mentioned.

* * *

People abroad, where life moves more quietly, are amazed at the unflagging zeal and ceaseless hurry of American women. The English woman, the Scotch and the German alike, administer their households in a way that is ease itself, in comparison with the waste of energy common with us. Women who possess the most advanced education of the day seem to husband their powers with as little economy as do the illiterate. How to save one's health, strength, beauty and tranquillity is an art better worth studying than most of the accomplishments over which years are spread in the heyday of youth.

* * *

In a thoughtful book, Studies of the Soul, written by J. Brierley, and published in London, occurs this passage, which is pertinent here, and though intended for another audience, well suits the ordinary housekeeper. The article from which I quote is on the negative capability of the soul.

"Some of the best results of life come from the cultivated power of not seeing and of not feeling. In mental matters, for instance, every student knows that half the battle of successful thinking lies in his faculty of abstraction. He must become blind and deaf to a hundred things that assail his attention, before he can make headway with the one thing he would investigate. Important in the intellectual, this faculty becomes absolutely indispensable in the social and domestic spheres. Where husbands and wives remain lovers through life, their conjugal good fortune owes much to a cultivated and happy blindness on both sides. There are faults in plenty for the seeing, but they look the other way. Peace between mistress and servants depends also largely on the faculty the former possesses of shutting her eyes, or at least of winking hard on occasion. Worthy to be praised, to be compared indeed with the wise woman of the Proverbs, is she who, loving cleanliness, does nevertheless not upset the peace of a household of people because a speck of dust, yea, peradventure, six specks have been found in the wrong place."

I entreat the over-busy woman who may read this, to cultivate in her life the art of letting things go. Learn judiciously to neglect what is not important. Learn to say No decidedly when requested to serve on too many Boards, to spend too many evenings in societies for the amelioration of the poor, or to entertain too often and too elaborately in your own home. Every life to be fruitful must have its intervals of repose. Are you securing for yourself these intervals?

Copyright, 1894, by the Taber Art Co.

THE MESSAGE TO MY DEAR

Look down, my little Jessica, is Cleon waiting there?
Then gently lower this white note, through myrtle-scented air;
And draw the basket up again. Ah me! but life is fair!

Extra Work on Sunday

A CORRESPONDENT calls attention to the fact that for her, and for other housekeepers who do their own work, Sunday is the hardest day of the whole week. Instead of the rest day our Heavenly Father meant it to be, it is a day of strenuous toil and great weariness. The cooking of an elaborate Sunday dinner served at midday takes up the morning; going to church is out of the question; and dish-washing occupies a good part of the afternoon; neither soul nor body are recruited when Monday morning's sun rises, and the opportunity for spiritual refreshment is wholly lost.

Our friend long felt that the "men-folks," her husband and her sons and any hired people in the house, had a right to the sacrifice of her Sabbath, because they worked so hard during the week. But she has arrived at the conclusion that this was a mistake. Her present method is to prepare the Sunday dinner almost wholly on Saturday, simply warming up the meat and vegetables when she returns from church, and having cold desserts; with the addition of hot coffee her table is abundantly spread, no fault is found, and she does not lose her Sabbath's opportunity of joy and peace.

This plan might well be followed by other burdened women. The Sabbath is profaned by needless work as often as by thoughtless play. The men and boys in a household where one woman's hands do all the work, should lend their help on Sunday. They may render efficient aid in saving steps for her and in washing the dishes, if she will show them how, and accept their assistance.

God's day is given us from God as his sweet thought for us, a pause in the week's tasks, when heart and hand may refrain from weary labor. When we use it for extra tasks, we frustrate the divine purpose.

Our Boys

Our boys at school are very dear indeed to their parents, and we frequently feel that they need more delicate handling than their sisters. The girl's pathway through school is an easier one than the boy's. She is more tenderly considered, and her faults and shortcomings are more leniently dealt with than his. Teachers are too apt to judge the individual by his fellows, and to overlook the needs and temperament of the shy boy, or the dull boy, who cannot advance as swiftly as others in his class. While believing that it is fair and right to sustain teachers in every possible way, nobody should fancy for a moment that they are infallible. The man who taught Sir Edward Burne-Jones to draw, saw no signs of genius in the single pupil who was destined to make a famous name, and found the lad's efforts mediocre.

With the best intentions, teachers form their conclusions in the mass. They suppose that because they know boys, they are acquainted with each boy. They form theories and fit the facts to suit them, precisely as the prosecuting attorney and the police do, in a majority of cases; not that they lack cleverness, but because they are unconsciously bound by prejudice. If a mother or a father has anywhere a duty, it is to make a study of each boy in the home, and co-operate with the teacher in the boy's upbringing.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—LENNIE R. I do not know anything about the [illegible] ters you mention. R. S. V. P. is the proper form [illegible] answer. It means, answer if you please.

—THERESA. There are many reasons why [illegible] you to marry a man who is not of your own [illegible] is a member of the colored race. He may [illegible] your friends would probably exclude [illegible] there is a possibility that the offspring [illegible] not be of your color, but of the [illegible] have several times lately been asked [illegible] ommend people of different races to [illegible]

Royal

Baking Powder

is the greatest of modern-time helps to perfect cooking.

A PRODUCT OF A GREAT REVIVAL A

THE GREATEST OF ALL

REVIVAL HYMN BOOKS

Church Hymns and Gospel Songs

BY SANKEY, McGRANAHAN & STEBBINS.

NEARLY 700,000 SOLD!

Used and Endorsed by the CLERGY OF ALL DENOMINATIONS.

NEW EDITION!—JUST ISSUED!

With SUPPLEMENT of NEWEST SACRED SONGS added regularly to all Editions and Bindings.

Music & Words, all Large Type, 30c. by mail, $25 a 100

Words Only, with New Supp., 12c. by mail, $10 a 100.

Returnable Samples mailed to "earnest inquirers."

Published by the publishers of the famous "Gospel Hymns."

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

PAY OFF YOUR CHURCH DEBT

By Giving a ZOBO Concert

The easiest way for any Church to raise money

Zobo Instruments can be played by any one who can hum a tune.

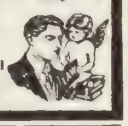
NO MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE REQUIRED

Zobo Entertainments for home, church and Sunday school sent Free on receipt of name and address.

Strauss Mfg. Co., 395 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

LEARN LAW AT HOME

In the time you now waste you can secure admittance to the bar in your own state and be a success. We make the way so straight and easy it is little short of marvelous. To learn how costs nothing. Isn't it worth your while to ask for free book?



Sprague Correspondence School of Law, 411 Majestic Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

Can You Draw This?

Copy it as well as you can, send to us and we will give you a handsome portfolio of drawings by the noted artist, Charles Lederer. A course of lessons by mail, at home, may qualify you to earn a good salary as an artist and cartoonist. Instruction individual and exactly adapted to your talent.

THE LEDERER SCHOOL OF DRAWING,

Chattanooga, Tennessee

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

for getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.

P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New York

CHILDRENS DAY SERVICES for the Sunday School.

SPARKLING JEWELS. SWEET MELODIES.

Two services of superior merit, 35c per doz., postpaid. Send 10c for samples of our three best including the above. "THE CHURCH CHOIR" for May contains suitable anthems. 10c per copy. FREE for the asking a 16 pp. pamphlet of Spec. Pages of choir music.

GEO. F. ROSCHE & CO., Chicago, 50 Michigan Ave. New York, 22 N. William St.

THE WAY OF LIFE

A New Book, by H. M. McClusky

Never has there been a book written that makes the Way of Life plainer, and there is nothing more important than to know the Way of Life, possess the Way of Life, and lead others in the Way of Life. Therefore send $1.00 and the Way of Life will be sent postpaid. M. E. MUNSON, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York.

ROYALTY PAID ON SONG-POEMS and Musical Compositions. We arrange and popularize. PIONEER MUSIC PUB. CO. (Inc.) A 321 Manhattan Building CHICAGO, ILL.

WANTED A few live, energetic persons to become associated with us. A rare chance. Write for particulars. Address, THE NEW JERSEY MFG. CO. Jersey City, N. J. (Inc. 1890).

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 395

by the frugal Abby Whiton. Miss Cynthia experienced an entirely new and delightful sensation as she found herself ensconced in Mrs. Blossom's comfortable, sunshiny sitting-room. There were scarlet geraniums blooming in the clear windows, and a yellow canary singing riotously in a gilt cage. There were books and magazines, too, with gay covers, and a deep chair with cushions.

"Our George is a great hand for readin'," Mrs. Blossom explained with smiling pride. "An' he 's always gettin' me something new an' pretty. He bought me the canary and this chair for my birthday. I never see anybody like that boy for thinkin' up things to do for other folks. I guess he'll make somebody a pretty good husband, some of these day."

"Is it Rosalie Scott?" asked Miss Cynthia, with simplicity.

Mrs. Blossom laughed exuberantly.

"Has George been talkin' to you 'bout her a-ready?" she inquired. "Well, I declare, he does beat all! I tell him he oughtn't to wear his heart on his sleeve the way he does; but he 's just like me; I never could keep in 'bout anything I really cared about. Rosalie 's a lovely girl. My! I guess she is! If our George can get her. But I don't know; she's been away to school, and I guess her pa and ma think our George ain't up to her level. We think he 's up to most anybody's level, as far as smartness an' goodness goes. Of course, we ain't rich, an' we ain't be'n able to do for George the way we'd like to; but we think there ain't a nicer boy anywhere than our George." Her motherly eyes demanded instant corroboration from Miss Cynthia.

"He was certainly very kind to me yesterday," Miss Cynthia said sincerely. "I'm glad I met him up there on the hill. Perhaps I shouldn't have thought of——"

"No, I don't s'pose you would, really," chimed in Mrs. Blossom apologetically. "Our George is so full of ideas, an' he 's real pushin', too, in his business. It'll be quite a tear-up at your house to do all you're talking of. An' Abby Whiton's gone! I sh'd think you'd reelly dread to make a change. She must have been pretty near like one o' the family, after all these years."

"Yes," said Miss Cynthia, with a troubled little smile "that was just it. She was so much like one of the family that she—I—I thought I should like to have things different—for a year, maybe."

"I sh'd think you would enjoy a change on some accounts; most everybody does," agreed Mrs. Blossom cautiously. She looked hard at her visitor, her honest brown eyes filled with frank surprise and curiosity. "I used to know your mother some, when we were both girls," she went on with a reminiscent smile. "She always lived at home after she was married, and you were her only child. Her folks couldn't bear to let her out of their sight, I remember; an' they was just the same with you, I've heerd tell."

"I always stayed at home a good deal," admitted Miss Cynthia, with an air of proud reserve. "There didn't seem to be any call to go out much. Then, there was sickness, so——"

"Of course, of course," sighed Mrs. Blossom; "most of us is kep' in by one thing or another. But now the' ain't anything to hender you, I sh'd say. An' I guess you 'll begin to have a good time, once you get your house all fixed up." She nodded and smiled encouragingly. "You've got such nice big rooms at your house you c'n entertain company reel nice, an' have folks to stay with you, too. It ain't as if you was old—why, you can't be more 'n——"

Miss Cynthia blushed resentfully; then she slowly paled. "I'm thirty-three," she said, in a low, determined voice. "I don't mean to wait to begin my good times. I've waited too long, now."

"Well, I must say you're real sensible," observed Mrs. Blossom, wonderingly. "Most of us keeps a jog-trottin' right along, without seein' anything ahead of us except our work. I know I do."

"What do you think is the best way to give things away?" asked Miss Cynthia suddenly. "My house is so full of all sorts of furniture and clothes and fancy-work and—and—things. I want to give them away."

Her hostess looked hopelessly mystified. "Our George was sayin'——" she began. Then she laughed comfortably. "Well, I declare, if that ain't a new idee! Most of us is busy the endurin' while tryin' to hold on to our old things. But p'rhaps on account of the paintin' an' paperin', you was thinkin' of refurnishin'. You might have an auction; or——" The good woman's face lighted with the fire of a new idea. "Did you ever hear of a rummage sale? I was readin' 'bout one in the Ladies' Household Treasury the other day."

Miss Cynthia shook her head. "I don't want to sell my things," she said, "I want to give them away. It will be different."

"I sh'd say so!" exclaimed Mrs. Blossom. After a tense silence, she laughed again, in the rich, mellow way which seemed to be a habit of hers. "You might have a rummage give-away," she suggested. "Just set out everything you don't want and let folks come and take their pick. You'd get rid of your things all right."

"I don't see why that wouldn't be a good idea," Miss Cynthia said thoughtfully. .But how would people know I was going to—to—rummage?"

"Why, I s'pose it might be give out in church, it 's a kind of a charity, seems to me; though I don't know as I ever heerd of such a thing. It 'ud get around fast enough, anyway, if you was to speak of it. The' 's plenty of folks 'at 'ud be glad to see what you set out, even if you wasn't goin' to give 'em a stick of it. Why don't you ask the minister?"

"I don't see," Miss Cynthia observed mildly, "why I should ask the minister. It hasn't anything to do with charity or—or religion. I'm tired of my things, and I'm tired of being stingy, that's all."

Mrs. Blossom stared helplessly at her guest. "The' 's all sorts of tired feelin's comes onto folks in the spring," she said at last; "but I guess this is the first time I ever heard tell of that special kind. But here comes George. I'll just step out into the kitchen and look after the dinner, while you an' him visit a spell. Don't you let him show you a single one of those wall-papers of his'n, or you won't be able to eat a bite."

Miss Cynthia did not in the least know why, but she felt better and brighter and younger and more loving than she had felt in years, when she arose from Mrs. Blossom's cheerful dinner-table .

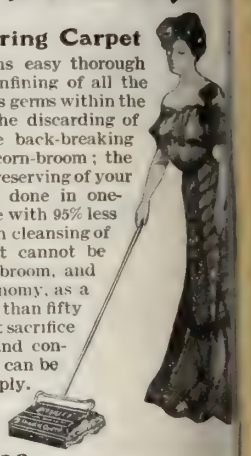
"You want to be sure an' get a girl 'at knows how to cook reel well," said that good woman beamingly, as she observed the pleasant glow in her guest's wan face.

She cherished a private little gospel of her own, did Mrs. Blossom, and it had a vast deal in it about good cooking. She was vaguely aware that man does not live by bread alone; but a certain fine, motherly instinct assured her that the quality of the bread terrestrial determines to an astonishing degree one's appetite for the bread celestial. It probably would never have occurred to Mrs. Blossom that Miss Cynthia Day was sick and weak and old before her time, and gloomy and depressed and stingy and timid and inhospitable, just because of the quality of the meals she had hitherto partaken

CONTINUED ON PAGE 399

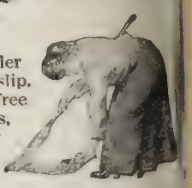
The use of

BISSELL'S



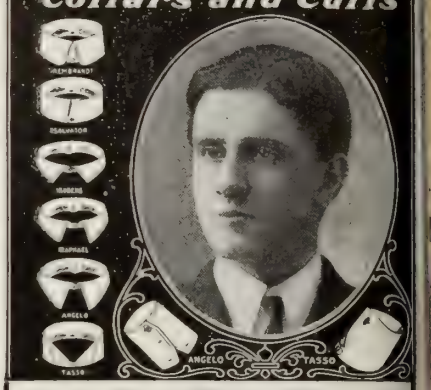
"Cyco" Bearing Carpet Sweeper means easy thorough sweeping; the confining of all the dust and dangerous germs within the pan receptacles, the discarding of the dust pan, the back-breaking companion of the corn-broom; the brightening and preserving of your carpets, sweeping done in one-quarter of the time with 95% less effort, the thorough cleansing of your carpets as it cannot be done by the corn broom, and finally a great economy, as a Bissell lasts longer than fifty corn brooms. Don't sacrifice so much comfort and convenience when it can be purchased so cheaply.

PRICE, $2.50 to $4.00



Buy one from your dealer and send us the purchase slip. Then we will send you free a useful present. Address, Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co., Dept. Y., Grand Rapids, Mich.

REVERSIBLE Linene Collars and Cuffs



Have You Worn Them?

Not "celluloid," not "paper collars"; but made of fine cloth, exactly resemble fashionable linen goods and cost of dealers, for box of ten, 25c. (2½c. each)

No Washing or Ironing

When soiled, discard. By mail, 10 collars or 5 pairs of cuffs, 30c. Sample Collar or Pair Cuffs for 6c. in U. S. stamps. Give size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. P, BOSTON, MASS.

HOW TO BECOME A NURSE

WE have equipped thousands of earnest women now in successful practice, endorsed by physicians and patients, and earning $12 to $30 weekly. We teach this profession by correspondence.

An interesting booklet that will make clear to you the aims and methods which have made the Chautauqua School pre-eminent in its field will be gladly mailed at your request.

THE CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING, 341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Isn't He a Peach?

Says his father. The mother and many others say his skin's like a rose petal. He's a Spim baby.

SPIM SOAP

and SPIM Ointment have given him that lovely skin and kept him cheerful and good natured. Thousands of other Spim babies? What about yours? Powder is no longer used by mothers who know SPIM Soap. An Album of "400 Babies" sent free for wrapper from either Soap, 25c, or Ointment, 50c. At druggists, or sent by us prepaid.

"Watch the Baby" booklet, free to any address. It explains the interesting Contest in which prizes of $5 to $100 will be given to beautiful babies.

Spim Co., 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N.Y. (C. B. Knox, Pres.)

Summer Suits
$6 to $25 Made to Your Order

Nothing Ready-Made.

Catalogue, Samples and Simple Measurement Directions Sent FREE.

Write to-day for our Summer Catalogue; it explains how we can relieve you of all the annoyances which usually attend the making of a garment at home.

There is a style about our costumes which distinguishes them as New York Fashions.

Our exclusive and reliable system enables us to make perfect-fitting garments at prices within your reach, while the style and workmanship are unexcelled.

Under our system every garment is made and trimmed to suit the taste of each Customer.

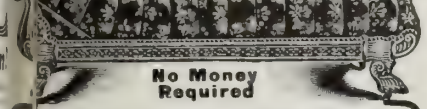
We have satisfied over 250,000 customers by keeping our promises and doing all we agree to do, and know we can please you. We guarantee to fit you or refund your money.

SHIRT-WAIST SUITS . . . . $6 to $20
Made of Mohair, Serge, Brilliantine, etc.
SILK SHIRT-WAIST SUITS . . $12 to $25
TAILOR-MADE SUITS . . . $7.50 to $25
RAIN COATS . . . . . $9.75 to $18
JACKETS . . . . . $5.75 to $15
SILK COATS . . . . . $10 to $20
SEPARATE SKIRTS . . . . $3.50 to $12
We prepay Express Charges to any part of the U.S.

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our Summer Catalogue, showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of Samples of the Newest Materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. Write for them to-day. Mention colors desired, and whether you wish samples for a tailor-made suit, silk costume, shirt-waist suit, skirt, jacket or rain coat.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23rd Street, New York.
Mail orders only. Est. 17 Yrs. No Agts. or Branches.

Easily Earned
This Handsome Massive Couch—Latest Style



No Money Required

This beautiful, up-to-date, substantial ten dollar couch may be yours without one cent of expense, that you will simply order $9.50 worth of household supplies, such as Teas, Coffees, Spices, Soaps, Perfumes, Toilet Articles, Baking Powder, Extracts, etc., from us, introduce your friends and neighbors to do so. The supplies cost you less than your store would charge you, and the couch represents your saving by dealing direct with the manufacturer and cutting out the wholesalers' and retailers' profit.

This magnificent couch has handsomely carved golden oak or mahogany finished frame, heavily carved claw feet, steel frame construction that is practically indestructible, 30 heavy spiral steel springs, deep biscuit tufting, selected Hygienic filling and is upholstered in heavy, rich corduroy or velours in all the popular designs, shades and colors.

We pay the freight on all goods and ship on 80 days' credit. If desired. Write today for our large, handsomely illustrated free 80-page book and accompanying circulars, telling you all about our new and wonderful plan for furnishing your home complete without cost

BULLOCK, WARD & CO.,
Q-76 N. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

REDUCED RATES TO PACIFIC COAST POINTS.

The Pennsylvania Railroad, Account Lewis and Clark Exposition and Various Conventions.

On account of the Lewis and Clark Exposition, at Portland, Ore., June 1 to October 15, and various conventions to be held in cities on the Pacific Coast during the Summer, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell round-trip tickets on specified dates, from all stations on its lines, to San Francisco and Los Angeles, April 9 to September 27; to Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Victoria, Vancouver, and San Diego, May 22 to September 4, at greatly reduced rates.

For dates of sale and specific information concerning rates and routes, consult nearest ticket agent.

MORE SALARY We know of a profession in which situations are daily created in excess of the qualified persons, and which demands the highest salaries with no discrimination on account of sex. Would you like to know what it is? Write us HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL Dept. H., Philadelphia, Pa.

FREE TO AGENTS
Flat thin knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.
HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

$75 MONTH & EXPENSES POSITION PERMANENT. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED. SELF SELLER.
PEASE MFG. CO. STA. K CIN. O.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 398

of in the musty seclusion of the Breyfogle dining-room. But she held certain shrewd, well-founded suspicions of the methods of Abby Whiton.

"Somebody that can cook reel good, wholesome, relishin' victuals," she repeated, with her rich, gurgling laugh. "Now, there's Nellie Ryan; I taught her to cook, myself- times when I had to get in help from outside. She 's slack about her kitchen, I'll admit, an' I never could teach her to save the pieces; but she c'n turn out as tasty a meal as you 'd want to set down to; an' she 's willin' as willin' c'n be. She's pretty, too; an' for my part. I li e to see a rosy, good-natured face in my kitchen."

"I shan't mind if she 's slack," Miss Cynthia said eagerly. "I think I'd like it. I've never seen anybody slack, or—or pretty in our kitchen."

Nellie Ryan was leaning upon the picket gate, talking with a smart-looking young workman in overalls, when George Blossom reined in his big brown horse before her mother's cottage. She nodded shyly, her pretty Irish face dimpling and flushing coquettishly. The young fellow in overalls wheeled about with a sheepish grin. "Hello, George!" he growled; "that you?"

"Hello, Bill," responded Mr. Blossom amiably. "I've brought Miss Day to see Nellie on a little business."

Thus introduced, Miss Cynthia somewhat breathlessly unfolded her errand. "I do hope you 'll come," she finished, "I'm all alone, and I I don't know what to do."

The girl's eyes followed her late visitor as he tramped away down the street. "I'm afraid I couldn't stay very long," she said, blushing. "I could come for the summer, perhaps."

"If you'll stay with me for a year," said Miss Cynthia, looking wistfully down into the pretty, rosy face, "I'll give you four dollars a week. I want somebody who will stay for—a year."

The girl opened her blue eyes very wide; the sum mentioned was an unheard of sum to pay for housework in the village of Innisfield. "I should like to earn all that money, ma'am," she said, showing her white teeth in a pleased smile; "an' I'll do it if— if——"

She cast a shy, laughing glance at George Blossom. "I was thinking of being married in the fall, ma'am, and I should hate to—to ask him to wait."

"Don't do it," Miss Cynthia said quickly. "Don't ask him to wait. No—no, you mustn't wait! Come and stay with me for the summer. Perhaps it won't be a—a year. Perhaps ——" She controlled herself with a visible effort. "I shall pay you just the same for the time you do stay."

And so it came to pass that Nellie Ryan reigned in Abby Whiton's stead, and things were "different" in the Breyfogle kitchen, and also in the Breyfogle dining-room. George Blossom began to scrape and paint the outside of the Breyfogle house, and the young man known as Bill, assisted him in the process. Of a noon, Bill ate his lunch with Nellie, at the table Abby Whiton had scoured to a stern and uncompromising whiteness.

Miss Cynthia could hear their careless young laughter as she ate her own solitary dinner. This meal was now of such a surprisingly satisfying and abundant nature, that she was almost afraid to meet the crayoned eyes of the late Mrs. Day, who still presided in cold black and white from above the mantel-piece. She had already entertained the minister and his wife at tea, and George Blossom and his mother at dinner, and the Puffer twins had formed the cheerful habit of dropping in to breakfast, whenever the appetite for jam and toast overcame them, which was often.

All this had taken place, and the evening and the morning were the sixth day. On the seventh day Miss Cynthia went to church.

CHAPTER VIII.

MISS CYNTHIA had been accustomed to attend the regular morning service in the Innisfield Presbyterian Church since the days when, after sitting for what seemed like a dreary age, with her young eyes hopelessly below the horizon of the family pew, and her small feet sticking out straight in front, she had been mercifully permitted to lose consciousness upon her mother's angular knees.

The Breyfogle pew, with its array of fly-blown, palm-leaf fans, its musty hymnals, and its curious old-fashioned foot-stools, prone to topple over thunderously in the midst of "the long prayer," was as much a family heritage as the old house on Maple Street, or the family plot in the bleak burying-ground. Miss Cynthia had always cherished a belief that the title to a mansion in the skies was inalienably associated with a rigidly regular attendance upon what she had been taught to call "divine service." As to just what constituted the service, or in what particular part of it inhered divinity, Miss Cynthia had never ventured to inquire.

On this particular Sunday morning, while the thin-voiced bell still clanged its insistent summons to worship, Miss Cynthia slipped into her accustomed corner, in her own peculiarly modest and shadowy way. She had never attracted the attention of curious eyes, being as much a part of the familiar Sabbath topography of the place as the thick black Bible on the preacher's desk, or the shining bald head of Deacon Scrimger, in the fourth pew from the chancel.

It was a time-honored custom among the adult members of the congregation to recognize the sanctity of the place and occasion by briefly bowing the head upon the further rim of one's pew. This pious act (originating in the early Puritan day) combined an uncompromising denial of the Papist practice of kneeling in church with an ingeniously difficult attitude of body calculated to meet the stern demands of the New England conscience. For a person of small stature, the exercise became a painfully strenuous one. But no Breyfogle had ever been known to omit it. Miss Cynthia, therefore, leaned aspiringly forward, the toes of her little shoes scarce touching the floor, and grasping the cold, slippery railing of the pew with one determined hand, with the other applied an equally cold and slippery handkerchief to her eyes in the prescribed manner.

The devotional period alluded to above, was quite frankly employed by the younger and more thoughtless members of the congregation as an excellent opportunity for inspecting the hats and bonnets of the bowed heads of the worshipers. Well over, certain whispered observations on current topics of communal interest might be circumspectly passed between contiguous pews.

On the present occasion, the majestic Mrs. Buckthorn was seen to exchange discreet confidences with Miss Electa Pratt in the choir seats, and that lady's prominent plumes vibrated with poignant emotion as she whispered a few words in the ear of the lady next her. Other heads in various parts of the house bowed like weighted grain under a passing breeze, while a fire of inquisitive eyes was presently centered upon the crown of Miss Cynthia's black bonnet, which still remained bowed upon the outer rim of the Breyfogle pew. Strange and surprising rumors concerning the singular doings of Miss Cynthia had been circulated from mouth to mouth during the past week, and the unusual worshipfulness of her demeanor was felt to be strongly corroborative evidence.

TO BE CONTINUED

Fashionable Heat.

All heating methods other than steam or hot water are rapidly going out of fashion. Those who build cannot afford to put in anything but

AMERICAN & IDEAL
RADIATORS & BOILERS

When the time comes to sell or rent, this outfit assists to bring a quicker transaction at better price. Thousands move each year into new houses, flats, offices or stores solely to enjoy the comfort, convenience, cleanliness, fuel-economy and labor-saving of steam or hot water warming. Did you ever hear of any one of these wanting to go back to old-fashioned heating methods? Any argument in that to you?

Unlike stoves or hot-air furnaces, our Boilers and Radiators are made upon the unit or sectional plan, so that if the building is made larger, or the rooms altered (95% of all buildings are remodeled) extra sections or parts may be readily added or removed. Hence, the IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators is an investment—not an expense. Put in now by best methods—a good time to buy!

Whether your building is OLD or new, SMALL or large, farm or city, send for our booklet (free), "Heating Investments Successful" it will make you a better judge of heating values.

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY
Dept. 29. CHICAGO

IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL

A Beautiful Home

The Beauty of the Home Depends Much on Paint. Carrara Paint Gives the Home a Bright, Cheerful Appearance Within and Without.

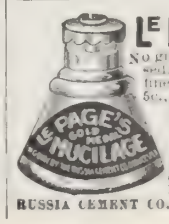
Fifty Sample Colors and Illustrated Booklet Free on Request.

Carrara paint is the true home beautifier. It adds to the appearance of the home a hundred fold and protects it from injury and damage by the weather. It costs less and lasts longer than white lead and oil. It is used on the most expensive and beautiful homes.

Heat, cold, fogs, rain, sea air and other climatic conditions do not affect Carrara Paint. It stands the test equally well in all parts of the country and gives perfect satisfaction wherever used.

If you enjoy a bright, cheerful, prosperous looking home, use Carrara Paint and you will be satisfied with results.

There is but one CARRARA, and only one grade, which is always the best. It is made by the Carrara Paint Co., 186 Carrara Works, Barberton, Ohio. Anyone having anything to paint should send for fifty free sample colors and our handsome, illustrated booklet, showing many buildings reproduced in all the colors just as they are painted with this great paint. Write to-day, telling us what you have to paint and we will send you names of those who have used Carrara Paint in your locality, name of dealer in your town who carries it, and show you how to beautify your property and save half your paint bills in the future.



LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE
No gumming to clog the brush. Sold everywhere. Best mucilage for fine papers. Put up in 5c., 10c., 15c., 25c., or sent by mail for 25c. in stamps. Large quantities, 50c. per pint, 75c. per quart.

LE PAGE'S Photo Paste, 2oz., 15c.

LE PAGE'S GLUE STRONGER THAN THE WORLD. 1 oz. bottle, 15c.; 2 oz. bottle, 25c.

RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Ave., Gloucester, Mass.

Thoughtful People must realize that there is no quicker, easier, safer way to secure an income from their savings and idle funds than to open an account with this strong bank at payable semi-annually.

4% INTEREST

The bank has depositors all over the world who make deposits and withdrawals and receive interest by mail.

Booklet G tells how to do banking by mail. Write for it.

THE UNION SAVINGS BANK

CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00

Frick Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN—SCENE OF THE "BELL'S HOLLOW"

Honoring the Friend of the Children

DENMARK, this month, is celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Hans Christian Andersen. Primarily a writer of tales for children, his work possesses such tenderness, such deep insight into the depths of human nature, such marked literary value, that the person of mature years who has not been moved to read one of the writer's simple tales, grand in their simplicity, has lost much, and there is a gap on the shelves of his mental library.

Lowly born, a child of poor parents, he has done more than any other Dane to make his fatherland known to "the far countries." Denmark, in honoring him, honors herself. He spent his youth in the ancient and picturesque city of Odense, a city which has only caught glimpses of the rush of the nineteenth century, like the faint shimmer of sunlight in the pine forests, where played the elfs and gnomes of the fairy books. From his early youth he was a maker of tales, and, on the banks of the silver Odense River, he walked and dreamed of the days of old, and of the famous days to come.

His stories show a love, a sympathy for children. He always laughed with them, never at them. It is this, as much as anything else, that has kept his books on the dealers' counters, and in constant demand at the public libraries, while many of sparkling wit, of cutting irony, have passed onward to the great hereafter of the majority of books—the paper-makers. Andersen found his chief joy in leaving something behind him that made for the true happiness of the young. It is a great writer that is known after his own day, who has written his claim to fame with a pen dipped in the acid of human misery, and Andersen kept well away from his contemporaries of this school. His reward comes in the respect and love paid to his memory in his own and other lands.

The League's Anniversary*

ONE of the best uses that can be made of an anniversary, is to look over the past, to see wherein we have done successful work, where we have blundered or been remiss, and what opportunities we have used or neglected. All this is of course as an inspiration to future work. The time is short. As our Lord said: "The night cometh, in which no man can work." When we deduct from our years the time we must give to secular duties, and the time we must give to rest and sleep, the remainder that is available for Christian service is very small, and needs to be carefully economized. If any of it has been frittered away in the past, it would be well at such a time as this to make a new resolution of reconsecration, and a determination to devote ourselves more unreservedly to the service of Christ.

The duties of the Christian in an organization such as the Epworth League are many sided. There is the duty to self, which includes growth in grace, better control of the temper, greater devotion, more intimate knowledge of God's Word, and a closer walk with God. To all these, the association with men of kindred purposes should contribute, stirring up the spirit to holy emulation in the struggle for self-development in the higher life. Then there is the duty to our fellow-members. It is our privilege to aid them as we are aided in the daily strife. To those who are of weak faith, who are discouraged by the difficulties of life, to all who are in sorrow, to those who are tried and tempted, a word of sympathy and good cheer may be the means of giving new hope and be a stimulus to new effort. There are few of us who have no recollection of the inspiration that has come to us in critical moments from a kindly word. As we have received let us give. Then there is the duty to the outside world. How many of our business associates, of our acquaintances and friends need to be told of the comfort and help that we derive from our religion? The burdens of life are hard to bear. We know how Christ helps those who trust in him. Such help we may offer to others. In this we fulfil our Lord's command. We honor him as the patient honors the physician who has cured him, by recommending him at every opportunity.

*Topic of the Epworth League for May 14. Matt. 7: 24-27; I. Cor. 3: 11-15; Eph. 2: 19-22.

City Flower Markets

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON COVER PAGE

THE idea of a flower market carries but slight significance to those who are country born and bred, and whose gardens and dooryards are masses of blooms from spring until the fall frosts. Every year, hardy shrubs renew leaves and blossoms; waxlike syringa and purple lilac put forth their fragrant flowers; lilies of the valley in sheltered corners wave their tiny bells; rose bushes put forth their clustering buds; trumpet-vine and honeysuckle cling closer to porch and trellis, and peonies send up their sturdy stalks, which a little later will bend beneath the weight of mammoth red and pink blooms. Violets, and their rich relations, great, velvet-faced pansies, spring up as if by magic, bringing the season's greetings. The window garden has been cheery all winter, filled with the plants so dear to the flower-lover's heart, and cared for with maternal solicitude.

The woman living in the country has this advantage over her city sister, who may love flowers as passionately, but gas-poisoned, steam-heated and furnace-dried air, are fatal to window gardening in city living rooms.

But when May comes, and the open-air flower markets are in full operation, it is then that the city woman has a chance to revel in bloom and fragrance. In New York, the large wholesale markets are downtown near the North River, which the flower-growers cross from New Jersey, bringing great wagon-loads of plants and shrubs every night. To see this show in all its glory, one must be at the market by 4 or 5 A. M. Then the square is crowded with retail florists' wagons, which, when filled, are driven uptown, to be disposed of later. The square is a perfect wilderness of color, with every variety of flower, pots being massed as closely as possible, the scene presenting a striking contrast to the hurry, the noise and other unpleasant features of a great commercial city.

Good Manners a Family Text-book

Good Manners has taught us new things and has brought fresh to memory much that was forgotten in the busy rush of business. We have given it the next highest place in the family—a domestic text-book for our sons and daughters.

Meridian, Tex. H. M. DILLARD.

I can make Ice Cream just as well as my Mamma

All I have to do is to dissolve a package of Jell-O Ice Cream Powder in a quart of milk, pour it into the freezer and freeze. It only takes 15 minutes and makes two quarts of the best Ice Cream I ever ate. It does not have to be cooked, sweetened, flavored, or have anything whatever added to it. Four kinds: Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry and Unflavored. If your grocer cannot supply you, send us 25c. for 2 packages.

Beautifully illustrated recipe book issued April 15, 1905, free. Address.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD CO., Le Roy, N. Y.

Jell-O and Jell-O Ice Cream Powder received the highest award, Gold Medal, at St. Louis Exposition, 1904.

We invite you to visit our Exhibit at World's Fair, Portland, Oregon.

FENCE STRONGEST MADE. Bull-strong chicken-tight. Sold to the Farmer at Wholesale Prices. Fully warranted. Catalog free
COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47 Winchester, Indiana.

IF ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT
Write us. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, and has been successfully treating Drug and Liquor Habits for 29 Years.
HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.
We have successfully treated thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept., R 5, Lebanon, Ohio.

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

Four Little Bee Books FREE
All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.
A. I. ROOT COMPANY. Medina, Ohio

$75.00 a month and expenses can be made with our line of kitchen specialties and cookers during your spare time, or double this amount by devoting all your time. Free Samples.
OHIO COOKER CO., 899 Jefferson Avenue, Toledo, Ohio

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

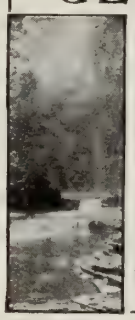
MELLIN'S For the Baby FOOD

Constipation and many other infantile disorders are the results of improper feeding. Give your baby Mellin's Food and see how quickly infantile troubles disappear. Send for our book "The Care & Feeding of Infants" and we will send it with a sample of Mellin's Food free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

POND'S EXTRACT
THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR
Stiff Joints
become limber again after rubbing with Pond's Extract. Just the thing for Rheumatism, too.
Witch Hazel is not the same thing. On analysis of seventy samples of Witch Hazel—so often offered as "just as good"—fifty two were found to contain wood alcohol or formaldehyde or both. To avoid danger of poisoning insist on having
THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR
POND'S EXTRACT

GLENWOOD


At Dansville, N. Y.
Exclusively for treatment of EPILEPSY
Climate and surroundings ideal. Facilities complete. Rates reasonable.
J. W. WHERRY, M. D., Superintendent.
WM. P. SPRATLING, M. D., Chief Consultant.
Brochure FREE from
THE HEALTH RESORT CO., Box 7087, Rochester, N. Y.

DON'T SHOUT!
"The Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.
Write for booklet and testimonials
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E 34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

A Wonderful Business Offer
$50 to $150 per week and upwards POSITIVE. We want representatives to operate sales parlors for the BEST, most attractive rapid selling Ladies' and Gents' shoe known; ten NEW sight selling health and comfort features; factory to consumer; previous experience unnecessary NO RISK; reply quick.
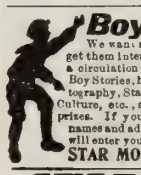
KUSHION KOMFORT SHOE CO., Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE LAWNS AND THEIR CARE

EVERY lover of beautiful lawns should send for this interesting and instructive little book called "Lawns: Their Making and Their Care." Valuable information compiled from Government and expert gardening sources, telling you how to secure and maintain a beautiful growth of grass. Mailed absolutely Free on application. THE TOLEDO RUBBER CO., 450 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio

Boys' Names Wanted


We want names of bright boys between 12 and 20. We want to get them interested in our illustrated magazine for boys, which has a circulation of over 150,000. Every issue contains Fascinating Boy Stories, handsome illustrations, departments of Amateur Photography, Stamps, Coins, Curios, Puzzles, Games, Jokes, Physical Culture, etc., and each month awards a large number of valuable prizes. If you are not a subscriber and will send us five boys' names and addresses and five 2-cent stamps, or 10 cents in silver, we will enter you as a subscriber fully paid for 6 months in advance.
STAR MONTHLY, 440 Hunter St., Oak Park, Ills.

STARK FRUIT BOOK shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo

Should Women Wear Hats in Church?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 386

aven. For if the woman be not covered, t her also be shorn: but if it be a shame r a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her covered. For a man indeed ought not cover his head, forasmuch as he is the age and glory of God: but the woman is e glory of the man." H. JENNY.
Pollock, La.

. . .

Elevate the Pulpits So All May See

THINK it is an outrage to deprive woman of her God-given privilege. See e eleventh chapter I. Corinthians. I say, ise the pulpits and then they will see the eacher. JOSEPH SHARPE.
Mount Carroll, Ill.

. . .

Nebraska, Too, Says "Hats Off"

T would be only right and proper for ladies to have their hats off in church, e same as men. There is no sound reason r keeping them on. The unanimous tion of the women of Trinity Methodist urch at Denver, in taking their hats off hen requested by the pastor, and their proval of the same should be an example r other congregations, and it will be, for hers will certainly fall into line with the anged and improved custom, and ladies ill soon accommodate their head coverngs to a more reasonable and sensible abit. Let the word go all along the line Christian advancement: "Hats off," nd to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD be due edit given for the improvement.
Kearney, Neb. MOSES H. SYDENHAM.

. . .

She Favors the Denver Custom

N the church where I go to hear the Word of God proclaimed, I have a ack seat, and while hearing what is said, like to see the face of speaker. Ofttimes, owever, my vision is obstructed by the ats of the women sitting in front of me. herefore, when I am in the church during e services, for comfort and true pleasure my part, I would like the Denver cusm adopted. MRS. M. S. B. MYER.
Kingston, N. Y.

. . .

Discourage Vain Display

MANY will object to the innovation of the Denver church, as ignoring Paul's dmonition to the Corinthian Church (I. or. 11); but investigation of conditions at orinth prove that the women were making hrist's name odious by their presumption. et the women remove their hats in church nd give those behind them an opportunity o see the preacher, for seeing helps the earing. It discourages vain display of ead-gear, which attracts attention and iverts thought from the solemnity of the ccasion. W. H. SAMUELS.
Oakwood, Mo.

. . .

Between Two Large Picture Hats

HAVE long thought they should not be worn. It detracts from the sermon, at east when you have to be trying to look round or between two large picture hats, hat should never be worn at church serice. A song is more interesting if you ee the singer. By all means, let us adopt he plan of no hats in church.
Roxbury Station, Conn. CONNECTICUT.

. . .

How Our Grandmothers Did

IN the time of our grandmothers, ladies wore small headgear, and it was all ight. If anything is annoying, it is to keep dodging to get a glimpse of the speaker, either in church or at any gathering, on account of the size of the hats worn by women. Those in the rear might as well close their eyes, for the speaker is invisible, and you lose all interest in the subject. So I say "Hats off," and let the ladies help each other afterwards to arrange them "straight." S. D. HUNTER.
Brooklyn, N. Y.

. . .

How One Lady was Convinced

I WAS convinced and converted from the error of my way, when I learned of an intelligent gentleman staying away from church because he could not see the preacher for the hats in front of him.

Dear sisters, if your brothers be offended, remove the cause. I will, while the world stands. ORRA M. KELLEY.
Morgantown, W. Va.

. . .

By All Means Discard the Hats in Church

I HAVE thought for a long time that it would be more agreeable for the congregation at large, were ladies to sit hatless in church. I sincerely hope that the time is near at hand when it will be unanimous in all churches to see ladies without hats, at least during the sermon. Should a vote be taken, I shall hold up both hands.
MRS. WARREN WILCOX.
Petersburg, N. Y.

. . .

Consider the Comfort of Others

THE question would seem so self-evident to every lady as not to require any argument, as to the proper course of action, especially the massive head-gear now in vogue. "Am I, or any of my belongings, a hindrance or annoyance to any one behind me in any public service," is, or ought to be, a personal, unselfish question, which should come to every intelligent person, and, if so, a ready response should prevail in the removal of that hindrance, whether it be the custom or not. E. L. S.
Utica, N. Y.

. . .

A Sensible Canadian Church

THE pastor of the Methodist Church, here last fall, invited all the ladies to remove their hats during the sermon, and, although at first many felt inclined to object, they almost all without exception, fell into line. In churches, especially those with level floors, the large hats that fashion makes the ladies wear, will hide the speaker from the view of those sitting behind for a half dozen seats. In the light of common sense, arguments are all in favor of removing hats. MRS. A. C. CROSBY.
Southampton, Ont.

. . .

Substitute a Light "Fascinator"

HATS in church obstruct, more or less, the view of persons sitting behind. They detract attention from the service of some, who are observing new styles. They often are the means of keeping people away from church, because they can not afford as nice a hat as their neighbor. It is economy—if some light fascinator would be substituted for the hat, and the difference in cost given to benevolences. It would swell that fund largely.
MRS. MARINETTE WHEELER.
Minnesota.

. . .

A Protest Against Bare Heads

I WISH to send a protest against women sitting bareheaded in church. While a very large piece of head-gear is not pretty anywhere, an ordinary neat hat, or bonnet, is surely not much out of the way when worn in public meetings. I, for one, attend church very regularly, which I could not do if I had to sit bare-headed, as I cannot stand the draught.
Philadelphia. MRS. A. A. E.

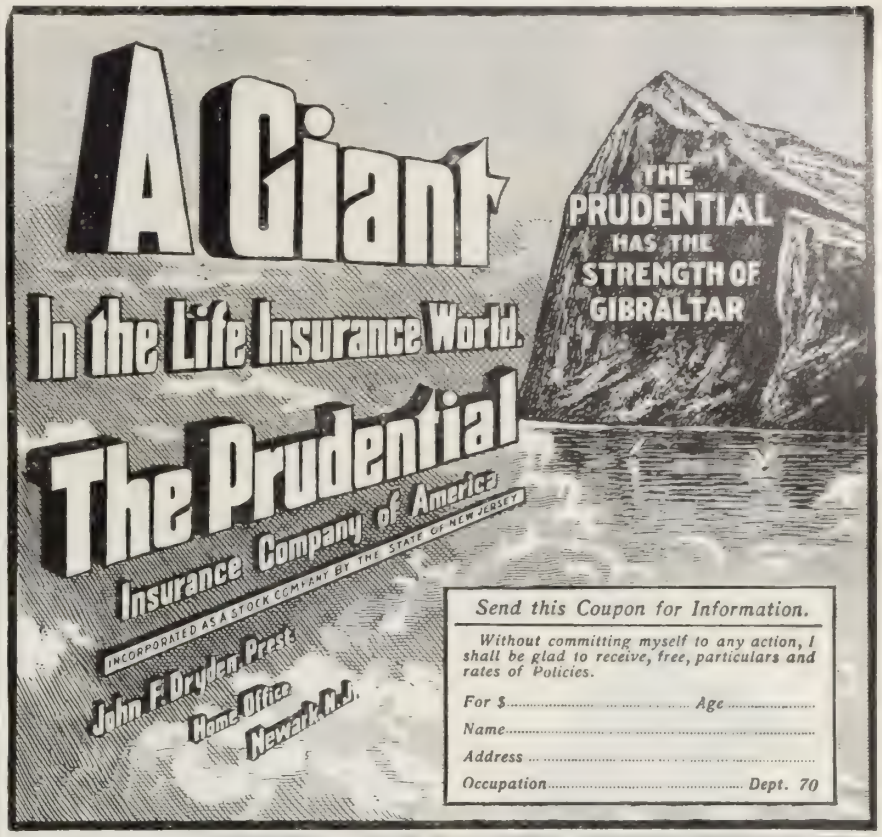
. . .

Women Suffer from the "Big Hat"

HOW often one cannot see the speaker for the big hat in front of you; and as to attracting attention from the service by "no hats," I am sure the greatly bedecked hats are far more inclined to do so. Then, many women suffer from headache by the wearing of a hat or bonnet any length of time. Let it once become popular to remove the head-gear, and it will be a blessing to men as well as women.
Trenton, N. J. MRS. LEWIS HELLER.

. . .

Answers have also been received from J. Q., Baltimore; Lavinia S., Dillon, Mont.; M. R. M., Oberlin, Kan.; C. K., Murraysville, Pa.; J. F., Newark, N. J.; Mrs. A. B., Bayonne, N. J.; Henry R., Plymouth, Mich.; Rev. J. M., Calgary, Can., H. P. M. Olney, Philadelphia; Rev. G. Blomgren, N. Y.; Dr. E. G. Powers, Paonia, Colo.; Dr. C. A. Garnsey, Evanston, Ill.; Josiah N., Philadelphia; W. H. S., Oakwood, Me.; Mrs. H. P. M., Newark, N. J.; Mrs. M. W., Minn., and others.



A Giant
In the Life Insurance World.
The Prudential
Insurance Company of America
INCORPORATED AS A STOCK COMPANY BY THE STATE OF NEW JERSEY
John F. Dryden, Pres't.
Home Office Newark, N.J.
THE PRUDENTIAL HAS THE STRENGTH OF GIBRALTAR
Send this Coupon for Information.
Without committing myself to any action, I shall be glad to receive, free, particulars and rates of Policies.
For $..... Age .....
Name.....
Address .....
Occupation..... Dept. 70

$21.00 PRICE EXPLAINED

FOR $21.00 TO $23.00 also ROAD WAGONS at $14.00 to $17.00, TOP BUGGIES, similar to one illustrated, HAVE BEEN WIDELY ADVERTISED. SURREYS at $34.00 to $38.00.

HOW BUGGIES can be offered at these prices and why we can sell buggies and all other vehicles at much lower prices than any other house is all fully explained in our Four Big Free Vehicle Catalogues. Cut this ad. out and send to us and you will receive by return mail, Free, Postpaid, Four Big Vehicle Catalogues showing the most complete line of everything in Buggies, Road Wagons, Carts, Surreys, Phaetons, Carriages, Light and Heavy Wagons, Vehicles of all kinds, also everything in Harness, Saddles and Saddlery, all shown in large handsome halftone illustrations, full descriptions and all priced at prices much lower than any other house can possibly make.

WITH THE FOUR FREE CATALOGUES you will receive the most astonishing Buggy Offer ever heard of, a new and astonishing proposition. How others can offer top buggies at $21.00 to $23.00 and why we can sell at much lower prices than all others will be fully explained. We will explain why we ship so as to make freight charges amount to next to nothing. We will explain why we are the only makers or dealers in the world that can ship buggies the day we receive your order. OUR FREE TRIAL OFFER, OUR PAY AFTER RECEIVED TERMS, OUR BINDING GUARANTEE ARE ALL EXPLAINED WHEN WE SEND YOU THE FOUR FREE CATALOGUES.

HAVE YOU ANY USE FOR A BUGGY? If you have, don't fail to cut this ad. out today and mail to us. If you can't use A TOP BUGGY AT ANY PRICE, call your neighbor's attention to this announcement. Don't buy any kind of a buggy until after you cut this ad. out and send to us and get THE FOUR BIG FREE CATALOGUES, THE MOST LIBERAL OFFER, The Very Latest Proposition, everything explained, all free for the asking. Write Today. SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

$200, $500, $1,000

6% FIRST MORTGAGE, HIGH GRADE TELEPHONE BONDS

Safest public utility bond offered investors in twenty years. Underground construction. Fire-proof buildings.

Stock bonus given with bond purchase that will net you additional profit per annum.

Write for circular giving financial Statement and Banker's testimonials.

FARNSWORTH, BILLS & CO.
Railway Exchange Building, Chicago

The Somnola Medicated Pillow

Relieves You While You Sleep

Guaranteed to stop the "night cough" in CONSUMPTION and BRONCHITIS, and to relieve the worst cases of ASTHMA, by cumulative effect, in from three to six weeks.

INSOMNIA and NERVOUS TROUBLES rapidly and completely relieved; HAY FEVER and CATARRH entirely eradicated from the system by the SOMNOLA MEDICATED PILLOW. Endorsed by physicians generally. Relief guaranteed or price refunded.

Write for descriptive booklet, etc.

Somnola Medicated Pillow Co., Inc.
741 Washington Street, Louisville, Ky.

Only $32.50
Worth $50

Cut this out, mail to us with your name and address and Good Faith Deposit of $1. We will send you our catalogue of 100 styles of Model Buggies and a receipt which reserves room in our factory for making any buggy you select, which will be promptly shipped for inspection at your depot. We make the buggy exactly as you specify. If it is not the biggest bargain you ever heard of, write us and get your dollar back. You can try it 30 days free if you wish. Send $1 to insure first choice and prompt shipment. Catalogue free.
THE MODEL CARRIAGE & HARNESS CO.
192 W. Sixth St., Cincinnati, O.

MEMORY
MEANS MONEY

The Secret of Certainty in Recollection, PLAINLY STATED; SIMPLY TAUGHT.

Send a postal card for Pelman's great Book: "Memory, and What Can Be Done To Improve It." It Costs you Nothing; It Explains Everything.

WE GUARANTEE

To Improve the Powers of Your Natural Memory in a Month. Our Prospectus Contains Hundreds of Convincing Testimonials and Press Reviews in Praise of the Pelman System. Write for it today

PELMAN SCHOOL OF MEMORY,
961 Whitehall Building, New York City

PATTON'S SUN-PROOF PAINTS
keep the house sound and beautiful. Unnecessary to paint often. Advice on painting problems and book FREE
PATTON PAINT COMPANY,
211 LAKE STREET MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Are You Deaf?

"THE WAY" EAR DRUMS will make you hear [illegible] device for the relief of deafness ever known. [illegible] Write [illegible] for particulars about [illegible] of deafness. I will gladly tell my own [illegible] for the benefit of those who are deaf. Write me [illegible]
GEO. P. WAY, 1005 [illegible] Building, Detroit, Michigan

Cheap chimney, dear lamp.

MACBETH.

My Index tells what chimney fits your lamp. If you use that chimney, you get perhaps twice as much light, and save a dollar or two a year of chimney-money,

It tells, besides, how to care for lamps; even that is imperfectly known.

I send it free; am glad to.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

When a Tooth Aches

you don't want to hunt a remedy. Get Dent's Toothache Gum and keep it for emergencies—as good five years old as a day. It stops any ache instantly—cavity or no cavity cleanses the cavity—removes offensive odors caused by decay—prevents further decay Enough in each package for 50 aches—cannot dry up or waste by spilling.

DENT'S Toothache Gum

is imitated. Insist on getting Dent's—the only toothache gum that will not decay the tooth—look for the name on the wrapper. Used by leading dentists. Sold by responsible druggists, 15c; or by mail on receipt of price. Dent's Corn Gum removes corns, bunions and warts—15c at druggists; or we mail it. "The Arch of Pearls," sent free to any address, tells how to take care of and preserve the teeth.

C. S. DENT & CO., 47 Larned St., Detroit, Mich.

ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE

Shake Into Your Shoes

"In a pinch, use Allen's Foot-Ease."

Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It relieves painful, swollen, smarting nervous feet, and instantly takes the sting out of corns and bunions. It's the greatest comfort discovery of the age. Allen's Foot Ease makes tight-fitting or new shoes feel easy. It is a certain relief for ingrowing nails, sweating, callous and hot, tired, aching feet. We have over 30,000 testimonials. TRY IT TO-DAY. Sold by all Druggists and Shoe Stores, 25c. Do not accept any substitute. Sent by mail for 25c. in stamps.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE sent by mail.

MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS, the best remedy for Feverish, Sickly Children. Sold by Druggists everywhere. Trial Package FREE. Address,

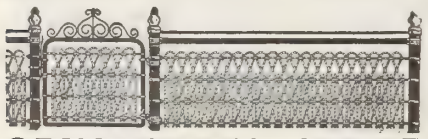
ALLEN S. OLMSTED, Le Roy, N. Y.

[Mention this paper.]



ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free. Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

Stewart's Iron fence

100 designs for residences, churches, cemeteries, etc. Most economical fence you can buy. Cheap as wood; will last a lifetime Write for catalogue of Fence or Lawn Furniture. Highest awards World's Fair, 1904. Agents wanted.

THE STEWART IRON WORKS CO., Dept. W Cincinnati, O.

THIS IS THE LIMIT.

$4.50 For a 50-Egg Hot Water, Self-regulating Incubator. Guaranteed to hatch every hatchable egg. $3 for 50-chick brooder. Only $7.50 for complete outfit. 30 days' trial. Send for FREE catalogue.

Buckeye Incubator Co.

No agent's profits to pay. BOX 60 SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

SPIRIT-FILLED LIVES*

MANY persons, even after becoming Christians, have only a vague idea of the work and functions of the Holy Spirit. There is to them something awful and mysterious in all their conceptions of this mighty power. Yet to those who enjoy the influence, how sweet, how precious, how stimulating it is. Only as we compare it with familiar relations of life can we see how it operates on the soul of the real Christian. There may be in a household a child with perfectly proper ideas of his relation to his parents. He obeys them, he shows them respect, but there is a coldness, a kind of aloofness in his manner, that separates him from them. But let that child get the father's spirit, let him realize his father's purpose for him and enter into it, and a great change comes. Instead of the cold perfunctory obedience, there is life, spontaneity, cheerful acquiescence. Or the difference may be seen in the enjoyment of art. The performer at the piano may be absolutely accurate, and yet if she has not caught the spirit of the composer, her performance may be lifeless. We would rather hear a less accurate player if she is less mechanical. It is so in reading. How often has the soul revolted at the reading of some choice passage, though the pronunciation is perfect. There is a spirit in all these things that we understand and the absence of which mars performance.

It is so with the Christian who is not filled with the Spirit. His conduct may be blameless, irreproachable, but we miss the vigor, the enthusiasm of life. The dry bones need to be stirred by the Spirit of life. How that Spirit comes, we know not. But its effects we see and feel. The duties that before were difficult and tiresome, become easy and delightful. They are being done for the sake of One we love. The Holy Spirit, as Christ promised, has taken of the things of him and has shown them to us. We become sharers in divinity. God himself lives in our hearts and is present with us. Nearer than friend, nearer than wife or child, he is our Spirit and our very life. That is a blessing to be sought with all the force of the soul and we have Christ's assurance that God delights to give it to all who seek it.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society for May 14. Acts 2: 1-4; 41 47.

Priest and People Converted

ONE of the most remarkable events in modern church history, took place recently in Manchaug, Mass., when the Baptist denomination received as members the Independent French Catholic Church, together with its pastor, the Rev. A. E. Ribourg. French Roman Catholicism has been regarded as almost impregnable, as the tie of birth and language, as well as of religion, has kept the French people united in a strange land.

This French parish formerly belonged to a large Catholic Church at Manchaug, a church that has over 1,000 members. Three years ago, they left the parent body and built a church of their own, and asked Father Ribourg to take charge. Father Ribourg is a finely-educated man, has great ability as an organizer, and is full of French fire and enthusiasm. He held the congregation together in the face of much opposition, and at present it has nearly fifty communicants. In the old country, he belonged to the Roman Church, but became a follower of the Old Catholic movement, that drew so many brilliant Romanists into its ranks. Old Catholics, is the name that was assumed by a large body of German priests and laymen, who refused to accept the dogma of papal infallibility. The movement extended to other countries, but has exerted no great influence during the last decade. Its importance, however, as a great protest against this stupendous claim cannot be over-estimated.

For a time the independent parish at Manchaug followed the Roman ritual, but a short time ago Protestant principles were adopted, largely as a result of the influence of some French Protestant missionaries. The Baptist Church of Massachusetts was appealed to, and, after careful investigation, they accepted the dissenters, and the entire congregation was baptized. Rev. Mr. Ribourg will continue his work as the pastor of the church.

California

$62.50 ROUND TRIP

From Chicago daily, May 11th to 13th, and 29th to June 1st, via the Chicago, Union Pacific and North-Western Line. Choice of routes, best of train service, liberal return limits. The fast through daily service of the electric-lighted makes it possible to traverse the breadth of the continent in amplest surroundings of comfort in less than three days. The train leaves Chicago and San Francisco every day the whole year round The Best of Everything.

OVERLAND LIMITED

Two trains a day Chicago to San Francisco, Los Angeles and Portland, over the only double-track railway between Chicago and the Missouri River.

If you want to know something further about California, her outdoor sports, climate, hotels, etc., send 4 cents for copy of California folder

W. B. KNISKERN, Pass'r Traffic Mgr. C. & N.-W. Ry. CHICAGO.

OL152

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

UNION PACIFIC THE OVERLAND ROUTE

$3 PRICE EXPLAINED

AT FROM $3.00 TO $5.00

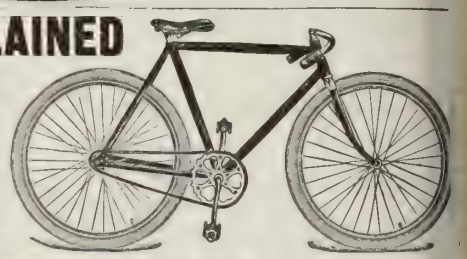
Bicycles similar to the bicycle hereon have been widely advertised by OTHER HOUSES



HOW BICYCLES CAN BE OFFERED AT THESE PRICES and why we can sell the highest grade new 1905 Model bicycles in gents', ladies' and children's sizes, at much lower prices than any other house is al explained in our new, big, free Special Bicycle Catalogue. Cut this advertisement ou and send to us and you will receive by return mail, free, postpaid, our new Specia Bicycle Catalogue, fully describing our complete line of new 1905 gents', ladies' an children's bicycles, all shown in large, handsome halftone illustrations; everythin in bicycle sundries and supplies at the lowest prices ever known. Tires, coaste brakes, saddles, pedals, etc., at less than ONE-HALF THE PRICES usually asked

WITH THE BIG FREE CATALOGUE you will receive the most libera bicycle offer ever heard of, a new and marvelous proposition. Why we can sell at much lower prices than all others wil be fully explained. Our system of shipping the day we receive your order and our low freight and express rat will be explained. You will get our free trial offer, safe and prompt delivery guarantee, our binding guar antee. OUR LATEST PROPOSITION. Everything will go to you by return mail, free, postpaid.

MAKE $100.00 IN 60 DAYS SELLING OUR BICYCLES.

This can be easily done in any locality by merely devoting part of your spare time. The bicycle offer we wil send you is really an astonishingly liberal one. Don't fail to cut this advertisement out and send to us, or on a postal card say, "Send me your new bicycle offer," and get everything that we will send you free by mail, postpaid.

Address: SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

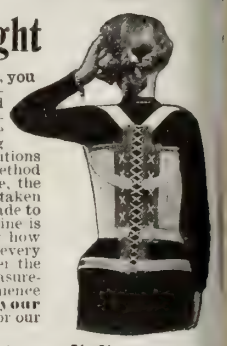
Crooked Spines Made Straight



If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected Noted physicians in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheldon Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction, or refund your money at the end of thirty days' trial. Write for our new book giving full information and references.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 207 Fifth St., Jamestown, N. Y.

32 Years Selling Direct

We are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling to consumers exclusively.

No. 723½. Driving Wagon with ⅞ inch rubber tires. Price complete $56. As good as sells for $25 more.

We Have No Agents but ship anywhere for examination and approval, guaranteeing safe delivery. You are out nothing if not satisfied as to style, quality and price. We make 200 styles of vehicles and 65 styles of harness.

No. 307. Fine Canopy Top Surrey. Price complete $103. As good as sells for $30 more.

Our large Catalogue is FREE. Send for it.

Elkhart Carriage & Harness Mfg. Co., Elkhart, Ind.

SPLIT HICKORY VEHICLES

Highest Quality—Lowest Prices

ONE HUNDRED STYLES $35 AND UP

Big 1905 FREE Catalog just issued. 192 pages, handsomely illustrated. We sell direct to users on 30 Days' Free Use Plan and give you a factory guarantee good for two years. Only factory in the world selling Split Hickory Vehicles. Our $50 Split Hickory Special is a world beater. Get the catalogue and buy at wholesale. The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co., (H. C. Phelps, Pres.) Station 236, Cincinnati, O.

WE WANT AGENTS

in every town to ride and sell our bicycle Good pay. Finest guaranteed 1905 MODELS with Puncture-Proof tires, Coaster-Brakes $10 to $24

1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes..... $7 to $12

500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8

CLEARING SALE at half cost

We SHIP ON APPROVAL and TEN DAYS TRIAL to anyone without a cent deposit. Write at once for Special Offer on sample bicycle.

TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAGO

Christ's Prayer for Men

By MRS. M. BAXTER

HOW often we read in the Gospels, especially that of Luke, about the Lord Jesus praying! But how seldom did anyone hear those prayers! Except the short prayers recorded in Matt. 11: 25 and Luke 10: 21, at the grave of Lazarus (John 11: 41, 42), and in John 12: 28, we have no record of what passed between the Father and the Son when Jesus prayed. But here, in John 17, just before he suffered, the heart of our Lord in prayer to his Father for his own was laid bare to the disciples, and we, even we, have the privilege of seeing the thoughts of our Lord towards us, towards his Father, and towards a lost world. The Holy Ghost must have, as Jesus foretold (John 14: 26), brought this holy prayer to the remembrance of the Apostle John, that we in this age might know what is in our Lord's heart for us. Let us read it as in the presence of our God, under the direction of his Spirit, for here we are on holy ground.

Having given his last messages, and his last commands to his disciples, Jesus "lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son may also glorify thee." He had already said, a few days before, "The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified" (John 12: 23), and he had prayed, "Father, glorify thy name" (ver. 28), and had said to his disciples, on the departure of Judas, "Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in him" (13: 31). In his life on earth God had been glorified. Satan could no longer say that man could not be innocent, for no sin could be proved against the second Adam, the Son of Man. Satan could no longer say that no man could keep the law, for no breach of law could be proved against Jesus, the Son of Man. He had loved the Lord his God with all his heart, and soul, and mind, and strength, and he had loved his neighbor, even Judas the traitor, as himself.

There was yet one step—a tremendous step—left: down into the shame of imputed sin, and into death, both utterly foreign not only to his divine, but also to his sinless human nature. "Thou hast given me power over all flesh, to give eternal life to as many as thou hast given me, that they might know thee and know me." "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, in this last great step, through deep darkness and the pit, the forsaking of mine own, through condemnation, insult, cruelty, death, burial. Father, glorify thy name and glorify me [the God-man] with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." And the eleven heard it, God the Son speaking thus to God the Father; and yet when men took him and bound him and led him away, their faith failed them. They forsook him and fled! Only when the Holy Spirit took possession of them and dwelt with them could they practically count on the words of the Lord as more to be counted on than any circumstances.

But when their eyes were opened and they saw things in the light of his words—oh, how this wondrous prayer must have come back to them! And how they must have lived in the power of it, and in the glorious knowledge that continually, at the right hand of God, their beloved Master was interceding for them! We can understand how, in the time of their waiting for the Holy Spirit, "they were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God" (Luke 24: 53). They could never have understood till now the value of the words which the Lord had spoken to them.

Does it not seem almost incomprehensible to us that the disciples could hear these words from Him who had done such marvelous things, and had again and again asserted his Messiahship, and to whom three of them had heard the Father bear witness on the Mount of Transfiguration—and yet they could forsake him and flee? Not if we know our own hearts. Perhaps, if they had not had this proof of how little their natural hearts really believed in, appreciated, and loved their Lord, they might never have become the instruments which the Holy Spirit could use to win sinners. We can, only as being saved sinners, come low enough down to help lost sinners. We can never, from a pedestal, bring men to Christ.

OIL-GAS The WONDERFUL NEW FUEL

Ohioan's Remarkable Invention--Claimed to Be the Cheapest, Safest and Best Yet Found--Invents a New Oil-Gas Stove that Burns About 90% Air, 10% Oil-Gas--A Miniature Gas Works in the Home.

A God-Send to Women-Folks--Every Family Can Now Have Gas for Cooking Made from Kerosene Oil at a Cost of Only About ½ Cent Per Hour.

How Delighted the Ladies Will Be to Save ⅓ to ½ on Fuel Bills--All the Drudgery of Carrying Coal, Wood, Ashes, Dirt, etc., and Be Able to Enjoy Cool Kitchens This Summer.

Most Wonderful Stove Ever Invented--Nothing Else Like It--Entirely Different From the Kind Seen in Stores.

HOW THE READERS CAN MAKE MONEY THIS SUMMER

A GENIUS of Cincinnati has invented a new, scientific oil-gas generator that is proving a blessing to women folks, enabling them to cook with gas—relieving them of drudgery. Makes cooking and housework a delight, and at the same time often saves ⅓ to ½ in cost of fuel.

How often have many of the lady readers remarked that they would give anything to get rid of the drudgery of using the dirty coal and wood stoves—also the smoky oil wick stoves and their gasoline stoves, which are so dangerous and liable to cause explosions or fire at any time.

Well, that day has arrived and a fine substitute has been discovered, and every family can now have gas fuel for cooking, baking and heating, and not have their kitchens a hot, fiery furnace in summer, and be carrying coal and ashes—ruining their looks and health.

Thousands a Week

Upon calling at the factory, we found that this invention has caused a remarkable excitement all over the United States—that the factory is already rushed with thousands of orders, and evidently the Company's representatives and agents are making big profits, as they offer splendid inducements.

SECTIONAL CUT OF GENERATOR

As will be noticed from the engraving, this OIL-GAS GENERATOR is entirely different from any other stove—although its construction is very simple—may be easily and safely operated, and is built on the latest scientific principles, having no valves, which is a marked improvement, as all valves are liable to leak, carbonize, clog up, or overflow.

By simply moving a knob, the oil is automatically fed to a small, steel burner bowl, or retort, where it is instantly changed into gas, which is drawn upwards between two red hot perforated steel chimneys, thoroughly mixed with air, and consumed, giving a bright blue flame—hottest gas fire, similar in color and heating power to natural gas.

This invention has been fully protected in the United States Patent Office, and is known as the HARRISON VALVELESS, WICKLESS AUTOMATIC OIL-GAS GENERATOR—the only one yet discovered that consumes the carbon and by-products of the oil.

The extremely small amount of Kerosene Oil that is needed to produce so large a volume of gas, makes it one of the most economical fuels on earth, and the reason for the great success of this Generator is based on the well known fact of the enormous expansiveness of oil-gas, when mixed with oxygen or common air.

Oil-Gas is proving so cheap that 15c. to 30c. a week should furnish fuel gas for cooking, for a small family.

Kerosene oil, from which oil-gas is made, may be purchased in every grocery—is cheap, and a gallon of it will furnish a hot, blue flame gas fire in the burner for about 18 hours, and as a stove is only used 3 or 4 hours a day in most families for cooking, the expense of operating it would be but little.

In addition to its cheapness is added the comfort, cleanliness—absence of soot, coal, dirt, ashes, etc

What pleasure to just turn on the oil—light the gas—a hot fire ready to cook. When through, turn it off. Just think; a little kerosene oil—one match—light—a beautiful blue gas flame—hottest fire—always ready—quick meals—a gas stove in your home.

It generates the gas only as needed—is not complicated, but simple—easily operated, and another feature is its PERFECT SAFETY.

NOT DANGEROUS LIKE GASOLINE

And liable to explode and cause fire at any moment. This stove is so safe that you could drop a match in the oil tank and it would go out.

This Oil-Gas Stove does any kind of cooking that a coal or gas range will do—invaluable for the kitchen, laundry, summer cottage, washing, ironing, camping, etc. Splendid for canning fruit; with a portable oven placed over the burner, splendid baking can be done.

Another Important Feature

Is the invention of a small Radiator Attachment, which placed over the burner, makes a desirable heating stove during the fall and winter, so that the old cook stove may be done away with entirely.

While at the factory in Cincinnati the writer was shown thousands of letters from customers who were using this wonderful oil-gas stove, showing that it is not an experiment, but a positive success, and giving splendid satisfaction, and as a few extracts may be interesting to the readers, we reproduce them.

L. S. Norris, of Vt., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Generators are wonderful savers of fuel—at least 50% to 75% over wood and coal."

Mr. H. Howe, of N. Y., writes: "I find the Harrison is the first and only perfect oil-gas stove I have ever seen—so simple anyone can safely use it. It is what I have wanted for years. Certainly a blessing to human kind."

Mr. E. D. Arnold, of Nebr., writes: "That he saved $4.25 a month for fuel by using the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove. That his gas range cost him $5.50 per month, and the Harrison only $1.25 per month."

J. A. Shafer, of Pa., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Stove makes an intense heat from a small quantity of oil—entirely free from smoke or smell—great improvement over any other oil stove. Has a perfect arrangement for combustion—can scarcely be distinguished from a natural gas fire."

Mr. H. B. Thompson, of Ohio, writes: "I congratulate you on such a grand invention to aid the poor in this time of high fuel. The mechanism is so simple—easily operated—no danger. The color of the gas flame is a beautiful dark blue, and so hot seems almost double as powerful as gasoline."

Mrs. J. L. Hamilton writes: "Am delighted—Oil-Gas Stoves so much nicer and cheaper than others—no wood, coal, ashes, smoke, no pipe, no wick, cannot explode."

Hon. Ira Eble, J. P., of Wis., writes: "Well pleased with the Harrison—far ahead of gasoline. No smoke or dirt—no trouble. Is perfectly safe—no danger of explosion like gasoline."

Chas L. Bendeke, of N. Y., writes: "It is a pleasure to be the owner of your wonderful Oil-Gas Stove—no coal yard, plumbing—ashes or dust. One match lights the stove, and in 10 minutes breakfast is ready. No danger from an explosion—no smoke—no dirt—simply turn it off and expense ceases. For cheapness it has no equal."

This is certainly a good chance for the readers to make money this summer.

Hundreds of other prominent people highly endorse and recommend oil-gas fuel, and there certainly seems to be no doubt that it is a wonderful improvement over other stoves.

The writer personally saw these Oil-Gas Stoves in operation—in fact, uses one in his own home—is delighted with its working and after a thorough investigation can say to the readers that this Harrison Oil-Gas Stove made by the Cincinnati firm is the only perfect burner of its kind.

It is made in three sizes—1, 2 or 3 generators to a stove. They are made of steel throughout—thoroughly tested before shipping—sent out complete—ready for use as soon as received—nicely finished with nickel trimmings, and as there seems to be nothing about it to wear out, they should last for years. They seem to satisfy and delight every user and the makers fully guarantee them.

HOW TO GET ONE.

All the lady readers who want to enjoy the pleasures of a gas stove—the cheapest, cleanest and safest fuel—save ⅓ to ½ on fuel bills and do their cooking, baking, ironing and canning fruit at small expense should have one of these remarkable stoves.

Space prevents a more detailed description, but these oil-gas stoves will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and satisfactory properties.

If you will write to the only makers, The World Mfg. Co., 5847 World Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, and ask for their illustrated pamphlet describing this invention and also letters from hundreds of delighted users you will receive much valuable information.

The price of these stoves is remarkably low, only $3.00 up. And it is, indeed, difficult to imagine where that amount of money could be invested in anything else that would bring such saving in fuel bills, so much good health and satisfaction to the wives.

DON'T FAIL TO WRITE TO-DAY for full information regarding this splendid invention.

The World Mfg. Co. is composed of prominent business men of Cincinnati, are perfectly responsible and reliable, capital $100.000.00, and will do just as they agree. The stoves are just as represented and fully warranted.

Don't fail to write for Catalogue.

BIG WAGES MADE

The firm offers splendid inducements to agents, and an energetic man or woman having spare time can get a good position, paying big wages, by writing them at once and mentioning this paper.

A wonderful wave of excitement has swept over the country, for where shown these Oil-Gas Stoves have caused great excitement. Oil-Gas fuel is so economical and delightful that the sales of these Stoves last month were enormous and the factory is rushed with thousands of orders.

Many of the readers have spare time, or are out of employment, and others are not making a great deal of money, and we advise them to write to the firm and secure an agency for this invention. Exhibit this stove before 8 or 10 people and [illegible] curiosity, and should be able to sell 5 or 8 and make $10 or $15 a day. Why should people live in penury or suffer hardships for the want of plenty of money when an opportunity of this sort is open?

Agents are doing fine—Making big money.

WONDERFUL QUICK SELLER

Geo. Robertson, of Mo., writes: "Am delighted with Oil-Gas, so are my friends—took 12 orders in 3 days."

A. B. Slimp, of Texas, writes: "I want the agency—In a day and a half took over a dozen orders."

Edward Wilson, of Mo., writes: "The Harrison very satisfactory—Sold 5 stoves the first day I had mine."

J. H. Halman, of Texas, writes: "Already have 70 orders."

Whenever you see such a look of delight over a breakfast bowl you may be sure that

Quaker Oats

is at the bottom of it

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MAY 10, 1905

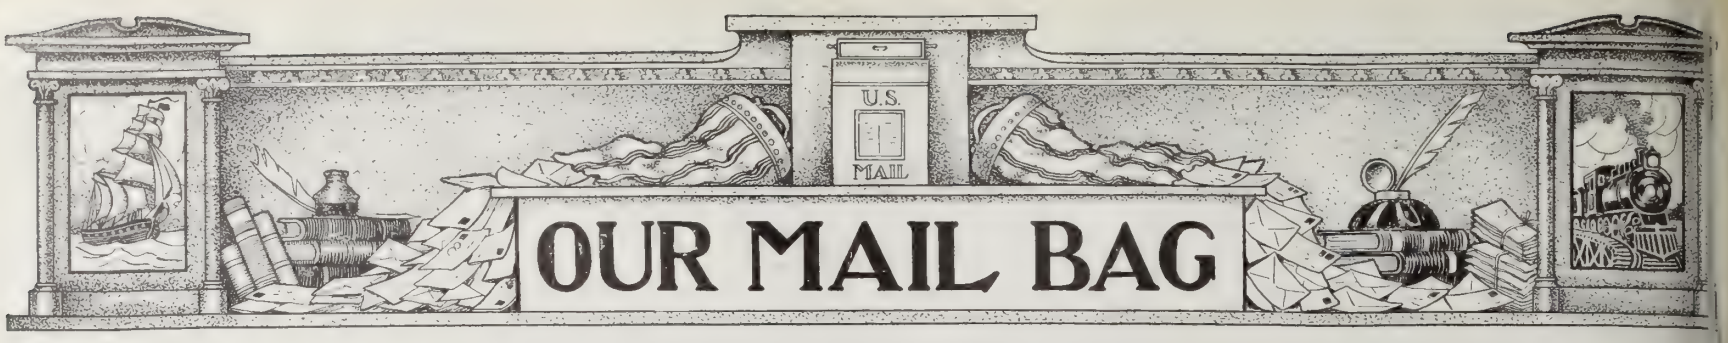
VOL. 28 — NO. 19. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch

SEE PAGES 410-411

THE INDUSTRIAL AWAKENING OF THE SOUTH

1. COTTON WHARF AT NEW ORLEANS
2. LEVEE AND MISSISSIPPI STEAMBOATS
3. RIVER STEAMER LOADED WITH COTTON



OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

N. K., Bloomington, Ill. When and where did Tasso live, and why was he imprisoned?

Torquato Tasso was born in Sorrento, Italy, in 1544, and died in 1595. He was a poet and philosopher. He was a victim of a mental disorder that amounted to insanity, and in 1579 was confined as a madman in the hospital of St. Anne at Ferrara. He was released in 1586, at the request of Vincent di Gonzaga. His fame rests on his great poem, "Jerusalem delivered."

W. W., Baltimore, Md. Please tell me of what nationality was the Queen of Sheba?

According to Josephus, the Jewish historian, she was the queen of Egypt and Ethiopia; but other eminent writers believe she was a queen of Sabæa, in South Arabia. Sabæa lies in Arabia Felix, south of Judea, which agrees with the title, "Queen of the South," which the Saviour applied to the visiting monarch in the reference found in Matt. 12: 42, and Luke 11: 31. Her name, according to tradition, was Balkis or Maqueda.

C. S., Buckley, Ill. Have Oklahoma and New Mexico been admitted as States?

No; the bill for their admission failed to pass.

Westfield, N.D. I have seen a Bible that is claimed to be the oldest, printed in Dutch, in the United States. Its issue was consented to by "The States General of Holland," in the year 1637. These characters are printed at the bottom of the title page: (|) |) C LX. What do they signify?

The old sign for 1,000 was a circle divided vertically, thus ⊕, sometimes roughly shown in print (|). Half of this sign, |), is 500, hence your date would read 1660.

⊕ = (|) = M = 1,000
|) = D = 500
C = 100
LX = 60
} = 1660

M. W., West Seneca, N. Y. What nation built the Suez Canal, and to whom do the steamers pay toll?

The canal was not constructed by any national government. In 1854, M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, a French engineer, obtained from the late Said Pasha, Viceroy of Egypt, the privilege of digging a ship-canal from Suez, on the Red Sea, to Tineh, on the Mediterranean. A company was formed for the purpose in 1858. One-half of the shares were taken in France, one-fourth in Egypt, and a few in England. The following conditions were agreed to: the land on both sides of the canal was to be retained for ninety-nine years . . . none of it to be sold to other parties. All persons residing upon the conceded land were to be subject to the same local consular jurisdiction as residents in other parts of Egypt. The viceroy became largely interested in the scheme, but sold his interest to the British Government in 1875. The tolls go to the company. It is an interesting fact that there was a canal here six centuries before Christ, but had become filled in with the sand of centuries.

Many readers will enjoy this letter from a writer who wasn't represented in our recent Symposium, but ought to have been:

I did enjoy your Symposiums from the men, and now the women; but I notice you didn't have any real old women to sympose. I was a girl so many years ago, I most forgot what I done, and how I done it. First place, we didn't try to dress and act like men; we learnt how to make bread, sew our clothes, and spin the stuff to make them. We helped our mothers keep the home comfortable, and they went to parties with us. We went to spend evenings with our friends, not the nights. Next morning we didn't lie in bed to make up for the sleep we lost in dancing. We dressed modest like, and our fathers and brothers were not ashamed of us. Our parents didn't give up the best of the house, but enjoyed our company with us. Girls didn't go to college, and come home to make fun of the old folks; but loved and respected them to the last of their days. Never spoke to them as now seems the fashion. I am glad I spent my childhood days then, not now.

AUNT LYDIA JANE.

R. A. D., Connersville, Ind. I have been assisting the local corps of Salvationists in holding religious services in two different liquor saloons during business hours. We meet there at the request of the proprietors (whose motives are unknown to us), and found large, attentive audiences. The services were deeply spiritual and many were touched. My action has been criticised by other Christians. Should a believer give his presence and help under the circumstances?

The Saviour's injunction was to go into the "highways and hedges," and give the Gospel to all people. We can see nothing wrong in your action. If the services were marked by scoffing or buffoonery, then they might be open to criticism, but if listened to seriously, then good would assuredly follow.

W. H. T., New York. Has the President appointed a Minister to Liberia?

Ernest Lyon was appointed from the State of Maryland, in 1903,

THE HIGHEST BRIDGE IN THE WORLD

Over the Zambesi River, in Africa, the engineers of the Cape to Cairo Railway, are building the highest bridge in the world. From the crags, five hundred feet above the swirl and rush of the rapids, the arches have been pushed out toward the centre, and the whole structure is to be completed without the aid of scaffolding or under supports. The span will be nine hundred feet in length. Underneath the structure, a life net has been hung to catch any workman who may lose his balance on the girders. The wires are too small to show in the picture, but the canvas sack can be seen as if floating in mid-air.

R. F. D., Berrien Center, Mich. Who carried the treaty papers to England, to be signed, after the Revolutionary War?

No one; the treaty of peace was negotiated in Paris, and signed in that city by the plenipotentiaries of England and America.

L. S. G., Zelienople, Pa. 1. What are the qualifications for a foreign missionary? 2. Is a college education necessary?

1. Consecration, sound health, a good education, zeal for service, familiarity with God's Word, a course of practical training in some Missionary Training College, and a study of the special field in which he proposes to operate. 2. Not essential, although it is always an advantage. Many of the most successful missionaries never went to college.

The editorial rooms of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD were recently gladdened by the arrival of a box of trailing arbutus from the woods of New England. The perfume which filled the air from the pink and white blossoms, was no sweeter than the kind thought of the sender. With the flowers were the following lines. For both sweet flowers and kindly thoughts the editors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD return sincere thanks.

Our first wild flowers are all abloom
With perfume sweet and rare,
Arising from their wintry tomb,
They scent the balmy air.
To-day, while roaming o'er the hills,
In early morning hours,
We found beside the silvery rills
These modest, sweet Mayflowers.
We send these buds and leaves to you,
And hope that they may please,
With sweet perfume and sparkling dew,
Kissed by New England breeze.

Spring Farm, Greenfield, Mass. B. F. SEVERANCE.

G. H., Geneseo, Ills. Is it necessary for two persons forming partnership in business, and calling themselves a company, to incorporate under the laws of the State?

The question of incorporating under the circumstances depends on the law of Illinois. In some States it is illegal for a partnership to give itself a name which indicates that it is a corporation. For example, Smith and Jones are partners, but do business under the name, The Smith-Jones Company. In New York this is a misdemeanor, unless a certificate setting forth all the facts, is filed in the County Clerk's office where the business is situated. Application should be made to an Illinois lawyer for information.

G. H. CRAWFORD.

Louise Clarke, East Toledo, O., sends these dainty little verses, in praise of our Calendar:

Echo of wild wood, glory of flowers,
All the joys of springtime seem ours.
Robin with red breast with exquisite care,
Has woven her nest 'mid spring beauties rare.

W. G. T., Adams Corners, N. Y. Please explain the meaning of the phrases "initiative," "referendum" and "coign of vantage"?

"Initiative," means the introductory step or action; the first move in any policy to be decided upon; the right to take the first step in legislative measures. "Referendum," is the submitting of any proposed public measure or law, which has already been passed upon by the Legislature or by Convention, to a vote of the people themselves for rejection or ratification. In Switzerland, this is a constitutional r[ight] of the people, in respect to certain ac[ts] of legislation. "Coign of vantage," is a c[on]venient position for battle, survey, argumen[t] or action of any sort.

H. A. L., Kansas. Do you consider it wrong [for a] Christian to read fiction, as written by [such] authors as Connor, Roe, Douglas, Barr, [Ward], Harris, Muhlbach, Holmes, Warner, Stowe [and others]? I was brought up to read no novel of any [kind]. Am passionately fond of reading, but [detest] trashy, immoral literature. I have not [good] health, so cannot do any great amoun[t of] work. Am alone greater part of the day.

Certainly not. Fiction, or the literature of the imagination, has its good [side] as well as its bad. Many of the [most] beautiful and helpful books are the [pro]duct of the imagination. A good story like a parable or an allegory. It leads [the] reader to centre attention upon certain principles, the operation of which is stimulating and uplifting. The authors [you] mention belong to this class, and there are many others.

A correspondent in Rome Ga., writes that the Georgia Female College in Macon was chartered in 1836, and that in 1843, its name was changed to the Wesleyan Female College. This same college has at the present time about 500 students. The Atlanta Constitution recently gave an account of the laying of the first brick in the enlargement of the Wesleyan's Chapel. The ceremony was performed by Mrs. Catherine E. Benson, the only surviving member of the class of 1840, the first class to receive diplomas from the oldest female college. The Wesleyan Female College, antedated by one year Mount Holyoke College Seminary, which was founded by Mary Lyon in 1837.

M. T. F., Milbury, Ind. What is the name of the man who was President of the United States for one day?

There is no such case. In 1821, Monroe did not qualify until March 5, and a fateful interregnum was thus created. No man is really President until he has taken the oath of office. President William Henry Harrison died after serving one month. Perhaps that may be the case to which you refer.

A. L., Brookfield, N. Y. What is the Doomsday Book?

It was a register of all the property, etc., in England, prepared by order of William the Conqueror, shortly after the defeat of Harold, King of the Saxons, at Hastings in 1066. The book contains an account of each parish, number of inhabitants, with the cattle and acreage.

Maggie E. M., Rosser, Canada, writes:

I have been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for about ten years, and have been greatly benefited by it. I have also received Bibles and books as premiums, and this year it was Family Worship Day by Day, which I am highly pleased with. I hope and pray that you may be spared to continue this CHRISTIAN HERALD, which I believe, with God's blessing, is the means of uplifting and encouraging millions of people on their earthly pilgrimage here to a higher and nobler life, for which we were created.

Miscellaneous

Jason H. Honaker, Draper, Va. No; entirely different persons.

Miss Henrietta F., Leverett, Mass. Religion is no barrier to political advancement.

Subscriber, Vancouver, B. C. We think a person so circumstanced would be justified in marrying.

Virginia M. Walter, Murietta, Calif. Mr. P. Bliss is said to have returned to the burning car after being rescued, to endeavor to extricate his wife, who was imprisoned under the wreckage. Whether he was burned in the attempt, or voluntarily remained with her, we do not know.

Isaiah G. Willet, Hanover, Pa. There is obviously no source of information except the Bible, and as that does not state, no one knows, or can know.

Mrs. L. F. C., Stanford, Ky. Earl's Housekeeping teaches in a very simple manner the method of controlling and keeping down domestic expenditures. It is illustrated throughout with examples of a complete set of Household Accounts, accompanied by comments of the most noted authorities on domestic economy. Any housekeeper with an ordinary blank book, can readily and easily follow out the plan it demonstrates. Price, 15 cents. John C. Earl, 1223 Bible House, New York City.

NEW YORK, MAY 10, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

A BIBLE CLASS AT PONAPE

SAVAGES Tamed by Music

Wonderful Experiences in a Lonely Island in the Pacific Ocean

A NUKUORIAN HOMESTEAD

T is early morning. The glory of the rising sun has thrown open the door of day on the tropical Isle of Ponape. The multitude of birds let flow their liquid rs from green mountains and valleys, in glad praise to t freshness of the morning. The subdued but heavy ce of the distant sea waves gives cadence to the brok- time of the land chorus, and all seem to join in one and volume of praise to the great Master of all music d beauty. But this sweet music is lost on the dark- nned native people, who are beginning a wild, heathen nce.

The great chief sits on a mat with his band of musicians his side. Drums are beaten, and voices join in weird, stical music as the long line of naked, tattooed dancers ay in and out, back and forth. The din increases as the y advances. The drums can be heard for miles; voices e hoarse from wild singing; heads are owing dazed by constant drinking, d the whole scene has become fright- l. As night draws near, more horri- e deeds will follow under cover of the rkness. Let us turn our eyes away, d, looking upward, pray that God ll give us strength and wisdom to rry the light of his Truth to all cor- rs of the earth and banish such dis- rd and darkness.

In a dirty little village, a soul has just ssed away and gone to meet the God whom it never heard. The sun is set- g behind the mountains and all the y is a marvel of color. Even the quiet vers and sea reflect back this glory red and gold. But it makes no pression on the hearts and minds of ese naked heathen. Four days and ghts the singers howl and groan songs r the dead; all the old women from r and near, as well as relatives of the ead, weep and wail. It is the duty of few men to prepare food and keep ese mourners supplied that their rength may not fail until their work done.

War has been declared. Both tribes f natives are wild and furious. Fight, nd fight to the death is their motto. mooth brown bodies, greased with ocoanut oil, glisten like bronze statues the sunshine; all among the trees nd bushes is the glitter of knives and pears. This is to be no open warfare, ut treachery, strategy and murder. War songs, telling of the strength and ourage of their leaders and of great leeds which are to be done, are taught o the people. At all hours of the day and night, the air will ring with horri- le, wild and blood-curdling songs, which stir the passions f each tribe.

Missionaries came here half a century ago. A great hange has come over the musical life of the people. In nany villages, Christian services are held. After the people learned to read, a small hymn-book was pre- ared, which contained the words of the songs the mis- ionaries had translated, but no music.

The progress of the people was suddenly stopped by he Spanish Catholics burning all the mission buildings nd driving the missionaries away. The following ten ears were full of fighting and trouble for the poor Pona- peans. Still, they tried, in their weak way, to hold to what light they had received. Native ministers continued to conduct services. They were passionately fond of music, singing the old songs over and over.

Several copies of Gospel Hymns were left in one village, and the young people learned to sing some of the songs, though they did not understand the words. The chief of this village had been in the mission school when he was a boy, and learned enough to pick out a familiar tune with one finger on their little organ. This was considered wonderful. "Surely," they said, "he was only a little lower than God, to be so wise."

Four years ago, the missionaries returned to these people, and work was again taken up by the American Board. One evening, after being a few days in the village mentioned, I sat on the veranda with my violin; as the bow passed over the strings, the soft melody floated out on the evening air. As I played the hymns which they knew, they smiled brightly up at me and we began to feel acquainted. One boy, with a fairer complexion and more sensitive face than the others, crowded close to my chair, and asked for a hymn of which he was specially fond. As he spoke in English, I looked down with surprise into a pair of very clear, intelligent eyes.

A NATIVE FAMILY GROUP AT PONAPE, IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC

A few weeks later, we moved to Oua, and began the difficult task of clearing away brush and timber to erect a new Mission on the foundation of the old. We brought Uriel, the boy with the remarkable eyes, with us. He was able to speak simple English, and so could assist us with the language. He also proved to be very bright and lovable. For four years he was with us constantly through hardships, trials and joys. In time we came to depend on him very much. The first year he was not a good boy, but at the end of that time he was converted, and his whole life became changed. He has a beautiful voice, and soon was able to translate into Ponape the new songs I taught him. In two years he was able to play the organ in church, and sang readily at sight. All these people are musical, and in a short time all our schoolboys could read notes fairly well. It became evident we must have a new hymn-book with the music. Uriel and I began preparing one.

Jealousy is a great sin in a civilized land, but in a country like this, it takes forms which are horrible. Strong feeling grew against Uriel because of his opportunities and special ability. His life was threatened, and for weeks we lived in great suspense; he bore it quietly, until one day, driven to desperation, he cut a man badly. Realizing what he had done, he came to the house, and burying his face in his arms sobbed: "Oh, I did not think I could do such a thing! You do not know how hard it is for a boy to be good when he has been treated so." Late in the evening, the German authorities arrived and took Uriel away. That night the brightest light in Ponape was in chains, behind iron bars.

At first it seemed as if Uriel's health and mind would break under his terrible mental suffering; but he has regained his courage and is bearing his imprisonment bravely. His great love for books is a help to him. When not at work he spends his time reading or translating. He wrote of Mrs. Smith's The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life, "I like this little book very much. I read it over and over. Poor Ponapeans! If they only had such books to read!" He is translating it now into the native language. Our song-book of over two hundred hymns will soon be completed. He has translated sixty hymns in prison, and is waiting for more to be sent to him. The music is often entirely new, but he is able to sing it without the aid of an instrument, and makes his translations fit the tunes. Even when there is broken time, he is able to keep all the parts in mind.

The slender, delicate-looking boy of a few years ago has grown into a tall, modest young man of twenty-two. His trials have left no bitterness in his heart, which is full of pity for these weak, ignorant people. In one letter he writes, "Your care and love for me have not been lost nor wasted. I am coming back to you some day to help as much as I can. I love to be good with all my heart, and I have a strong desire to help the people."

In the beginning of this little story we heard the wild, weird songs of savages; later we listened to the quiet strains of religious music being taught by the missionaries, and now I have in my hand a hymn, beautiful in thought and feeling, which has been written out of the heart experience of a native. It is the first from among these people. Although it comes from behind prison bars, it is full of joy and the consciousness of the presence of the Heavenly Father. I have set it to music, and we hope to print it in our new book.

Who is ready to help us? Are you not glad of an opportunity to turn your dollars into music, which will be sung over and over in many a lonely little village, and bring joy and blessing to these benighted people?

Ponape, Caroline Is. MRS. THOMAS GRAY.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

SUBLIMEST ORATORY

TEXT: JOHN 7: 46

"Never man spake like this man"

WHAT is true oratory? Mere conjuration, bewitchery, enchantment mysticism, mesmerism, or animal magnetism? A mere transitory magic spell with which a great public speaker is able to hypnotize an audience for an evening or for a night. Is it a mere magnetic needle, which will momentarily move an iron heart, as many magnetic needles can make nails and screws stand upon their heads for a few seconds, and then fall back, cold, motionless screws and nails, as soon as their lifting touch is taken away? Oh, no. True oratory is more than that. True oratory is one of the most potent, if not the most potent gift with which God has endowed man. It is mighty for good, or mighty for evil. It is a social factor which creates, and moulds, and upbuilds. Or it is a social factor which undermines, and destroys, and wrecks.

Chief Among Orators

The gift of true oratory is second in power to no other human gift. An overstatement is this? I think not. Andrew Fletcher, the great English dramatist and poet, once said: "I believe if a man were permitted to make all the ballads of a country, he need not care who should make its laws." A true orator has all the power of the sweet singer of the fields. He has more than that In his own realm he has the power of personal touch. He has the influence of the flashing eye, of the quivering lip, of the power which comes from a soul on fire, which reaches forth, and as a whirlwind, drives opposition before him, or consumes it as in a mighty conflagration. If the pen be mightier than the sword, then the orator's sceptre is greater than that of the warrior's or the writer's. Great is the eloquent tongue of silver speech!

Great is the power of oratory and orators! But if it is great in the present age, how much greater must it have been in the times of the ancients. Then, the modern printing press had not yet been born, and the human mind could only appeal to the human mind through the influence of the human tongue. But though the generations preceding Christ sat at the feet of some of the greatest orators who ever lived; though Pericles and Lysias and Lycurgus and Aeschines had won their marvelous triumphs in old Athens: though the mighty Roman orators had lived and, like Marcus Tullius Cicero had hurled their verbal thunderbolts, yet when Jesus began to speak, every one of his auditors intuitively felt that a new power of oratory had been born. The words of my text prove it. With one accord, Christ's hearers said, "Never man spake like this man."

The Mighty Message

Why is Gospel oratory the sublimest form of oratory? Why does Gospel speech offer to man the greatest opportunities for the development of the true and noble orator's gifts? The true Gospel orator's message is the mightiest of all messages. It furnishes the speaker with the mightiest of all themes. It cradles its thoughts not like Moses upon the waters of a River Nile, but by the shores of the great moaning seas of the eternities. As a charioteer, it harnesses to its verbal chariots, chargers which have eyes all-seeing, ears all-hearing, hoofs so swift that their speed is swift as thought. It deals with infinitesimals only as they are essential parts of great infinities.

It halts not Time even at the grave. It makes Time, as a Eugene Sue's Wandering Jew, move on and on and on, and never die. Its trumpet is the voice of the eternities. God; Heaven; Immortality; Resurrection; Ascension; Heaven; Hell; Eternity; Redemption; Salvation; Eternal Coronation; Eternal Suffering are its mighty subjects. Like the moanings of the mighty deep, its voice comes reverberating down the halls of the past ages. Like the echoes which are tossed from hillside to hillside, up among the Alpine crags, its hopes go echoing down the centuries upon centuries and the millenniums upon millenniums to come. Its themes are the mightiest of all themes. No subject in all the realm of thought is as great as that which occupies the public speaker in Gospel oratory.

If its theme were not the greatest of all themes, then my caption to-day could not be written. You must have a great theme to produce "Sublime Oratory." All the students of oratory recognize this law. Why is Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address to be ranked among the greatest orations of the ages? Was he placing a few poetic garlands upon the graves of the dead? No. He was making a national plea for forgiveness and love. Why did Patrick Henry, the great Virginia orator, with a single sentence, rouse the passions of his hearers, until he swept them from off their feet? Though the hangman's noose was dangling over every one of his auditor's heads, yet they were ready to risk all, because he was pleading for sweet Liberty's shrines. Why did John Knox's eloquence set all Scotland afire? Why did Martin Luther's invectives thrill all Europe with the divine love? Why did Savonarola arouse Italy, until its inhabitants were tumultuous in agony and strife? Why did Cicero's arraignment of Catiline, and the philippics that Demosthenes hurled against the King of Macedon, create armies and make men enthusiastic in battle? Were these orators declaiming for selfish political purposes, or merely trying to destroy rivals who were obstructing their path? No. They were attacking lust and licentiousness and tyranny and crime of all sorts. It was their mighty themes that made their eloquence effective. You must have a great theme to have a great oration.

A Sure Panacea

This contention is true. Where, then, can you find greater themes for true eloquence than in Gospel oratory? Is there a sounding line which can go to the bottom of a deeper sea? Is there any power on earth which more surely can transform wrong to right; make the strong care for the weak; make tyranny take her iron heel off the neck of prostrate helplessness, than the power of Jesus? Where can you find an immortal panacea for the grave's horror and for the cure of sin, save in the crucifixion and the resurrection and the atonement of Jesus Christ? The themes of Gospel oratory are not only wide enough and great enough to put a man in right touch with God and heaven, but they are so great that if we once accept them and practice them, they will give us perfect homes, perfect neighbors, perfect nations, and a perfect world. They are so great, that if we only practice them, "love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," shall everywhere be supreme in the human heart. Could we have a surer cure for all the evils of the world to come than are offered in the themes of Gospel oratory?

To make "right" might, and to redress the wrongs of a limited class, have been the causes which have inspired wonderful orations during the past years. Watch the lightnings of invective that have leaped out of the eyes of the orators during the dark days of the Abolition movement. Amid that mighty hurricane of oratory, we can see William Lloyd Garrison, with clenched fists, defying the Boston mobs. We can hear his biting words, amid a perfect pandemonium of wrath, crying: "You will hear me! In spite of yourselves, you will hear me!" You can see Wendell Phillips, standing amid a shower of brickbats, waiting for a lull in the storm, to drive into the hearts of his hearers another sentence to prove to them why the black men should be free. We can hear glorious John Bright, pleading for the rights of the black men from the other side of the sea. And if injustice against the black men offered such a mighty theme for shall not modern injustice against the white slave, offer just as great a theme for Gospel eloquence? Oh, yes, Gospel orators have the mightiest of themes for eloquent speech! The Gospel of Christ would right all wrongs. It will emancipate a sinner from all sins. It would make all men conquerors in this world, as well as in the world to come. Man, would you be truly eloquent? Then, by the power of the Holy Spirit, have your tongue plead for the universal acceptance of the Gospel in impassioned oratory.

The Eloquent Tongue

Gospel oratory gives the sublimest of all themes. It does more than that. It offers the greatest of all authorities by which those themes are discussed. It comes to man, and places in his hand the Bible, a says: "Man, here is the Word of God. These are r my statements. These are promises made by our divi Father. If you will accept God's Word, and do as t Book directs, your life will be blessed." Now, it is easy matter to discuss a wrong. It is often very ea for a physician to diagnose a cancer. But the cu Aye, that is the rub! Easy to attack a moral wror Yes. But it is another matter to find a right soluti for that wrong. This the Bible offers. It comes not a theorist. It comes to the Gospel orator's hearers, did Jesus Christ. It comes as one speaking with divine authority. No men in the world have great influence over their hearers, than those who are back with the positive authority of the Bible.

Based on Authority

When a man speaks with authority, he becomes in perative in his demands. Why is Helen Hunt Jackson masterpiece, Ramona, one of the most eloquent boo ever penned? She pleaded for justice to the Americ Indian, with the idea that the law of the land would u hold her in her plea. She was not pleading for t red man as a Utopian, a theorist or a social dreame She was pleading for the red man at the bar of Ame can law. When she represents poor Alessando as bei driven from farm to farm, she was not picturing a scou drel, but a man defrauded of American rights. Wh she finally describes this poor, innocent Indian, as sh down by a drunken white loafer, and then she pictur that drunken loafer as being allowed to go free, s was not appealing to human prejudices for favoritis toward the red man. She was saying: "What is t law? What is the American law? The law of Ameri upholds me in my claims." As Helen Hunt Jackso pleaded for the rights of the Indian under the Amer can law, the Christian orator pleads for the emancip tion of man from sin, under the law of the Bible. H does not say: "I hope this may be." He does say: know this can be and shall be through the blood Jesus Christ. The divine statutes declare it." When Gospel orator stands upon the promises of God found i the Bible, he speaks with certainty. He speaks wit absolute conviction. Above all, he speaks as no oth advocate unsupported can speak. No other man, i pleading for simple justice, has such emphatic divin authority behind him as is found in the Word of Go when pleading for repentance and righteousness.

Identity of Interest

The Gospel orator is mighty when he pleads for on whom he would save from eternal death. He naturall has all the fire, all the enthusiasm, all the pent-up pa sion of a lawyer pleading at the bar of justice, trying t save the neck of a client who is being tried for murder i the first degree. I cannot think of a lawyer defending client who is being tried for his life, unless that lawyer i in an agony of suspense until the acquittal comes in th two words, "Not guilty," spoken by the foreman of th jury. "Do you make your client's interests your inte ests?" I once asked a lawyer friend. "Yes," he an swered. "So much do I make their interests m interests, that if they are being tried for life, I an disturbed in my sleep and dream about them. Ever moment of my waking thoughts are with them. I ofte get up in the middle of the night during a trial an write, so anxious am I to save them." "Ah," then said to myself, "no wonder you are a great speake when you plead for a life in this way. No wonder you whole soul goes forth into a mighty plea for your clients when you are as one pleading for your own life." N wonder the Gospel orator's plea is a mighty plea. Ever word he utters, every gesture he makes, every though that is born in his brain, has the mighty purpose o saving some man from eternal death. Mightily as Christian lawyer does he plead for the salvation of men

But the Christian orator has a higher and even greater inspiration than the saving of sinful men an women from eternal death. He stands in a unique position. He is not only pleading for the salvation o men, but also for what is pleasing to God. And of al inspirations to "sublimest oratory" there is no inspiratio like unto that.

he Christian orator the advocate of the Divine will an pleasure: Let me illustrate my thought by a simple ve al picture. You are not the only son of your mo er. She has another boy, younger than you. But wh eas you are in one sense the good boy, he has been th bad. He drinks, he swears, he lies; he does everything he ought not to do. Again and again your mother ca e to his rescue. Your father left her a little money. Sh has spent it all trying to save him. One night he ca e home from a drunken spree. When she spoke to hi it made him mad. In a rage, he knocked her down an kicked her in the breast. As a result of that kick, a ncer has formed. She is soon going to die. You ar heartsick. "O mother, mother!" you say. "If I co d only make you well and happy again!" As you kn l by her bedside, she runs her fingers through your ha , just as she did when you were a boy, and answers: "Harry, you can make me happy. Will you? Then I wa t you to go after your brother Joe, and get him to co e home again for my sake."

ith a cry, you leap to your feet. You shake the dyig woman's hand off your forehead. "What, go for th drunken brute, whose cruel heel has given you your de h-wound? Never! mother —never! I will see him in ail—aye, or in the infernal regions first." Then yo r mother begins to plead. She says: "Harry, you ha suffered on account of Joe, but have not I suffered? H e not I given my life for him? And oh, Harry, I ca not die happy unless we save your brother Joe." Once th e was a time when you wanted to save your brother Jo for his own sake. Now, there comes a greater in iration into your life. You want to save him because yo can make your mother happy, who is dying on ac ount of Joe's sins. Is not this the figure of God's lo ? The Christian orator is inspired with a desire to sa e sinful man from eternal death for himself. But m e than that—aye, far more than that. He is in ired with the transcendent hope of pleading for man to urn from sin and be saved, in order to satisfy the d re of a Divine Father for the return of his prodigals. He does it now for Christ's sake—for Christ's sake. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Oh, the mighty inspiration which makes a Gospel orator not only plead to save men for themselves, but to save men for the sake of the Divine Father's forgiving love!

Thus, while the sublime oratory of the Gospel speaker may be awakened by many different inspirations, its mightiest factor is due to the power of the Holy Spirit himself. When Jesus Christ stood up before the Jewish people to speak, his hearers intuitively felt there was a strange, a superhuman and a divine power about him. When the true Christian orator arises to speak, then also, this strange influence is felt. The same divine influence that Christ had over an audience, you and I may have in degree, if we will only let the Holy Spirit work in us and through us. For Christ distinctly says that the very works he did, we may do, if we will only let the Holy Spirit live in us.

"A Christian orator?" some one says; "what does that mean? If I truly give myself up to the Holy Spirit, can I become a great speaker and address great audiences. Why, I have not the voice. I have not the physical strength. In one sense, I have not the education. I could not stand before a multitude of people if I tried." No, not that. I do not believe God will ever call you to be a Spurgeon, a Guthrie, a Beecher, or a Mason. Not that. I do not believe, week in and week out, you will be called upon to fill an auditorium with a formal sermon. But you can be a great orator for Christ, nevertheless. Did you ever stop to think that public speaking is only public conversation on a big scale? The other day I was talking to an old man, who used to be a student of the great Dr. Eliphalet Nott, of Union College. One day, in the oratorial class, a student arose to speak. He began to let out his voice in orotund style. He dramatically lifted his arms and twitched his eyebrows, when Dr. Nott stopped him and said, "My son, that is not oratory. If you have something to say, just tell it to us as you would if there were only three of us alone in a room. Public speaking is only public conversation on a big scale." Don't you grasp the truth? By the law of Christian oratory, you may never be called upon to address a large audience at once. But you can address two or three hearers for Christ at the breakfast-table. You can address a neighbor for Christ in the street-car, going down to business. You can speak for Christ in the prayer-meeting, and in the Sunday School. You can become an exponent of the sublimest oratory of the world, the Gospel oratory, by which the Holy Spirit works through you in conversation. Will you consecrate an eloquent tongue to the Divine Master?

"Just tell it," says Dr. Nott. If you have anything to say for Christ by the Holy Spirit's power, will you not just tell it? My father once told me that the first great orator he ever heard, was Theodore Frelinghuysen of New Jersey. He was an intellectual giant Senator, Chancellor of the University of New York, Whig candidate for the Vice-Presidency in 1844, and President of Rutgers College. His fame was national and international. My father said, "Of course, I expected to see and to hear a perfect whirlwind of oratory. But, great was my surprise when Theodore Frelinghuysen quietly arose in that New Jersey Court-room. He placed his foot upon the rung of the chair. Then he commenced to talk to the jury in a simple, earnest way, as you or I might talk in a private parlor. But he won his case. It was the finest piece of quiet oratory to which I ever listened. He had something to say and he said it." Yes, you may not be a speaker to five thousand auditors, but you can have an audience of two, three, five, ten, twelve hearers. You can have as great an audience for Christ as Theodore Frelinghuysen had in that New Jersey jury-box for his client. If you have anything to say for Christ, will you say it? Will you speak it for Christ, by the power of the Holy Spirit working in you and through you, in sublime Gospel oratory?

DR. CARRINGTON'S FIRST HOSPITAL

THE FIRST NATIVE NURSE

TURKISH WOMEN COMING TO A CLINIC

TRAINING NURSES IN TURKEY

IN the interior of Asiatic-Turkey, there has been established an institution for the training of native girls as nurses. The heroic courage of one Turkish maid started the movement, when, out of love r her dying brothers and sisters, she pledged herself perform duties that the Turks despise, as being fit ly for the lowest servants. Ignoring tradition, she, hard study, became the first native trained nurse in e land of the Crescent and Star.

"Start a training school for nurses, doctor!" was the ggestion offered Thomas S. Carrington, a young merican surgeon, who was struggling to build a hospi- l without money in Marsovan. He had gone there me years before to find that practically no modern rgery had been done in that part of the country, although there were patients in countless numbers. The ouses of the city were unhygienic, and to make the perations successful, it was necessary to remove the eople from their home surroundings.

With a few hundred dollars, and trusting that God ould send more, Dr. Carrington commenced his work. tiny four-room house, without bedsteads or any modrn apparatus, was taken for a hospital. With the help f a tinsmith, two large coal-oil cans were converted nto a sterilizer for dressings and instruments. An old ickety kitchen table was borrowed from an American riend, and, after a thorough scrubbing, was made to do luty as an operating table. Poor creatures with tumors, eye-diseases, and every other trouble known to the medical profession, came crowding daily to the clinics as soon as they heard that a new doctor had arrived. But they wanted medicine. "Only medicine will cure us," they said. If an operation was suggested, their terrified answer was "Oh, it will kill me!" They had never heard of such a thing. After great labor, through the medium of an interpreter, a few sufferers agreed to venture into the hospital. During the first year, only ninety-one operations were performed, but each succeeding year less persuasion was needed. Now, the majority of persons visiting the clinics eagerly seek operations. In a large number of cases this is unnecessary, and, when refused, the patients are not only disappointed, but often offended. They are sure they know better than the physician, and say, "If you will only give us the wonderful sleeping medicine, and cut out our pain, we will get well."

In all Oriental countries, a crying need is to reach the women and children, who are the burden-bearers, and who need help and sympathy. That the furnishing of trained nurses would solve this problem, became apparent, and the opening of a training school was decided upon. The native girls, who had education and sufficient ability to enter such a work, absolutely refused to consider such training, for they contended that the duties were menial. Not one could be found who would touch even a dish or a bed in the hospital. At last a young, educated Armenian girl, from an excellent family, offered to live in the hospital as companion to the women and read to the patients. In a few months, after watching the self-sacrificing work of the English trained nurses, she said to Dr. Carrington one day, "I have made up my mind to be a nurse, and will work for a year without pay." She began her training immediately, and three years later, had the honor of receiving the first diploma given to a nurse trained in Turkey. She is still in the hospital, and during all these years her gentle touch has given comfort to many poor sufferers, and her sunny smile has awakened hope in hundreds of despairing souls. From that time onward, through this one Turkish maid's example, there has been no lack of educated native girls to fill the training class and lighten the labor of the hospital workers.

The funds are miserably small to meet the great need. Many girls are now waiting an enlargement of the work in Constantinople, so that they, too, can be trained to labor among their own people. America, always a leader in relieving a great need, will undoubtedly assist in the necessary teaching of these young women.

Any contributions for this work will be received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and applied to the saving, through these trained native girls, of the dying women and children of Turkey.

COURT HOUSE AND CRIMINAL COURT, NEW ORLEANS

THE FAMOUS FRENCH MARKET, NEW ORLEANS

THE BEAUTIFUL MARKET AT HOUSTON, TEX.

THE AWAKENING OF THE "NEW SOUTH"

FIFTEEN years ago the South lay prostrate, like a being mortally wounded. To-day, the South has completely recovered, as though by a miracle. As recently as 1890 there was a widespread reign of poverty in the twelve Southern States. Even the once rich planter could not afford to cultivate more than one little corner of his plantation. To-day, the people of the twelve Southern States, as a whole, are again enjoying general prosperity; the planter once more entertains generously as of yore, and his land—every inch of it—yields sugar and cotton and rice for half the world. Meantime the poor whites again wear "store clothes" and get enough to eat, and even the negro laborer again has his mule and his acres on "shares" and his corn pone. Such is the resurrection of Dixie—the Dixie that once was apparently dead.

But Dixie was only in a trance—a kind of Rip Van Winkle sleep. The long sleep proved refreshing rather than enervating. To-day, Dixie may be called the most youthful part of our great American Land of Opportunity.

I entered the awakened South at the point where one can best see the outward forms of the new activity—the Delta of the Mississippi. From New York I came by steamer, the trip ending with the delightful sail up the "Father of Waters," from the Gulf of Mexico to New Orleans. That sail lives in the memory of all travelers who enter the South for the first time by that gateway. In the eight-hour run up the great, muddy river, the New South bursts upon the vision all at once, not little by little, as when you come down by rail. The third-of-a-day sail up the Mississippi, convinces you there and then that the resurrection of Dixie is an actual fact, and not a mere "boomer's" argument.

Our ship steamed along so close to the levees, that we were able to exchange greeting in conversational tones with the conductor and engineer of the train that was crawling along, stopping at each plantation, on its way to New Orleans. Those plantations typified the now fully wide-awake South. There were the homes of the planters, dignified structures, with wide halls through the middle, and broad "galleries" or balconies on all four sides; homes surrounded by moss-hung water-oaks, with the vast fields extending far inland.

Not all of the fields were planted in sugar; there were mammoth rice fields and huge orange groves. It took us just one hour to sail past one of those orange groves—one that occupied twelve miles of the river bank. I was told that the owner sells the luscious, golden fruit on the trees, each year for the round sum of $75,000, the buyers doing the picking and packing.

THE SPLENDID NEW SEA WALL AT GALVESTON, NOW BEING CONSTRUCTED

The river, almost all the way, was higher than the land behind the levees—lowlands where, not far from the main house on each plantation, were the cabins of the negro laborers. The cabins or "quarters," formed in themselves little villages, arranged in streets; for oftentimes as many as two hundred negroes are employed on a single "small" plantation. Then there were other little villages, each with its tiny church. In these latter villages lived the fisher-folks, the descendants of the French and Spanish voyageurs who peopled Louisiana in the early days. Between the villages were the sugar mills, or "centrals," where the "sweetest thing in the world" was being prepared for market. Then came New Orleans, the capital city of the New South.

Since that day of my arrival in New Orleans, I have spent nearly three months in the wonderful new Southland, making journeys up and down and across from Atalanta, Birmingham, and Memphis, to Houston, San Antonio and El Paso, in Texas. Everywhere the citizens, proud of the regaining of their Southern Paradise, gave proofs that the South is not merely a mended and made-over South, but a brand-new South—proofs that could not bear false witness, namely, figures. The figures show that the South has made tremendous material progress, has achieved commercial advancement in recent years faster than even the West. "Go South," would have been Horace Greeley's advice to yo men of to-day. For to young men of ambition brains, the Southern States to-day offer the grea opportunities, because there are not so many young of ambition and brains there, as in the North and W competing for business success—at least not yet.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AND POST-OFFICE, NEW ORLEANS

The people of the South now make everything themselves, from a tooth-pick to an oil-burning l motive. The value of their real and personal prop is now equal to the wealth of the entire Union w Lincoln entered the White House—$16,000,000,(Even the negroes of the Southern States, though slower than whites to take vantage of opportunities, h accumulated property to t value of $350,000,000. "Black South" owns 175, farms, and supports 28,000 pla of Christian worship.

Commercial advancement the South springs first of all fr the ground; not so much agriculture, as in mining. iron-ore production, for exam Alabama is now the third St in the Union, with Tennes fourth, and West Virginia fi In coke production, Alaba has second place. In coal p duction, West Virginia is four and Alabama sixth. In turni the products of the ground i manufactured commodities, Southern States are destined take front rank, because of nearness of coal and iron-o Birmingham, Ala., is alrea called the Pittsburg of South. Then there's cott once king, and still the pow behind the commercial thro Three-fourths of the worl cotton in its manufactured fo is now turned out in the South. While Massachuse is still in the lead as a cotton manufacturing Sta South Carolina is second, and North Carolina third. noteworthy fact is that Southern cotton mills almost variably declare higher dividends than Northern mil

A MODERN BUSINESS BLOCK, NEW ORLEANS

GRINDING SUGAR-CANE ON A SOUTHERN PLANTATION

HAULING LOGS, MISSISSIPPI

HOG-KILLING ON AN ALABAMA PLANTATION

Tn there are the great cotton ports of the South, Gveston being America's leading shipping point for coon, with New Orleans a close second. As to railw's, Texas, the fourth State in population, has the la'est mileage of any State in the Union—nearly 1200 miles. In respect to woodland, Mississippi alone ha forests of valuable timber as great in area as any fo New England States.

nough of dry statistics. What about the human sid of the South's advancement? Take the matter of inigration. Up to 1900, over 20,000,000 immigrants cae into our country. Most of them settled in the N'th and West. Immigrants are now turning Southw'd. The Southern railways and the United States

MISSISSIPPI RIVER "ROUSTABOUTS"

Ereau of Immigration are convincing the immigrant t:t his best chance now lies in awakened Dixie. Still, Nchigan alone has more foreigners within its boundars than have all the twelve Southern States taken tog:her. In Alabama and Mississippi I was shown a rmber of prosperous-looking homes and farms belongi; to men—foreigners—who walked into the South vh literally nothing but the clothes on their backs. Iy informant told me as we rode along in the Pullman, tat the South does not want that kind of immigrant.

"We want immigrants with enough capital to take u land upon their arrival here," he said. "We've got te negroes for the field work; we need buyers of land."

As for the detailed proofs of the resurrection of the South as evidenced in the growth and improvement of cies, I will give the facts pertaining to the largest city of all—New Orleans. It's an old city, now made brand new; the city in which the ruin following the Civil War was centralized; a city that has made itself over again since the war; a city, therefore, that is more typical of the New South than Atlanta, or Birmingham, or Charleston, or Jacksonville, the busiest city in Florida. New Orleans, within three years, has grown in population to the extent of 40,000 souls. Within four years she has increased her banking resources 115 per cent. She is the chief cotton market of civilization. She is building skyscrapers. She has made wonderful improvements in sewerage, drainage and pavements.

Again, in the Crescent City, there are no vacant houses. The stranger within these gates must build, or go to a hotel, and the hotel capacity within a year has been increased twenty per cent. Within two years, over one hundred new factories have been built here, and literally thousands of new homes. The city is now completing a new post-office and a new court-house, at a cost of one million dollars each. Altogether, the progress made in this metropolis of the South may be regarded as typical of the progress made in all the lesser cities below the Mason and Dixon Line.

In my journey through Louisiana, I left the railroad at various points to visit the large plantations. The Louisiana planters are most hospitable, most generous, most manly and frank. Because you are in their country you are their guests, utter stranger though you be—even if you have letters from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which you may show as credentials that you are what you claim to be.

And speaking of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the South, I know a man who owns a fruit plantation in South Carolina. He tells me that after the arrival of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD each week at his post-office, fully twelve or fifteen persons, including two or three negroes, may be seen sitting on the porch of the post-office perusing the columns of this paper. The village in question is Society Hill, with only a few hundred inhabitants. Some day he intends to photograph the scene and send the picture to the Bible House.

I visited the "Sugar Bowl of Louisiana" just at the time when the succulent bamboo was beginning to fulfil its promise of this year's crop. These planters have adopted modern methods on their plantations. All the planters I met were alert to the march of progress; all were spending money liberally on new mills and improved machinery. Many are finding new uses for by-products and refuse material, such as the feeding and fattening of cattle on sugar-cane and molasses. The "Sugar Bowl of Louisiana" is to-day indeed a golden bowl. Wages are good, and plantation hands are not only well cared for, housed and fed, but are also kindly treated by owners and overseers.

Every town, village, and city in the South has its church, where the attendance and form of worship are not different from that of Northern towns. A survival of old times here is the "circuit rider," the preacher who rides from one settlement to another in a district, with his umbrella under his arm, and his Bible and hymn book strapped to his saddle. He writes a pencil notice to the effect that a meeting will be held, and nails it to a tree. Those who pass the tree and read the notice spread the news, and so the people for miles about gather at the proper time in the little church in the valley. For the larger settlements, the circuit rider sends notice of his coming to the elders or deacons, and sometimes he advertises in the local newspaper. At such places he has a large congregation, and he "boards round" with religious families, as of yore. As a rule, the circuit rider arrives to minister to the spiritual welfare of the people of each district about once a month. In some sections, in remote districts, the common form of church going is the "bush meeting." This is a church service held in the woods, "in the open." The gathering closely resembles a New Jersey camp meeting. All bring a lunch of corn pone, and all get together to gossip and renew acquaintanceships. So often are some of these "bush meetings" held, that the places of meeting have become a kind of permanent out-door churches. Boards are nailed to stumps to form seats, and the seats are kept in order by the nearest devout mountaineer.

LOADING SUGAR-CANE, LOUISIANA

CONTINUED ON PAGE 422

BAGGING RICE ON A SOUTHERN PLANTATION

PLANTING TIME

"JAP" RICE HANDS IN TEXAS

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Mr. Carnegie's Latest Gift

LORD BACON'S observation that "wealth is the baggage of virtue"—something that cumbers and hinders, and which should be carried light toward the end of the road—finds apt illustration in lives like that of Andrew Carnegie. In announcing his princely gift of $10,000,000 as a pension fund to provide annuities for college professors, retired through age or disability, Mr. Carnegie has eclipsed his own magnificent record, and has given to the world further evidence of his sincere purpose to dispose of his great wealth during his lifetime. How much wiser is such a course than carrying the impedimenta to the close of life, and there leaving it to be wrangled over after his demise. What a lesson such a career teaches to other wealthy men throughout the world—a lesson that all wealth is a trusteeship, to be employed to best advantage, for the glory of God and the advancement of humanity.

We do not believe that any of Mr. Carnegie's previous benefactions, not even the $1,500,000 he gave for the construction of the World's Peace Temple, will go as far toward establishing his name on an enduring basis as this deserved tribute to scholarship. Surely, if any class of men be worthy, it is that of the scholar who, after a life spent in teaching others, finds himself, in his old age, relegated to the ranks of poverty. Superseded by younger men, and neglected by the world, these old teachers have a hard battle with adversity toward the close of life, and at an age when men who have devoted themselves to trade and commerce are usually able to enjoy repose and comfort. It was a thoughtful gift, and one that does credit to the kind and considerate heart of the giver.

There are few who deserve better treatment from society than the superannuated professors, and few, as a rule, who receive worse. Mankind owes them a debt which is rarely acknowledged in a material way. It is true, a few institutions make nominal provision for their old professors who have been laid on the shelf, but they are exceptional. Yet no soldier on the field, no naval commander, no captain of industry, hardly one in any station in life, renders, during a long career, service that is so valuable to the world at large as that which the sound scholar, the well equipped university teacher, gives to the hundreds of young men who study under him, and who owe pretty nearly all they possess of character and capacity to his thorough training.

Mr. Carnegie has done many very excellent things with his millions, but he has done no better or more gracious thing than in making this provision for the aged and indigent scholars of our colleges and universities.

Barren Churches

THAT is a gloomy and depressing report that is made in the statistics recently published under the title of "Social Progress" for 1905. Its effect, however, ought not to be to lead the churches to despair, but to stimulate them to more vigorous effort. It is well that we should know the truth, howsoever depressing it may be, rather than to ignore it, like the ostrich, which is said to hide its head in the sand when its pursuers are gaining upon it. That so little comparatively was accomplished last year, should arouse Christians everywhere to new consecration and to new energy. The most ominous of these gloomy figures are those which show the unfruitfulness of many churches. This is a crucial test. Are conversions taking place? If not, what is the reason? It is astonishing to find how many churches there are, in which during the whole of last year, not one soul came forward to avow allegiance to Christ. These barren churches are not confined to any one denomination. The category includes 2,046 Methodist Episcopal churches, 2,024 Presbyterian, and 2,306 Congregational churches. Doubtless in some cases, especially in sparsely settled districts, there is valid reason for this barrenness, but such reasons could not apply to all. It is evident there is a problem here for study and self-examination which ought to be solved.

The familiar adage, that the darkest hour of the night is that which precedes the dawn, has had its application to Christian progress in many an era of the church's history. Great revivals and momentous Christian movements have had their origin in periods of the most intense religious depression. A conspicuous illustration of the fact is furnished by the condition of society preceding the rise of Wesley and Whitefield. Never was there a time of religious indifference, of laxity and hypocrisy, so hopeless as that which ended in the birth of the great Methodist movement. The dry bones were stirred under the preaching of these great leaders, and, as in the prophet's vision, a great army arose to bear witness to divine power. It may be so again, in spite of discouraging facts. The old Gospel has not lost its power; nor has the Holy Spirit ceased to touch hard hearts. The revival in Wales and in many cities of our own land, prove that the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. It is not a new message that is needed, but the old one applied with new force.

The statistics, sad as they are, ought to become a ground for a forward movement. The need of the world for Christ is as urgent as ever. It needs to be taught how much he could do for it, in alleviating its miseries, bearing its burdens, and comforting its sorrows. If it will not come to the church to hear the message, the church must carry the message to it.

Mormonism Must Go!

THAT foul blot upon our national civilization—the Mormon System—is showing signs of disintegration. Shaken to its foundations by the exposures before the Senate Committee, the immoral political hierarchy known as the Mormon Church, has now been attacked by foes within its own ranks. So long as the assaults came only from without, and while its organization remained intact, the Church could afford to laugh at its enemies. In proof of this assertion, we need only look at the powerful influence in State and national affairs it has wielded so long unchallenged. It has controlled local and State elections and sent its hirelings and mouthpieces to Congress. Its ambition was boundless, for it was the boast of the "apostles" that its immoral influence would yet prevail in so many States that it would ultimately hold the "balance of power," dominate the nation, and dictate its policies in the interest of the evil brood of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young and their descendants.

All this has been changed by the ruthless unmasking Mormonism suffered at the hands of the Senate Committee, which uncovered all its hideous nakedness to the general gaze. For this exposure the whole nation owes a debt of gratitude to the gallant band of brave American women who, without aid from any other source, undertook the task of dragging this modern Minotaur to the light. Using their own money and their own weapons, and even engaging their own counsel, they fought so skilfully and so well that the Mormon leaders have been compelled to confess themselves guilty of "defying the laws of God and man," setting State and National authority at naught, and taking treasonable oaths in declaring their fealty to the Mormon Church.

And now, in the language of one of these brave women, "it lies with the mothers and daughters of America to say whether Mormonism shall live or die." We believe this is the truth, and that the women, united and in earnest, can carry the campaign through successfully. Outside of Mormon households, there is not a woman whose cheek does not redden with righteous wrath at the mere mention of "plural marriage," and at the thought of all the shame and the degradation to her sex which it implies. If once these women are thoroughly aroused, who can stand before them?

Drawing the strongest encouragement from the magnificent results of the Senate investigation, let them enter with confidence upon the next stage of the Anti-Mormon campaign. An amendment to the Constitution is now under consideration by the Senate Judiciary Committee. That Committee is instructed to report at the opening of the next session of Congress. Meanwhile, the whole country must be aroused in behalf of the amendment. There must be a summer campaign, short, sharp and decisive—a campaign of women, for it is a woman's question and the battle must be largely a woman's battle. Brothers and husbands should give sympathy, and help them in every way by furnishing the "sinews of war," but to the women, and the tremendous force of their united influence in the nation, we must look chiefly for results. Both Houses of Congress must be won over to the passage of the Amendment. Then the States must be won to approval.

At the head and front of this campaign, which is to demonstrate to the world "the irresistible power of public opinion," will be the leading women of the nation, representing all the various women's organizations on this Continent. In the ranks, fighting for the honor of womanhood and the integrity of America's homes, should be enrolled an innumerable army of women from every town, village and hamlet throughout the Union. Let them gird themselves for the struggle soon to open. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its hundreds of thousands of noble, home-loving women readers, will be on the field, near to the standard, where the fighting is the thickest. Let the women get ready. And let the battle-cry over all be, "Mormonism must go!"

Important Notices

PLEASE bear in mind that our stock of the Crown Encyclopedia is entirely exhausted. Therefore please do not send us any further orders.

☆ ☆ ☆

If you have a Crown Encyclopedia, but not the Crown Dictionary, your set is not as complete as it should be. The Crown Dictionary is bound in exactly the same style as the Encyclopedia. It consists of 1,000 pages and its price is $1.00. If you wish to complete your set of the Encyclopedia by adding this Dictionary, you should avail yourself of our offer to send you a slightly shelfworn volume, at one-half the price; namely, 50 cents. We prepay postage.

☆ ☆ ☆

In order to close out a few remaining sets of the Family Art Gallery, containing ten beautiful pictures aggregating 1,000 square inches, superbly lithographed in all the colors of the original paintings, we offer them at 15 cents a set, or two sets for 25 cents.

☆ ☆ ☆

The wonderful book, entitled, The Great Hereafter, which, among other subjects treats of "The Immortality of the Soul," "Our Children in Heaven," "The Employments of Heaven," "Shall we Know our Friends in Heaven," "The Sorrowless Land," and many others of equal interest, has proved a source of great comfort and soul-cheer to many thousands of our subscribers. The book is beautifully illustrated, contains numberless exquisite gems of poetry, printed on superfine paper with wide margins, all beautifully bound, and is still offered at the bargain price of $2.00, all charges prepaid. The book weighs six pounds, and measures, when open 10 x 16 inches.

For any of the above bargains, address

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPARTMENT

Bible House, New York City

A Munificent Donation

A FRIEND, who, in acknowledgment of his generous contribution, wishes simply the date of his subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD extended one year, sends us $2,000, to be divided among deserving charities, with special reference to the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn. The following disposition has been made of the money:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, New York	$1,000
Bowery Mission, New York	250
White Door, New York	100
Steele Orphanage, Chattanooga, Tenn	100
Florence Crittenden Mission, New York	100
McAuley Water Street Mission, New York	100
Jacob Riis' Settlement, New York	50
Prison-Gate Mission, New York	50
Soul-Winners' League, Wilmore, Ky.	50
Door of Hope, New York	50
Hull House, Chicago, Ill.	50
Foreigners' Mission, New York	50
Home for Invalid Children, Verbank, N. Y.	50
	$2,000

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Incipient Revolution

SIGNS multiply that the discontent in Russia is taking the course of the French Revolution of the end of the 18th century. Like the French peasants of that time, the Russian mobs are attacking the country seats of the nobles and are plundering them and beating the owners and their servants. One of the latest incidents of the kind is an attack on the castle of Baron Rekki, in Courland. The Baron was assaulted and almost killed. A common scene is that depicted in the illustration on this page. A crowd of peasants in the province of Orel assembled, and demanded of their landlord bread to eat and grain to sow their fields. Accustomed to hold such common people in contempt, the landlord ordered his servants to drive them away with whips. On the following day they returned, armed with their agricultural implements. Their attitude was so menacing, that the landlord summoned his servants and bade them fire upon the crowd. Many fell, but the survivors, exasperated by the death of their relatives and friends, rushed on the landlord and his servants, and by sheer numbers drove them to flee for their lives. They then proceeded to ransack the house and empty the granary. Such outbreaks are taking place in nearly every one of the rural provinces of Russia.

If it is asked how it is that men so patient and meek as the Russian peasants are engaged in outbreaks that threaten to become a revolution, the answer is that the war has done it. Karl Pearson, writing in the North American Review, says that "all Russia is filled with hatred of the war and of the political state of things which has brought it about. Any one being sent to the front looks upon his forced departure as the probable end of his life, for he regards the conflict in the Far East as no longer regular warfare, but as mere massacre." The peasant, therefore, is joining forces with the workmen in the cities, who are striking for better wages and clamoring for constitutional government in place of the autocracy and the bureaucracy, which are held jointly responsible for the war.

As anticipated, the Russian Fleet under Admiral Rojestvensky, was notified by the French Government that their stay in Kamranh Bay, was becoming embarrassing, and that its departure would be desirable. With the friendliest feeling for Russia, France cannot afford to obstrage the neutrality laws, indefinitely. Rojestvensky accordingly sailed away northwards, but on April 14, changed his course and tried to effect a junction with Niebogatoff, who was advancing through the Straits of Malacca. Some surprise was manifested that the Japanese admiral did not try to prevent the union of the two fleets. The utmost confidence, however, is felt in his strategic skill by the Japanese Government, who believe that he will choose his battle-ground in waters favorable to the character of his own fleet.

On land, the situation had not changed at the close of last month. The Japanese were continuing their turning movements and were apparently closing in on their foes, who, to escape them, were preparing to continue their retreat northward. From Russian sources, the ghastly figures of the terrible battle at Moukden are reported at nearly 90,000 men, among whom were two generals and 1,985 officers. Besides these, the Russians lost 8,000 officers and men taken prisoners, and thirty-two guns. With such losses in the field and with so much trouble at home, it would be a blessing to his people, as well as to his foes, if the Czar sought the honor described by the wise king.

It is an honor for a man to cease from strife (Prov. 20: 3).

RUSSIAN PEASANTS ATTACKING THEIR LANDLORD IN THE PROVINCE OF OREL

A Sorrowful Reunion

Two sisters, separated for thirty years, were recently reunited in Hartford, Conn., under sad circumstances. Their mother died about forty years ago, and as there was no provision for her two daughters, they were adopted by relatives. The elder sister grew up a quiet, industrious girl, but the aunt who adopted her died when she was only nine years old. Having to earn her own living, the girl had no time nor money to search for her younger sister, of whom she had lost trace. After a time she was married, and then she began to inquire about her. "I had an intense desire," she said, "to find the dear little creature who was my earliest playmate, and whom I felt I could love." Patiently and tirelessly she searched for several years, and a few weeks ago she found her. But what was her horror to find that she had some years ago been led astray, and was then living a degraded, wicked life. Her love, however, was not alienated by her sister's shame. She pleaded with her, promised her comfort and affection, and begged her to quit her sin and come into her home. But the fascination of her life was too strong. She refused the kind offer and turned back to her evil ways. The elder sister determined to save her in her own despite, has had her committed to a refuge, where good influences will be exerted for her rescue. It must have been a woful disappointment to the elder sister, after so long a search, to find her sister so separated from herself in spirit and life. It is harder work that she has to do now, than she undertook in her search. It is so with those for whom Christ is searching; they need not only rescue, but a new spirit.

This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil (John 3 : 19).

A Captive as Sponsor

In a court in New York a few days ago, a foreigner was admitted to citizenship under unusual conditions. He came to court accompanied by an older man, who introduced him to the judge. When the usual questions were asked, it was revealed that the candidate for citizenship was a German, and his sponsor a Frenchman. The Frenchman explained how they became acquainted. "It is this way," he said. "I was captured in the battle of Sedan by this young man's father, and after the war was over I visited his home, where I was treated very well. I saw this boy there when he was yet a baby, and since he came to this country I have known him seven years." He is now able to return the kindness he received from the man who took him prisoner. In becoming citizens of this republic they drop the prejudice of nationality and become reconciled in their new citizenship. So with all who enter Christ's kingdom, all animosity should be buried in the new allegiance.

You that were sometimes alienated and enemies . . . yet now hath he reconciled (Col. 1 : 21).

Swindled in a Cell

A remarkable scheme has been worked from a prison in Ohio. Among the convicts serving sentences there, is a man who pleaded guilty to indictments for swindling. It was asserted that he had already served a sentence in England on a similar charge. His scheme was to find estates that were in litigation, and to personate an official who had been appointed to investigate the claims of the heirs. He had succeeded in getting sums of money from ignorant persons, who made advances to him on the presumption that he could further their interests. He was eventually prosecuted after a long career of successful crime, and was sentenced to eighteen months in the Ohio Penitentiary. Even while serving his term, he concocted a fresh scheme for defrauding his dupes. He represented that he had buried a large sum of money in a London graveyard, which, if he were once set free, he would dig up and distribute among the people who would secure his discharge, at the rate of two hundred times their contributions. It is evident that such a man is incorrigible. Punishment has no remedial effect upon him. As God's Word says, there are men of whom there is no hope.

Let favor be shewed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness; in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly (Isa. 26:10).

BRIEF NOTES

The wife of Marquis Oyama, the famous Japanese general, is a graduate of Vassar College, and a Christian.

At the Brazil National Christian Endeavor Convention, sixty-two societies, with two thousand members, were reported.

At the recent Y. M. C. A. Convention in Paris, a hearty reception was given to the venerable Sir George Williams, who, sixty-one years ago, organized the movement.

Rev. James Duncan, the oldest Presbyterian minister in New Zealand, has just attained the age of ninety-two. He was, perhaps, the earliest teacher of the Maoris.

The Finnish Evangelical Mission Church of Harlem has received a pipe organ as a gift, from Mr. Charles V. Faile, of New York. The pastor, Rev. Gustave Blomgren, is himself a fine musician, and therefore heartily appreciates the welcome gift.

Dr. L. W. Munhall is holding evangelistic meetings at Asheville, N. C. Fifteen churches are uniting in the work. The auditorium, in which the meetings are held, seats 3,000 persons. His services at Charlottsville, Va., resulted in large accessions to the churches.

Rev. W. J. Dawson, of London, who is making an evangelistic tour in this country, will preach in the Second Presbyterian Church, Pittsburg, Pa., on May 30 and 31, holding two services each day. Dr. S. Edward Young, who has charge of the services, begs the prayers of our readers for a blessing on the effort.

A summer tent campaign is planned for New York. Ten tents in various parts of the city are to be erected, at an expense estimated, with maintenance, at $50,000. One tent will be granted by the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, and another by the Calvary Baptist Church. It is hoped that other churches will combine to pay the balance of the cost.

GENERAL FITZHUGH LEE PASSES AWAY

BY the death of General Fitzhugh Lee, who passed away in Washington on April 28, the country loses a gallant soldier, an able diplomatist and a citizen of the highest and noblest type. Though in his seventieth year, General Lee was a man of much vigor and activity, and recently, as President of the coming Jamestown Exposition, he had been working hard to assure the success of the enterprise. He had just visited Boston to urge that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts should erect a building on the Exposition grounds, and he was returning to Washington, when he was suddenly stricken by apoplexy on the train. He died within a few hours after reaching Washington.

General Fitzhugh Lee was born in Virginia in 1835, and was the son of Commodore Sydney Smith Lee, and the nephew of the famous General Robert E. Lee, the "idol of the South." He was graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1856, and after a period spent as cavalry instructor at West Point, he began his active military career in 1861-62. In 1863 he was made a major-general. He was wounded at Winchester, Va., in 1864, where he had three horses shot under him. He commanded the whole cavalry corps of the Army of Northern Virginia, from March, 1865 until the close of hostilities. In 1886, he was elected Governor of Virginia. In 1893, he was appointed U. S. Consul-General at Havana, where he remained until the opening of the war with Spain. Just previous to the Spanish War, and when the frightful suffering among the "reconcentrados" was exciting the sympathy of the charitable in the United States, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD began its relief work in Cuba. Shipments of foodstuffs, clothing, and medicines, were sent to Havana for distribution in the interior. When Dr. Klopsch personally visited Havana to supervise the distribution, he received the greatest assistance from General Lee, in the work of forwarding the food to the starving Cubans. It was a critical time, and our mission of mercy was not favorably regarded by the Spanish officials, who were indulging in threats against Americans as a whole. But General Lee was absolutely fearless in the face of such threats.

THE LATE GEN. FITZHUGH LEE

He gave no attention to the inflammatory literatu that was in circulation, in which the Spaniards we called upon to massacre the "American hogs." H transacted his official business with perfect coolness an in addition, found time to greatly facilitate the reli work by putting a stop to the vexatious delays that woul have been imposed by the Spanish authorities, who, whe urged to expedite relief transportation, would smile, an reply with the eternal "manana!" (to-morrow). It wa due, to a large extent, to General Lee's course in th matter, that the relief measures were so effective.

He was greatly respected by all in Havana, and eve his enemies liked him for his manly and chivalrous be havior and his courteous and affable ways, which er deared him to those with whom he came in contact.

After leaving Havana in 1898, on the outbreak of hos tilities, General Lee was appointed to the command of th Seventh Army Corps, U. S. V. In the following yea the war being over, he became Military Governor o Havana, entering on his duties January 1, 1899. Hi last military office was as Commander of the Departmen of Missouri, which he held until his retirement upo reaching the age limit.

There are many incidents related of General Lee that ar illustrative of the blunt, vigorous, soldierly character of th man. At the close of the Civil War he was the first to say "The war is over—let bygones be bygones." He live up to this ever afterward. His early military experienc was marked by many hairbreadth escapes, especially i his Indian campaigns. He was present at the memorabl meeting between General Grant and General Robert E Lee, and saw the formal surrender.

General Lee's home was in Stafford County, Va. where he owned a beautiful farm. His wife and daughter were at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., when they re ceived news of his sudden illness, and later of his death A cable message was sent to his son, now in the Philip pines, and a telegram to another son in San Francisco.

A COLLEGE IN THE MOUNTAINS

NESTLING in the Blue Mountains of East Tennessee is Washington College, of which President Roosevelt wrote so interestingly in his Winning of the West. It was founded in 1777, as an academy, and in 1795 it assumed the name of Washington College. It was the pride of the Scotch-Irish settlers of the mountains, who, before they had conquered the savage or the wilderness, began to erect churches and found schools.

Washington College of to-day has added to its well-earned reputation by the introduction of modern methods of helping worthy students who help themselves. Thirteen years ago the college decided to establish an industrial department, one that was much needed in this mountain district, which includes portions of Tennessee, West Virginia, and Kentucky. It is its aim to fit the young people for their life work in the hills; to give them a good, practical education that would serve them better than a classical course of the regular college curriculum. A farm was purchased which, by recent additions, now numbers 340 acres. Four acres, it is estimated, will furnish sufficient work to maintain one student. The president and trustees have been tireless in their efforts to keep the school abreast of the times. Two years ago a new water supply was obtained from an artesian well, and last year an electric lighting plant was installed at a cost of $2,000. The same stream that drives the neighboring mill is used to generate the electricity. A motor is used to pump the water to the buildings, and it is proposed to have the electric motor run the fodder shredders and other farm machinery.

All farm work is done by students, who pay only $50 a year to the college. They are under the instruction of a graduate of the Agricultural Department of Cornell University.

At the beginning of each term the college has to turn away dozens of ambitious young men, on account of lack of accommodations and of endowment. Some of them walk a hundred miles over the mountain roads to come to this school, their only gateway to better things. The college is confronted by this vast need of this great region for an intellectual uplifting, "a need," writes James T. Cooter, "that has ever appealed with such compelling force, that generations of earnest, devoted instructors have given their best energies, and some their lives, in one long effort to meet it." Dr. D. K. Pearson, of Chicago, Ill., has offered to give the college $25,000, if they will raise $75,000. The friends of the institution are making great efforts to fulfil the conditions. Dr. Pearson wrote that he would give them one year to get it, bu to do it as quickly as possible. Any on wishing to aid in this work can receiv further information by addressing C. B. Ar mentrout, Treasurer, Washington College P. O., Tennessee.

A TEN MILLION FUND FOR TEACHERS

ANDREW CARNEGIE announced just before sailing to spend the summer in his castle in Scotland, that he had given a trust fund of $10,000,000, for the benefit of professors and teachers in colleges and technical schools in the United States and Canada. The money will be used for pensions for teachers, who are incapacitated from age or as a result of hard work. The money is in first mortgage five per cent. Steel Corporation Bonds, the income from which will amount to $500,000 annually.

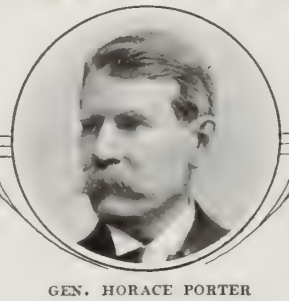
The professors in our colleges are the poorest paid professional men in America, and the small chance of laying by an adequate sum for the proverbial "rainy-day," has kept a large number of promising young men from taking up a teaching career. Mr. Carnegie hopes that the fund will remove this obstacle. In one of our greatest universities there are men holding doctor's degrees, who receive but $500 a year, under teaching-fellowships, and the hardest part of the instruction falls on them. If they stay long enough, the amount may be increased to $2,000. The highest salary in Dartmouth College is $2,500; at Cornell, $4,000, and at the University of Pennsylvania, $3,000. These salaries go only to a few men on the faculty, the remainder receiving about one-half as much. Mr. Carnegie stated he had gone over the ground carefully, and that the sum given would be sufficient for all demands that would be made upon it for a great many years to come.

PROMINENT MEN and WOMEN of the HOUR

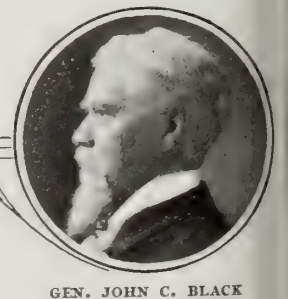
WILLIAM LOEB, JR.

EDWARD F. DUNNE

MRS. DONALD MC LEAN



GEN. HORACE PORTER



GEN. JOHN C. BLACK

WILLIAM LOEB, JR., is the private secretary of President Roosevelt. For the last few weeks he has been in the West, acting as "censor" on all official communications sent to the President during his hunting trip. Since the first term of President McKinley, the office of private secretary has been increasing in importance, and the promotion of Secretary Cortelyou to a Cabinet position, shows its possibilities. Mr. Loeb was born in Albany, N. Y., in 1866, and, like Mr. Cortelyou, was a stenographer at the White House.

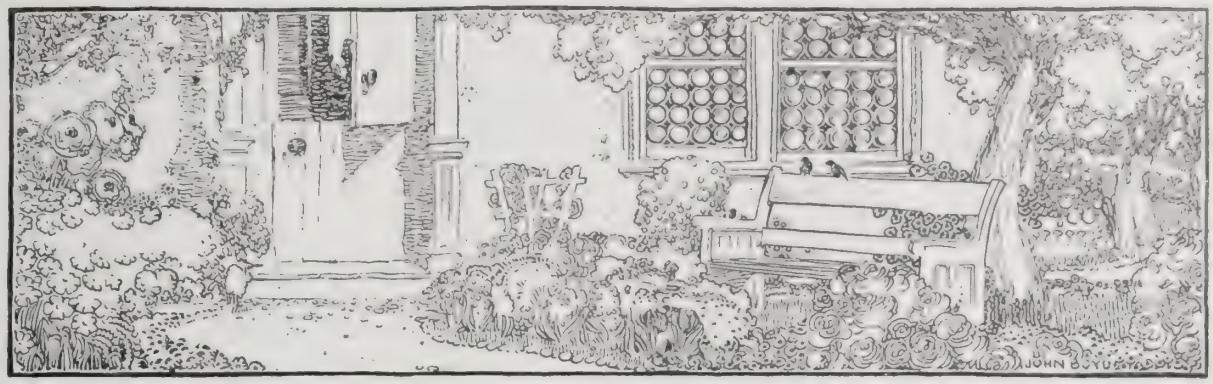
JUDGE EDWARD F. DUNNE is the Mayor-elect of Chicago. He made his campaign on a platform demanding municipal ownership of public utilities. There is a bitter struggle going on between the transportation companies and the City of Chicago, and the end is not yet in sight. Several franchises have expired within the last two years, and the people are determined to prevent any settlement that does not protect their interests. Judge Dunne, since his election, has been carrying on his propaganda in other large cities; an enormous mass meeting being held in Cooper Union, New York, where he was the principal speaker. His election does not mean necessarily that he will endeavor at once to carry out his ideas, as he has opposed to him, besides the companies, a large number of people who do not believe in municipal ownership.

GENERAL HORACE PORTER, the United States Ambassador to France, has, after a long search, discovered the body of Paul Jones, the Revolutionary naval hero. The cemetery in which he was buried had long been lost to view beneath tenements and stores. Gen. Porter closes his career in the public service this spring, and will return soon to America. He has added greatly to the diplomatic prestige of his country, and his departure from Paris is universally regretted. He has a distinguished military record, and has done some historical writing, the material for which was acquired in his campaigns with Grant.

MRS. DONALD MCLEAN was elected President-General of the Daughters of the American Revolution, at their recent congress in Washington. Mrs. McLean is the daughter of Judge Frederick Ritchie, and was born in Frederick, Md. She makes her home in New York City, and is the Regent of New York City Chapter, D. A. R. She is a splendid parliamentarian, and will undoubtedly make a fine record as the head of the "Daughters." The society numbers at present about fifty thousand, and its chapters are found in every state and territory, even Alaska being represented. There is also a chapter in London, England. The Society has preserved many historical buildings and places, and lays especial stress on the encouragement of patriotism, and the study of American history in the public schools; thousands of dollars being spent annually for this purpose.

GENERAL JOHN C. BLACK is the head of the National Civil Service Commission. Within the last few weeks, several hundred places in the public service have been added to the civil service list. Having had a long experience as a soldier and a lawyer, he is well fitted for his present position. The work of the commission is of such a nature that the general public hears little of it; yet the increased efficiency of public service, largely through its efforts, should be a matter of pride to every patriotic citizen who wishes the best results, without the extravagant waste of money that always accompanies the spoils system.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia



By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

iss Cynthia Day had been for years under the ntrol of rigid and harsh grandparents, as well a severe mother. All the natural inclinations oirlhood had been suppressed. After the death o er relatives, she continues the same narrow xtence, economizing from habit, and ably ass ted in this by the old servant, Abby Whiton. T ubled by a pain in her chest she visits a doc- t who shocks her with the announcement tit she has only a year to live. Her whole soul rels against the thought of death. She meets th Puffer twins, and she joins them in her first r down hill, and also accepts an invitation to thr picnic, much to Abby Whiton's annoyance. Te twins stray off, and Cynthia, searching for t m, loses her way and is found by George Fssom, a young house-painter, with decorative aditions. On the way home she engages him t paint and paper the Breyfogle house. Abby Whiton endeavors, but in vain, to assert her old- te power in the house, and at last Cynthia cides to dismiss her, and writes her a note of d charge, inclosing $50 extra "for long and faith- f service." She decides to make a clearance of th heterogeneous collection of old furniture and ther things in the house, burning the useless rub- sh, and giving the serviceable articles to the pr who needed them. A notice of the contem- p ted distribution was prepared to be read in c rch.

CHAPTER VIII.—Continued

BUT Miss Cynthia was quietly crying in the black-bordered handkerchief beneath the shelter of her drooping black veil. he revolution in her small, bleak orld had been so complete and overhelming that the sight of the unanged Breyfogle pew, and even the cient and musty smell of the hymnooks—so directly associated with region of the Breyfogle Presbyterian riety as to subtly represent the lor of sanctity in Miss Cynthia's nosils—had proved painfully agitating.

It was almost as though she had me suddenly face to face with her ern-visaged Grandfather Breyfogle, the midst of some escapade of acnowledged impropriety. For the moent, she was quite drowned in disessing doubts and fears. She wished eakly that all was over, and that e was safely hidden from human ew beneath the sheltering sod of the mily plot. She trembled to think of er bold plans for the coming week. hey now appeared to her as brazen nd improper to the verge of sinfulss. And all these quiverings and ryings of a newly-awakened soul rose in a very sincere, if wordless, ttle prayer.

The effort to swallow her unreasonng tears, and to furtively dab away e evidences of them with her thinlytarched pocket-handkerchief, occupied Miss Cynthia through the preliminary rayers and hymns, until the pleasntly secular reading of the notices as announced.

This tiny oasis of human interest, et midway between a sermon of unnown length and dullness and the vaious devotional exercises which had mmediately preceded it, always reeived the closest attention of the conregation; it being, in fact, a sort of ocial programme for the entire comaunity. It was then that Miss Cynhia raised her head and fixed her redened eyes upon the minister with hat strongly resembled a look of ctual defiance.

opyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

My gracious!" whispered the observant Miss Pratt. "Do look at her! She's been cryin', an' I don't wonder!"

The evening service, conducted by the Y. P. S. C. E.; the regular weekly church prayer-meeting; the second grand Combination Entertainment in the lecture course of the Y. M. C. A.; the annual offering for the cause of foreign missions, and the cake sale and social of the W. C. T. U. having been duly announced and commented upon, the Rev. Mr Pettibone lifted the last thin slip of paper from the sacred desk and assumed an attitude which his congregation recognized as prefatory to remarks of a peculiarly pastoral nature.

"I hold in my hand," said the Rev. Mr. Pettibone, with impressive oratorical emphasis, "one of the most remarkable notices which has ever been laid upon this pulpit. Perhaps I should add that I have not met, in my experience as a pastor, with a similar case. And yet, this communication is a very direct and practical exposition of Biblical truth. We are told in the Scriptures that the man who possesses two cloaks should straightway give one of them to the man who has none. How many of us have heeded this direct command of the Master's? How many of the female members of this congregation having two bonnets, or two dresses, or two shawls, or two——" Mr. Pettibone paused, as he met the anxious eyes of his wife in one of the front pews.

"——Or two—er—of any necessary article of clothing," he concluded, somewhat lamely, "and have freely offered this—er—extra garment to the woman who had none. I venture to say that very few of us have even contemplated such an action. But here is one of our own number who wishes to freely give—to give, mark you—not only clothing, but a number of other useful articles to those in need. I will now read the notice as it was handed to me:

" 'Miss Cynthia Day would like to give away a number of articles, comprising clothing, furniture, carpets and household goods of all descriptions, at her residence on Maple Street, beginning at ten o'clock on Thursday morning of this week. Will the members of the congregation kindly spread this notice among those who are in need of such articles?' "

"TAKE THEM ALL DOWN AND PUT THEM ON THE BONFIRE," SAID MISS CYNTHIA

The audible gasp of consternation and astonishment which followed was promptly covered by the reading of a hymn. When the congregation stood up to sing, Miss Cynthia stood up, slim and straight, in the Breyfogle pew. Her small face wore a strangely aloof and impersonal expression, which was variously construed as pride, vainglory, hypocrisy, and even a failing mind by the charitable matrons of her acquaintance.

It is to feared that the Reverend Silas Pettibone's very excellent discourse did not receive the attention which it merited. The weak and superficial rendering of the closing hymn, and the final benediction, utilized for the most part by the congregation as a period of preparation for a hasty exodus into the aisles, prefaced a determined assault upon the Breyfogle pew. Miss Cynthia, pale and tremulous, but strongly resembling her intrepid ancestor, waited the attack.

"Well, well, well, Cynthy!" began Deacon Scrimger, clicking his artificial teeth in an unpleasant smile, "you give us quite a leetle s'prise this mornin'——quite a s'prise! What's your idee in givin' away your worldly goods in this 'ere——"

"Let me speak to her," commanded Mrs. Buckthorn, elbowing the gathering crowd with the determined authority of an ambulance surgeon hastily summoned to the scene of a fatal accident.

"What do you mean by this unheard-of action, my dear child?" she inquired. "Have you any conception of the dangerous idees you are settin' afloat in this 'ere community? Suppose each an' every one of us should undertake to do as you are doing, we should shortly have the tramps an' beggars from the whole county at our doors. I pity you, Cynthia, from the bottom of my heart; I do, indeed! You should have consulted me before——"

"You'd better b'lieve I'm comin' a-Thursday, bright an' early, too!" twittered Miss Electa Pratt, with a girlish giggle. "I think it's just too exciting an' lovely for anything! I wouldn't miss it for worlds! I may come, mayn't I?"

"I hope," said Miss Cynthia stiffly, "that you will all come and help me, so that the things will go to the right people."

"Who are the right people?" demanded an incisive voice from the rear.

A suppressed laugh arose at this question.

Miss Cynthia shook her head. "I don't know," she said. "But I expect they'll come. I have so many things, you know; and—and—I've never given any of them away. I shall give them away now, even if the wrong people take them."

Mrs. Pettibone pressed close to the little woman's side; they were both little women. "I think it's just beautiful," she whispered encouragingly. "It—it's like the Encircling Good, you know. That's everywhere, and we can each take from it just what we want most."

CONT'D ON PAGE 420

DESPISED AND REJECTED OF MEN

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

THE ORDER OF EVENTS IN THE ARREST, TRIALS AND CONDEMNATION OF JESUS, IS AS FOLLOWS:

1. Judas and his murderous lynching band come to the Garden of Gethsemane, near midnight, with lanterns, armed with swords, staves and clubs.
2. Jesus confronts them, and they fall to the ground, overcome by the majesty of his appearance.
3. Judas rallies them, and kisses Jesus as a sign that they should seize him.
4. When they have bound Jesus and are about to lead him away, Peter in defense of Jesus, cuts off the ear of the High Priest's servant, which is restored by Jesus, who also rebukes Peter.
5. Jesus upbraids the chief priests and elders among the murderous band for coming to take him secretly, when he was to be found daily in the Temple, teaching openly.
6. The apostles flee away, but Peter and John follow afar off, as Jesus is led away.
7. Jesus is taken to the palace of Annas the High Priest, and by the Sanhedrists, the chief men among the Jews, is condemned as worthy of death, blasphemy being the charge.
8. Peter in the courtyard of the High Priest, on being charged with being a disciple of Jesus, three times denies that he has any knowledge of, or connection with him.
9. The attendants at the High Priest's palace and others spit upon Jesus and buffet him.
10. At daybreak Jesus is brought before the Sanhedrin, and by them is sent to Pilate, the Roman Governor, on the charge of sedition.
11. Jesus is examined by Pilate, who perceives that it is through envy that the Jews have delivered him.
12. Pilate takes Jesus out of the judgment hall, and stands before the angry crowd, saying: "I find no fault in this man."
13. Pilate is told that Jesus is a Galilean, and he therefore sends him to Herod, the Tetrarch of Galilee, then visiting in Jerusalem.
14. Jesus stands before Herod, but opens not his mouth when Herod questions him.
15. In mockery, Herod has Jesus attired as a king, and sends him back to Pilate.
16. Pilate goes out to the people, and proposes that he shall release Jesus, as it is the custom to set a prisoner free at the time of the Feast of the Passover.
17. The Jews, prompted by the Pharisees, cry out that Barabbas rather shall be released, who is in jail for the very crime with which they charge Jesus.
18. Pilate receives a message of warning from his wife, advising him to have "nothing to do with that just person."
19. Pilate takes water and washes his hands before the people, saying: "I am innocent of the blood of this righteous man, see ye to it."
20. The Jews answer, "His blood be upon us and our children," accepting the responsibility of the condemnation.
21. Pilate delivers Jesus to be scourged and sets Barabbas free.
22. The Roman soldiers strip Jesus of his garments, and in mockery dress him as a king, with a scarlet robe, and place a crown upon his head—a crown of thorns. They kneel in mock obeisance before him, saying, "Hail, King of the Jews."
23. Pilate leads Jesus out before the Jews, and says again, "I find no fault in him."
24. The Jews cry out, "Crucify him! crucify him!"
25. Pilate replies: "Take him yourselves and crucify him."
26. The Jews, knowing they had no power to crucify him, seek to make Pilate order it to be done.
27. Pilate again confers with Jesus.
28. Again Pilate appears before the Jews, trying to persuade them to consent to the release of Jesus.
29. The Jews cry out to Pilate that he will be guilty of treason against Cæsar if he releases Jesus, the rival King.
30. Pilate is cowed by the suggestion of treason. He brings Jesus out and condemns him to be crucified, but not without irony, as he says to the Jews, "Shall I crucify your King?"
31. The murderous rabble utter a false oath of loyalty to the Roman power, as they say: "We have no king but Cæsar."

THE heart of this lesson for all ages is the unappreciated Kingship of Christ. To the Pharisees, Pilate seemed a real king, but Jesus only a pretender. History shows that Christ was the only true king of the two.

1. A King who was led to Coronation as a Prisoner. No wonder the Jews thought one who from his birth had been meek and lowly could not be their promised king, and even those who on Palm Sunday had thought he would yet assert himself as Messiah and King, were no doubt many of them fully convinced they had been mistaken when they saw him brought as a bound prisoner before the Jewish and Roman tribunals. And even to-day, thousands who hail Christ as a Saviour think of his Kingship as only a bit of poetry. The mistake of the Jewish church is repeated in a more negative form in the Christian Church, for still his unique Kingship, through individual convictions over social institutions, is misunderstood and unappreciated. This is the very lesson to show Christ's royal relation to the Pilates and Cæsars, and also to the church and to individuals.

Let us approach his palace along the corridor of prophecy in which his Kingship and Saviourship are ever presented together. The first promise and prophecy, that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head and it shall bruise his heel, is the promise of a bruised conqueror, a Saviour-King. In the Tabernacle the blood proclaimed the coming Sufferer; the gold, the Sovereign. These two thoughts are so constantly interwoven in the prophecies, that the Jews, unable in their human selfishness to understand how a crown and a cross could go together, conceived a theory that there were to be two Messiahs. When Jesus came, two cries rang out on the air: "Unto you is born a Saviour." "Where is he that is born King?" On the Mount of Transfiguration and coronation Jesus "spake of his decease." The Lord's Supper, by its very name, reminds us of Christ's Kingship, as well as Saviourship, pointing us above his wounded feet, and hands, and side, and brow, to the supreme meaning of the cross in the words above his head, in three languages, for all the world. "This is the King." Most impressive of all, John, in the Revelation, beholds in heaven on the throne of the world, "a Lamb as it had been slain."

"THE GOVERNOR ASKED HIM, 'ART THOU THE KING OF THE JEWS?' JESUS SAID, 'THOU SAYEST?'"

History shows that this Bible picture of a King who comes not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life as a ransom for his very foes, is not such a joke as Herod thought when he arrayed him, in mockery, in royal robes; not such a joke as Pilate's Roman soldiers thought it, when they added the crown of thorns; not such a satire as Pilate thought, when he said to the people, "Shall I crucify your King?" Quite as much to the Jews the idea of a kingdom set up without a sword, started with a cross rather than a crown, was a treason to prophecy, to Judaism and to God. But Napoleon and other modern rulers of a day have seen that the only abiding kingdom is the one that is established by winning men's hearts one by one, by unselfish service, and through individual convictions coming out into social institutions, conquering slowly but surely the world of business, and politics and pleasure.

But when Jesus was seized and bound as a prisoner in Gethsemane and led away to Jewish and Roman tribunals, the onlookers had no interpreting facts of modern history to enable them to understand that the prisoner was really going to his coronation. Even Peter did not yet understand that Christ's kingdom had no need of the sword. Their failure to understand God's promises of the Prince of Peace was due to their own selfish hearts. We are more to blame if, after the nineteen Christian centuries have given us their nineteen volumes of interpretation of Christ's Kingship, we do not yet see that the Gospel is not only the good news of pardon, through Jesus, the Saviour, but also of direction and protection through Christ, the King, and do not accept him loyally as our Lord in business, and politics, and pleasure, as well as in the life of the church and the home. A prophet might well cry to-day in the markets, the theatres, the government buildings of some so-called Christian lands, "Where is he that is born King?"

An old legend tells that Saint Macarius, who dwelt among the tombs, one day took up a skull, and looked at it, and said to it: "Who are you?" The skull took a voice and replied: "I am a Pagan." Again the sait looked at it, and asked a further question: "Where ar you?" Came the reply, "In hell." "How deep i hell?" went on the saint. "Deeper than earth is fro heaven." "Are there any deeper in hell than you?' "Yes," said the skull, "the Jews are deeper in hell tha I am." "Are there any deeper in hell than the Jews?' "Yes," said the skull; "there is a deeper depth yet There are those that listened to the Gospel and obeye it not."

2. A King in the Prisoner's Box. It must have seeme yet more perplexing to Peter, who had believed Chris was the true Messiah, to see him standing as a helpless condemned prisoner, silent and submissive under charges in successive trials before Annas, Caiaphas and Pilate.

3. A Subject of the mob Monarch on the Throne. And now see in contrast to the kingly Prisoner, the slavish sovereign. Pilate acquits Christ three times and then becomes the slave of the mob, and takes orders from it to crucify Christ. But before we too severely condemn such a course, let us ask, "Lord, is it I?" Am I a Pilate, choosing to follow the crowd rather than the Christ? That is the essence of Pilate's offense, and it is not a monopoly of Pilate's?

It happened once that a private soldier, walking through a busy London thoroughfare, had a slip of paper thrust into his hand, inviting him to a special mission service. He attended the meeting, was convicted of sin, and found the Saviour. His first difficulty arose on reaching the barrack-room. Was it possible for him to kneel down and pray before his mates? It was not an easy thing to do, but he felt that it must be done. It would be mean to be ashamed of the Lord, who had just saved his soul. So, regardless of consequences, he threw himself upon his knees and poured out his heart to God in earnest prayer for help to be brave and true. The result was a tremendous noise from his comrades, followed by a pair of boots aimed at his head. The Master's recruit stood his ground and never wavered. The next night all eyes were turned towards him, as his mates watched to see what he would do, but now, without any hesitation, he threw himself on his knees. The row on that occasion was very bad, but not quite so bad as on the previous night. The third night there was less of a tumult, and on the following night, just as the badgering process was about to commence, a sergeant cried out, "I say, lads! he stands fire—he's the genuine article; let him alone." From that moment, though he continued his evening prayers, he was never molested.

4. The Man the Ages Crown. It is not selfishness but self-sacrifice that even a selfish world crowns in the end. The crowns of selfishness are but for a day, while the crowns of earthly as well as of heavenly immortality are of those who, in the spirit of Christ, sacrifice themselves for God and home and native land.

---

*International Sunday School Lesson for May 21. Jesus Before Pilate. John 18: 28-40. Golden Text: "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." John 18: 37. HOME READINGS: Sunday, May 21 (prophecies continued from CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Red Letter Bible), Isa. 9: 1-7. Monday, Isa. 11: 1-10. Tuesday (with days following, tells from all Gospels full story of Christ's trials; suggested all Matthew references be read by one person, all Mark by another, etc.), John 18: 13-18; Luke 22: 55; Mark 14: 66-68; Matt. 26: 71, 72; Luke 22: 59-62. Wednesday, John 18: 19-24; Luke 22: 66-68; Mark 14: 55-61; Matt. 26: 63-68. Thursday, Matt. 27: 3-10, 1, 2; John 18: 28-32; Luke 23: 2; John 18: 33-38; Mark 15: 3-5; Luke 23: 4, 5. Friday, Luke 23: 6-16; Matt. 27: 15-20; Luke 23: 20-23; Matt. 27: 24-26. Saturday, Matt. 27: 26-30; John 19: 4-16.

The Domestic Question

BY domestic in this connection, is meant the question, always a vexed one in our country, of hired help in the family. The word servant is resented by some excellent working women, so it is purposely omitted from this confidential talk with both employers and employed.

One of our readers, a gentlewoman of refinement and intelligence, the wife of a prosperous man, the mother of two dear children, of whom the younger is five years old, and the mistress of a beautiful home in a suburb of New York, has written in moving terms of her inability to secure the right kind of domestic help, and of her desire to have some one who will do her work, prize fair treatment, fair wages, and a very comfortable home, prove a real mother's helper and friend, and break the weird spell that has hitherto fallen upon the household joy. For in twelve years this lady has had as many maids, ranging in age from fourteen to sixty-five, some staying two years, and all more or less unsatisfactory. She has had women under her roof who have been incapable, inefficient, dishonest and immoral. Her patience is exhausted, and her hope is verging on despair. Her ideal domestic does not appear. The place is an easy one; the difficult task of washing and ironing is eliminated, as that work is sent out, but she simply cannot find a woman, young, strong, intelligent, sympathetic, and well-poised, who will come to her relief, do her cooking and other housework, and take an interest in the home.

The case is a common one enough. Our friend speaks of gratitude as lacking in her employees. That word is a mistake. In a business contract the provisions of which are honorably carried out by both parties, there is room for affection, there is room for regard, there is room for true friendship, but there is not, necessarily, room for gratitude. Probably this friend of ours has been obliged to select her maids from among those who obtain situations by means of the ordinary intelligence office, an agency that is often most disappointing. Or else the grocer, on his rounds, has acted as the introducing medium, or she has inserted or answered advertisements in the local newspaper. These are the usual ways of bringing maid and mistress together. All are good in their degree, but the present writer prefers a more friendly method; that is, when the thing is feasible, she would rather have a new maid who comes with a word of presentation from some other maid in the neighborhood. In any case it is unwise to accept a maid of whom you know nothing, whose references are nebulous, and whose acquaintance with practical housekeeping is very vague. A girl, utterly ignorant but willing to learn, may be trained into the methods of a patient and persevering housekeeper who knows how herself and is willing to teach. Such a young woman should not expect or receive the weekly or monthly wage given to a trained and efficient cook, housemaid or laundress.

* * *

In old days, a lady often went to an orphan asylum and took thence a little girl whom she so taught and trained, making her one of the family in a true and very sweet sense, that the girl stood by her afterward most loyally in sickness and in health.

* * *

In a suburb not far from New York, there is, according to my intimate knowledge, a ceaseless wail arising from disconsolate housekeepers. They complain of the inefficiency, the insolence, the baseness of their maids. They are often without help, and when help does come, it is very likely to be as unstable as a bird on a bough. Yet in that very borough there are maids who are marvels of goodness. I think of one, strong, self-reliant, warm of heart, quick of temper, thoroughly loyal, thoroughly trustworthy, in whose hands the domestic machinery runs so smoothly that the house seems to run itself. Let come what may the interests of the family are safe in the care of this admirable woman, and she takes a great pride in their home, speaking of it invariably as ours. Our table-linen, our garden, our furniture, our library are hers. She reads the books and magazines; she goes out unquestioned at her own convenience; she knows all the family friends and has a welcome for them. In the absence of her employers, any old friend who happens in is sure of a cup of tea and a luncheon, and if her own personal friends come, her employer expects and insists that her maid shall freely entertain them in her pleasant kitchen.

* * *

The much mooted question would be shorn of many of its difficulties, if we could put ourselves more than we do in the employee's place. What does Kate in the kitchen think of me? is a pertinent inquiry for many a mistress. "Do I fully try to make her happy? Do I comprehend her limitations?"

Meanwhile, there is a good home waiting for the right woman, if supply and demand can be brought together and if both will remember that love is the fulfilling of the law.

GOLD AND GLADNESS

Though age may count its shekels
It cannot banish sadness,
Nor bring to wistful, yearning youth
A gleam of golden gladness.

O, heart that calls unto its mate,
No wealth can bring you joy.
Haste back! haste back! dear wanderer,
Bring wealth without alloy.

The Woman Doctor

Time was that the woman-doctor was regarded with some scrutiny and that her province was circumscribed. The time for indifference, hostility, or contempt, so far as the woman who practices medicine is concerned, has passed away. Most of us know women who are ably and successfully practicing the healing art, and they are usually competent, gracious, and winning of speech and manner. One test of success is the financial return a professional woman receives. Women doctors make large incomes and are sure of devoted patients, who not only take their prescriptions, but proclaim their merits with the championship that we reserve for our private doctor. Women are authorities now on household sanitation and on the bringing-up of infants. They are residents in asylumns, hospitals and women's colleges and schools, and on the foreign mission field they are following closely in the footsteps of their Divine Master. The profession is an inviting one, and scores of college graduates look forward to it with desire.

The Value of Education

SOMETIMES, dear girls, I am ready to think that you do not put the value of education in the right place. A good many of you write to me that you are unhappy because you cannot go to college, or because your parents are not able to let you take advanced courses in science, music, or art. A girl the other day wrote in a vein of sorrowful complaint, that her father was not willing to let her go on with her studies, but thought, now that she had been graduated from the High School, she ought to stay at home awhile and help her mother with the younger children. Reading between the lines I had a vision of that father, a hard-working man, with hair beginning to turn gray; with anxieties about a large family; with pecuniary worries that his little daughter in the sweetness of her sixteen happy winters and summers, cannot so much as imagine. The mother, too, with the boys and girls at the age when shoes wear out so fast, and frocks and jackets are so soon outgrown, with most of her domestic work to carry on all by herself, of course she needs her oldest girl at home. As an elder sister and a daughter on the threshold of womanhood, the high school graduate can be a boon beyond words to her parents and the rest of the family, if she forego further study for a year or two, and devote her attention to learning the secrets of good housekeeping. The education we get from books is not the only, nor is it the most useful education in the world. No girl can hope to be an all-round woman unless she learns some things outside a school curriculum. Once we have mastered the difficult art of self-control, once we have learned to be brave and cheerful and to accept circumstances as our Heavenly Father arranges them, we may be far from ignorant, although we have not gone over the work that our friends have, who have been graduated from a university.

Many girls long, and naturally, for the good times, the friendliness, and the genial and tonic atmosphere of college life. If they can go to college without thereby sacrificing the younger children, who are still to be educated, or unduly taxing their parents, it is well that they should do so. "The four years I spent at H——," writes a girl, "went by on wings. They were the happiest years of my life, and now that I am at home, engaged in domestic cares, I cannot but envy the girls who are there. But I am not able quite to rise above the envy. Do you think it is waste of time for a college graduate to make bread, and cook dinners, and mend torn trousers, and darn stockings for six brothers and sisters? That is the way I am spending my winter." If the bread is light, and the dinners are good, and the mending is well done, this college graduate is putting her time to a noble use.

To do one's duty, girls, in the place where God has put us, is to show that one has made the very best of her educational opportunities.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—M. E. H. A cordial welcome is three fourths and the entertainment provided only one-fourth in making an evening successful. Meet your friends, whether married or single, with a glad smile and pleasant word. Make the house as bright and beautiful as you can before they come. Provide simple refreshments, with music or games, and any evening will pass delightfully.

Mrs. J. R. I think as you married your husband in good faith, although you were comparative strangers and the circumstances of your meeting were exceptional, it is your bounden duty to stand by him. He did not deceive you about his home, and you should make the best of it. After a while things will brighten, and you may be able to make some change for the better.

—Cordia. I am sorry you are troubled over your lack of conversational talent, and that you cannot [illegible]. The second is the greater [illegible] the easier to remedy. Try reading [illegible] single page over and over until you have mastered its meaning. Do this every day. You will soon find an improvement. Do not talk unless you have something to say. [illegible]

Two Little Housekeepers

COME with me through one of the crowded East Side streets of New York. Tall tenements on either side make the thoroughfare seem narrower even than it really is, while wagons and pushcarts fill the space from gutter to gutter. These movable markets and variety shops on wheels are patronized by tenement dwellers, who gather in great numbers, haggling and bargaining, talking and gesticulating in their efforts to get the best bargain for the least money.

The sidewalks are crowded with little children, ranging in age from the few-weeks-old infant, whose wabbly little head rests on the shoulders of a "Little Mother," to the boy and girl of preternaturally old face, carrying to the shops great bundles of ready-made clothing, results of the unremitting toil of the mother at home. But it is not with these that we are to tarry, for our guide—a pleasant-faced charity "visitor"—has promised to take us to the home of the two little housekeepers, in whom she is much interested. We pause at the entrance of a rear tenement, which is a narrow, bricked alleyway, leading from the sidewalk, like a tunnel beneath the front tenement. No one not familiar with a New York rear tenement can form an adequate idea of conditions found there. A small paved space is called a yard, but so high are the buildings, that neither sun nor fresh air have much of a chance to sport in this place, where brick walls and flagged floors are more than suggestive of a prison.

ANGELINA AND CATERINA

As we emerged from the alley, we saw at least twenty little children trying to amuse themselves in various ways; dirty, ragged and helpless, their condition would have moved a heart of stone. Not one of them exceeded three years of age. There they were, turned out to amuse themselves as best they could, on the cold, hard flags, where they were toddling about, sitting or sprawling, far more neglected than a caged lot of wild animal.

Toiling up four flights of dark, winding stairs, we finally pause at a battered old door, which is opened to the visitor's knock by a sweet-faced young woman. One glance shows her to be in an advanced stage of consumption. The room is dark, dingy, and very small; opening out of it is a closet-like apartment, just big enough for a bed. In such "apartments" as these, thousands of poor people live in New York, year after year. Here children are born, many of them only to die; here the frail mother works and strives for her little brood, until, broken in health, her strength gives out, and then ?—well, they must do the best they can. The husband and father considers himself fortunate if he earns enough to pay the rent, and keep the family from starving; there is nothing left with which he may make things easier for the patient mother. Here, in this forlorn place we find living, or rather existing, a family of seven—father, mother, and five children; the oldest, a boy of ten; the youngest, an infant, plump and healthy-looking. A deathly pallor pervaded the faces of the rest of the family.

Two little girls of six and eight stood by one of the dingy windows, trying to amuse a younger child, little four-year-old Mary, who had never walked a step, but who sat all day long on a broken chair. She never had seen more of out-of-doors than was comprised in the view of the thousands of brick composing the wall opposite, and the bit of sky away above.

Most of the time, the mother is not able to rise from her bed. All the work of caring and cooking for the family falls upon the two little housekeepers, Angelina and Caterina. The old stove is but two feet from the bed, and as the mother lies there she can direct the little girls, for the cooking is necessarily of the simplest kind, and "clearing away" is a matter of washing a few broken and cracked dishes. The family wash is strung upon the rusty old fire-escape; this labor also being performed by the little girls. Every garment is ragged and dingy, the childish arms not being equal to the work of really washing the clothing.

The visitors are welcomed by the pale woman, who gazes into their faces with great mournful eyes, her lips parting in a sweet smile, showing two rows of beautifully white, even teeth. Before illness had made such inroads, she must have been very beautiful; not with the heavy, stolid beauty of the peasant, but delicate in feature as a carved cameo. In her soft, broken English, she expressed her gratitude to the visitors for their interest and for the attentions she had received at the hands of the mission worker.

"She never asks for anything," said the latter, "but is so grateful for any little assistance we are able to give her."

The little girls came smilingly forward as their names were called by the visitors, their eyes wide with wonderment, when they were told that by-and-by they might go to the country, where there were trees and flowers and beautiful singing birds, lots of nice things to eat, and little white beds to sleep in. A good neighbor woman would look after mamma and the babies while they were gone; the "missionary lady" would see to that.

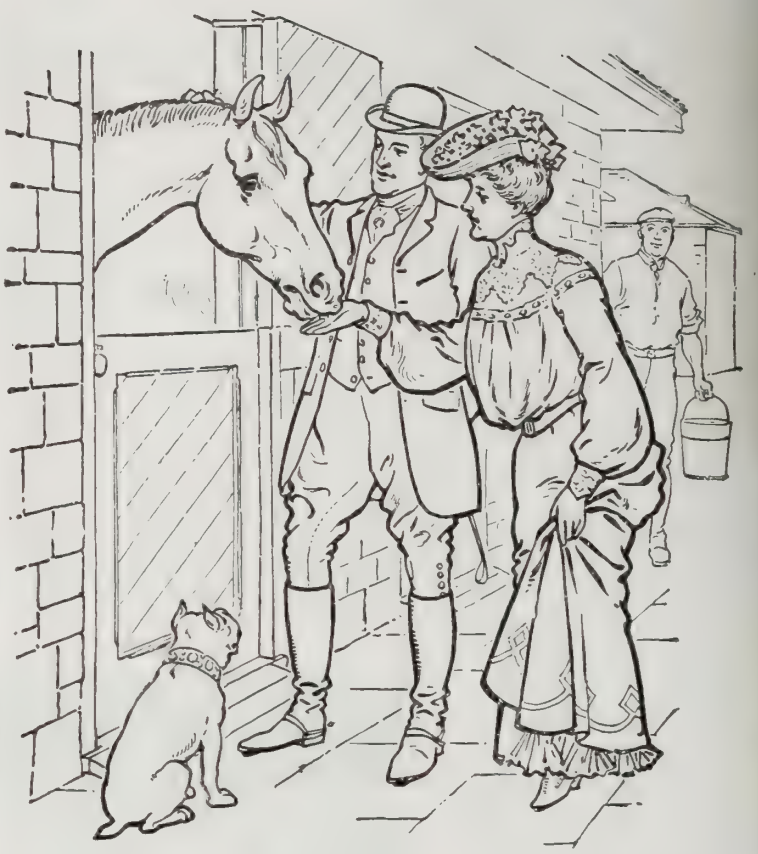
Just before the call came to a close, the mission worker handed the mother a flat package about ten inches square, saying: "I brought this, Mrs. F., to comfort you." The woman unwrapped the parcel, disclosing a beautiful pictured head of the great Comforter. The woman gazed for a moment upon the beauty of the divine countenance, then reverently pressing it to her lips, she placed it upon a shelf where all could see, and with eyes full of unshed tears, tried to thank the giver.

Shall Angelina and Caterina go to Mont-Lawn? Shall their faithful little hearts be made glad with a sight of blue sky and green grass, in place of the stony pavement of the rear tenement yard. Kind hearts will say yes, their generosity making it possible. This is a perfectly true picture, and is typical of thousands of others framed with the sickening environment of poverty in a great city.

MARY SARGENT HOPKINS.

Back From Macedonia

Rev. Lewis Bond, recently returned from a long residence in Monastir, European Turkey, is prepared to give instructive and entertaining addresses and lectures—with free-hand crayon illustrations—on the social, religious and political condition of Macedonia. This unhappy province, which was the starting-place of Christian missions in Europe, is more than likely to be the battle-ground of the world's next great war. Mr. Bond's address is Kensington Avenue, Plainfield, N. J.



For washing galled spots and scratches on horses use only a pure soap. Ivory, a soap of known purity, contains no strong acids and is made of sweet vegetable oils. It will cleanse without irritating, and is soothing and healing in effect. Keep a cake of Ivory in the stable.

99⁴⁴/₁₀₀ Per Cent. Pure.

$1 AN HOUR FOR SPARE TIME OR
For entire time $20 to $50 a week selling this NEW INVENTION, the STANDARD SELF-Filling Cleaning Fountain PEN

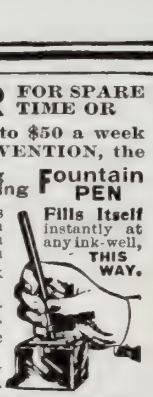
No ink dropper. No smeared fingers No "blow." No taking apart to clean No twisted rubber. No valve or piston No awkward hump. No complication

Fills Itself instantly at any ink-well, THIS WAY.



$160.40 profit for 20 days' work by Geo. F. Smith, of Cal.
$178.00 earned in 32 days by retired business man in Ala.
$35.80 for a month's spare time by G. Jos. Lovett, of Mass.
$5.40 made first two hours by Mrs. Mary M. Lennon, of Mich.

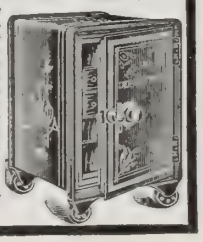
Our Free Lessons in Successful Salesmanship make experience unnecessary. We send all particulars and figures to prove above records; write to-day. Energetic AGENTS and DISTRICT MANAGERS Wanted.
Standard Pen Co., 1556 Spitzer, Toledo, O.

$1.00 FOR A SAFE

You are mighty poor if you have nothing in your home or office that is worth protection from fire and thieves. An investment in a safe is pretty cheap insurance. Lasts a lifetime.

MEILINK'S IMPROVED VAULT

is made in many sizes for valuable papers, for jewelry, for the home, and for professional or business use. We will place in your home or office, for $1.00, at our risk, the only practical small safe made. Meilink's Improved Vault is backed up with the most rigid guarantee ever offered by any company, not only for fire, but for water; against swelling of the walls, rusting, dampness and other troubles common to small safes. Write at once for catalogue and full particulars.



MEILINK MFG. COMPANY
Desk 1020, Toledo, Ohio

SANE FINANCE

Is Taught in Monthly Lessons by

"The Federal Exchange"

A Journal devoted to Finance and Investments.

Send name and address for three months' free trial subscription.

FEDERAL STOCK AND BOND EXCHANGE

NEW YORK,	PHILADELPHIA,	CHICAGO,
52 Broadway.	308 Chestnut St.	140 Dearborn St.

$200, $500, $1,000

6% FIRST MORTGAGE, HIGH GRADE TELEPHONE BONDS

Safest public utility bond offered investors in twenty years. Underground construction. Fire-proof buildings.

Stock bonus given with bond purchase that will net you additional profit per annum.

Write for circular giving financial Statement and Banker's testimonials.

FARNSWORTH, BILLS & CO.
Railway Exchange Building, Chicago

A garment knitted or crocheted of The "Fleisher" Yarns will stand the test of wear and wash.

The "Fleisher" Yarns are uniform, lofty and elastic. They are dyed in a full line of beautiful colors—from the deep rich shades used for afghans, etc., to the light delicate tints for children's garments.

If you use The "Fleisher" Yarns you can be sure that the working will be a pleasure and the finished garment satisfactory.

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

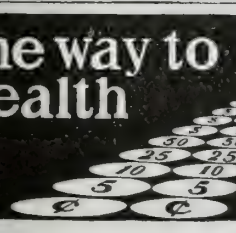
Your dealer should carry them.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL" mailed for four tickets from The "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B" PHILADELPHIA

The way to wealth



The only sure way is to take care of your money and make every dollar of it work as hard as it safely can.

Money deposited here is safe and earns

5% interest

from the day it is received until withdrawn and the interest is compounded semi-annually.

You control your money at all times and can withdraw it whenever you want without advance notice.

Our free booklet clearly explains our proposition

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co
Dept. E, Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md

THE "BEST" LIGHT

Made in Over 100 different styles.

100-Candle Power Light at a cost of 2c per week.

More brilliant than Acetylene or Electricity. No Grease—Smoke—Dirt or Odor. Agents Wanted Everywhere.

THE BEST LIGHT CO., 3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

POULTRY for PLEASURE and PROFIT.

Descriptive Catalogue Free.

ELM POULTRY YARDS (Est. 1888), P.O. Box S, Hartford, Conn

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 415

"But I'm not doing it to—to be good, or religious," faltered Miss Cynthia. "It's only because I—I want to——"

Mrs Pettibone squeezed Miss Cynthia's cold little fingers. "I shall come and help," she said; "so will Mr. Pettibone."

"I shall be there," intoned Mrs. Buckthorn majestically. "I consider it my pers'nal dooty. I have never been known to blench at the call of dooty, whatever the pers'nal sacrifice to self."

"I'll try to git around," quavered Deacon Scrimger. "I've got a leetle idee of my own 'at I'll let ye know when the time comes."

There seemed to be no doubt whatever of the success of the enterprise considered from a merely social standpoint. If Miss Cynthia had desired to put an end to her long loneliness, she could not have devised a better scheme. In the days that followed, pretty Nellie Ryan was kept busy from morning till night answering the door-bell, which was finally jerked bodily from its ancient socket by an eager young person from a neighboring village, who had come to inquire whether any bicycles were to be given away on Thursday.

"What I want to know is, just what do you intend givin' away?" asked Mrs. Buckthorn, whose sense of duty had led her to call upon Miss Cynthia early on Monday morning.

"Why, nearly everything," replied Miss Cynthia calmly. "I am going to have these rooms papered and painted, and it will be ever so much easier to give the things away than to move them about from place to place."

"Then you mean to buy everything new," observed Mrs. Buckthorn, transfixing Miss Cynthia with her spectacled gaze.

Miss Cynthia bore up bravely under the attack. "I expect to use some old furniture that has been stored in the attic for years," she replied. "I am tired of seeing these things," she added with unexpected bitterness.

"Do you mean to tell me, Cynthia Day, that you are goin' to give to any Tom, Dick or Harry that'll carry 'em away this furniture an' these carpets that your sainted ma' took care of as if they was made of gold?"

"Yes," said Miss Cynthia directly. She glanced about the densely furnished rooms with an odd expression, which did not escape the vigilant eyes of the matron.

"Not this stuffed sofa?" demanded Mrs. Buckthorn, with rising indignation.

"Yes."

"An' these 'ere black walnut chairs with gilt trimmings?"

"Yes."

"And both of those marble-topped tables?"

Miss Cynthia inclined her head stiffly.

"An' this han'some body-brussels carpet, with not a hole in it, an' hardly faded a mite, an' that el'gant whatnot with all those china ornaments?"

Miss Cynthia straightened herself in her chair, with a determined tightening of her small mouth. "If I—I was to die," she said in a low voice, "these things would have to be sold at auction. I have no—no relatives, who would care for them. If I wish to give them away, why should anyone—why should I not do it?"

Mrs. Buckthorn carefully inspected the small figure of her hostess, as she sat on one of the stuffed chairs in the full light of the east window. "I haven't seen you look so well as you do now for years, Cynthia," she said meditatively. "Seems to me you've been fleshin' up quite a little this spring, an' I never saw you show such a color since you was a girl. But I do d'clare I believe your mind is affected. Do you have headaches much?"

Miss Cynthia smiled faintly. "I haven't had the headache since I began to leave my windows open at night," she said.

"You don't mean to tell me that you sleep with your windows open!" exclaimed Mrs. Buckthorn incredulously. "Why, ain't you afraid of the night air—an' burglars? It doosn't seem quite nice—for a female person to admit the night air into her bed-room. It's sure to give you colds an' may be consumption. Why, I remember a niece of mine 'at was possessed to throw up her windows at night. Many an' many a time I've shut 'em down after she'd gone to sleep; I felt as 'o it was my personal dooty. An' do you know that girl died of consumption before she was twenty! It was a warnin' to me! Then, if a burglar——"

"I used to think just that way," explained Miss Cynthia; "but one night I felt so—so smothered; I couldn't seem to get my breath, so I opened the windows, and, really, I was surprised, I did sleep better. I felt as though I didn't care if I did take cold," she added under her breath.

Mrs. Buckthorn arose with a deep, discouraged sigh and began a majestic tour of the premises. "Not this—I hope, Cynthia," she said, indicating a ponderous gilt-embossed Bible.

"Yes, I think so; I never read in it."

"Never read in it!"

"I've a smaller one upstairs," amended Miss Cynthia, hastily.

"What about this?" "This" was a large and elaborate hair-wreath in a deep glass case. "If I remember rightly, your dear, departed mother made this beautiful wreath."

"Yes, she did," admitted Miss Cynthia, staring at the object with a queer look in her blue eyes. "I helped, too. I stayed in the house all the afternoons of a whole summer, when I was seventeen, straightening out combings. All the family hair is in it, and they're all dead but me."

"What a precious family memorial!" exclaimed Mrs. Buckthorn feelingly. "Surely you're not thinking of parting with that!"

"I'm not going to give it away," said Miss Cynthia. She did not see fit to inform her visitor that she had already laid the foundations of a sort of funeral-pyre in the back-yard, which she believed would materially assist her in solving a number of problems of a similar nature.

"I never saw such el'gant fine tattin' and crocheted work as your dear relatives used to do when they was sojournin' in this vale of tears," Mrs. Buckthorn went on. "Now, this here han'some set of tidies an' chair-covers; what was you going to do with these?"

Miss Cynthia's blue eyes sparkled with a singular light. "I made those things," she said abruptly, "I crocheted them out of number ninety spool cotton, with a fine steel hook. I worked a year on them, and all the while I——" she stopped short, and eyed her visitor, as she fingered the hated objects. "Would you—would you care to acept them?" she asked.

"My! I don't see how you c'n bear to part with 'em!" murmured Mrs. Buckthorn. "I shouldn't like to rob——"

"I want to part with them," interrupted Miss Cynthia breathlessly. "They always make me think of——. Do take them, Mrs. Buckthorn; they won't make you think of anything."

"My dear child, they'll make me think of you! Thank you, so much!"

Miss Cynthia meekly endured the voluminous embrace and moist, matronly kiss, which was the direct outcome of this transaction. There were other objects within view over which Mrs. Buckthorn's neighborly sympathies and mournful memories of past days overflowed in a flood of picturesque reminiscences.

"It doos bring it all back to me so!" she sighed. "It was right here. I re-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 421

SUMMER COSTUMES

MADE TO ORDER. Nothing Ready-made $6 to $25

Catalogue Samples and Simple Measurement Directions sent FREE

Our catalogue illustrates the most recent conceptions of Fashion blouse models novel surplice effects, the new sleeves, the graceful flounce and attractive umbrella skirts.

WE GUARANTEE TO FIT YOU OR REFUND YOUR MONEY.

SHIRT-WAIST SUITS	$6 to $20
Made of Mohair, Serge, Brilliantine, etc
SILK SHIRT-WAIST SUITS	$12 to $25
TAILOR-MADE SUITS	$7.50 to $25
LONG TRAVELING COATS	$7.50 to $18
RAIN COATS	$9.75 to $18
JACKETS	$5.75 to $15
SILK COATS	$10 to $20
SEPARATE SKIRTS	$3.50 to $12

We pay Express Charges to any part of the U.S.

We Send FREE Summer Catalogue, showing the latest N. Y. Fashions, a full line of Samples of the Newest Materials

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York
Mail Orders Only. Est. 17 Yrs. No Ag'ts. or Branches

5% PER YEAR Every Day on Every Dollar

WE PAY 5% PER YEAR ON YOUR SAVINGS

OUR PATRONS ARE PROTECTED

ESTABLISHED 12 YEARS

Our business is conducted under NEW YORK BANKING DEPARTMENT SUPERVISION.

Assets, ... $1,750,000
Surplus and profits, $150,000

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N. Y. City

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

The Wonderful new self-heating

Thermalite Bag

Looks like the ordinary hot water bag, but is far superior in every way. The "Thermalite" Bag No. 1 will give heat at a uniform temperature about 125° F. for 8 hours. It stores heat for future use—turn the heat on any time you wish, day or night. Lasts a lifetime. No refilling or renewal of contents. No danger. Imparts a refreshing fragrance. Guaranteed. Price $2.50. Money back if not satisfactory. We send prepaid on receipt of price if druggist cannot supply you. Descriptive book free.

THE THERMALITE CO., 164 Elm Street, New York, U. S. A

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

By Geo. C. Stebbins.

30c. a copy, postpaid, $25 per 100

Returnable S[illegible]

The Biglow & Main Co., Chicago, New York

CHILDRENS DAY SERVICES [illegible]

SPARKLING JEWELS. SWEET MELODIES.

Two services of [illegible] paid. Send [illegible] the above. "THE CHURCH CHOIR" contains suitable [illegible] FREE [illegible] using a 16 [illegible]

GEO. F. ROSCHE & CO., Chicago, New York, 30 N. William St.

Send Orders to New York City Only
We Have No Branch Houses—No Agents

FASHION BOOK FREE

WRITE TO-DAY for our handsome illustrated catalog of New York's latest styles in women's, children's and misses' wear.

No. 4071—THE ORCHID. A woman's washable shirt-waist suit (walking length) made of white union butcher linen, cleverly tailored and designed.

THE WAIST OF THIS SUIT is handsomely designed with graduated side plaits and wide front panel of old English Swiss embroidery, raised effect, in a variety of exquisite patterns. Plaited back, new full sleeves plaited from cuff to elbow. New stock collar and cuffs finished with handsome embroidered turnovers of old English design. Open front.

THE SKIRT is made with nine gores and inverted plait back. It is side plaited to match the waist. The panel front is of old English Swiss embroidery, the same as the waist, finished with a three-inch hem. Sizes 32 to 44 bust measure, length of skirt, 41 inches.

No. 4071

White Union Butcher Linen Suit

$2.75

SPECIAL NOTICE.—At the extraordinary low price at which we offer this beautiful suit we cannot afford to make alterations in length of skirt, etc., but we have amply provided for a home alteration, if necessary, by finishing the skirt with a three-inch hem, and also provided ample material in the inverted plaited back so that an alteration at your home is but the work of a few moments. Comes in white only. Shipped to you with the full understanding and agreement that if not satisfactory to you in every respect, faultless in style, material and workmanship, you can return it at our expense, and your money will be at once refunded $2.75

Write for Our Free Catalog To-day — THE BIG STORE A CITY IN ITSELF — SIEGEL COOPER CO. — SIXTH AVE 18TH & 19TH STS. — NEW YORK CITY, N.Y. — Write for Our Free Catalog To-day

4% interest

48,000 depositors in THE CLEVELAND TRUST COMPANY are satisfied with the security afforded by its $25,000,000 assets, with its conservative management, and its payment of 4 per cent interest.

Send for booklet F, which tells how to open an account with us, no matter where you live

The Cleveland Trust Company

CLEVELAND OHIO

PAPER YOUR OWN WALLS

Now Is The Time to Decorate Your Home.
Don't Buy Wall Papers until you see our offer. Gilt Crosses, Sides and Ingrains at 5c to 12½ cents per roll

WE SAVE YOU 50%. WE DEFY COMPETITION.

Write for free book of samples, including complete instructions for hanging your own wall paper.

CONSUMERS WALL PAPER & SUPPLY COMPANY,
No. 285 Greene Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

to agents selling for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New York

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 420

member, on this nice, black hair rug, that the undertaker—it was Mr. Fish, in those days; poor man, he's dead an' gone, too! Well, he set your sainted gran'father's coffin right on this here rug, with a wreath on top of it made out of purple an' white everlastin's that me an' Mr. Buckthorn sent in. We always thought so much of all your folks. I don't suppose you ever realized just what they was to us."

"No, I didn't," Miss Cynthia admitted. "I never supposed the neighbors cared very much about any of us. I don't see why they should."

Mrs. Buckthorn gave vent to a long and windy sigh. She squeezed Miss Cynthia's little hand. "The sacredest feelin's of the human heart ain't always apparent," she said "but the 's 'ceasions, such as deaths an' fun'rals, that brings 'em to the surface. Of, course, you'll keep this han'some hair rug. I d'clare, I don't b'lieve the moths has ever been in it. Seems to me I c'n smell camphire on it now."

Miss Cynthia was looking very pale. "I wish you'd take it away," she said in a low voice.

She drew a deep breath of the wild April air as she stood on the doorstep watching the departing form of Mrs. Buckthorn. That good lady had cordially offered to "stay all day an' help get ready for Thursday." But Miss Cynthia had excused herself on the ground of a previous and pressing engagement.

"I'm afraid I'm getting real sly," she told herself, with a guilty little laugh. "It was only the bonfire. The twins are coming to help; but I couldn't have her. I'm glad she's taken away all those things. I hope I'll never see them again!"

CHAPTER IX.

THE idea of the bonfire originated in Harriet Puffer's fertile brain. "That's an awfully funny kind of wreath," she remarked, when curiously examining the mortuary memorial composed of the indestructible remains of many dead and gone Breyfogles and Days. "I sh'd think you'd rather have one made out of real flowers."

"I should," sighed Miss Cynthia. "I wish I knew what to do with this one. I can't give it away, and I'm not going to put anything up in the attic any more."

"It's lots of fun to burn things up," observed Harriet thoughtfully. "We could make a lovely doll's cu'board out the wood an' glass part. See, it's got a regular little door? An' the hair part would sizzle right up, if you sh'd put it on a bonfire."

"So it would," agreed Miss Cynthia. Her mind reverted to the vast collection of family documents stored away in divers ancient receptacles above stairs, which it had been her mother's unvarying custom to unpack, to untie to dust, to retie and pack again with dire thoroughness, as the seasons changed. She herself had already performed this rite on nine successive occasions. "These family papers harbor dust and dirt, if neglected," had been Grandmother Breyfogle's dictum. "But they should be preserved, out of respect to the departed."

"I shall burn them all," said Miss Cynthia firmly. "There 'll be nobody to take care of them—next spring."

The Puffer twins had already regaled themselves upon certain choice selections from a herd of gingerbread animals, constructed by the ingenious Nellie. They now joyously accompanied Miss Cynthia to the attic, entirely ready to convey any designated object to the back-yard; the one idea in their youthful minds being to build as large and inflammable a pile as possible. It did not strike them at all singular that the first article to be consigned to the place of sacrifice was a small, three-legged stool.

"I used to sit on that stool to do my stints," said Miss Cynthia, regarding it soberly.

"What are stints?" inquired Harriet.

"Something you have to do perfectly in a certain time or get punished," Miss Cynthia told her. "I had to sew and knit and cut patches and crochet and learn hymns and Bible verses on that stool. Nearly every day I was whipped for failing in one of my stints."

The twins regarded the three-legged stool with a fearful interest. "If you'd been twins—" suggested Edwina hopefully.

"If I had been twins," said Miss Cynthia gloomily, "there would have been two stools."

"I guess we'd rather do stunts," giggled Harriet. "Stunts are more fun, like climbin' awful high trees, when you're scared of fallin', or hoppin' on one foot to the grocery store—that's an awful hard stunt, but we c'n do it."

The stool of dire memories was planted as the foundation of the pyre. Around it gradually arose a pyramid of old letters, cancelled checks, tax-bills, and bundles of red-lined documents and leather-backed account books.

A curious box containing divers sets of gold-mounted, artificial teeth, roused the twins to excited questionings. "Are they real teeth? Whose teeth are they? Why are teeth in this box? What are these teeth for?"

Miss Cynthia could not fully explain the mystery. She dimly remembered hearing her grandmother say that Uncle Jeremiah Breyfogle's false teeth might come in useful some day; she knew they had cost a sight of money. The teeth rattled realistically as the twins dropped them into a niche in the prospective bonfire. The box was reserved for a doll's trunk.

The pile grew fast after that. Nellie Ryan smilingly assisted; so did the helpful and ubiquitous William. Hopelessly maimed furniture; strange, shrunken shoes, laced with mould and cobwebs; leaking overshoes in odd sizes; curious headgear of every antiquated fashion; broken umbrellas, theological books and pamphlets, bundles of old periodicals, yellowed with age, remnants of wall-paper, bunches of odorless herbs passed down the stairs and out into the unaccustomed light of day like a procession of dismal old ghosts.

And now Miss Cynthia was delving with determined zeal into the row of trunks and boxes which lurked darkly beneath the eaves. Here were stores of ancient, moth-corrupted muffs and collars, smelling evilly of camphor and tobacco; queer old cloaks and dresses, dropping to pieces with age; yellowed under-clothing, breathing a lonesome aroma of desolation; rolls of pieces, breadths of forgotten fabrics—she heaped them all under the open skylight. "Are any of these good for anything, or anybody?" she asked hopelessly.

Nellie Ryan shook her pretty head. "The linen would drop to pieces if you tried to bleach it, ma'am," she said, "and the other things are too old-fashioned for folks now-a-days."

"If they had been given away forty years ago, somebody might have been glad of them," mused Miss Cynthia. "But now——. Take them all down and put them on the bonfire."

A zealous antiquarian would doubtless have shuddered at the vandalism committed by Miss Cynthia during the next hour. An actual lust for space—for emptiness, had laid hold upon her. Her small, colorless face glowed, her blue eyes burned with iconoclastic fires, as she raked forth the long-venerated relics of by-gone days.

"Anything that is good for anybody to use we'll give away," she said; "the rest shall be burned. I'm not going to save—anything."

TO BE CONTINUED

New Styles, lately introduced for Church, Chapel, Lodge and the Home.
Send for New Catalogue.
MASON & HAMLIN CO.,
Boston, Mass.

PARIS MODEL $2.4

Hand Made Dress Hat

This exquisite style is the latest French creation, made by our own milliners, after a genuine Paris pattern. The design is the most advanced shown this season; its chic style gives a decided swell tone to the wearer. The fine material and perfect workmanship in this hat, makes it the best value offered this year. Made on a silk covered wire frame, and the frame is covered by all silk chiffon, tucked very close; lower facing is a high grade, imported hair braid, a combination very pretty and desirable. Edge of hat trimmed with silk and velvet roses, laid very close, and intermingled with foliage. On center of crown is large velvet ribbon in strap effect, held in place by fancy ornament in the center. Black, Navy, Brown, Pink, Light Blue, Champagne, White or Light Grey. Would cost $5.00 to $7.00 in any first-class milliner's store. Our Special Price $2.4
Order by No. 14 E 699
Order by number and state color desired. Our beautiful 1905 Catalogue of Millinery and Ladies' Clothing shows all the latest styles for summer wear; sent FREE upon request. Write for it today.

First National Co-Operative Society
Dept. 18 -AD CHICAGO

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES

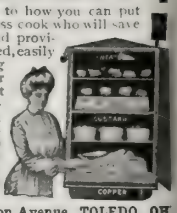
Dewey's Improved Acme Dress and Corset Protector

Better and cheaper than Dress Shields, being a complete garment, always ready to wear with any dress. The best Protector to be worn with the Popular Shirt Waist Suits, and Shirt Waists, as they require no sewing in. The only perfect protection from perspiration.

REDUCED PRICES. One Pair Does the Work of Six
No. 1. Bust Measure 28-33 $ .50 No. 2. Bust Measure 34-39 $
No. 3. Bust Measure 40-45 .75 No. 4. Bust Measure 46-49 1.
Agents Wanted. Catalogue Free. Send Money by P. O. Ord
M. DEWEY, Manfr., 1395 H, W. Monroe St., Chicago,

$2 "O-HI-O" COOKER OFFER $

Drop us a card for particulars as to how you can put yourself in possession of a first-class cook who will save 50 per cent. in fuel, labor, time and provisions. Will insure deliciously cooked, easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals, and only use one burner to cook a dozen different things at one time. Combination Style—Bakes and Steams at Same Time. 30 Days' Trial. Handsomely illustrated catalogue mailed free. $1.00 Cook Book, 4c. postage. Men and women of good address wanted in every county to represent us. Good paying positions for right parties.



OHIO COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson Avenue, TOLEDO, OH

AGENTS! BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

the world's greatest negro, has written an Autobiography, entitled "THE STORY OF MY LIFE AND WORK." No more inspiring life-story was ever written. One agent made $300.00 profit the first month. It beats them all. Get territory quick. We pay biggest commissions, ship books on credit and send valuable outfit free. Write for particulars now. Everybody buys.

J. L. NICHOLS & COMPANY, Naperville, Ill.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

STARK FRUIT BOOK

shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.

We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo.

REVIVALS IN TWO STATES

HERE is no more beautiful city in the Union than Milwaukee, and no more enerous-hearted people. Nevertheless, ilwaukee is regarded as a peculiarly dif-ult field for evangelistic activity. The st great revival in Milwaukee was under e leadership of B. Fay Mills.

This past winter, there has been a mark-d degree of revival spirit in the Central .M.C.A., under the direction of Superin-ndent C. B. Willis, who is full of evanlistic fervor, and has made the Y.M.C.A. e most pronounced revival agency in Mil-aukee. Evangelist Tom Mackey, of the acific Mission in Chicago, labored very iccessfully in February in Milwaukee, nder the direction of the Central Y.M.C.A. n April, Milwaukee was visited by the wyer-evangelist Hunt and his singer, harles Coultes, one of the best chorus aders in the country. They began their bors on the East Side, under the aus-ices of the Park Place Methodist and the Vestminster Presbyterian Churches, and ney wrought very successfully for two eeks, carrying on conjointly a noonday ervice at the Central Y.M.C.A., which roused much interest among men. Em-oldened by the success of this noon meet-ng, the evangelist tried a unique ex-eriment. At his own financial risk, he ecured the Pabst Theatre, and conducted series of afternoon meetings, closing ith inspiring platform meetings Saturday fternoon and evening. The evening serv-e was participated in by prominent aymen of Milwaukee and Chicago. In onnection with these services, Mr. Asa Gordon, K.C., of Ottawa, Canada, and his ifted wife — one of the most eloquent omen on the Dominion platform—were ccorded their first introduction to the Milwaukee public. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon ame to Milwaukee to labor under the uspices of the Methodist Preachers' As-ociation. They have taken up the work so happily begun by Charles Norton Hunt, and under their fervent evangelism the revival spirit is widening and deepening. They will probably remain until the end of May.

VANGELIST CHAS. NORTON HUNT

MRS. GORDON

MR. ASA GORDON

They are now laboring with most gratify-ing success on the South Side, in the As-bury Methodist Church, and later will transfer their activities to the West Side, in co-operation with the Washington Avenue Methodist Church. These self-sacrificing workers labor without remuner-ation. Their work promises to be the most abiding and far-reaching for good that has ever been known in Milwaukee.

. . .

As a result of a three weeks' evangelis-tic campaign under the direction of the lawyer-evangelist Charles Norton Hunt and his singer, Charles Coultes, with the united support of the Methodist, the Pres-byterian and the Baptist Churches, the town of Canastota, N. Y., a suburb of Syracuse, has been wrought up into an ex-traordinary pitch of revival fervor. The in-spiring watch-word: "Canastota for Christ?" is inscribed on a streamer and hung over the principal business street. Almost the entire population has enlisted in the soul-winning crusade, which, it is claimed, has resulted in more than 500 openly confess-ing Christ. A coterie of society people have renounced dancing, theatre-going and card-playing, and have organized a praying band, which will accept invitations to assist in evangelistic work in neighbor-ing towns and cities. One prominent manufacturer experienced a change of heart, and, as a consequence, called his employees together, and advanced their wages ten per cent. A Judge of the Su-preme Court and his gifted wife, a leader of fashion, have become active members of the "praying band," and hold themselves in readiness to respond to calls for service in neighboring cities.

. . .

During the evening services of the last ten days, the saloon men, out of deference to public opinion, closed their places of business. Two great chorus choirs, one of children, designated "The Sunbeams," and the other, an adult chorus, known as "The Moonbeams," were inspiring features of this revival. More than 200 people as-sembled at the railway station to speed the evangelists with a parting farewell, when they took their departure.

The Human Tongue

The most deadly instrument known to mortal man is the human tongue. Dyna-mite is not in it as a trouble breeder. It is the hair-trigger of the universe. The less brains back of it the freer its action. It goes off on the slightest provocation. It strikes heavier blows than a prize-fighter or a mule kicking down hill, and causes more headaches than a tax-collector. A tongue can make a sore spot for years. The crimes chargeable to the tongue are words of criticism, unkindness, gossip, envy, scan-dal, lying, malice, hate. The aggregate of sorrow caused by the tongue yearly far ex-ceeds theft and murder. F. ANDERSON.

COFFEE HEART

Very Plain in Some People

A great many people go on suffering from annoying ailments for a long time before they can get their own consent to give up the in-dulgence from which their trouble arises.

A gentleman in Brooklyn describes his ex-perience, as follows:

"I became satisfied some months ago that I owed the palpitation of the heart, from which I suffered almost daily, to the use of coffee, (I had been a coffee drinker for 30 years) but I found it very hard to give up the beverage.

"I realized that I must give up the harmful indulgence in coffee, but I felt the necessity for a hot table drink, and as tea is not to my liking, I was at a loss for awhile, what to do.

"One day I ran across a very sensible and straightforward presentation of the claims of Postum Food Coffee, and was so impressed thereby, that I concluded to give it a trial. My experience with it was unsatisfactory till I learned how it ought to be prepared—by thorough boiling for not less than 15 or 20 minutes. After I learned that lesson there was no trouble. Postom Food Coffee proved to be a most palatable and satisfactory hot beverage, and I have used it ever since.

"The effect on my health has been most salutary. It has completely relieved the heart palpitation from which I used to suffer so much, particularly after breakfast, and I never have a return of it except when I dine or lunch away from home and am compelled to drink the old kind of coffee because Pos-tum is not served. I find that Postum Food Coffee cheers and invigorates while it pro-duces no harmful stimulation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Ten days' trial proves an eye opener to many.

Read the little book "The Road to Well-ville" in every pkg.

WILL YOU JOIN MY

Larkin Club-of-Ten

AND RECEIVE

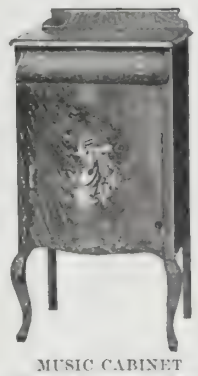
A $10 PREMIUM FREE?

THIS popular plan is the highest development of the Larkin Idea; it enables ten families each to buy monthly, one dollar's worth or more of LARKIN LAUNDRY AND TOILET SOAPS, TOILET ARTICLES, COFFEE, TEAS, EXTRACTS, BAKING POWDER and other Home Necessities. In turn each Club member will receive a Larkin Premium free, representing the saved profits and expenses of middlemen. You get $20 of retail value for $10—just twice what the retailer can afford to give you. Thousands of Clubs are in successful operation, saving money for each member.

ONLY ONE DOLLAR A MONTH

will keep you well supplied with Larkin Products, and assist in furnishing your home without cost. This plan is most economical for every thrifty housekeeper. Larkin quality is known everywhere to be unexcelled.

ORGANIZE A LARKIN CLUB-OF-TEN

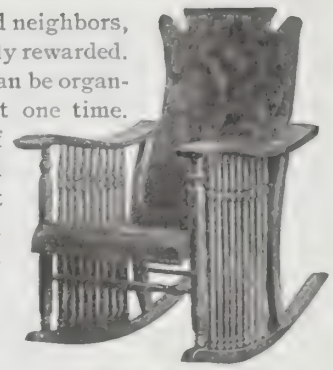


MUSIC CABINET

Polished veneer of Oak or genuine Mahogany. Undecorated door, if preferred. Free with $10 worth of Larkin Products.

among your friends and neighbors, and you will be liberally rewarded. Any number of Clubs can be organized and conducted at one time. The large variety of Larkin Products and Premiums makes it easy. Let us tell you more—it will interest you.

Write for latest Premium List 104 and ask about Club-of-Ten plan.



McKINLEY ROCKER

Stylish; comfortable. Choice of quarter-sawed Golden Oak or genuine Mahogany. Free with $10 worth of Larkin Products.

ESTABLISHED, 1875. Larkin Co. BUFFALO, N. Y.

THE IDEAL SIGHT RESTORER

Is Your Sight Failing?

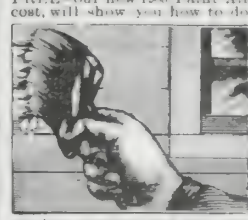
All refractive errors, muscular trouble and chronic diseases of the Eye successfully treated by scientific MASSAGE.

Illustrated treatise with affidavit testimonials free. Address

THE IDEAL COMPANY,
239 Broadway, New York.

Do Your Own Painting

FREE—our new 1905 Paint Album, mailed free of cost, will show you how to do your own painting at about half the usual price. Contains correct tints of all grades of house, barn, roof, floor, carriage, wagon and graphite paints, also gloss, bath tub, iron and screen enamels, varnishes, oils, colors in oil, dry colors and a complete line of painter's supplies. Tells you how to select and mix your own colors. Our famous specialties, Union House Paints at 85 cents per gallon, and Red Barn Paint at 9 cents per gallon are instances of our Co-operative money-saving prices. If you have painting to do, you cannot afford to be without this valuable book. Send for it today.



First National Co-Operative Society
Dept. 18-AP CHICAGO

Learn to Knit

No other book of instructions is nearly so complete as the new Columbia Book of Yarns 66th edition. Gives information clearer and better than it was ever given before. 80 pages of instruction, illustrations of 50 articles. Worth $1, but your dealer will sell it for 15 cents.

No other yarns are so soft, fine, even, elastic and economical as COLUMBIA YARNS. Rich brilliant colors.

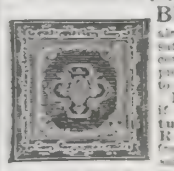
Look for the Columbia trade-mark around the label on every skein.

Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

We Carpet Your Floor for $2.50

To introduce our popular, serviceable and sanitary

BRUXELLE ART RUG



Sanitary Mfg. Co. (Inc.)

Delivered free. We manufacture everything you need in Rugs and Curtains.

Four Little Bee Books FREE

All intensely interesting and helpful—a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.

A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio

Reduced Rates

Shipping Co., 95-1 W. [illegible] St., Chicago

Established 1857. EHRICH BROS. New York's Best Store.

Forty-eight years catering to the wants of the best people in New York is certainly evidence that we give the right merchandise at the right prices. In order to have you become acquainted with our store and its wonderful inducements to out-of-town buyers, we offer this waist at actual cost to manufacture. We would like to have every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have this waist.

Catalogue and special sale sheets issued monthly will be mailed free upon request.

No. 34. White Persian Lawn Waist with yoke of four strips of both English and blind embroidery, and five rows of insertion, detachable lace collar, tucked back, full sleeve with deep tucked cuff, buttoned in back. The newest and latest style and a beauty.

Price (the actual cost to manufacture)

$1.00

Write us about your needs; we handle everything.

Agents wanted; write for plan.

Mention this paper and send us $1, enclosing 10c. extra for postage, and we will mail this beautiful white Persian lawn shirt-waist to you. If you do not think it one of the greatest bargains you ever purchased, you are privileged to return, and we will cheerfully refund you the money. Our guarantee is—you must be satisfied.

EHRICH BROS. NEW YORK.

Copyright Novels 55 cents

Postage Paid by Us.

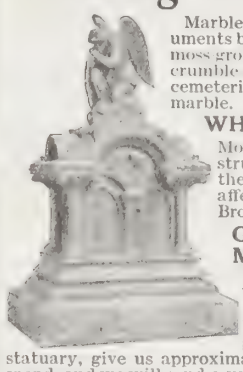
We have purchased entire editions of these popular copyright novels which have heretofore sold for $1.50 per copy in first-class book stores. Our special price of 55c, postage paid, is made to introduce our Big FREE Book Catalogue and just about covers cost of paper printing and binding.

Adventures of Sherlock Holmes....A. Conan Doyle
Blennerhassett....C. F. Pidgin
Brewster's Millions....George Barr McCutcheon
Calumet "K"....Merwin Webster
Castle Craneycrow....G. B. McCutcheon
Cecilia....F. Marion Crawford
Choir Invisible, The....James Lane Allen
Climax, The....Charles F. Pidgin
Conqueror, The....Gertrude Atherton
Dash for a Throne....A. W. Marchmont
David Harum....E. N. Westcott
Eternal City....Hall Caine
Filigree Ball, The....Anna Catherine Green
Fortunes of Fifi, The....Molly Elliot Seawell
For the Freedom of the Sea....C. T. Brady
Gentleman from Indiana, A....Booth Tarkington
Heart's Courageous....Hallie Erminie Rives
Heart of Rome, The....F. Marion Crawford
If I Were King....Justin H. McCarthy
Janice Meredith....Paul L. Ford
Jessamy Bride, The....F. Frankfort Moore
Kate Bonnet....Frank R. Stockton
Lazarre (Illus.)....Mary Hartwell Catherwood
Letters from a Self-made Merchant to his Son....George Horace Lorimer
Mississippi Bubble....Emerson Hough
Miss Petticoats....Dwight Tilton
Pride of Jennico, The....Agnes and Egerton Castle
Quincy Adams Sawyer....C. F. Pidgin
Resurrection....Count Leo Tolstoy
Soldiers of Fortune....Richard Harding Davis
The Crisis....Winston Churchill
The Manxman....Hall Caine
The Girl at the Halfway House....Emerson Hough
The Virginian....Owen Wister
Under the Rose....Frederick S. Isham
Wings of the Morning....Louis Tracy

Our price per copy, postpaid, 55c. In lots of ten at one time, per copy, postpaid, 50c. For 15 cents extra we will send our Big 1350-Page General Merchandise Catalogue for 1905. WRITE TODAY.

First National Co-Operative Society
Dept. 18-AM CHICAGO

Enduring Memorials



Marble and granite monuments become discolored, moss grown, and in time crumble and decay. Some cemeteries now prohibit marble.

WHITE BRONZE

Monuments are indestructible. Time and the elements do not affect them. White Bronze won both the Gold and Silver Medals at the St. Louis Exposition.

If in need of monuments, markers, head-stones, posts, grave covers or statuary, give us approximate sum you can spend, and we will send a variety of Beautiful Designs, prices, etc. No obligation to buy. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

AGENTS WANTED

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

JESUS, A PRISONER

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE Jewish rulers had searched Jerusalem to find witnesses against Jesus. It was the hardest task they had ever attempted. To find blame where there was none, to find men who would testify against a Man who was not only innocent, but who everywhere had gone about doing good, and who was believed by many to be the Messiah, was no easy matter. At last they found two false witnesses, men who were paid to say what they were told. Their witness was a perversion of the word which he had said, "Destroy this temple"—speaking of his body—"and in three days will I raise it up." But they made out that he had said, "I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days."

"Take ye him and judge him by your law," said Pilate. The Jews knew that he was innocent; that if any one of them had lived the life and done the deeds that he had done, he would expect to be the most honored of all. But this was just the sore point. Jesus was not of the tride of Levi. If they owned him, all their prestige was gone; they must keep up their influence at any cost; it did not suit them to acknowledge him. So they answered, "It is not lawful for us to put any man to death;" and a sentence less than death would not satisfy them. They did not know how their words fulfilled what Jesus had said, "The Son of Man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock and to scourge and to crucify him." They fulfilled the prophets in condemning him (Acts 13: 27). And they knew it not.

"Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the King of the Jews? Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it of me?" The pretext of the chief priests and scribes was that Jesus was dangerous to the government, that he set himself up to be the King of the Jews. It was the only accusation they could bring against him which could appeal in any way to Pilate as governor of Judea. "Am I a Jew?" was Pilate's answer. "Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me; what hast thou done?" And Jesus gave an answer far out of the range of Pilate's conception, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered unto the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence." What was this? A kingdom? A kingdom somewhere beyond time and sense? A kingdom where there is no fighting or striving for mastery? Pilate could not understand; he could only ask, "Art thou a King, then?"

"Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a King. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Everyone that is of the truth heareth my voice." It was all so new to Pilate. Here was a Man who was in danger of his life from the enmity of the Jews, seeking in no way to defend himself, or even to enter into their accusations, but speaking of that which seemed to be of supreme importance to him: the Truth! "Pilate said unto him, What is truth?" Oh, if he had but waited for the answer, if he had but given his soul a chance, Pilate might have been saved! But he missed his opportunity, and it never returned. "He went out again unto the Jews and saith unto them, I find in him no fault at all." The chief priests and elders accused him of many things, but he, as a lamb dumb before her shearers, opened not his mouth (Isa. 53: 7). A lamb is defenseless; Jesus was dumb in his own defense. He went down to death in my defense and yours, dear reader.

Pilate was a weak man; he wanted to do justice to Jesus, for he knew that the Jews had delivered him from envy, because they had no such influence with the people as he had. And yet, at the same time, he did not want in any way to offend the Jewish elders and chief priests. It he did, they might report him to Rome, and he might lose his position. He thought he had hit upon a favorable expedient when he said, "I find in him no fault at all."

ø ø ø

The Awakening of The "New South"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 411

Is the State of Texas to be included as a Southern State? Many of its inhabitants declare it to be of the Southwest; others say it is distinctly a part of the New South. The latter view is correct of East Texas, while the former view is true of West Texas. Once Texas was a maligned State. It was spoken of as part of the Great American Desert. Irrigation has changed the face of the Lone Star State, and her broad acres are now as fertile as any.

There's Houston, for example, with its many churches, one of which, the First Presbyterian, is the largest church edifice in the entire New South, comparing favorably with the most costly churches in the great cities of the North. And San Antonio, the greatest health resort of the South, with its 55 churches, of which 12 are Methodist, 8 Presbyterian, 5 Baptist and 5 Episcopalian.

The majority of the 3,000,000 people of Texas came from the Southern States—or at least their parents did. From such a stock, there is now a courteous, genial, cultured and hospitable people. The old-time Texas no longer exists. The Texan is distinctly a Southerner, but he has no prejudice against the Northerner. For him, the war is over. He joins actively in welcoming the present general invasion from the North, and in doing all he can to help build up the New South.

In the office of Mr. Del Moore, the Lumber King of San Antonio, hangs a placard, reading: "Young man, consider the postage stamp. Its usefulness lies in its ability to stick to one thing until it gets there." "I've had so many requests for copies of my motto from the young men of the South," said Mr. Moore to the writer, "that I've had hundreds of copies printed to send through the mails. That's the motto we are sticking to in this country right now—sticking to one thing, the upbuilding of the South, until the whole Union is convinced that there really is a New South, an awakened and resurrected Dixie, a Southern Paradise regained."

GILSON WILLETS.

ø

At the Prison-Gate Mission

"I TELL you, Superintendent, there's nothing in Crookdom, for I've tried it," said an ex-prisoner to Chaplain Munro at the Prison-Gate Mission rooms in New York, lately. The man was treated kindly, and under Gospel pleading, broke down and wept as he declared his intention of leaving crime behind, and beginning a new life with God's help. He was sheltered, and a position was found for him with a good employer who is in sympathy with the work of the Prison-Gate Mission. This man is a fair specimen of hundreds of others lately released, who somehow find their way to the Mission.

In its work of the ex-prisoners' restoration, the Mission is limited simply by the lack of funds. "Hundreds might be reached, where we only reach dozens at the present time," said the Superintendent.

Here is a letter to the Prison-Gate Mission from a friend of the work in Arizona:

"Find post-office order for $5 for Prison-Gate Mission. I praise God for the work that is done, and I pray that the faithful workers may be encouraged."

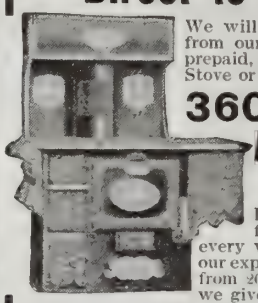
A young lady in Indiana writes: "Enclosed $5 for use in the Prison-Gate Mission. Though a small sum, I hope it may do much good."

Daisy Dee, of Vermont, sends a gift and writes: "May God bless your work in helping men to leave off their lives of crime, and begin anew; as I believe many will, if only a helping hand is outstretched to them, when they leave the prison-life behind."

The Superintendent of a Union Sunday School in Troy, N. Y., sends $9, an Easter free-will offering, in the shape of wearing apparel for men coming out of prison. This donation is gratefully received.

The headquarters of the Prison-Gate Mission have been transferred to 150 Baxter Street, N. Y., being more convenient to the central prison than the former location. Any letters sent to Superintendent Munro, at that address, will be promptly answered. A. A. Knowles, 33 Wall Street, is Treasurer of the Mission.

"A KALAMAZOO Direct to You"



We will send you direct from our factory, freight prepaid, any Kalamazoo Stove or Range on a

360 DAYS APPROVAL TEST

If you are not perfectly satisfied every way, return it at our expense. We save you from 20% to 40%, because we give you cutting out all dealers', jobbers', middlemen and agents' profits. We are the only stove manufacturers in the world who sell the entire product direct to the user. We guarantee quality under a $20,000 bond.

Lowest Factory Prices

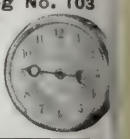
Send Postal for Catalog No. 103

describing full line of ranges, cook stoves and heaters of all kinds.



KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., MFRS.,
Kalamazoo, Mich.

We fit all our ranges and cook stoves with our patent oven thermometer which makes baking easy.

SILK SHIRT WAIST SUIT

Express Prepaid by us $9.95

32 to 44 Bust Measure

Made after the very latest style; is very dressy and serviceable. Good grade Taffeta Silk; waist neatly shirred and finished with silk covered buttons; stock collar, with neat bow in front; tucked back; new style sleeves.

SKIRT is shirred all around over hips trimmed at knees with silk straps and silk rings; self faced and stitched bottom; inverted plaited back. Black, Navy Blue, Dark Red or new shade of Brown. State color desired. Retail price $15.50.

OUR PRICE $9.95 Express Prepaid

Our beautiful FREE Catalogue of Ladies' Clothing and Millinery shows all the latest 1905 fashions. Shirt Waists 39c up; Suits 98c up. All Ladies', Misses' and Children's Clothing at proportionately low prices. Write for this FREE CATALOGUE today.

First National Co-Operative Society
Dept. 18 -AG CHICAGO

The "Ocularscope" Free

Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest invention of the 20th century. Sent Free, with our beautiful Illustrated Catalogue of spectacles and eye glasses. Mail order only. Send to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS
402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

BICYCLES ON TRIAL

for 10 days. We ship on approval to anyone without a cent deposit. Finest guaranteed 1905 Models with Coaster-Brakes & Puncture-Proof Tires $10 to $2

1903 & 1904 Models of best makes..... $7 to $1

500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $

RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at good pay. Write at once for Special Offer on sample bicycle.

TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H-71 CHICAGO

DEATH TO HEAVES!

Send for Booklet.

NEWTON'S

Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A specific for wind, throat and stomach troubles. Recommended by veterinarians and owners. Every druggist in America has it or can get it.

$1.00 per can, at dealers, or by Express, prepaid.

THE NEWTON REMEDY CO., Toledo, Ohio

MELLIN'S For the Baby FOOD

"I give him his Mellin's Food and he sleeps 'til morning." How many mothers can say this of their babies? If your baby does not sleep well it may be that he is not properly fed. A poorly nourished baby is a poor sleeper. Mellin's Food babies are good sleepers. Our book the "Care & Feeding of Infants," sent free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

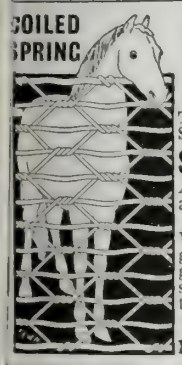
PURE GOLD WALL PAPER
8 CENTS PER DOUBLE ROLL OF 16 YARDS

Greatest value ever offered in high-grade paper; very heavy stock. Background is beautiful green with fine stencil work. New Empire design as illustrated; consists of white roses and scroll work blending to light green. Each figure surrounded with pure gold Border 18 inches wide, blending to a delicate pink ceiling; one of the handsomest wall decorations ever designed. Retails for 18c per single roll. Our Price per DOUBLE roll of 16 yds ONLY..... 8c

We will furnish enough of this beautiful paper to decorate a room 12x15 feet including wall, ceiling and border for ONLY..... $1.21

Write for our free book of wall paper samples containing 85 samples of the newest and best papers at half the retail prices. It tells how to do your own papering and saves 2.00 to $5.00 on every room. Send for this Free Book.

First National Co-Operative Society
Dept. 18-AR CHICAGO



COILED SPRING FENCE

That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.

SOLD DIRECT TO YOU

At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.

Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.

KITSELMAN BROTHERS, Box 297, Muncie Indiana

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

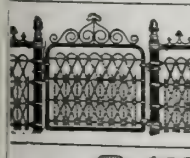
25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable.—Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemeteries. Catalogue free.

KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 445 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

Corns "I was awfully tormented with corns," says one man, "but they are all removed now with A-CORN SALVE" No pain, no knife, no danger. 15c at your druggist's or by mail.

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

LAWN FENCE



Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address

COILED SPRING FENCE CO. Box D, Winchester, Ind.

$39.50 BUYS THIS

We save you dealer's profits. Ship on approval 30 days free trial. Money back if not satisfactory. Send for 200 page Style Book containing 132 wonderful bargains.

UNION BUGGY CO. Dept. 823 Pontiac, Mich.

AGENTS OUTFIT FREE. Easy sweep Dust Pan. Handled with foot; dirt emptied without litter. Large Catalog very latest household articles; rapid sellers. Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. 6, Bath, N.Y.

GROWING UP FOR GOD*

HOW much habit does for a man none know better than those who have formed habits which, after long indulgence, they try to break. The power of an evil habit holds the victim captive, and forces him to obey against his will. In physics we have learned how to turn to useful purposes the powers that opposed us. The steam that burst our utensils we use to draw our trains. The electricity which rent our trees and set fire to our houses, is harnessed to carry our messages and give power to our machinery. Why should not habit, so strong for evil, on the same principle be used for good? It is powerful, as we know, to our cost; why should not its power be used where it is needed, to buttress character? Would it not be possible to so inculcate good habits in a child, that when he grows up to maturity it would be easier for him to do right than wrong?

Perhaps some future generation will realize the importance of moral education. The thousands of children now at school, will, in a few years, be the leaders of the nation, and will control its destinies. Yet how little is being done to insure their being good moral men and women. They are being taught to read, and write, and cipher; they are being taught history, geography, and the classics, but how little is being done for their moral training. In crowding a child's mind, in making him skilful in the arts, we are only enabling him, if he turns out bad, to be a more formidable enemy of society than he would have been without our teaching.

Of course, the main reliance for the upbuilding of character is on the Holy Spirit, but we have the right to use, and we ought to use all the means available, working together with God for our own salvation. It is a well-ascertained fact that the large majority of Christians were converted in early life. It is then that habits are formed and the direction given to the future career of the man. It is the glory of Christianity that even at the eleventh hour and after a long life of sin, a man may be saved, but instances are rare, and are few in proportion to the conversions of the young. It is a mean, humiliating thing to serve Satan through the years, and to give the dregs of life to Christ. The opportunity to work for the Saviour is lost, and the soul enters heaven crownless and unprofitable. It is, therefore, a matter of the most intense concern, that the surrender to Christ should be made in early life, that not only the character should grow up to God, but that the fruit which Christ has a right to expect from the soul that he saves, should be won for his kingdom.

There are some men who do not know the time of their conversion. They have grown so imperceptibly into the ways of God that there w s none of the struggle, the anxiety and distress that so many who are converted late in life, experience. It would be well if we had more of such Christians. All sin is loss. It is loss of power, as well as loss of purity. They who escape it in their youth have less to repent of and they escape the pollution that clings to the soul even after regeneration. Young people do not know what they do when they give themselves to evil. The sweet purity, the peace and satisfaction that belongs to a soul that has been consecrated to Christ from its beginning is a treasure that has no equivalent in life. Evil thoughts and evil habits leave their stain, that is never wholly eradicated, and though pardon may come through the love of Jesus and the grace of God, the loss of purity can never be entirely regained.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for May 21. Eph. 4: 11-16.

REDUCED RATES TO PACIFIC COAST POINTS.

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Account Lewis and Clark Exposition and Various Conventions.

On account of the Lewis and Clark Exposition, at Portland, Ore., June 1 to October 15, and various conventions to be held in cities on the Pacific Coast during the Summer, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell round-trip tickets on specified dates, from all stations on its lines, to San Francisco and Los Angeles, April 9 to September 27; to Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Victoria, Vancouver, and San Diego, May 22 to September 27, at greatly reduced rates.

For dates of sale and specific information concerning rates and routes, consult nearest ticket agent.

Our Straight Grain Hickory Rubber Tired Top Buggy

Each and Every Transaction is Backed by Our 20 Years of Success Selling Direct to the User by Mail.

128-Page Catalog FREE

$50.00

WITH STEEL TIRES
$62.50 with Rubber Tires Warranted Two Years
Vehicles from $10.25 Up
Harness from $3.95 Up

BEST FINISH
Greatest Durability.
FINEST STYLE
Longest Service
Absolutely Safe.

THE MAIN POINTS OF SPECIAL MERIT BRIEFLY MENTIONED:

Straight grain hickory Wheels.
Straight grain hickory Gearwoods.
Straight grain hickory Shafts, double braced at heel and crossbars.
Self-oiling Axles.
Wrought Bailey Body Loops.
36-in. open Head Springs.
Longitudinal Center Spring.
5th wheel with interlocking rear kingbolt.
Straight grain hickory reaches ironed full length.
High Finish Painting.
36-in. Shaft Leathers.
Full Leather Quarter Top, extra long with wool headlining.
Choice of 3 or 4 bow or handy top.
Leather stays padded and stitched.
16-oz. wool cloth or fine genuine leather trimmings.
Open bottom spring cushion.
Oval front to cushion.
High polished panel springback.
Seat handles.
Frame of body ash, panels clear poplar.
13-inch hand hold dash.
Fine grade full length carpet.
Full length storm apron.
Boot. Quick Shifters.
Body 18, 20 or 24 inches wide.
Choice of any style back.
Choice of any color paint.
Choice of plain or striped body.
Choice of arch or drop axles.
Toe carpet and lined side panels.

This and 125 other vehicles of all styles are fully described in our handsome 128-page free vehicle catalogue. Straight Grain Hickory is the Straightest, Strongest, Toughest and most Elastic wood for vehicle wheels, gear woods, shafts and poles. Our catalogue tells all about the material and construction; about our Co-operative factory; about the men who make the vehicles. It tells why we produce and sell the best at lowest prices. If you see anything advertised at prices which seem lower than our price ask us about it before you buy. We can often offer you a similar vehicle for less money and may save you from deception. The catalogue explains our binding two year guarantee, our 30-day trial offer, our Comparison Challenge and C. O. D. shipment plan. Write today for our big 1905 CATALOG OF VEHICLES and 48-PAGE HARNESS CATALOG, and SAVE ALL the MIDDLEMEN'S PROFITS. BOTH CATALOGS FREE.

FIRST NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY
Dept. 18-BB (Formerly Cash Buyers Union) CHICAGO

$6 PRICE EXPLAINED

FOR $6.00 TO $15.00, stoves similar to the range illustrated hereon have been often advertised. How steel ranges can be offered at these prices and why we can sell the highest grade blue polished steel ranges in the world at much lower prices than any other house is all explained in our new Big Free Special Stove Catalogue. Cut this advertisement out and send it to us and you will receive by return mail free, postpaid, our new special stove catalogue fully describing this handsome steel range with high shelf, warming closet, deep porcelain lined reservoir, rich nickel trimmings as well as the most complete line of highest grade stoves and ranges made in the world, all shown in large, handsome halftone illustrations, full descriptions and all priced at prices much lower than any other house can possibly make, prices that will astonish and please you. With the big free catalogue you will receive the most Wonderfully Liberal Stove Offer ever heard of, a new and marvelous proposition. Why we can sell at much lower prices than all others will be fully explained. We will explain why we can ship your stove the day we receive your order, why we make the freight charges so very low—next to nothing. You will get our free trial offer, safe and prompt delivery guarantee, binding quality guarantee. You will get our very latest stove proposition.

FREIGHT PREPAID plan explained. We will tell you just what the freight will amount to on any stove to any town. Don't think of buying a stove of any kind, at any price, until you first write and get this catalogue. If you can't use a cook stove or fine steel range at any price, call your neighbor's attention to this advertisement. Don't fail to write now for our big new special stove catalogue, free with all our new offers, all the marvelous price surprises, everything explained, all free for the asking. We will tell you something about stoves you ought to know. Address: SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO

No Dealer Can Duplicate Our Factory Price

SAVE 1/3

Our high grade carriages are made in our own factory, and sold exclusively by mail order at a saving of from $15 to $30 to the buyer. We warrant every vehicle to be just as represented or refund money and pay freight both ways. Send for free catalogue. It tells the advantage of buying from factory.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE AND HARNESS CO., Columbus, Ohio.

1905 SPLIT HICKORY VEHICLES $35.00 UP

Our new 192 page catalogue, beautifully illustrated and quoting wholesale prices direct to users on the finest line of vehicles and harness in America. Sent Free on Request Over 100 styles to choose from. Prices to suit every pocket book. Split hickory vehicles sold on 30 Days Free Use Plan, and guaranteed for two years. Write, The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co. (H. C. Phelps, Pres.) Station 236. Cincinnati, Ohio

Great $1 Offer

This Model "B" Top Buggy, price $32.50 sent on inspection for $1 Good Faith Deposit. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Same offer on our entire line. Catalogue free on request. Write for it to-day.

THE MODEL CARRIAGE AND HARNESS CO. 192 W. Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O.

PATTON'S SUN-PROOF PAINTS

are guaranteed to outwear all other paints Send for free book about paint

PATTON PAINT CO. 218 Lake St., Milwaukee, Wis.

$100. to $300. MONTHLY.

Men and women Salesmen Managers [illegible] Agents. Delightful [illegible] Home getting rich. We want brand new plan and Special Offer [illegible] per cent. profits No risk. [illegible] advertised. No [illegible] guaranteed. [illegible] old firm [illegible] FREE. Address get good positions paying [illegible]

WORLD MFG. CO., 81 World Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Thoughtless folks have the hardest work, but quick witted people use

SAPOLIO

INVEST YOUR SAVINGS AT

Pleasantville Terrace

Every word of this advertisement will interest the ambitious person who wants to get ahead in the world. It points the way to wise investment, and a comfortable fortune, by showing you how to invest your savings —as little as $1. at a time—where they will be absolutely safe, and where they will grow into large profits.

HOW $700 EARNED $50,000

Few people outside of the Eastern cities know about the wonderful growth in Real Estate values at Atlantic City.

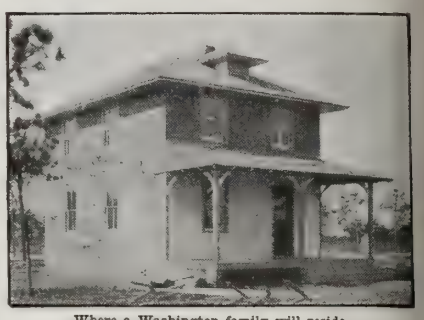
In making the title for property 50 x 150 feet sold at Atlantic City, a few months ago for $50,000, the records show that this property was bought not many years ago for $700.

A property that was bought five years ago for $6,000 was sold a few days ago for $150,000.

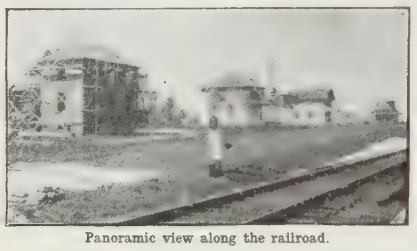
These are only two examples. There are innumerable others of just this kind.

A conservative estimate shows that within the past twelve years Atlantic City Real Estate values have risen over 800 per cent., and are still rising, because Atlantic City has practically outgrown the boundaries of the island on which it stands. There is no more available space, and it must expand inland, just as all great cities grow out to and absorb their suburbs.

The nearest and only desirable suburb to Atlantic City is Pleasantville Terrace. The place that has attracted thoughtful investors and home builders from all over the world.



Where a Washington family will reside.



Panoramic view along the railroad.

"PLEASANTVILLE TERRACE, THE NATURAL SUBURB OF ATLANTIC CITY"

Says Franklin P. Stoy, Mayor of Atlantic City:

Atlantic City Estate Co.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I regard Pleasantville Terrace as the natural suburb of Atlantic City. There can be no extension of the seacoast, therefore the city must expand landward. Being located on high ground, with unusual trolley and railroad facilities, there is every reason why Pleasantville Terrace should enjoy the same marvelous increase in values which has made Atlantic City the most noted Real Estate investment in the world.

Atlantic City, N. J., August 6, 1904. (Signed) FRANKLIN P. STOY.

ELEVEN MINUTES TO ATLANTIC CITY

The main line of the Atlantic City Railroad (Reading System) runs directly through this property, with the famous Atlantic City boardwalk, only 11 minutes from Pleasantville Terrace depot. All trains (except express) stop at Pleasantville Terrace, or one may go to Atlantic City by trolley for five cent fare from Pleasantville.

Built by a Philadelphian.

NATURAL ADVANTAGES Pleasantville Terrace is the highest natural ground in or near Atlantic City. There is not a foot of swamp land on the property. Geological survey shows an altitude of 75 feet above Atlantic City. The climate is ideal, combining ocean breezes with the invigorating air from the pine and oak trees growing there. It adjoins Pleasantville, with churches, schools and all city conveniences. It is an ideal location for a Summer home, where one may enjoy the pleasures of Atlantic City without hotel expenses or annoyance of boarding houses.

SPECIAL CONDITIONS Unlike many real estate operations, this company agrees to develop Pleasantville Terrace, and make it an ideal suburb. Note accompanying illustrations of building activity now under way. We offer special premiums and lend material assistance to those who will build at once. Thousands of dollars have already been spent by the Company for improvements. Free excursions are run every week from Atlantic City to enable lot owners to see the character of improvements.

We make no charge for deed. No mortgages. No taxes until 1906. If you die before lot is paid for, we issue deed to your heirs, without further payments.

Three cottages nearing completion.

An Exceptional Opportunity

Every one who knows anything about Atlantic City, knows that land there for building purposes has grown scarcer each year. We anticipated this condition by purchasing the General Doughty Estate on the main land, the present site of Pleasantville Terrace.

If we had to buy this land to-day, we would have to charge three times the prices we now ask for Pleasantville Terrace lots. Just think of it! A building lot, eleven minutes from the country's greatest coast resort, for prices and terms like these:

1 Lot costs $30—$1 Down and $1 Weekly

2 Lots cost $60—$2 Down and $1 Weekly 4 Lots cost $110—$4 Down and $2 Weekly

3 Lots cost $85—$3 Down and $2 Weekly 5 Lots cost $135—$5 Down and $2 Weekly

THIS IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY

This message will be read by thousands of people, yet it is a personal one for you. No matter how small your income, take advantage of it now. Do not let it escape you, such an opportunity may never come your way again. Sit right down and write a postal for a copy of our beautiful illustrated blooklet to-day, or better still, send $1. with attached coupon, and we will reserve lots until you can investigate. If not entirely satisfied your dollar will be promptly refunded.

ATLANTIC CITY ESTATE CO.,

VICTOR J. HUMBRECHT, President

MAIN OFFICE, 1001 Drexel Bldg., Phila.
ATLANTIC CITY OFFICE, 937 Boardwalk

CUT THIS OUT AND MAIL TO-DAY.

ATLANTIC CITY ESTATE CO.,
Suite 1001, Drexel Bldg., Philadelphia.

I enclose $1. Please reserve ..... lots in Pleasantville Terrace, with the understanding that you will refund my dollar if I am not satisfied after further investigation.

Name.....

Address.....

Train leaving Pleasantville Terrace depot for Atlantic City. Note the high ground.
Pleasantville Terrace is 55 feet higher than Atlantic City. Houses have been built and are now going up all around this location since this photo was taken.

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MAY 17, 1905
Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch
VOL. 28 - NO. 20. PRICE FIVE CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

CHRISTIAN HERALD

DRAWN FROM LIFE BY G. W. PETERS

SEE PAGE 431

"LANDING-DAY" IN THE STEERAGE OF A GREAT IMMIGRANT STEAMER

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

J. W. L., Sterling, Colo. Was the Mary, the sister of Lazarus, whose anointing of Christ is described in John 12: 3, the same woman whose anointing of Christ is narrated in Luke 7: 38?

Many ingenious attempts have been made to harmonize the two narratives, but none are wholly satisfactory. It is more reasonable to believe that they relate to different events. The place is different. Luke puts it in Galilee, John at Bethany. The time is different. In Luke it is earlier than in John. Christ's comment is also different. In Luke it relates to the character of the woman; in John to the value of the act. We must, therefore, conclude that Christ was anointed twice. In the first instance by the sinner who used a perfume that it was customary for women to carry with them; in the second case by Mary, who deliberately sacrificed her precious treasure.

Inquirer, League City, Tex. If a man who is loaning money at usury is converted and discontinues the practice, must he make restitution?

There are some cases, of course, where restitution is impossible, and this may be one of these cases. If, however, there is any one from whom he has exacted undue profit, we believe he should make restitution if he can reach that man.

J. D. Covington, Ky. What is the comparative strength of the Russian and Japanese fleets now opposing each other in Eastern waters?

Togo's fleet includes: Battleships, 5; cruisers, 19; obsolete vessels, 4; torpedo-gunboats, 3; destroyers, 18; torpedo-boats, 30; while that of Rosjestvensky has: Battleships, 7; cruisers, 8; converted cruisers and armored transports, 7; destroyers, 7; volunteer fleet, 5. If the squadron of Admiral Nebogatoff (which consists of 11 warships) unites with the main Russian fleet, Rosjestvensky will then have a considerably stronger force than Togo, in point of numbers, although condition and general efficiency will go far toward offsetting mere numerical superiority.

J. R., Rahway, N. J. What are the effects of tobacco on the physical system of children?

Its use, according to Decaisne, a celebrated French doctor, causes palpitation, intermittent pulse, chloro-anæmia, dulled or impaired intelligence. Long continued, it produces "tobacco-heart" (a disease peculiar to users of the weed). It dwarfs mind and body, destroys ambition, produces irritability, and saps all the vital forces. There are well-authenticated cases of death being caused by indulgence in tobacco, especially in the form of cigarettes.

Subscriber, Hamilton, Bermuda. How many persons wrote the Bible and what were their names?

It is obviously impossible to answer your question. How can any one say, at this distance of time, how many writers, for example, contributed to the books of Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, and Psalms. It would not be of any value to us if we did know.

J. H., Johnstown, Pa. The statement in Gen. 2:5, 6, which seems to be explicit, has been interpreted by some scientists to mean that the earth was enveloped in a shroud of mist, the warm surface of the globe causing condensation, but that this mist could not properly be called rain. Any one who has observed the heaviness of tropical and semi-tropical dews, will have no difficulty in believing that a continuance of such atmospheric conditions would supply all the needs of the soil, as far as moisture is concerned. However, all that can be written about the matter is mere speculation.

J. B. Birmingham, Ala. Will Prof. Swift kindly state why, in February, 1899, I could not see the Southern Cross from Georgetown, Demerara, which is in sixth north latitude, when, in February, 1903, I saw it very distinctly from Abu Simbel in the Soudan, which is in the eighteenth north latitude?

Sailors, in their journeyings southward, are always on the lookout for the Southern Cross. It is by no means a conspicuous group, consisting only of one star of the first magnitude, two of the second, and two of the third. The centre of this asterism is in south latitude, sixty degrees. Though the sky is covered with variable stars, not one of the group is variable in brightness, and therefore when on the meridian at midnight, should always appear of uniform brilliance, providing the sky is of the same absolute purity, a condition seldom existing near the horizon. The Southern Cross can be seen from New Orleans. Therefore but two reasons can be assigned why Mr. B. failed to see the group in 1899. It either arose from a temporary diminution of sight, or haziness of the sky, or both. LEWIS SWIFT.

Marathon, N. Y.

Mrs. B. P., McGrand, N. Y. Please say what the Bible means, where its says, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth."

It means simply that we are not to make a display of our alms or other good works; not to boast of them, nor even to dwell upon them with pride in our own thoughts.

Mrs. W. R. W., Sheffield, Ala. Could you give me some information regarding the early history of Trinity Church, New York?

Trinity is the wealthiest single church corporation in the United States, with an annual income of a half-million from what remains of the royal grant of the Queen's Farm, made in 1705, comprising a large tract of land along the North River, now in the heart of the business part of the city. This property is valued at $9,000,000. Trinity Church was destroyed in the great fire of 1776, rebuilt in 1788, and in 1846 the present edifice was finished.

W. C. Kinsbury, Missionary, Hogansburg, N. Y., writes of Hiram Cronk, the veteran of the war of 1812:

Mrs. Rowley has been his only attendant for a number of years. He has not been able to read anything for years. The family have consented to allow his remains to be buried in Cypress Hills Cemetery when he dies, at the solicitation of the Governor and other officials of the State as well as the President and New York Aldermen. He does not take the slightest interest in the matter.

J. W., Zion City, Ill. Can you explain why doctors, lawyers, and many other professional men, write so illegibly, especially signatures?

Doctors frequently have to write prescriptions under rather trying circumstances, but the same explanation cannot apply to lawyers. Illegibility is either an affectation, or the result of carelessness. In either case it is inexcusable, and especially in the case of physicians, when life or death may depend upon the correct interpretation of a prescription.

R. S., Granbury, Tex. 1. Is it wrong to play games on Sunday? 2. Is it wrong to play on Sunday, or make toys just for amusement? 3. I heard a preacher say that one who joked so much, "could lead more souls to hell than one might think." Does that mean not to joke at all? 4. Is it wrong not to tell the truth when you are joking?

1. and 2. Our children should be taught to reverence the Lord's Day, and to love to spend part of it in his house; the day is not to be passed either in work or play, but in physical rest and spiritual refreshing. Even a little child can be interested in the beautiful stories of the Bible; while older children, in a Christian home, will find attraction in good music and good books. Games are distinctly out of place on Sunday. 3. Not necessarily. "There is a time to laugh and a time to weep," but he who makes jokes out of season, or who scoffs and scorns at religion, and indulges in levity with regard to sacred things, is probably the class of persons referred to. 4. A li is a lie, whether told in fun or in earnest and the humor that is based upon a lie, is to say the least, in very poor taste.

C. P. F., Olongapo, P. I. As a soldier and a Christian, I am often asked, "Is it sin to kill i battle or war-time?" I would like to hav your opinion on the subject.

It is a very difficult question to answer While we believe that there are many Christian men in the army, yet it is impossible to reconcile the trade or professio of war with the teachings of Jesus. Wa is an evil, and killing or maiming of men however governments may legalize it, i opposed to Christianity. We are not for getful of the fact that many wars have sprung from religious differences. To ou way of thinking, if war is ever justifiable it is only when it is a war for human lib erty, or against unrighteous invasion o one's native land and the spoli ation of our homes. The idea Christian social condition is one in which there shall be "n more war." Many texts might be quoted to prove that all war are abhorrent to our Fathe above, and that every deed o violence is wicked.

Mrs. H. Mohr, Bloomdale, Ohio. D angels sing in heaven? Where do we find it in the Bible?

The only passages that bear this construction are Psalm 148: 2, and Luke 2: 13, 14.

L. J. P., Ray, Va. How should a person reckon income for the purpose of the tithe?

The income is the remainder after the expenses of earning it are paid. Thus, the business man pays for the goods he sells, the proportion of rent of store, wages of help, and all other costs of conducting business. The balance, that is the net profit, is his income, which he spends in rent of home, clothing, board, etc. That is the income on which he pays tithe. It is the money that is at his disposal. A wage earner would tithe the whole of his salary. A professional man would be entitled to deduct expenses incidental to his profession.

Mrs. H. S. P., North Fond Du Lac, Wis. Do you not consider it contrary to Christ's teachings for a church society to rent, for the purpose of giving an entertainment, a building that is owned and operated by a saloonkeeper and kept open on the Sabbath, for indulging in worldly pleasure?

It would certainly be a very doubtful proceeding. The church officials should be careful not to identify the church in any way with the liquor business.

A FUNERAL IN VENICE

A funeral procession winding in and out along the canals of Venice, gives the beholder the impression that he is witnessing some mournful pageant of the Middle Ages, in this fair city of the sea. All gondolas have been painted black since the sixteenth century, when they were stripped of their gorgeous coloring by law. On this occasion they are decorated with black draperies and the flowers that the Italians love so well. The priest's boat passes first, then the one bearing the body, with the bearers standing erect on either side; then those of the mourners sweep on in single file. The people on the banks kneel and cross themselves fervently, until the last ripples from the passing cortege have lapped themselves to rest.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. L. F. C., Stanford, Ky. The price of Earl's Housekeeper is 15 cents.

J. K. W., New Brighton, Pa. Pronounced taubldote, and ah-la-curt.

H. W. E., Des Moines, Ia. It is stated that over 100,000 have confessed Christ in the Welsh revival.

J. H., Portsmouth, Va., and Mrs. E. S., San Angelo, Tex. We are not acquainted with the publication.

J. B. G., Peoria, Ill. The most widely read is the Authorized, but the Revised is making rapid gains every year.

D. B. C., National Military Home, Kan. We purpose shortly giving all necessary information on the Mormon question, in these columns.

C. W., Easton, Minn. You will find the answers to all of your questions by diligently searching the Bible with the aid of a concordance or Bible Dictionary.

Mrs. A. M. Edwards, Mountain, Me., has a needy pioneer Sunday School. Any reader sending picture books, lesson cards, hymn books, etc., will be duly thanked.

Mrs. W. H. H., West Otis, Mass. "Heir" for a boy, "heiress" for a girl; but in speaking indefinitely of either, it is proper to say "heir," and doubtless would stand in law.

M. L. Carey, Norwood, N. Y., asks some reader to kindy send him a copy of the dialect poem in which these lines occur:

"Ope dat gate wide, 'postel Peter,
Turn de g'ard out, soun' de gong,
Foh de Reb'rend Guaco Strong."

NEW YORK, MAY 17, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

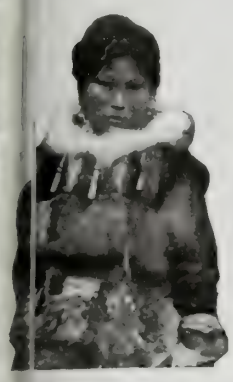
SSIONARY AND DOG TEAM LEAVING MISSION STATION

A HEATHEN GRAVEYARD AT NAPOSKIAGAMUIT

FOUR NATIVE HELPERS AT THE MISSION

QUEER ALASKAN SUPERSTITIONS

THE Eskimo of Western Alaska are a superstitious race. Believing in a Great Spirit that made all things, and, lastly, made man to enjoy his creations. He, the Great Spirit, was even so good as to make the eddies or re-flows of the river, assist his people to ascend the swift rivers with more ease and less danger than if the current were to come direct to the shore. Health and happiness are the heritage of man at birth; but offending the Great Spirit, or any of the subordinate spirits, is always sure to be punished by sickness, loss, or even by death, when the offense is too serious to be forgiven. Almost every act and rule of life is regulated or affected by the fear or favor of the spirits; but do as he will, the Eskimo is ever breaking truce with the spirits, and is in trouble of one kind or another. Thus it happens that there are among them "medicine men," who, being supposed to be in league with the spirits, have the power to obtain peace for the unfortunate offenders.

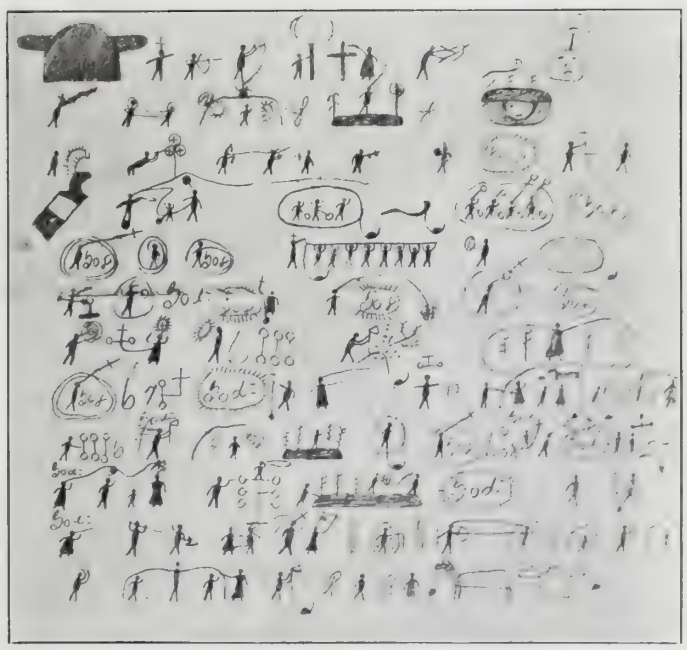


AN ESKIMO BELLE

The Eskimo is not averse to accepting religion, but he has much to overcome in the line of forgetting and dispelling the foolish beliefs of heathen customs and teaching. The "medicine men" at first raised opposition to the spread of religion, for they could no longer deceive the people and exact large sums from them for the treatment of the sick, or for securing the favor of the spirits for hunters or trappers. On one occasion, where the missionary had been preaching for some time, and had a few seemingly worthy followers, he appointed one to be the leader in keeping devotional services, and rejoiced in the good that was being accomplished; for an unexpected trial came in the spread of temporary insanity among the people of that village. The first to be afflicted was the helper who had been appointed. The people, as is their custom, were desirous to know the cause of this unexpected malady, and sought the counsel of the Shammans or "medicine men." They said it was caused by religion, since the man was even talking religion in his delirium. Accordingly a large team was sent for the missionary, and he was urged to come at once. He responded, and came late at night in a storm, and over a heavy road, to the village. No very friendly welcome was given him. The men came into the house where he was, and said:

"You have caused this malady by your religion, and we want no more of it. Now make yourself ready and start for home at once, and with you take everything and all the teaching you have left here."

Tired and sleepy from a long trip in the cold, the missionary was not inclined to go, but a friendly stranger, that happened to be in the village for the night, said to him: "You had better go, for it is not safe here. If you will go, I will take you." The people came and placed on the sled everything they had ever secured from him, and bade him be off; and when he started, they came in a body and said: "You should go to the bad place to which you have often told us the evil go, and there we will send you." At this the native friend fled, and the people, afraid to attack, went back to the village for weapons, and the missionary escaped.



THE DECALOGUE IN ALASKAN SIGN-WRITING

This hieroglyphic interpretation of the Ten Commandments was prepared by a native convert, and is used in the missionary work.

Five years later, we were called to visit the friendly stranger who had taken the missionary from the village on that evil night. He was dying, and just as the missionary arrived, the people had finished tying him up for burial. Whether just before, or at, or after death, the man was thus bound, no one knows; but so he was, and immediately in front of him was placed a dish of boiled rabbit, and a wail of mourning was begun, which lasted for about five minutes. Then, in the presence of the relatives, everything he had was given away, leaving the widow and aged father with nothing.

Then followed the wrapping of the body in a grass mat and the binding with thongs. When this was done, the corpse presented the appearance of a blanket or two, rolled up and tied with rope. Then from the roof, the only window of membrane was removed and a thong let down and the man made fast and hauled up through the window and rapidly taken to the grave.

In closing this account, it may be well to add that the man who went crazy, and came near causing the death of the missionary, was taken next day by the people of his village, and, in the presence of all, the two brothers of the man killed him and let the dogs mangle him afterward, thinking that the insanity might thus be eradicated. This outbreak of madness occurred about twelve years ago, and the burial of the friendly native took place five years later. Now, after many years of religious work, such things are not so common; yet at times the aged are left to freeze, and children are destroyed in remote parts, among unreached people. Many obstinate "medicine men" have become humble Christians, and have labored valiantly for the cause of Christ among their own people.

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have remembered our work among the Eskimo by gifts and prayers, for the spread of Christ's kingdom in the vast land of Alaska. When one beholds the benighted condition of these people, the missions and churches of the land might be compared to a lighted station on an elevated place, before the weary traveler, benighted in a storm and deep snow. A native once said: "I thought I would never reach the mission station; but I did not look back nor to the side, but watched the road and the light and never stopped, and here I am, and I am happy, too." So may many reach the home and light and warmth of Christian fellowship by the agencies of the missions in this land, and may the valiant host of those who cannot go never cease to pray for the spread of the Gospel.

Nushagak, Alaska. J. H. ROMIG.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SEMON BY

Rev. Wallace Mac Mullen, D.D.

Preached in Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, New York

DR. MAC MULLEN

THE LORDSHIP OF JESUS

TEXT—Romans 10:9: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

THE route into salvation is not hard to find. It is open to ordinary mortals. It does not wind through heavenly regions into which crippled souls cannot fly, nor through some gloomy abyss to the depths of which timid souls dare not descend. It is here close at hand. Just as Moses had said to the people of his day that the commandment of God was not a distant thing, duty not on some inaccessible mountain height, nor on the further shore of some wide sea, but close at hand, so the apostle declares the way of faith is equally near. Salvation is as near as duty.

With this truth of the simplicity of the conditions of the saved life, the church has frequently disagreed. She has erected all kinds of barriers. She has had ecclesiastical tests, doctrinal tests, ethical tests. And simple men have been puzzled, and sometimes honest men whose hearts have been loyal to Jesus Christ, have refused to make public their allegiance to him, because the open declaration would carry with it the acceptance of some things with which they do not agree. In the Church of Rome, it might mean the supremacy and infallibility of the Pope, in the Episcopal Church, the doctrine of apostolic succession, in the Presbyterian, election and limited atonement, in the Methodist, rules of conduct. Now whatever can be said in favor of priestly orders, and forms of government, and creeds, and ethical oversight, it is perfectly certain that these are not necessary to salvation. The Word of God does not say that we must profess faith in historic descent from the apostles, nor in the dignity of a special class of God's ministers, nor in formulated statements of truth, nor in a specified moral code, in order to be saved. Indeed, we are not to profess anything. We are to confess. To profess beliefs and purposes smacks disagreeably of pride, but to confess Jesus as Lord is a sign of proper humility.

A Crucial Belief

"Believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead." This precedes confession in the next verse where the order of the steps is reversed. This is not a long creed to subscribe to; only one article. But that one is vital, controlling. If we notice the Scriptural estimate of the Resurrection, we shall see the crucial place it holds in the whole scheme of Christian truth and the whole volume of Christian life. For the first disciples it changed sorrow into joy, despair into hope, defeat into triumph. By it their Lord's mysterious words were illuminated, his word explained, his nature made clear. It declared him to be the Son of God, it secured the soul's justification, it made all the immortal hopes of men radiant with certainty. Believe it in thine heart. No subterfuge, no paltry substitute for it, no jugglery with the records so as to compel them to say something less baldly miraculous than that his dead body was raised and the grave emptied, no naturalistic interpretations which try so pathetically to save for us some spiritual significance from the Resurrection story while destroying its solid substance. None of these things. "Believe in thine heart that God hath raised him." And note that it is no mere assent to an interesting truth. It is heart belief. There is moral feeling in it. It is the jubilant persuasion of worshipers, the glad acknowledgment of hungry souls, the shout, the song, the passion of lovers. God hath raised him from the dead.

Christ's Supremacy

But if the conditions of salvation are simple, they are not superficial. To confess Jesus as the Lord, is no light and simple ceremony. It is no mere bit of recitation. It is the open confession of that which one believes to be true, an inward conviction spoken aloud.

Jesus is Lord. That involves the dignity, the supremacy of his person. Exactly that was the matter in debate. There were conflicting estimates of him then in vogue. If we could think ourselves back to the scene of the Crucifixion, we could find in the multitudes about the cross of Christ types of those who touched him during all his ministry. There would be the official class, the Roman soldiers; and while one soldier was pitiful and believed Jesus to be innocent, and was quite sure, in his case at least, justice had miscarried; yet if one may judge by their actions, the majority of the soldiers looked on indifferently, and in response to concern-inquiring the sufferer, might have said he is a harmless Dreamer, who has had some strange notion about a new order of things political and social, which the authorities regarded as dangerous to the State, and so put him to death.

The religious class was there in great numbers, and they would have said regarding Christ, he is a dangerous teacher. He has spoken with the utmost disrespect of established institutions, sacred not only because of their age, but because they had in their origin and history the authority of God. He has so exalted himself and so emphasized his authority, as to make himself appear equal with God, all of which is blasphemous. It is fitting that he should die.

And there would be found there those who sneered at him and flung their taunts in his face, who would have denounced him as a deceiver, declaring that he deluded them with false promises of a new Kingdom, in which the conditions of life would be vastly improved. They would have said he quite deserved his fate.

Testimony of Friends

And there was also on the outskirts of the crowd his disciples, broken-hearted, who would have said that he who was dying, was the whitest soul they had ever known, and they had dreamed that he was even more than that, none other than Israel's promised Redeemer, led into that belief partly by what they had seen of his character and work, and partly by the claims he had made about himself. Browning has a story in verse of an Arab physician, who wrote to his former medical teacher concerning a journey of his, which had its terminus in Jerusalem. Before entering the sacred city, he spent a night at Bethany, and there he met a strange character whose name was Lazarus, who told a wild story of having been dead and called back to life by the mighty voice of a Nazarene healer, who himself had lost his life in a tumult some years before. This Syrian, because of this death experience of his, was now detached from ordinary earthly things, looked upon them with wide, unseeing eyes, cared nothing for the troublesome details of life, nor even that the armies of Rome were marching to stamp out the life of his beloved Holy City, so absorbed was he in the contemplation of the life eternal of which he had had a taste. And he declared that his great deliverer had said about himself, that he was God come to live in human flesh a while. The physician who writes tries to dismiss the tale as a wild vagary, but continually during the writing of his epistle, the wonder of it forces itself upon his notice, and the possible truth of it thrills him.

> The very God! think Abid, dost thou think?
> So, the All-Great, were the All-Loving, too;
> So, through the thunder, comes a voice,
> Saying: "Oh, heart I made, a heart beats here!
> Face, my hands fashioned, see it in myself!
> Thou hast no power, nor mayest conceive of mine,
> But love I gave thee, with myself to love,
> And thou must love me, who have died for thee!"
> The madman saith he said so: it is strange.

These transcendent estimates of Jesus about himself were not easy to accept. And yet they are unescapeable if his own claims are to be treated with respect. We are at liberty to make sure that the words ascribed to him are really his, but when we are thus sure, we are not at liberty to edit his words, his remarks about himself, nor any others, in order that they may meet our views of what is reasonable. Now, the Jews to whom Paul writes, for he is carrying on his debate with unbelieving Israel, had objected to Christ's characterization of himself. They were scandalized by his claims. Those claims in their eyes were sacrilegious, blasphemous. Precisely, but these words which were like the vagaries of an enthusiast, the mists of a dreamer, the incoherencies of a mind upset by the Messianic fallacy, have been established as true by the events which have occurred since they were spoken. They are inseparable belongings of the historic Jesus, and must be accepted as true or denied as false. No temporizing policy in regard to his self-measurements will do. His words are not to be diluted. They are to be accepted or denied.

We have a good many modern attempts to give t world a revised Gospel. The records are expurgate the real Christ is rescued from the puerile absurditi with which he has been loaded by biographers who lov him not wisely but too well. The supernatural in wo and work has been pared away and the sublimat essence—a kind of ethical Christ—has been handed o to us as a worthy substitute for the King to whom h been given the homage of the ages. Alas! They ha taken away our Lord in the process and we know n where to find him. Nor have they left anything wor keeping. Confess Jesus as Lord, which means first, t supremacy of his person.

His Authoritative Teaching

And it means the authority of his teaching. He Lord of truth. To confess him as Lord is to hang l portrait of God on the walls of the heart and let it be part of the heart's permanent furnishing. Dr. Jowe the famous master of Balliol, once said, "It makes little d ference what I think about God, but much what he thin about me." If that means that character is more impo tant than creed, it is true. But it does matter what think about God. Has he any existence, has he existence independent of the universe; has he mor character; has he moral ends in view in the work he h done? One of Tissot's series of paintings of the life Jesus, a work for which he prepared by ten years residence and loving study in the Holy Land, is t picture of Christ teaching his disciples what we kn as "The Lord's Prayer." The Master is in the centr and the disciples about him on their knees, repeati after him, "Our Father." It is the only proper at tude for his followers. He is our final authority as the truth concerning God. There are many thin which "sadden nature and break our rest," cruelti which seem hopelessly out of harmony with the music "Our Father." Fiery mountains burn and suffoca cities, earthquakes shake them into ruins, tidal wav drown them. The couriers of woe run to us with the clamor from fires and floods and thundering avalanche Yes, but it is not merely true that we with our pitifu horrified hearts are parts of the order of nature, bu what is more significant and conclusive, Jesus is in t natural order, having entered it by his own choic And he with a heart tenderer and more responsive the woes of men than has any of his brothers, and wi the knowledge of God, which belongs to eternal rel tionship, says, "Our Father." It is a final word ar full, carrying with it our redemption, our dignity, o destiny.

Lord of Life

And Jesus is Lord of life as well as Lord of truth This confession of his Lordship has practical meaning His will and life are to make our acknowledged rule conduct. We occasionally hear charges that the ethi of the church are poorer than the ethics of the worl If so, the church has fallen far below the ethics Jesus, which indeed she has never reached in her exper ence, has forgotten him as Lord of her moral life. Th late Dr. Bruce of Scotland, once said, "I am dispose to think that a great and increasing portion of the mor worth of society lies outside the Christian Church, sepa rated from it not by godlessness, but rather by excep tionally intense moral earnestness. Many, in fact, hav left the church in order possibly to be Christians. If that is true, it is the most terrible arraignment the church which can be made. But at the same time if true, it convicts this morally earnest unchurche world of cowardice, dishonesty, the secret, timid, us less discipleship of Nicodemus. For this moral earnes ness is from Jesus; the finest moral ideas cherishe among us are from him.

Take the demand for social service which ring through our modern life, is it not his inspiration. W all feel that love is the fulfilling of the law. Christia or not Christian, that is an enthroned principle. W still scramble for personal treasure and personal adva tage and do it sometimes with a selfishness which savage, but we worship love. Whenever we hear of deed of simple, self-forgetting, heroic goodness, or of life of uncomplaining devotion, however obscure, ou hearts thrill and our eyes fill. We cheerfully surrend love and do homage to it. Not love in the cheap eanings often given to it, but love as good-will and lf-sacrifice. But this pre-eminence of love is Christ's ing; it can be traced back to his cross; indeed, we lieve it is his present inspiration which keeps our pro- amation of the glory of love clear and constant. And our ideals are his gifts, why not confess his moral rdship? There are unquestionably multitudes of men d women who have Christian ideals of life, and try th some success to make their lives conform to them, o, if they ever think of the origin of their ideals, gard them as their inheritance, or the habits of the e, or their own manufacture, and never dream that ey are the gifts of Christ. If they would wake up d be honest, they would confess Jesus as their moral rd.

And this means an every-day confession. It means bbath ethics, but it means business ethics. All legal straints of trade, all departmental investigations of de combinations and methods are for the purpose of curing justice. Those who confess Jesus as Lord will ed no such helps to keep them true in their dealings. ve secures justice. If we confess him as our business ler, men will get their rights from us with some of the ving kindness of God added. What would Jesus do a vital question. Whether answered as Dr. Sheldon d it or not, the query is vital. He is Lord.

Why is confession necessary? Why not venerate sus secretly, and admit his Lordship in the privacy of e heart? In the first place, there is a social value confession. All truth is in need of expression. here can indeed be thought, feeling, passion, conviction ithout speech, but how poor our thought would be -day, how its present richness and variety would drop way if the thought of the years that are gone had ver broken into speech! Learning to read we count e basis of education, perhaps also the climax of it, for that power we became possessed of the wisdom of e thought-leaders of other ages. There is a general mand that truth be brought out of secrecy—that it be oken, and so made the property of all men. The hical code of the medical profession, which makes it own on all secret remedies, appeals to our sense of nor. Secrets which affect a man's life and health ght not to be hidden; profit built upon helpless, leading human pain is to be repudiated. That is a ne ideal, and the physicians are honored for holding it nd governing their medical practice by it. It is an hical height to which the race as a whole has not yet imbed, but at least we can recognize its beauty and its ssential justice.

And we are applying the principle elsewhere. The holar is not to burrow like a human mole in dark laces of learning, and communicate nothing to his fellows. He is really acting as the representative of those who are less keen of vision. His discoveries are common property. He must apply himself to the problems of state and help to solve them; to social conditions, and help to improve them. If he gives himself to the investigations of physical science, the industrial world demands the secrets of his laboratory. The same law of social service is applied to wealth. The common welfare must not be endangered by colossal accumulations of money. All the schemes wise and unwise which are suggested to regulate this modern danger are parts of the general demand that wealth shall not work social damage, and that it shall be made socially useful. And increasingly rich men are recognizing the justice of this belief, are feeling the obligations put upon them, and are applying large sums to the general good.

This, then, is the law which is suggested by this demand for confession. Truth is a social treasure and must not be hidden. The truth of the Lordship of Jesus meets the world's need, brings it peace and power and glory. When a soul is certain about his Lordship, its conviction becomes the property of other souls by confession. Some other soul which does not know perfect peace because it does not know his mastery, may be led to seek his rule when our certainty breaks into speech.

And then confession means moral fibre for the confessor. Inward intention is always helped by outward confession. In our social and business intercourse, speech is not only our chief source of entertainment, but our tool with which we do our work. A promise is sacred to those who are in love with truth, and legally binding even to those who are not. If a man has a correct estimate of the importance of speech and hates a lie, his word is as good as his bond. And lest a man be tempted to regard his word lightly we have legal forms. Speech is written, put in definite terms and signed, and by that speech a man is tethered. Now what a legal agreement is to a man in his business transactions, a public confession of Jesus as Lord may be in his spiritual life. It revitalizes the soul in its weary moments to recall its sworn allegiance.

Over in London in the Torrey meeting in Albert Hall, a colonel in the British Army, sitting on the platform facing ten thousand people, heard Dr. Torrey ask those who wished to confess Christ to rise. He had no special feeling up to that point, but he said to himself, "Now is the opportunity—ten thousand people—I can stand up, and very likely some of my friends will see me. I won't go back. I was the first to stand, and I believe I have been a different man since." When a decision is reached, and then registered openly in the eyes of men, it is the end of debate and uncertainty, and timidity and doubt, and the confessed Lord floods the confessing soul with peace and power.

And confession means courage. Christianity has always made heroes, and there are chances for heroism in common life as well as in emergencies. When we think ourselves back to the days of the Christian martyrs, how easily our admiration goes out to those who suffered for Christ! When Gibbon wrote in his great history his chapter concerning the sufferings of the early Christian martyrs, he spoke of them sneeringly. But Lecky, in his European Morals, scores Gibbon for his lack of generosity and lack of candor. "We read of Christians bound in chains of red hot iron; of others who were torn to the bone by shells or hooks of iron; of tortures prolonged and varied through entire days. Not only men, but weak girls endured these things without flinching, when one word would have freed them from their sufferings." How easily our admiration goes out to such heroism. How we pity Gibbon, who hadn't warmth enough in his heart, nor honesty enough in his standards, to generously pay tribute to the heroes of the faith which he repudiated.

If the old tests should return, I doubt not the old moral earnestness would return. We would feel in such an emergency that the dear old religion, the faith of our fathers, in which we have been reared, by which we have been inspired, and comforted, and blessed in countless ways, must be either confessed or denied. As a matter of fact, our religion is on trial for its life every day in home, and office, and exchange. The tests of to-day differ from the tests of the days of Nero and Diocletian; but they are very real, and very subtle. Perhaps financial loss is involved by a man's confession of Christ, perhaps a change of his whole course of life, or a loss of social favor, or a loss of pleasure. O, there are still chances for heroism. Steady, sturdy confession in the presence of those who are indifferent or hostile to the Christ we love is just as thrilling a thing as ever it was. The need of to-day is not for physical heroism on his behalf, but for spiritual heroism. And there was never a day when spiritual heroism required more nerve than to-day. It is so easy to conform to common standards of life, and be content with a perfunctory, commonplace religion. It is so difficult to confess Christ as our Lord, freely, frequently, generally.

Confess and thou shalt be saved. And the salvation promised is no meagre thing, and the gift of it is not delayed until we get through with the death struggle. "Saved" is a large word. The saved life is a large life. It has room, and breeze, and tonic, and freedom, and zest in it. The life which is full of Christ-confession is not spiritually commonplace; it is spiritually splendid. If we could have a church which was universally, gladly, cheerily, spontaneously, daily confessing her Lord, we would have a transformed church, of incandescent brightness of life and energy and compelling power.

JOHN PAUL JONES' BODY TO BE BROUGHT TO AMERICA

AFTER lying for over a century in an unmarked grave, in an obscure quarter of Paris, the body of John Paul Jones, the first of America's illustrious naval heroes, has been discovered, nd is to be brought back to the country he loved and erved so well.

He died in 1792, and his body was prepared for shipnent to America, but it was not sent for, and was inally interred in the little Protestant cemetery. As he years passed, houses and shops encroached on the urying ground, until the place became but a tradition known to few. There was a legend that the sailor was uried under a grain shop, now number 14 Rue Grange ux Belles. For a number of years the various historial societies, and, in fact, all people interested in America's early struggle for liberty, have felt the shame f leaving the body of the man who did more than any ther to make the power of the colonies respected on he high seas, to lie in an unknown grave in an alien and. The last Congress was asked by President Roosevelt to appropriate money for a search beneath the uildings on the old cemetery, in order that the remains ould be found and brought to this country. Ambassador Porter undertook the work with enthusiasm. He is imself descended from distinguished Revolutionary ancestry, and has been President-General of the Society f the Sons of The American Revolution. He wished o find the body before resigning as Ambassador, and e desired it to be the crowning act of his brilliant areer abroad.

The French accorded every courtesy to the searchers. Col. Samuel Blackden, who arranged for the burial in 1792, had stated that the remains were in a lead coffin, nd also left an account describing the burial place. At last three leaden cases were found. Two had name plates, the third was unmarked. It was opened, and there, as it had been described, was the body of the great sailor, little changed after the long lapse of years since he had trod the quarter-deck. In order to leave no doubt, the body was examined by Drs. Papillot and Captain, the two foremost anthropologists of France. They were provided with a written description, and a bust of the Admiral was also used for comparison. The measurements of the body were found to be the same as described, and the color of the hair and contour of the face corresponded with the account. A post mortem was held, and the marks of the disease of which he died were plainly visible. The body was replaced in the leaden coffin. This was placed in another of lead with a glass above the face. Both were then set in a handsome one of oak, and draped with the Stars and Stripes

JOHN PAUL JONES
Commander of the Bon Homme Richard

Paul Jones was the son of John Paul, and was born in Scotland in 1747. He became a sailor at the age of twelve, and his first voyage was to Virginia. In compliment to some friends there, he added the name of Jones to his own. It should be remembered that it was he, as commander of the Alfred, who first hoisted the flag of the colonies—a pine tree with a coiled rattlesnake, bearing the motto, "Don't tread on me."

After several successful engagements he went to France, and sailed thence in the Bon Homme Richard, named for his friend Franklin, for the English coast. Here he conducted a war of reprisal, the direct provocation being the wanton destruction by the British of the towns of Falmouth, Mass., Fairfield, Conn., and other places on the coast of New England. His greatest naval fight was the one off Flamborough Head, where he captured the Serapis and the Countess of Scarborough, both powerful vessels and heavily armed.

The Captain of the Serapis was knighted later. Jones said jokingly, when he heard of it: "He deserves it; and should I have the good fortune to fall in with him again, I will make a lord of him."

Many cities are demanding the honor of providing a resting-place for his remains, but the matter has not been definitely settled. France will pay distinguished military honors, and General Porter will return to Paris for the occasion, and see the body safely on board an American warship, that will bring it to this country.

ONE WOMAN'S WORK FOR THE MASTER

GATHERING IN THE STREET GAMINS

A LUNCH-HOUR SPIRITUAL TALK WITH 1,000 WORKING GIRLS

AMONG the many phases of Christian work in New York, few are more interesting than a very unique work that is now being carried on in factories at the noon-day hour, while the girls who earn their living by their hands are eating their lunch. This is one of the peculiar opportunities for reaching a class of workers who, perhaps, are never seen inside church walls. It will interest many of our readers to know something of the devoted young woman who conducts this work among a thousand girls in Kayser's glove factory.

MRS. BESSERER

Mrs. Carrie S. Besserer was an Ohio girl, who moved to Charleston, W. Va., where her earliest Christian experience began. There she visited and spoke among the homeless and friendless. Born and reared in a consecrated Presbyterian home, she was taught the Word and the love of God from her earliest remembrance. Converted at eleven years of age, when she reached the years of womanhood and wifehood she began to look about for some special field of Christian effort.

She started in Charleston a Boy's Club, for the street gamins and the homeless children, and through her efforts two Mission Churches were established, which now have a settled pastorate over them, and are under the charge of the Kanawha Presbyterian Church. Her success there attracted attention, and she was called to Baltimore. In Highlandtown, a suburb of that city, she organized the Bethany, a successful work for young women. It is under the care of the Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone, pastor. In addition to her labors in Highlandtown among the working class, and an extensive factory work at noon in that city, she was enabled to organize a volunteer auxiliary band among the old families of Baltimore, who are now carrying on that work.

Mrs. Besserer went to Winona Lake, and while there organized a training class of young ladies, chiefly college-bred women, and a children's class. She held large meetings every week, under the direction of the Winona Assembly. A "Personal Workers' " class was organized, touching almost every State in the Union, and entailing a very large "correspondence list."

At Winona, Mrs. Besserer met Dr. Wilbert W. White of the Bible Teachers' Training School, New York City, and last September she became connected with that organization. Out of this connection has sprung "The Bethany," for young ladies, which is located at 515 Lexington Avenue, New York. Classes meet every night. The pupils of the Bible Teachers' Training School, under Mrs. Besserer's direction, have proved valuable assistants. An associate worker, Miss Alice M. Gamlin, and her mother, live at the Bethany.

Monday night is devoted to the sewing and embroidery class, composed of girls who are stenographers, ladies' maids, cutters in children's garment factories and similar occupations. Toward the close of the evening, a devotional meeting is held. Each girl has her "prayer list" of those she is praying and working for.

On Tuesday night, all girls of every class assemble, and have a social evening. A Bible class is a feature of this evening. For Wednesday evenings, Mrs. Besserer has devised a work which is both unique and touching. She and her assistant sought to get acquainted with the leading spirits in the wicked dance-halls i uptown New York. By careful and prayerful effort they got the very leader of all to come to the Mission and she brought others. They were received wit loving tenderness and hospitality; there was music, an a nice lunch was served. Each woman was supplie with material and allowed to make a shirt-waist for her self, and thus a pleasant evening was spent. Three o of these young women have confessed Christ.

On Thursday evenings, a group of twenty girls fro the tenements assembles, and no one else is allowed o that evening. They are the most untamed set of gam ins ever gathered together. Not one of them woul give a true name or address. They ransacked the halls and ran up and down the elevators; and the bath-room had to be locked, for they carried off everything i sight. Now, they are taming down beautifully. A the last meeting they came with faces washed and hai combed, and showing some kind of decency.

On Saturday night, another class of employed girls— clerks who can come no other time—have their night A lunch is served, and it is an evening for enjoyment

Mrs. Besserer has also formed on the first floor of th Bible School, a Children's Gospel Service. On Wed nesday afternoon, a crowd of boys who nearly tear th doors down, assemble, nearly a full hour before th meeting. They climb around the building, pull off eac other's caps, and create confusion before the meeting Mrs. Besserer seems to have no trouble in controllin these boys. She appeals to them to become soldiers o Jesus, and tells them what soldiers must do. "Onward Christian Soldiers," is always their opening hymn. O Thursday afternoon, a meeting for girls from six t fourteen, is held. These children are picked up on th streets and they are taught to become sunbeams for Je sus Christ. They are taught to go back to the tenement house homes, and give a smile instead of a frown, a kin word instead of a cross word, and to ask Jesus to kee their lips and their hearts, and to rule in their lives

PROMINENT MEN of the HOUR

ROBERT C. OGDEN

BROWN AYRES

HERMON C. BUMPUS

JOHN WANAMAKER

THEODORE P. SHONTS

HERMON C. BUMPUS is the first Director of the American Museum of Natural History in New York City. Although a comparatively young man, he has been engaged in scientific investigation for over twenty years, starting in his college days. He is the author of numerous monographs and magazine articles on biological subjects. His book, Invertebrate Zoology, is regarded as a standard work on the subject. Before taking up his work in New York, he was a professor at Brown University, Assistant Director of the Marine Biological Laboratory, and Director of the Biological Laboratory of the United States Fish Commission at Wood's Holl.

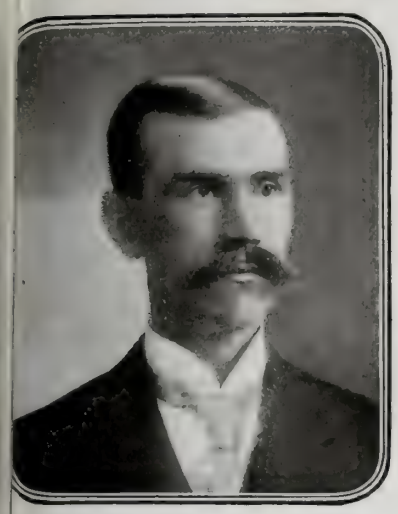
ROBERT C. OGDEN, in addition to being a man of business, is the great friend of education in the South. He has recently taken a large party of prominent people on a tour of inspection of the various educational institutions in which he is interested. On their return the train was derailed, and several of the party injured. He is a trustee of Hampton Institute, and Tuskegee. He is the author of several booklets, one on Pew Rents and the New Testament causing considerable discussion in the religious world. The American negro has no firmer friend than he.

MR. JOHN WANAMAKER, the famous merchant, has given $100,000 for Y.M.C.A. buildings at Peking, Seoul and Kyoto. The announcement was made at the dinner of the Y. M. C. A. Congress in Paris. Mr. Wanamaker has taken an active interest in the work for young men for a number of years, and he has already erected buildings for Associations at Calcutta and Madras. He founded the Bethany Presbyterian Sunday School in Philadelphia in 1858, and is still its superintendent. It is the largest in the United States. During the Civil War he was one of the organizers of the Christian Commission. Mr. Wanamaker, in his business life, is a good example of American progressiveness.

PROFESSOR BROWN AYRES, for twenty-five years head of the Department of Physics at Tulane University, La., has been elected President of the University of Tennessee. He is one of America's most famous scientists, with an international reputation. He wa born in Memphis, Tenn., in 1856; studied at Washington and Le University, later graduating from the Stevens Institute of Tech nology. He received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 188 He is a member of a number of learned societies, and was on th Electrical Jury of Awards at the World's Fair in 1893; the Atlant Exposition, 1895, and the Nashville Exposition, 1897. The Universit of Tennessee—already one of the foremost colleges of the South cannot fail to advance rapidly under the leadership of Dr. Ayre

THEODORE P. SHONTS is the Chairman of the Panama Canal Com mission. Until a short time ago he was unknown to the America public, but his selection by the President to take charge of th canal makes him to-day one of the foremost figures in curren history. He started as a railway contractor in Iowa, becam superintendent of the Indiana, Illinois & Iowa Railway, and late its president. He is fifty years old, and the typical American ma of business. His chief interest, outside of railroading, is in music

MORMONS SUSTAIN POLYGAMY



SENATOR REED SMOOT

THE MORMON TEMPLE

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH

WHILE the Mormon Church and its officials, from the highest to the lowest, have been publicly declaring that, ever since the Manifesto of 1890, polygamy has ceased to be a ctrine of the Church, there are thousands in Utah and other Mormon States who believed that the profesn of abandonment was the merest pretence. At the vestigation before the Senate Committee on Privileges d Elections in Washington, it was shown that many lormons, including even some of the highest officials, ll had plural wives, and that children had been born them of these polygamous relations in recent years.

Now comes an even more startling revelation—thing less than a vote by the great Mormon Conferce recently held in Salt Lake City, sustaining two ostles who had been accused of having married plural ves within the last few years. That vote must be gically accepted as the repudiation of monogamy and e endorsement of polygamy anew by the highest ormon ecclesiastical authorities.

From a very high authority in Utah and Washington, HE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received the communication inted below, which now gives, for the first time, the ory of this Conference and its strange proceedings:

In the years antecedent to 1890 it had become known, d by that date was an incontestibly established fact, at the Mormon Church was a polygamistic organization. claimed to practice polygamy under "divine sanction," d even by divine command, as bestowed through the ophets of its Church. Some of its authorities conrued the law as permissive, but the majority of the nportant theologians of the Mormon Church regarded as mandatory. A man must have more than one wife this world to attain to the highest glories of the world come!

This particular "heavenly law," transmuted through oseph Smith or Brigham Young, as the case may be, nto an earthly obligation, occasioned friction and conicts of almost every imaginable character with other hurches, with the government, and occasionally within he Mormon Church itself. But in 1890, the aged Wilford Woodruff—the most gentle pontiff the Mormon Church ever had—made an address to the people of the United States, which may be called an apology, coupled with a promise or a manifesto with binding provisions upon the followers or, according to Mormon acceptance, a commandment from God with all which that implies. The effect of it, under any name, as accepted by the people of the United States, and as expounded to them frequently by the Mormon authorities, was to inhibit forever plural marriages within the Mormon Church.

In a sense, then, in the year 1890, the Mormon Church, theretofore incontestibly polygamistic, became monogamistic in character. During fourteen years, a disputation existed on this subject. At first, it was a slight murmur of contention on the part of ministers of the Gospel, or doubting Gentiles in Utah, as to the good faith of the Mormon leaders in their declaration on this subject. After a time, that cry swelled to louder volume, and the assertion was made by Christian workers, and sometimes by men of business in Utah, that plural marriage had been secretly resumed. The controversy kept growing with each day until, in April, 1904, it was the chief, paramount issue in the consideration of the case of Reed Smoot, the Mormon apostle elected to the United States Senate, and under examination by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of that body, as to his right to hold his seat. So far as this vital matter could influence the Committee, it was conceded generally by all parties, that the proof of a new case of plural marriage, under prophetic or apostolic sanction of the church, would prove fatal to Mr. Smoot's ambitions.

So many chosen witnesses of the Mormon Church had evaded pointed inquiry on this subject; so many of them had half assented and half denied; so many of them had pleaded guilty by fleeing from the process of government, that the question had become acute, and was now finally dependent upon the testimony of Reed Smoot himself.

He, apostle and contested Senator, upon being called to the witness chair in February, 1905, protested in effect as follows: That, having no sympathy with polygamy, he had been shocked to learn from the testimony that two of his fellow apostles were charged with having taken young wives within a few years, and with living in flagrant disobedience to the law and to the pretensions of the Church; that, being thus shocked, he had, at the October Conference in 1904—which was held in Salt Lake City, and represented the whole Church—appealed to President Joseph F. Smith, to have these two apostles dropped from the apostolic quorum; that President Smith has stated as an objection to this mode of procedure, that the men had not had a hearing; but that upon this formal charge, he would cause an investigation, and would act according to the results.

The presidency and the apostles of the Mormon Church are its governing power. As they are, so is the Church. It therefore became at this point, immediately vital to know what would be the result of the investigation, and how the Church would act with regard to the two apostles thus charged with an offense fatal to Reed Smoot's pretensions, if they were retained in the quorum after having been proved to be guilty.

It was assumed by all concerned in observing this matter, both in Washington and in Utah, that between the October Conference of the Mormon Church in 1904, and the April Conference in 1905, the investigation would be carried forward, a result reached, and that the Conference of April, 1905, would determine the question.

Bear in mind, that, from having been declared a monogamistic church in 1890, the Mormon Church was now challenged from within, and under repeated challenge from without, by accusation multiplied thousands of times, had been put to its own test as to whether it would remain monogamistic. And the vote on two apostles newly entered into polygamy, would determine whether the Church had recurred to polygamy as a practice, or had not.

When that conference met in April, Reed Smoot, the challenger, was not present, he having gone to San Francisco the preceding day on some trivial matter of business. At the great Conference no mention was made of the challenge, and the investigation was not alluded to. President Joseph F. Smith presided, and declared that it was moved and seconded that the two accused apostles should be sustained as apostles and as "prophets, seers, and revelators" to the Church, and this motion was carried by the congregation of approximately 11,000 people, only two persons voting "No."

The Church has, therefore, in the most unequivocal way, of itself reverted to its polygamistic character. Proof of this had been given many times to the satisfaction of its opponents. The challenge had been a standing one on the part of Christian churches in Utah for nearly ten years, that the Mormon Church had returned to its former practice of polygamy. Now, Reed Smoot, apostolic challenger, demonstrates the fact of a return to its former principle of polygamy by his own Church, and for the first time, recognition has been given to this issue by the Church itself. Having recognized the issue, and having voted affirmatively thereupon, the Church is forevermore debarred from contending that it is not polygamistic.

THE FLOOD-TIDE OF IMMIGRATION

IN May, the tide of immigration to America begins to rise, especially from Italy and other Mediterranean countries. For twenty-four hours before the steerage passengers can catch a glimpse of the faint blue line floating on the horizon, that means the land of promise, they have been in a state of excitement. As they approach their goal they watch eagerly as each new picture presents itself. They pass through the Narrows, and way before them, rising from the waters of the harbor, appears a gigantic figure, crowned, and holding far aloft a torch. Its face has the majesty of a great teacher. The figure of Liberty welcomes the immigrant who comes from a land, perhaps, where she is little known, or, sad to tell, where in the clouded mind of the ignorant or vicious, she means not opportunity, but license.

There is no more picturesque sight to be seen about New York, than a party of immigrants coming out of their quarters in the steerage of one of our great ocean steamers. They are loaded down with bags, parcels, and satchels, that resemble small leather trunks. Bright-hued handkerchiefs serve but two purposes, as a head-covering and as a traveling-bag. Staggering under their burdens, and with much the appearance of a party of camp followers after the sack of a city, they pile down the gang-plank and stamp their feet half gleefully, half in fear, on the platform of the landing-stage. In six months, if one could see them again, their variegated costume will have given way to store clothes, and many of the comers will be working for wages at least double the amount they earned in their former homes.

There is considerable red tape for the immigrants to go through before they can pass beyond the gates of the immigration office, and be really a part of the New World. Anarchists, paupers, and those with proved criminal records, are deported. Doubtful cases are detained. The majority of these are later released, by giving satisfactory evidence that they can support themselves or, by the promise of friends already here, that the new-comers will not become a public charge.

Those barred out are sent back to their own countries by the next outgoing steamer, if possible. Prospective immigrants are now becoming acquainted with our regulations, and are making more careful preparations for their journey. The steamship companies, also, are more careful in taking steerage passengers, in order to avoid the expense involved in retransportation. It would be a great benefit to the American workman, and the country at large, if the regulations were even more severe than at present. Not that the country would keep out any deserving man or woman, but that this country should have the best, and not take elements into its political make-up that it cannot digest, or, at least, show a fair prospect of assimilating. The following facts in regard to the last and greatest march of the nations toward the setting sun is given below:

IMMIGRANTS PASSING THROUGH ELLIS ISLAND, NEW YORK

1904	[illegible]
1905, January	[illegible]
1905, February	[illegible] 17
1905, March	[illegible]
1905, April	[illegible]

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Which Church?

AMONG the letters that reach this office daily, asking for advice, is one that states a difficulty which has probably perplexed many newly converted persons. Our correspondent writes:

I am thirty-eight years old, and have recently become converted, and am anxious to join a church. I have not attended church for many years, and am as ignorant of the Bible as a child. Should I join the church most convenient to my home, or the church where preaching is most gratifying to me, or where I have most affinity for congregation? Should I disregard creeds, or should I consider the differences in creeds, and how can I intelligently pass on these differences, being but an infant in religion, and knowing so little about the Bible. If there was but one church, it would be so easy. If one has been brought up in a church, or has been in touch with church, or has parents or relatives who are members, it seems quite simple. But to be born again, and as a stranger in a larger city, the subject is perplexing. I would be gratified for any advice you can offer, and thank you for a reply in the columns of your paper, which I read regularly with great interest.

We can well understand the difficulty. There is in our land and at this day such a wealth of churches, each of which places emphasis on some special aspect of the truth, that the new convert is bewildered and knows not which would be the best church home.

The difficulty, however, is not so serious as appears at first sight. The evangelical Churches are practically in accord on the main doctrines of Christianity. The difference, for example, between the Congregational and the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, is only as to church government. The Baptist Church agrees with the others on all subjects, except the mode and period of administering the ordinance of baptism. The essential doctrines of these and other churches vary so little, that the new convert would receive in any of them teaching practically identical. In any of them he would be heartily welcomed, and would find congenial association and opportunities for Christian service.

In making a selection, he would probably be influenced by the circumstances of his conversion. He would naturally be drawn to the church in which he first saw the light. But that consideration need not be the determining factor. God has endowed his servants with special gifts. "He gave some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." It may be that the preaching that won the new convert to Christ, is not the kind of preaching that is adapted to promote growth in grace. That work after all, is what the new convert needs. There are some pastors who are successful in "perfecting the saints and edifying the body of Christ." The chief object after conversion, is more knowledge, more development, until, as the Apostle says, "we come in the unity of faith into a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Our correspondent and all who are similarly situated, should therefore seek helpful preaching. The mere propinquity of the church to the home, should not weigh, nor need the minute differences of creed have undue influence. His desire is to grow in grace and to work for Christ. The church that promotes these objects best is the church he should join.

The American Way

LEAVING Secretary of War Taft "sitting on the lid" of affairs in Washington, President Roosevelt has taken a well-earned vacation in the South and West, and will doubtless need all the strength he can get before the Senate meets in the fall. His trip to San Antonio, where he attended the reunion of the Rough Riders, was marked by great enthusiasm, and plainly showed that his popularity is still on the increase in the "New South."

The President's journey proves that American simplicity is still a living force with Americans, who have not yet got over the characteristic trait of estimating people at their real value. He took his recreation as a citizen of the Republic, and was as delighted as a schoolboy to get out into the bracing air and free life of Colorado. He killed a few grizzlies, captured a live wolf, and killed a large rattlesnake, with a sixteen inch riding quirt. If any of these exploits could have been credited to any ruler of a foreign country, the European papers would have had an entire front page with a vivid account, and the weeklies would have appeared with several illustrations depicting different stages of the exciting events. The President has not traveled in an official uniform, nor has his every movement been heralded with a blast of trumpets, the clatter of arms, and the tramp of guards. In the place of all this we catch a glimpse of a man in a brown hunting suit, riding several miles to church, taking part in the service with evident enjoyment, joining in the singing (something, by the way, that could be copied to advantage by plain citizens of the great Republic, who leave that part of Christian worship to a paid choir), and, at the close, giving a simple, direct talk to the congregation. It is from such incidents as these that it is made clear that the American spirit is not devitalized, or in any immediate danger of becoming so.

The President, in his love of the open air, the woods, and the plains, turns back the thoughts of the American people to the early days of the nation, when the pioneers struggled with the wilderness, and laid, by their courage and simple lives, the foundation-stones of the Republic. We confess that we like the President's way of spending a vacation far better than the artificial glitter of a summer outing of the proudest monarch of the Old World. With the head of a nation of seventy-five millions setting such a good example, the rising generation is not likely to abandon the courageous, straightforward way of doing things that has made this country what it is to-day.

Mormonism Self-Condemned

IN another part of this issue, we publish a remarkable contribution from the pen of an authority who stands very high in Washington and Utah. He states the Mormon problem in a manner that should carry conviction to all who are watching the great battle now in progress between the Mormon hierarchy and the defenders of American morals and American homes. This authoritative writer, who is familiar with every phase of the question, and has been a close observer of events, points out facts that cannot fail to have due weight with the United States Senate, when that body resumes the Smoot investigation.

His communication, briefly stated, is to the effect that the Mormon Presidency and Apostolate, which, in 1890, declared the Church monogamistic and publicly repudiated polygamy, has now as publicly reverted to polygamy. At the great Mormon Conference held in Salt Lake City in April of this year, the President, the Apostles and 11,000 Mormons, including practically every living dignitary of the hierarchy, officially sustained, approved and endorsed the acts of two apostles, who were accused of having recently taken unto themselves new wives, and were living with them in defiance of the law and the declarations of the church. It was everywhere recognized that this charge, if the allegations against the apostles were true, would shatter the false pretence of the Mormon Church that it had abandoned plural wifehood, either in doctrine or practice. Each and every apostle of the church would stand equally responsible for this repudiation of monogamy. Now, the action of the Conference will be held by all the Mormon States as tantamount to a declaration that the bogus ecclesiastical ban against polygamy has been removed, and that the church stands forth once more as "Defender of the Faith," and the upholder of the vilest doctrine ever uttered on American soil!

How will the dignified United States Senators interpret this Conference vote, when they again take up the Smoot case? If the Mormon Church really investigated the charge against its two apostles, then the production of the records of that investigation and its result should be demanded by the Senate Committee. There should also be before it the records of the April Mormon Conference, in order that the Senate may judge whether the "vindication" was deserved, or merely a whitewash and a condonation. Meanwhile, the country will ask the question whether a Senator, who is the apostle of a political hierarchy which practices and defends polygamy, should occupy a place in the highest council of the nation.

On Growing Old

WHY people in general so dislike and even resent the on-creeping of age is a puzzle. For Time, to do him justice, is very gentle in his approaches, and is not aggressive or violent, except when people fly in h face, defiantly attempting to look young when yout has fled, or when they daringly infringe the laws health. Then, indeed, Time takes vengeance on the u wary, and shows his power by an assault on their beaut or their strength.

No one grows old gracefully who is reluctant to a knowledge his or her years. The best way to kee young is to keep on working, to retain interest in lif and its affairs, and to live with young people.

As one grows old, one may easily grow lonely, f death makes havoc in the ranks of the living, and, on by one, the friends of early years vanish. One shoul be continually adding to one's list of friends. A grea freshness of spirit comes from wide-reaching sympathie and they who love many and are loved in return, do n grow old with the years.

Since fretting over old age will do no good, why n meet it with a friendly greeting, and give it a cordia salutation. It is Time's last token of dominion. W shall all be young in eternity.

Among the Workers

—AT CLINTON AVENUE REFORMED CHURCH, Newark N. J., Pastor Dr. Daniel H. Martin, welcomed into th membership eighty-three persons on Easter Sunday One entire family came in on confession of faith.

—THE AMERICAN ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE makes an ap peal to the temperance organizations to unite for a sobe celebration of July 4, "as a day for inculcating the tru spirit of patriotism," and not a day of noise and drunk enness.

—MR. MARCUS BERGMAN, a native of Silesia, has trans lated the Bible into Yiddish, the Jewish vernacular, a spoken by the Hebrews of Russia, Poland, Austria an Roumania. He is now making an effort to raise a fun to have the Yiddish Version published and distribute widely, free.

—THE ELEVENTH Lake Mohonk Conference on Inter national Arbitration, will be held on May 31 and the tw days following. Hon. George Gray of Delaware, one o the United States representatives on the Hague Tribunal will preside. Among the subjects to be discussed ar the significance of the North Sea Settlement, the pro posed International Conference and the effect of the Ar bitration Treaties.

—MISSIONARY LEON B. SALMANS writes from Guanaju ato, Mex., that the "Mission of the Good Samaritan" i making excellent progress. The Mission now has a hos pital, four doctors, a superintendent of nursing, twelv nurses in training, thirty-five beds, and a good sanitarium equipment generally. It has also two schools for the young, and a school for deaconesses. Funds are needed for building extension.

—SUPERINTENDENT JAMES B. ELY, of the Evangelistic Committee of Greater New York, estimates that $50,000 will be needed to carry on the Gospel tent campaign in the metropolis during the coming summer. He points out that New York City has over $216,000,000 in religious and charitable property, and believes that it should be willing to contribute liberally for the winning of souls. He considers New York a true field for Foreign Missions, as well as Home Missions, and adds: "If we cannot reach the foreigner here, what folly to think we can manage him ten thousand miles away."

—A GREAT open-air evangelical campaign is now being planned in New York. Among the many pastors who will actively share in the work are Rev. Dr. C. L. Goodell, Calvary M. E. Church; Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Plymouth Church; Dr. Henry Mottet, Church of the Holy Communion; Dr. Coffin, pastor-elect of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church; Dr. J. G. Fagg, Marble Collegiate Church; Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, President of the Union Theological Seminary; Dr. R. S. MacArthur, Calvary Baptist Church; Dr. W. C. Bitting, Mount Morris Baptist Church; Dr. J. F. Carson, Central Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn; Dr. E. S. Tipple, Grace Methodist Episcopal Church; Dr. McAfee, Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, and others.

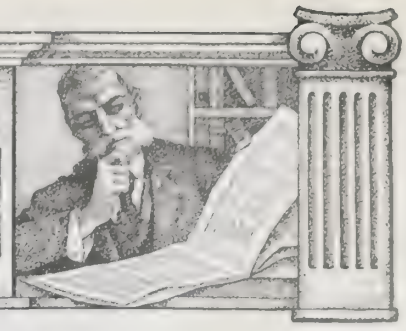
WHAT THE BIBLE SAYS

WHAT CHRIST SUFFERED FOR US

II Corinthians 8 : 9	Mark 15 : 29 to 33
II Corinthians 5 : 21	Luke 9 : 58
Isaiah 53 : 5	Luke 24 : 41 to 45
Mark 14 : 65	I. Peter 2 : 24
Mark 15 : 17 to 21	John 7 : 7

D. F. E.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER



Disturbances in Russia

GEN. MAXIMOVITCH
Governor of Warsaw

SAD news again comes from Russia, of social disturbances ruthlessly suppressed. The scene was in Poland, where loyalty to the Russian government has never been enthusiastic. On May-day, a procession of working men was proceeding in orderly manner through the streets of Warsaw. Suddenly a regiment of Uhlans appeared, followed by infantry. At a signal, the infantry fired on the unarmed crowd and the Uhlans charged with drawn swords. Fifty-two persons were instantly killed and over two hundred wounded. The only justification given by the authorities is that the men carried red banners, bearing revolutionary inscriptions. At Kalisz, also in Russian Poland, a similar outrage occurred. A large assemblage of Roman Catholics was on its way to the Cathedral, when they began chanting patriotic songs. Instantly the troops fired on the crowd, killing and wounding many. In both cases no mercy was shown for age or sex. Women and children and old men were among the fallen. The soldiers were relentless. After the dispersion of the crowd, bodies of armed men followed the people into the courtyards of their houses and spared them in cold blood. The people are intensely exasperated by the brutality of the soldiery and are vowing vengeance on the regiments responsible for the killing. That they are in earnest was shown on the following evening, when a bomb was thrown into a military patrol stationed near the Vienna railway station. Three Cossacks and a policeman were killed. The survivors immediately fired indiscriminately on the crowd, killing several innocent persons. At Lodz also there was trouble. There the soldiers followed the people into their churches and killed seven persons. Eye-witnesses declare that the outrages were entirely unprovoked. The fact that nearly all the dead and wounded were shot in the back, shows that they were already fleeing when the volleys were fired.

WARSAW, THE CAPITAL OF POLAND, SCENE OF THE RECENT MASSACRE

While the authorities are thus brutally dealing with the people, the Czar has issued a manifesto, granting religious toleration, which is received with widespread gratitude. Hitherto, secession from the Orthodox Church involved possible prosecution and inevitably the loss of civil rights. The sect known as Old Believers, one of the most aristocratic and wealthy organizations in Russia, felt this proscription severely. The Czar's order relieves them of all their disabilities. They have now the right to build schools and to issue their books without limit. Their gratitude to the Czar was pathetic. They prostrated themselves before the officers who brought the decree, and invoked God's blessing on the Czar. Other dissenters from the orthodox Church also benefit, but the Jews are expressly excluded from the concessions granted to the other sects. It is now nearly fifty years since so much religious liberty was permitted. When the churches were opened after having been so long locked up, everything was found in desolation. The liturgical books were covered with mold, the tapestry hung in tatters, and damp and dust had ruined the decorations. A subscription is being raised to restore the churches to their former beauty. That such oppression could exist at this late day, and that even now the people should be liable to such brutality as that of May-day, shows how miserable is the system of government in that unhappy country.

So I returned and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun; and behold the tears of such as were oppressed and they had no comforter; and on the side of the oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter (Eccles. 4:1).

Death Ends a Strike

A strike at Trenton, N. J., has come to an end, according to current report, through a tragedy. The strike was being fought on both sides with grim determination and there seemed no prospect of an agreement being reached, when a member of one of the firms involved committed suicide. It was said that he had brooded on the trouble so persistently, and was so distressed by the antagonisms produced, that his mind became unhinged and he took his own life. He was sincerely respected both by his associates and the men, and the fact that he had succumbed to his own distress had a saddening effect on all concerned. It drew the opposing forces nearer together, and a meeting was held at which a compromise was effected and the men returned to their work. All are doubtless glad that peace has been secured, though everyone deplores the tragedy through which it came. We can but wish that the infinite tragedy through which the way was opened for peace between God and man might have had the same effect and all had availed themselves of it.

For he is our peace, who hath made both one, having broken down the middle wall of partition between us . . . so making peace (Eph. 2: 14, 15).

The Oldest Statue in the World

Dr. Edgar Banks, the eminent archæologist, who has just returned to his home in Massachusetts, after his excavations in Bismaya, has given an account of the remarkable statue he found there. The statue, he says, is of an ancient king named David, who belonged to the pre-Babylonian era. The date of this statue is at least six thousand years ago. Its period is fixed by the depth of the strata under which it was found, by the style of dress and art, and by the character of the inscription it bears, which is in hieroglyphic writing. Previous to this discovery, the most ancient statue known to scholars was that in the museum of the Louvre in Paris. That, however, is not so old by a thousand years, and, besides, is headless. This statue is perfect and in good condition. It is of marble, and appears to be the work of a first-class sculptor. It was not known, before the discovery of this statue, that art had reached such perfection at so early a period in the history of the world. Besides the statue, there were found terra cotta utensils in great variety, a number of marble lamps, a large collection of bronze implements, and some ancient coffins. The chamber was rich in inscriptions, which were copied, and are being deciphered. The very name of the king whose statue was the richest find, and his dynasty and all concerning him are unknown to history; yet he must have been an important man, and civilization in his day must have been highly developed. But like all worldly things, it has perished.

They shall perish; but thou remainest. . . . thou art the same and thy years shall not fail (Heb. 1: 11, 12).

Voluntary Slavery

That is a strange story that is being told of an American artist who has lately returned from Morocco. During his sojourn in that land, he one day saw a gang of prisoners brought in by the Sultan's soldiers, who had been suppressing one of the periodical outbreaks in a distant village. Among the prisoners was a young man whose magnificent form attracted the artist's attention. He was a fine, well proportioned man, not more than twenty-four years old. "It is a shame to kill so handsome a young fellow," he said to a Moorish officer standing near; "I wish I could have him for a few days as a model." The officer said he thought it could be arranged. An appeal was made to the Sultan, who promptly acceded to the artist's desire. The prisoner was sent to him, to serve as a model, while the other captives were led away to execution. Day after day the painting went on and the artist liked the prisoner more and more. "I would like to take that man to New York," he said to his friend the Moorish officer; "the artists there would be delighted to have him as a model." Again an appeal was made to the Sultan, with the result that the prisoner was given to the artist as a slave. When the young fellow heard that his life was saved, he prostrated himself at the artist's feet and vowed that he would serve him to the end of his life. The artist told him he wanted no such sacrifice. "You are free now," he said, "and may go where you please." But the Moor refused to leave. He declared that he was the artist's slave, and waited on him hand and foot. When he was about to return to New York, he told the man to return to his friends, but he was so distressed and so eager to accompany him, that the artist yielded and brought him to New York. Here his devotion was redoubled. Other artists employed him, but he never relaxed his exertions to serve his patron. Having to leave the city for a few days, the artist left the Moor in charge of a friend. When he returned, his friend told him that the man had pined for him and had refused to touch food during his absence. Such is the devotion of a man to one who saved his life. Well would it be if those whose souls Christ has saved, held themselves so bound to him and his service.

That ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service (Rom. 12: 1).

BRIEF NOTES

A minister of the Christian Church, familiarly known as "Uncle Tice" Spear, of Kentucky, hopes to preach his farewell sermon on September 17, on which day he will be one hundred years old. He has been preaching since his early manhood and is still vigorous.

Dr. L. W. Munhall received the unanimous thanks of the Ocean Grove Association for his services last year in conducting the Sunday Afternoon Bible Class last summer, and at the same time was invited to perform the same service this year. He has also been appointed a lecturer in the Summer School of Theology at Ocean Grove, N. J.

RICE CULTURE IN AMERICA

BY GEN. CHARLES H. HOWARD

IT is perhaps a little humiliating for the Anglo-Saxons to take lessons from the Japanese; but a recent dispatch from Washington, states that Secretary Morton is in favor of having our Naval Cadets at Annapolis, taught the new wrestling methods (Jiu Jitsu) by a Japanese expert. Is it not possible that our army, too, might well study the details of the recent Japanese campaign, especially as to the commissariat? In fact, when we look at the results as to energy, courage and endurance, the Japanese soldiers afford a valuable object lesson. Their physical training has evidently been one of habit, and of inheritance, fitting them as a race for remarkable achievement.

A medical journal, recognized as a high authority, lays stress on the rice-eating habit of the Japanese, and declares we must revise our long cherished theory that the energy and ability of the man is largely due to the animal food he consumes.

"The Japanese," says this authority,* "are among the very strongest people on earth. They are strong mentally and physically, and yet they eat practically no meat at all. The diet which enables them to develop such hardy frames and such well-balanced and keen brains, consists almost wholly of rice, steamed or boiled, while the better-to-do add to this Spartan fare, fish, eggs, vegetables and fruit.

There are two reasons why our people, especially the working people, eat so little rice; one is this very idea that meat is needed to impart the vigor and strength required for a man's work; the other is that rice is not well cooked as served to the average American family.

In the South, where rice is much more commonly used as a vegetable and often takes the place of potatoes, it is better cooked. It comes upon the table, not mashed and soggy, but standing up with each kernel whole, and is more attractive both to the eye and to the palate. At West Point, and in the families of our army officers, the Southern custom prevails of eating rice as a vegetable.

Once convinced of the vigor-imparting quality of rice, and with a reform in the methods of cooking, will not our people gradually diminish their meat diet and eat more rice? In fact, there is good evidence that the meat-eating habit of the American people has already been modified. The amount of rice consumed each year is increasing on an average of 20,000,000 pounds yearly.

On the other hand, government statistics show that we still import forty-eight per cent. of the rice used by our people. It would be good economics for our country to increase the production of rice, and a matter of economy and health for the family to greatly increase its use as a food.

In the old methods of rice cultivation, when it was raised chiefly in the rice swamps of the Carolinas and Georgia, it was held to be unhealthy to work in the rice fields. The cultivation was for the most part by hand. The ground was too wet and soft to employ teams. The hoeing and the reaping in these swamps had to be done by hand, as it is in the Orient and in India. Under these conditions, the prevailing belief is that only negroes can do the work.

The contrast to this in the rice fields of Texas in regard to health is very great. The possibilities of an almost unlimited increase in the area cultivated are, also, in strong contrast with the narrow strip on the Atlantic coast adapted to rice culture. A careful estimate gives in the great rice belt of Texas and Louisiana 1,250 acres susceptible of cultivation. Of 450,000 have been made available for tivation by the construction of rice can

The cultivation of rice in Texas is white men. The original situation of land, which is naturally fairly well drai and the new departure in the method irrigation, and in all the processes of tivation, make it a healthful occupat By scientifically locating the rice fie where they can be irrigated at will, then completely drained, it has been fo possible to apply the same methods to as are used in raising wheat. G ploughs with mules or horses, can be u the cultivator and harrow and the s drill, the same as with grain. The flood is done when wanted, and then the wa allowed to drain off and disappear in t for the harvester. The great McCorm or Deering reaper and binder moves alo drawn by four mules, as smoothly as in wheat fields of the Northwest, and bundles of rice roll out and are set u shocks, with no more manual labor tha seen in the grain fields. In like manr the teams with racks can drive over ground, and convey the bundles of rice large loads to the thresher in the fields thence in sacks to the mills or storehou

Often, in Texas, the mills are loca near the rice fields, and large communi of prosperous and healthy people, mos from the North, are engaged in this ind try and find the region suitable for hor for their families. The application of new methods in the laying out of the fie and in the culture of rice, have really re lutionized this great industry, so that increased production of rice will eas meet the increased demand as the Am can people learn the value of rice as fo and acquire the habit of eating it.

CULTIVATING RICE ON THE TEXAS PRAIRIES

Medical Record.

FROM TENEMENT CELLARS TO MONT-LAWN

IN an underground room in a miserable down-town street in New York, live three little children. The mother is the sole support of the family; her husband, an invalid, earning but little, and that little spent in medicines and doctors' fees, as the poor man tries to keep up his strength for the odd jobs he is able to find.

Two little girls are the pride of the mother's heart, and one would never imagine, as they go hand-in-hand to school every morning, with the brightest of faces and the tidiest of clothing (old and patched, to be sure, but clean), that they lived in a miserable home, where a ray of sunshine never enters.

"I get up every morning," said the mother, "at five in winter, and four in summer. I must wash the clothes, and make the breakfast, and get to work in the shop at seven; but the children must go to school. If they have education, then, may be, when they grow up, they will not be so poor. Before the baby came, it was not so hard; but even now I get along, because I can leave him at the Day Nursery at the Catherine Mission, while I am away at work. The little girls and Joe get along as best they can."

Joe, a black-eyed, smiling little fellow of ten, nodded his head, saying: "I can help mamma, and when I get big we will not live here." A loving glance from his mother was Joe's reward for this filial speech. "I do not complain," said the patient woman, "I am so glad to have the work. It is hard when work is slack, and there is little to eat, for the rent must be paid." Ah, the rent! That is the spectre which continually haunts the poor in great cities

Let us look about and see what manner of place this is for which this poor hard-working woman must pay $8.50 every month. A flight of stone steps leads down from the sidewalk. We open a door admitting us to a hall as black as night. Feeling along the wall for a few feet, we come to a door, which is opened as we tap. Entering, we find ourselves in a very small room, lighted by one window below the sidewalk level. A few broken chairs and a rickety table are the only furnishings. Leading off further back, is another room much smaller. In this are a little old cooking stove and a wash-tub. Further on, in a perfectly dark recess, stands a poor bed —only one—for a family of six! No ray of light, to say nothing of sunshine, can penetrate; there is no ventilation, and in summer the place is stifling. Is it any wonder that when such people are told of our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, they stand almost stupefied, and cannot comprehend at once that such good fortune has come to them—that the children can each spend ten days at this paradise, because the good Father puts it into the hearts of kind people who read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to send the money to support the Children's Home at Nyack.

The joy of the children when told that they may go is something to warm the most indifferent heart; but not as touching as the pathetic expressions of the mother, whose gratitude, mingling with the mother-love lighting up her patient face, is not to be described in mere words. Tears dim her eyes as she tries to express her thankfulness, each word becomes a sob, each sob a prayer, that God will bless the kind hearts who are making all this possible. The children crowd close, wondering why mamma should cry when they are so happy at the prospect of going into the country by and by.

As the visitors were leaving, the mother asked, "Have you seen Mrs. F. on the fourth floor? I do not know her, but they've been telling me about the trouble that came to her. Would you mind going to see the poor soul? Joe will show you the way." So up the narrow, dark stairs we went, piloted by faithful Joe. The knock was answered by a young girl, who, opening the door, disclosed a similar home that we had just left, only this was up three flights of stairs, and there was a little more light. In response to a few questions, the girl told the story too pitifully common to excite surprise in her listeners. "Mother is in the hospital. The doctor said she had no disease, but her strength was gone, and there was nothing but dry bread to eat and sometimes not even that. He said she must eat eggs, but we have no eggs. My brother was not allowed to s papers on the street, and I was sent ho from the factory, where I could earn $ week. Why? Because we are both un fifteen. Mother worked as long as could, and some friends have helped u little; but they are very poor, and we trying to get along until mother gets wel

Think what Mont-Lawn means to su as these! Think what ten days of pu air, clean beds, and good, nourishing fo mean to children who, for months, ha had nothing but dry bread to eat, and w toss at night upon miserable beds, in c lars or stuffy, hot rooms, in a wretch tenement! Is not the relieving of su misery worth the doing? Will it not ma the heart of every contributor to the Cl dren's Home Fund lighter at the thoug of having been the means, at such trifli expense, of sending even one child Mont Lawn?

It is but a matter of three dollars give a ten days' outing to a little or starving for more things than mere foo Twenty-one dollars endows a bed for t whole season, giving seven children t days each at the Home. Shall we n make 1905 the banner year at Mont-Law a beneficent reply to the "Cry of the ch dren?"

MARY SARGENT HOPKINS.

An illustrated booklet, describing the Ch drens' Home, will be mailed by THE CHRISTI HERALD to any one wishing to know more Mont-Lawn, at Nyack-on-the-Hudson.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Mrs. J. H. J., New Jersey. "Many times, in hours of troubles I called to our dear Father for help and he answered my prayers."

Mrs. B. W. S., Ohio. "I am glad to add my testimony that we have a prayer-hearing and answering Father. He has answered my prayers many times and has delivered me out of many troubles."

W. E. B., Tennessee. "I want to acknowledge my gratitude to the Father for answering many prayers, and trust it will inspire others to call on the Lord in the time of need, in faith, not doubting and he will answer."

M. E. S., Indiana. "The 'Answered Prayers' in your paper have interested me, and I believe God answers all prayers, but he does not always say yes to his children and give them their way always, no more than an earthly father. He will withhold no good thing from us. It has been my experieuce to have my prayers answered in a different way from which I expected, and always for my good."

Mrs. F., New York. "The Lord heard and answered my prayers when I was troubled, and there is nothing too small for one to take to the Lord."

F., Pennsylvania. "'God is our refuge and strength, a present help in trouble.' I cried unto him in faith believing; he heard and answered my prayers."

J. C. S. "'Men ought always to pray and not faint.' After many months, God has most graciously answered my earnest prayers. 'If He tarry, wait for Him, He will surely come."

L. E. H., West Virginia. "I have been greatly benefited by the 'Answered Prayer' column, and I want to publicly acknowledge God's goodness and mercy in answering my prayers, hoping others may be benefited by this dear column as I have."

Idalia D. G., New Jersey. "I gladly add my testimony to repeated answers to prayer in cases of great need of more than human guidance, as well as in daily life. There is no help that can sustain one in trouble like that which Christ has promised to those who truly trust him."

H. A. L., Kansas. "Many times when my faith was great enough, I have had direct answers to prayer, and thank the Lord for it."

Mrs. Charles R., Iowa. "It is with thankfulness that I acknowledge many answered prayers. I am sure if we ask aright, believing, God will hear our petition."

Jessie B., Nebraska. "I wish to acknowledge the greatness and goodness of my Saviour, as manifested in answering my prayer for strength in a time that was very trying for me."

Fourteen, Ohio. "This winter my mother was very sick, and I promised God if he would make her well I would acknowledge it through the 'Answered Prayer' column, and he did so. I know he answers prayer."

Mrs. A. R., Montana. "My prayer is that I may overcome self and do all things for the glory of God; and I request a special prayer from all readers for a daughter who is struggling for a better life, and her wayward husband, who is her drawback."

Mrs. C. H., Missouri. "I called on the Lord in n distress and he answered my prayer."

A. J. F., Wisconsin. "I do know God answe prayer. I have had direct answers, even bett than I asked."

Mrs. J. R. K., Massachusetts. "I have had wo derful answers to my prayers. Ask and ye sh receive, but always in faith, for nothing is pro ised to wavering ones. He is more ready to gi than are earthly parents to their children."

Ethelwynn. "I wish to add my testimony regard to answered prayers. My prayer was n answered immediately or in the manner expecte but time has revealed to me how much better h way than mine."

E. L. M., Colorado. "I firmly believe in pray and have faith that all things are possible wi God. I wish all who read this to pray that may be a better Christian and that my dear hu band may become an earnest, active Christia that we may be fitted to bring up our little on for God."

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Miss Cynthia Day had been for years under the control of rigid and harsh grandparents, as well as a severe mother. All the natural inclinations of girlhood had been suppressed. After the death of her relatives, she continues the same narrow existence, economizing from habit, and ably assisted in this by the old servant, Abby Whiton. Troubled by a pain in her chest she visits a doctor, who shocks her with the announcement that she has only a year to live. Her whole soul rebels against the thought of death. She meets the Puffer twins, and she joins them in her flight run down hill, and also accepts an invitation to their picnic, much to Abby Whiton's annoyance. The twins stray off, and Cynthia, searching for them, loses her way and is found by George Blossom, a young house-painter, with decorative ambitions. On the way home she engages him to paint and paper the Breyfogle house. Abby Whiton endeavors, but in vain, to assert her old-time power in the house, and at last Cynthia decides to dismiss her, and writes her a note of discharge, inclosing $50 extra "for long and faithful service." She decides to make a clearance of the heterogeneous collection of old furniture and other things in the house, burning the useless rubbish, and giving the serviceable articles to the poor who needed them. A notice of the contemplated distribution on a certain day is read in church to the astonishment of the congregation, many of whom assure Cynthia they will attend. Meanwhile Cynthia, with the aid of the Puffer twins, makes a bonfire in the Breyfogle back-yard, of many old articles she does not wish to give away.

CHAPTER IX.—Continued

THE Puffer twins, their curly red heads topped by huge, flower-decked bonnets, gamboled joyously in the midst of the parti-colored heaps.

"You can have anything you like for your dolls," Miss Cynthia told them recklessly.

Nellie Ryan's bright eyes rested inquiringly upon a pile of gay-colored light silks and muslins. "What am I to do with these, ma'am?" she asked. "They're too good to burn up, and I'm afraid poor people couldn't use them. There's real pretty lace in this dress." She held up a thin India silk of a delicate peach-blossom pink.

Miss Cynthia stared at it thoughtfully. "How I did want to wear that silk—once," she murmured. "I was so tired of black; but I wasn't allowed to have it, because somebody had just died—a cousin of mother's, I think. It is pretty, isn't it?"

"Why don't you wear it now?" demanded Harriet Puffer, who had added a green silk mantilla and a scarlet cashmere scarf to her costume.

"Why don't I wear it?" echoed Miss Cynthia. "Why, all my dresses are black. I've always worn black, you know."

Nellie Ryan was surveying her mistress with new interest. Miss Day had always appeared hopelessly plain and middle-aged in her young eyes. Now she was forced to admit, with her abundant brown hair ruffled into tiny waves, and her cheeks faintly flushed, that Miss Cynthia was looking really young, and yes—actually pretty. It was a surprising idea to Nellie. "I don't see, ma'am, why you should always wear black," she said doubtfully. "Why couldn't you have some of these pretty things made over and wear them?"

Miss Cynthia smoothed the soft folds of the peach-blossom silk with a tremulous little hand. "I should like to wear a pink dress," she breathed. "I've nearly always been obliged to wear black, and pretty soon——"

She waited a little in a breathless silence, then she said faintly, "I—suppose everybody up in heaven wears white—forever and ever. Did you ever hear of an angel wearing a pink dress, Nellie, or a blue one?"

"No, ma'am," replied Nellie promptly. She had never laid eyes upon one of Botticelli's or Fra Angelica's pictured angels in their gay clothing. "Yes'm, I guess they always wear white," she went on, "made up something like a nightgown, an' with long feather wings behind."

Miss Cynthia sighed. These were her own regretful conclusions.

"All that I've seen in pictures are about one style," proceeded Nellie, tilting her pretty head thoughtfully. "Just plain white, with a round neck, sort of low, and sometimes there's a breast-pin on one shoulder, to hold the fullness, I suppose. They most always wear their hair down their back, and no shoes or stockings. I sh'd think they'd look real queer, shouldn't you, ma'am? There's pictures of 'em like that in our Pilgrim's Progress."

Miss Cynthia was sitting up very straight; she had spread out the pink silk dress across her lap.

"I SHOULD LIKE TO SPEAK TO MISS DAY," HE SAID. "WILL YOU PRESENT ME?"

"I might as well," she said thoughtfully. "Malvina Bennett will be glad of the work. Yes, I will have a pink dress, and a blue one, too. I should like a red dress for next winter, and a warm brown one, the color of ripe nuts, for fall, and a soft, cool green one for summer. There are so many pretty colors, when you think of it, Nellie!"

Miss Cynthia was making a rapid division of the articles on the floor. "Some of these will be pretty for you to wear, Nellie, when—when you are married," she said softly. "Put them away till then; and these you may hang in the spare-room closet."

"Oh!" gasped the girl, in a stupor of wonder and delight. "All these pretty things for me? Oh, how good you are, Miss Day!"

"We'll set aside some of the furniture for you, too," pursued Miss Cynthia. "I—I should like to help you to be happy. It must be——"

She stopped short, her blue eyes brimming with a wistful light. "Everybody ought to be happy—sometime," she said.

And Nellie Ryan hurried downstairs to tell Bill that Miss Cynthia was a real angel, even if she didn't wear feather wings.

At twilight, when the robins were singing rapturously in the budding elms, the bonfire was lighted. Miss Cynthia and the Puffer twins watched it. How the flames did roar and sparkle in scarlet and yellow splendor as they devoured the flotsam and jetsam of lives swept away so long ago in the inexorable flood of years! Very soon little remained save a heap of glowing embers. Miss Cynthia regarded them with vague sadness. She was wondering why things lasted so much longer than their owners. The vision of a life eternal appeared so ghostly dim, so far-away, so hopelessly shadowed with strong-scented funeral flowers and shrouds and coffins, and chill, damp graves, and cold, reticent tombstones.

"Do you ever think much about going to—to heaven, children?" she asked the twins, who stood quietly hand in hand, watching the fitful flames, as they rose and sank and hovered, spirit-like, over the vanished form of the three-legged stool.

"Not if we c'n help it," said Harriet promptly. "We don't want to be buried up. You have to be buried up 'fore you can go to heaven."

"But you know it's only our poor frail bodies that are buried," argued Miss Cynthia, in a small, weak voice. "Our ransomed souls go to heaven—if we are only good."

"We aren't good," said Harriet firmly. "An' we don't want to go to heaven. You have to wear a crown an' play on a harp in heaven, an' we don't want to play on a harp; we don't want wings, either. Do you?"

"No," said Miss Cynthia, distinctly. "I do not."

"What's the use of talkin' 'bout it then?" asked Harriet blandly.

"Sometimes—people—have to die, whether they want to or not," faltered Miss Cynthia. The terrible little pain pricked her as she spoke.

"We don't b'lieve we'll die anyway," said Harriet doggedly. "Once our Sunday School teacher said we'd ought to think 'bout dying. So we tried. We held our breath a nawful long time, till we got just as red as fire in our faces. 'N' we foun' out 'at you've just gotta to live. You can't help it. That fire's just right now to pop corn on. Come on an' get the popper, Ed!"

"It's really quite a long time till next spring," thought Miss Cynthia, as she looked up through the swaying elms, through which bright stars were beginning to peep like friendly eyes. "Perhaps—if I don't think about it—I'll forget. I wish I could forget!"

"Supper's ready, ma'am!" called Nellie Ryan, thrusting her rosy face out at the door. "An' I've built a beautiful, bright fire in the dining-room!"

At bed-time Miss Cynthia perused three long and difficult chapters in her regular course of Bible reading. She was engaged in reading the Bible through for the twenty-seventh time since the days when the nightly exercise had constituted one of the dreaded tasks.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 440

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

His Cross and Ours

Sunday School Lesson

by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

"BEARING THE CROSS FOR HIMSELF"

"AS it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," on April 17, 1904, a solitary woman* made her way to the garden tomb outside the city wall of Jerusalem. "For awhile she ling'ring stood," recalling the visit of those other women who, ages ago, had "bought sweet spices that they might come and anoint him." And then she thought of Mary Magdalene, who had been alone at the tomb, and how, when she had inquired of one whom she supposed to be the gardener, who had taken the body of Jesus away, and where she might find him, Jesus had himself called her by her name, "Mary." The echo of that voice was in the soul of the woman who stood there. She knew that her Saviour had risen from the dead, and was alive forever more.

There was a sweet seclusion about the place, for it was surrounded by a wall reared by Christian hands,† and little flowers were blooming everywhere. It was all the sweeter by contrast with yonder garish Church of the Holy Sepulchre, half a mile away, which no longer holds undisputed claim of being erected over the tomb of our Lord.

The woman there alone wished for the company of other women, a wish that was gratified as she passed from the tomb toward Calvary, for she met two women, Russian pilgrims. The sign of the Cross was the only common language, and this they made upon their breasts, and so recognized that they were all three sisters in Christ, and lovingly they walked along together toward Calvary, communing in spirit, if not by word of mouth. They were coming to Calvary as we may all do to-day, from the resurrection side, not in the hopelessness of the friends of Jesus in our lesson, who forgot at the awful Cross that he had promised to rise again. They approached the green hill of Calvary, but their feet might not tread the hallowed ground; the high wall, recently built by the Moslems, preventing them. The place has been made a Moslem burying ground, and so is protected against Christians.

The porter at the gate, dressed in rags, had declined Christian gold to the amount of five dollars, to permit one gentleman to enter. But the wall does not shut out from view the summit of the "green hill." Perhaps it is all the more sacred that our feet cannot tread upon it. We should not wish to put our fingers in the hole where the Cross might have stood. It would not be good for us to throw ourselves in agony upon that hole, and kiss its edges, as do those who think the Cross stood where the Church of the Holy Sepulchre now is. It may prove that the Moslem wall is the best possible barrier to foolish legends and superstitions concerning this hallowed spot. It is now grand, with the blue sky overhead, in contrast with the vaulted roof of the hoary church.

ILLUSTRATION AND APPLICATION

With gilded and jeweled crosses shining all about us like stars, it is hard to realize what the Cross really was upon which Christ was crucified. Imagine yourself awaking some morning, and finding gilded gallows on the churches, gilded gallows on watch chains, and necklaces, and badges. What has made the Cross, the Roman gallows, a badge of honor? The "old, old story" of our lesson tells why the Cross is now not only the symbol of personal hope, but of the highest civilization. Stanley, having spent three years in Africa, fighting the jungle and the forest, the fever and the savages, at last drew near the sea, and saw in the distance a missionary station, with the Cross gleaming above it. With what joy he hailed what he called "the blessed sign of Christian civilization."

His Cross. "According to the Scriptures." The Golden text reminds us that the Cross is the cross-roads to which all previous Bible paths lead forward, and all later Bible paths lead backward. "For this hour," said Jesus, "came I into the world." A lady once traveled a long distance on a railroad, with her trunk unlocked. When she met her husband at the terminus and reported the fact, there was naturally some emotion in her speech. She had been unable to find the key anywhere, she said, and only discovered its loss too late to have another fitted before she started on her journey. And the trunk, with all its treasures, had come that whole distance with only a strap around it. "Why," exclaimed her husband, "when I come home from a journey I always fasten the key of the trunk to one of its handles. There's your key," pointing to the end of the trunk. The Cross is the key to the Bible, but some do not find it, though God has placed it in plain sight. Nothing else interprets the sacrifices of the Old Testament or the salvation of the New. As Palestine fields in spring are all abloom with red anemones, called "the blood drops of Jesus," so every book of the Bible is purpled with references to the cleansing blood. Let us use the seven words of Jesus on the Cross as a rosary for the story of the Crucifixion.

Father, forgive them. Calvary has been reached. In Pilate's hall Jesus had been cruelly scourged till the blood flowed to the ground. That was not the beginning of "the true Cross," nor yet Gethsemane, where he sweat blood. Holman Hunt was right in picturing "the shadow of the Cross" in the carpenter shop at Nazareth, only it should have been where Christ could see it. We are mercifully spared a knowledge of future suffering. He walked in the shadow of the Cross all his life, not sadly, however, but gladly.

But even that was not the beginning of his Cross. "He was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." He came from heaven to die for us. He has arrived at Calvary at last. Already he is crowned with "Spina Christi," which looks like the ivy crown put upon Roman emperors, but these green leaves conceal cruel thorns that send rivers of blood down his face.

Besides Gethsemane and the scourgings in Pilate's hall, and the crown of thorns, he has been scourged as he bore the heavy cross to Calvary. And now they stretch him upon it and drive the nails through the flesh of his hands and feet. Amid these brutal blows his prayer arises, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." This was not alone for the unthinking Roman soldiers, but for the Jewish people also, who had cried, "Hosanna" and "Crucify" in swift succession, and for those to-day who by a blind rejection of Christ "make the Cross of Christ of none effect." Of this saying Dr. A. J. Gordon said: "What a solemn expression is this. No power or might of man can sweep the stars from the sky, or blot the sun from the heavens, or efface the splendid landscape; but one wound in the eye can destroy the sight, and make all those things as though they were not. So the Atonement of Christ can never pass into eclipse, or cease to be a fact; but there is such a thing as the eclipse of faith—unbelief filming the soul so that the Cross and Atonement of Christ shall become a great blank, vacant, lifeless, meaningless."

Human nature crucified Christ, and crucifies in every age the noble souls that are most like him. Have you accepted him or "Crucified the Lord afresh" by rejection?

Christ has now been lifted up on the cross, and an inscription hangs above his head, "This is the King." It was placed there in scorn, but the Jews want it changed. Pilate answers, "What I have written, I have written." The words are profoundly and widely true. What we write or say we can never really recall. The word has gone out and can never be unsaid. So with the deed. It is easier to prevent than to repent. "What I have written, I have written."

To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise. How fitting that the purpose of the Cross, to save men, should have been illustrated in that very hour in the salvation of the penitent thief!

Some years ago, a young murderer was placed in the condemned cell at Newgate. Alone, face to face with himself, and in full prospect of eternity, he realized for the first time the worth of opportunities h had thrown away. A few religious book were allowed him, one of them a commen tary on the Gospels.

On a page in this book containing th story of the penitent thief, he read on day, in a foot-note, the words, "Even murderer may hope for God's mercy. The poor convict's crime-stained sou eagerly caught this whisper of hope. H time was short, but there in his cell he sa through his penitent tears the light of hope beyond death. The last night c life that the laws of England gave him ha come. He heard every stroke of the fata hammers, and in the early morning he hear the bell of St. Sepulchre toll his doom.

But just before the time set for his exe cution, a message of commutation arrive from the Queen. Filled with thanksgiving he fell on his knees, and solemnly devote his spared life to God. Shortly af terwards, the young man was sen to Australia, with other transporte convicts, and his behavior was s excellent that he was finally grante a "ticket-of-leave," a favor whic restored him conditionally to liberty and permitted him to engage in busi ness for himself. He continued i the colony, laboring for the mora welfare of his former fellow-convicts Woman, behold thy son. Son, be hold thy mother. Here is a part o the explanation of the superiority of John's Gospel to all the others He had the mother of Jesus in hi home. But what a reflection or her own surviving sons! Doubtless up to that time they had not ac cepted their own brother as thei Saviour and King. But probably they did later, for James, the Lord's brother, became the leader of the Church at Jerusalem.

"I thirst." How human as wel as divine is this sufferer! Athirst himself, with the awful thirst of the feverish sufferer, he is yet opening a fountain that shall shake the soul thirst of millions. "St. Winefride's well"—so runs the legend, "gushed forth from the ground on which the murdered daughter of a Welsh chieftain, the beautiful Winefride, fell; and ever since the water has flowed, bringing healing with it, until a mere list of all the miracles it has wrought would fill volumes." It is no legend that a fountain that has healed millions was opened by the death of Christ.

It is finished. Redemption was "finished," but not Christ's saving work for men. Rev. Cortland Myers tells of a young Moravian missionary, who long ago went to Jamaica, where old slaves were killed to save food, where the governor was often a pirate, where the slave market was more foul and the whips more cruel than in the stock-yard. There went the white boy and preached Jesus. But slaves under the lash could not believe him. An inspiration came to him. He entered the awful market and had himself sold as a slave, and was himself lashed and chained and bruised as were the blacks about him. Then they believed him. He became God's messenger to them indeed, till one day the lash bit too deeply and he died. But the story reached Wilberforce, in England, and later came to Lincoln in America, and both were spurred on by the self-sacrifice to write "freedom" for the slave.

"TRULY THIS WAS THE SON OF GOD"

"THE PLACE CALLED THE PLACE OF A SKULL, IN THE HEBREW, GOLGOTHA"

---

*Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts, herself.

†The plot of ground containing the tomb was purchased by English Christians several years ago.

International Sunday School Lesson for May 28. The Crucifixion, John 19: 17-30. Golden text: Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, I. Cor. 15: 3. HOME READINGS. Sunday, May 28, Matthew's story of the Cross, Matt. 27: 31-56; Monday, Mark's story, Mark 15: 20-41; Tuesday, Luke's story, Luke 23: 26-49; Wednesday, John's story, John 19: 17-30; Thursday, Peter's story, Acts 2: 29-41; Friday, Paul's story, I. Cor. 15: 1-12; Saturday, I. Cor. 15: 12-26.

Our Household Circle

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Mother and Her Boy

AMONG the perplexing questions which assail the mother at a certain point in the home history, that which relates to the mother and her boy, is most insistent. A lad between fifteen and eighteen has arrived at a place where his life is beset with difficulties. Transitions are proverbially embarrassing. When a boy resents being called "Master So-and-So," yet is not sufficiently grown up to be addressed as "Mister So-and-So," there are thoughtful moments for all concerned. The tactful mother or sister knows how to smooth these away, and so does the well-bred young woman a few years older than the boy, who can talk to him on the subjects he likes, without obvious effort or offensive patronage, and who recognizes his dawning manhood and never wounds his self-esteem. No wonder that boys in their teens feel an almost worshipful adoration for girls a little older, and for beautiful women in their twenties. They are the only beings, their mothers excepted, who take the trouble to understand boys.

Fathers, elder brothers, and men in general, either purposely or through heedlessness, ignore the fact that a lad is slipping the sheath of childhood and stepping forward to the level where they already stand. This may be done from an instinct of self-preservation, for youth, though it now and then suffers repulse, carries the banner of conquest, and will bear all before it to-morrow. The man of to-day knows full well, that the boys who are coming on, are an advancing host, and, sooner or later, to crowd him and his comrades from their places of vantage. A father may feel this and not define the feeling.

But the mother never feels it. Not she. Her attitude toward her boys is one of pride, and she begs to let every friend see them as she does. A boy in his teens is often shy and retiring, often clumsy, often ill at ease in society. He sidles out of the room when company enters. He goes off to the barn, or hangs about corners of the streets with his boy friends. Girls are alarming creatures, and he keeps out of their way. How shall he be saved from the diffidence and reserve that are his shield, and yet make him appear forbidding and awkward? Certainly not by direct attacks upon the defects of his temperament, or the immaturity of his character.

A mother does well to accustom her boys to being her escorts when she goes out. Women are apt to be unwisely independent. They lose some very precious things by their lack of—shall we say, selfishness—by their failure to claim the courtesies due their sex. A mother or a sister should never go out alone in the evening, when there is a son or a brother under the same roof. Even if such going forth be perfectly safe and proper, she should expect Joe or Frank to attend her. Gallantry is on the wane, because women in the home claim too little from boys and men who love them, and who would wait upon them with knightly devotion, even in trifles were the good habit only early formed.

If a mother takes her sons out with her, they will unconsciously learn the little ways of social grace. They will cease to be hobbledehoys and become gentlemen.

Next, let the anxious mother provide for her sons pleasant girl companions, encouraging a healthful intercourse, which never trends toward the dangerous ground of love. Young people ought to enjoy each other's society in the years that precede the twenties, without a single thought of anything except good comradeship. They should go together freely, and mothers have it in their power to forward agreeable acquaintance between their sons and daughters, and those of others, and to promote innocent merry-makings. Fun and frolic belong to youth.

The self-conscious, possibly timorous boy, has his counterpart and opposite in the self-conceited and over-aggressive lad, who often arouses antagonism through his positive air of knowing all that is to be known. With this type of character strong and determined, and likely to make its mark in the future, the mother's province is to exercise gentle repression. This boy must be curbed, held back, restrained, lest his impetuous rush be misunderstood, or his eager actions result in some perplexing complication. The time is passing swiftly. A little later, his energy and resolution will enable him to take an important place among the workers, if not among the leaders of the community.

A NAP OUTDOORS

Little sister, little brother,
Dearly do they love each other;

Freddy sleeps and Molly nods,
If she's drowsy, where's the odds?

Dinner's waiting by and by,
Under God's blue summer sky.

Peace Versus Charity

A lady of New York, the wife of a multi-millionaire who is also an eminent philanthropist, recently declined to contribute to a fund for the relief of Japanese widows and orphans, on the ground that she disapproved of war. "Men," she declared, "should not go to war and then expect the public to care for their bereaved families." As the rank and file of the army and navy in any nation have very little to say about whether there shall be war or peace, the excuse for refusal seems rather childish. Governments declare war. In monarchical countries, subjects carry it on, perforce. In our own land, should our government conclude a war with some foreign power to be inevitable, thousands of men who greatly prefer peace, would feel impelled by patriotism to enlist for the flag. As we survey the recent war in the East, not yet fought to a finish, we cannot hold the fighting men on either side responsible for its deadly ravages. That for years to come there shall be broken hearts and fearful sufferings on account of this war, is terribly true, and no good will be done by withholding the contributions of the charitable from those who are in want. The widows and orphans on both sides are to be commiserated.

But when the day dawns of a Christian civilization that shall span the globe, the white banners of peace will flutter everywhere. Then, and not until then, shall the nations contend no longer in furious and fatal strife, the fierce belligerents flying at one another's throats, and holding on till the death-gasp with bull-dog tenacity. We have not yet reached the quickening of that golden morning. Till we see it quivering in the East, we must practice sweet charity toward war's victims.

Sleeves and Pockets

A GLANCE at the fashions of a bygone day, shows that nothing is really new. The vagaries of the sleeve as the dressmaker has ordained that we shall have them, are found illustrated in the costumes of several centuries. Every year the fashion changes. From year to year the puffs that have been large at the shoulder, gradually become smaller and are bouffant at the elbow, or hang in great bags from the wrist. At the present moment there is a return to the leg of mutton shape that has been from time to time in vogue, and gentlemen will again be forced to practice the art of assisting a lady's sleeves into her jacket without crushing and ruffling up their amplitude.

As to pockets, those conveniences are not for women. The ordinary man has at least fourteen pockets here and there in his various habiliments. Women depend on bags, which are really portable pockets fastened to their belts.

Alice Morse Earle tells us that in Colonial days women wore pockets quite separate from their gowns. They were often tied by a string around the waist, under the gown. Sometimes a slit was made in the seam of a gown, so that the lady could slip her hand into her pocket without lifting up her skirt. A New England matron in 1787, bequeathed in her will to different friends, dark calico pockets, white dimity pockets, and a patch pocket. Another lady left to her dearest friend her embroidered dimity pocket, with the pocket glass, comforter, and strong waters' bottle kept within it. This pocket glass was a tiny folding mirror, the comforter was a hand warmer, a little metal case in which something hot might be held when on a journey; and the strong waters' bottle, a flask to be carried in case of an attack of illness.

Not long ago I saw in the hand of a friend a very beautiful bead bag. It was worked in a delicate and curious pattern of flowers, and was more than a century old. This fashion of bead bags is coming in again. In old days the patterns for bead bags were eagerly sought, and a woman who could design one was regarded with admiration by her friends.

Mrs. Earle says in her Two Centuries of Costume in America: "Many a tale of domestic jealousy and social envy centred around these bags. In one New England town, Matilda Emerson reigned a queen of bag-makers. Her patterns were beyond compare; one of a Dutch scene with a windmill, was the envy of all who beheld it. She was a rival to Anne Green for the affections of the minister, a solemn widower, whose sister kept house for him and his three motherless children. Matilda gave to the parson's sister the written rules for a wonderful bead-bag, a bag which displayed, when finished, a funereal willow tree and urn and grass-grown grave, in shaded grays and purple and white, on a black ground; a properly solemn bag. But when the pastor's sister essayed to knit the trapping of woe, it proved a sad jumble of unmeaning lines. For Anne Green had taken secretly the rules from the knitter's work-box and had changed the penciled rules in every line. When the hodgepodge appeared, where orderly symbols of gloom should have been, the sister believed that Matilda had purposely written them wrong in order to preserve her prestige as a bag-knitter, and she so prejudiced her brother that he coldly turned from Matilda and married not Anne, but a widow from another town. Disappointed of her desired husband, Anne tormented herself with her New England conscience until she revealed her wickedness to poor Matilda, whose reinstatement in the parson's esteem could not repay her loss of his affection."

Aunt Prudent Payson's Catch-All

JOHN.—A man may regret a girl's refusal and he must [illegible] that she acts in good faith. No true man [illegible]

AMY.—Send your cards to any wedding, however distant, [illegible] cannot attend. To dear friends, it is in order to send congratulations by telegraph on the wedding day.

FORGIVENESS

FORGIVENESS is like evening dew
Upon the thirsting flower,
And in its sweetness can imbue
With soft and gentle power.

It comes in kindliness to greet
The soul in deep remorse,
And give it happiness complete
From Heaven's blessed source.

It bears a precious gift to those
On whom it doth descend,
And doubly blesses him who knows
When healing grace to send.

It plants the rose where grew the thorn,
And sprinkles it with love,
And heals the wounded and the torn
With mercy from above.

It kisses grief from sorrow's cheek,
And binds up trouble's wound,
It is the pearl which wisdom seeks,
And quickly buys when found.

GEORGE W. HAYES.

Child Redemption in Africa

MANY readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are interesting themselves in the adoption or "redemption" of little heathen boys and girls in Africa. Under the movement for this purpose, begun by Bishop Hartzell, a considerable number of these native children have already been adopted by patrons in this country, who are providing for their training at various mission stations. It costs $15 a year to redeem a little African child and to bring it under the influence of Gospel training and fit it for a Christian life of usefulness. This is the best of all ways to do missionary work in the "Dark Continent." These children, after reaching a proper age, themselves become missionaries and bearers of the truth in their turn and carry the Gospel to their own people.

We have received the following list of lately adopted native children, together with the names of their American patrons:

INHAMBANE MISSION

Patron	Adopted Child
Mrs. B. H. Edmonds, N.Y.	Nwatowo
Rev. J. F. Gracy, Fla....	Msalafu
Mrs. C. B. Ginn, Ore.....	Child not yet selected
G. L. Harrington, Minn.	Child not yet selected
Leon F. Pennipacker, Pa.	Maria
S. H. Smith, Tenn.....	Carina and child not yet selected
B. Warren, Ill.....	Jumanyana (Mary)
Miss D. M. Wells, N. Y..	Child not yet selected
Miss'y. Soc. Light Street Ger. M. E. S. S., Md...	Emma Munwanyana
Miss'y. Soc. Light Street Ger. M, E. S. S., Md...	Caroline Mavumelani

PLEBO MISSION, LIBERIA

Patron	Adopted Child
Mrs. E. M. Cassidy, Alaska.	Clarence Grant
Miss Louise Hamm, N.Y.	Kate Grant
Miss L. Holton, Canada.	Jacob Weah
Miss L. A. Watts, S. C...	Lettie Grant
Mr. & Mrs. A. Yoder, Ind.	Sallie Grant

WISSIKA MISSION, LIBERIA

Patron	Adopted Child
Miss M. E. Althouse, Mo.	Lena Smidt
Miss Ada L. Ayers and friends, N. J.....	Rachel Stark.....
Chas. E. Engle, N. D....	Albert Clabey.....
Mrs. C. Stryker, N. Y....	Joshua Richardson
Jr. Lea, St. Clair Meth. Ch., Ohio.....	Caleb Richards

BARRAKA MISSION, LIBERIA

Patron	Adopted Child
Mrs. E. M. Cassidy, Alaska	Thomas Deber
Isaac W. Pearce, Canada.	Charlie Gededy
"A Friend," Ia.....	Willis Yeddo

GARRAWAY MISSION, LIBERIA

Patron	Adopted Child
B. F. Barras, Pa.....	Peter Meter
Mrs. F. M. Coles, N. Y...	Arthur J. Money
P. D. Eycleshimer, Fla..	Willie M. Fields
Miss M. E. Green, N. Y..	David Gomlah
Mrs. L. S. Kuhn, Ill.....	Lizzie Davis
Mrs. C. McKinnon, Can'da	Henry Kolenky
Miss L. C. Ramsburg, Ia.	Lizzie Vrooah
Miss L. C. Ramsburg, Ia.	Alexander Vrooah
Mrs. F. A. Russell, Ill. ..	Sarah Busho
Mrs. C. E. Skinner, N. Y.	Jimmie Nimbly
People of Bord'nto'n, N.J.	Thomas Kolenky
"Christian Friend," Ohio	Abbie Cubbah

Any reader wishing to adopt a native African child should write to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, stating preference regarding age and sex, and the request will be promptly communicated to the missionaries in the field.

105 Years Old

William H. Hannon, probably the oldest man in the State of California, and one of the oldest in the United States, lives in Corning, Tahame Co., that State, and has resided there since 1872. He was born in Limerick, Ireland, in 1800. Mr. Hannon came to California in 1852. He has been twice married and has several children living, the youngest, a son, being about forty-five years old. While still able to walk around some, Mr. Hannon is quite feeble, but is in possession of all his faculties.

HOUSE AND HOME

The Kitchen Beautiful

WHY should it not be beautiful, in a distinctive way all its own? In some houses there is a "summer kitchen" and one for use during the cold months; but the former is usually not much more than a make-shift, hardly to be counted as a room.

We may say without much danger of dispute, that the kitchen, the real all-the-year-round kitchen, is the most important room in the house. Is it not where a great many housewives spend the greater share of the day, and quite often a good part of the evening? Is it not where the family bill-of-fare is made out, from the query, "What shall we have for dinner to-day?" to the answer, which goes steamingly attractive to the dining-table. Why should not this place be made so attractive and convenient, that the hours spent therein may be shorn of much of the weariness and discontent which are associated in many minds with this most necessary department of home?

Much has been said and done of late, to put cooking in the same class with other honored and honorable professions, and if cooking, why not other duties connected with the kitchen?

With modern appliances, much of the old-time drudgery can be dispensed with. The spotlessly white floor and working table meant hard back-breaking and hand-spreading applications of the scrubbing brush, not once a week, but several times, to insure the immaculate whiteness. Now we find linoleum covering the floor, while tables are zinc-covered, moulding boards are marble slabs, the sink is soapstone and its surroundings either zinced or tiled.

Linoleum is not like the old-fashioned oil-cloth, with which it is sometimes confounded, and which it somewhat resembles, but is made of cork, pleasant and warm to the feet, and it never needs to be scrubbed, as the dirt lies upon the surface, and is easily washed off with a cloth and water, the dirt does not grind in, as it does even in a hardwood floor.

Of windows there are two or three, for in the kitchen beautiful there must be no lack of sunlight and fresh air. One window should be directly over the sink, and if the outlook shows a garden bed so much the better. Dish-washing becomes such automatic work with many women, that all the senses are not required to compass it, and if the eye is gladdened by the sight and smell of out-of-door beauties while engaged at sink duties, so much the better for the worker. It goes without saying that both doors and windows should be screened during the warm months. The walls should be painted and varnished, and this does not mean a dull, ugly yellow; a bright, dainty tint is just as easily kept clean. It is such an easy matter to paint walls and woodwork, now that paint comes all prepared, ready to apply. The wise woman knows how important a part the cooking-stove plays in the kitchen work; she also knows what poor economy it is to try and use one which has been used so many years that it is "played out," in every sense of the word. It won't bake; many a batch of bread and numberless cakes and pies have been spoiled in the baking, an ordinary fire leaving them pale and sickly in hue, while an extraordinary piling in of fuel heats the stove red-hot, and scorches the food before it is half baked. So a good cooking range is naturally one of the first requisites. Neither is there any economy in using worn-out cooking utensils, that spoil the vegetables by "catching," and spoil the temper by subsequent scratching in the process of cleaning the kettle and removing scorched particles.

The Great Sacrifice

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE chief priests had deliberately made their choice: Barabbas and Cæsar rather than Jesus; self rather than God; "the pleasures of sin for a season" at the cost of eternal life! And Pilate had chosen with them, the highest representatives of the worship of Jehovah and the heathen Roman governor made the same choice! So Pilate delivered him unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus and led him away. What must it have been to him to have seen this treachery on the part of man? May it not have been at this time that he prayed, "I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was no man with me?" (Isa. 63: 3). The disciples had forsaken him and fled.

And then he bore his cross. Shall we kick against our daily cross? And so to the place of execution of common criminals! There only could the sin-bearer die! There at Golgotha they crucified with him men who received the due reward of their deeds (Luke 22: 41). And Pilate wrote a title or accusation, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews, and it was affixed to the cross in Greek, Latin, and Hebrew. This displeased the chief priests, who required of him that it should be altered to, "He said, I am the King of the Jews," but Pilate answered, "What I have written, I have written." When the Jews shall, in the time yet future, "look on him whom they have pierced" (Zech. 12: 10; Rev. 1: 7), they will mourn that their fathers crucified not one who said he was the king of the Jews, but he whom they shall then recognize as their once rejected, but now accepted king: the king of the Jews indeed.

Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, quite unconsciously fulfilled Psalm 22: 18; for they not only parted his garments among them, but they cast lots upon his coat, which was woven from the top throughout, probably by the hands of some of those women that ministered unto him (Luke 8: 2-3). And how much we see of his sufferings in that Psalm beginning with that cry, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me," recorded in the Gospels of Matthew and Mark, as his cry upon the cross! What that moment of anguish must have been to the Son of God, no human being can grasp. A cloud between us and God is intolerable; but he who had been the Father's delight from eternity, to have a cloud, and such a cloud, between—the whole sin of man shutting out from him the Father's face—must have been like a thousand deaths to him. His physical sufferings were nothing to it; the shame, the reproach, were nothing to the hiding of the Father's face.

"I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, despised of the people." He says into the ear of God. And yet he left all, and suffered all, for those who reproached and despised him! "All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, he trusted on the Lord that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him" (Ps. 22: 1-8); fulfilled by Matt. 27: 39-46. And then the sufferings which no eye could see, are revealed in this Psalm: "I am poured out like water, and all my bones are out of joint: my heart is like wax: it is melted in the midst of my bowels." In Ps. 69: 20, he says: "Reproach hath broken my heart"—he died of a broken heart—"and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to take pity"—in Gethsemane—"but there was none: and for comforters, but I found none." "My strength is dried up like a potsherd, and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws: and thou hast brought me into the dust of death." Crucifixion necessarily causes the bones to be forced out of joint, and the terrible fever which accompanies it was borne by him. And thus our beloved and holy Lord bore our sickness (Matt. 8: 17), as well as our sins (Isa. 53: 5, 6, 8, 11, 12).

Was he forsaken of all? There were yet four: "Now, there stood by the cross of Jesus, his mother, and his mother's sister Mary, the wife of Cleopas, and Mary Magdalene," and the writer of this Gospel. In spite of all his untold suffering, the Lord had yet a heart and a thought for his own. "He saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy Son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother."

ROYAL
Baking Powder
Most healthful leavener in the world.
Goes farther.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

HOW TO BECOME A NURSE
WE have equipped thousands of earnest women now in successful practice, endorsed by physicians and patients, and earning $12 to $30 weekly. We teach this profession by correspondence.
An interesting booklet that will make clear to you the aims and methods which have made the Chautauqua School pre-eminent in its field will be gladly mailed at your request.
THE CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING
341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

A Skin Like Satin

You can have it—your baby, too—at little expense and with little trouble, even in warmest weather is the most wonderful skin soothe that you ever knew. SPIM is the rational remedy for skin affections It contains the approved ingredients scientifically blended. 25c. SPIM Ointment used in connection assures a healthy, lovely skin 50c. Thoughtful mothers don't use powder nowadays. They don't need to, SPIM is far superior to any powder, which only clogs the pores. For a Soap or Ointment wrapper we will send free Album of "40 Babies"—Spim babies. "Watch the Baby" Book free on request It tells of the $500 prize contest Spim Co., 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N.Y. (C. B. Knox, Pres.
SPIM SOAP

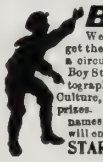
WOODBURY'S FACIAL SOAP CREAM POWDER DENTAL CR
FOR THE FACE
A nightly application of Woodbury's Facial Cream foretells an awakening to its soothing and healing effect on Chaps, Chafing and kindred irritation.
Send 10 cts. for samples of all four preparations.
The Andrew Jergens Co., Sole Licensee, Cin. O.



Boys' Names Wanted
We want names of bright boys between 12 and 20. We want to get them interested in our illustrated magazine for boys, which has a circulation of over 150,000. Every issue contains Fascinating Boy Stories, handsome illustrations, departments of Amateur Photography, Stamps, Coins, Curios, Puzzles, Games, Jokes, Physical Culture, etc., and each month awards a large number of valuable prizes. If you are not a subscriber and will send us five boys' names and addresses and five 2-cent stamps, or 10 cents in silver, we will enter you as a subscriber fully paid for 6 months in advance
STAR MONTHLY, 440 Hunter St., Oak Park, Ills

A DAINTY GIFT The Lord's Prayer enamelled on a beautiful heart-shaped Bookmarker made of Aluminum, and shines like silver. An inexpensive gift for your scholars and teachers, prepaid, only ten cents.
NEWTON SUPPLY COMPANY, Dept. D, Newton, Mass

ROYALTY PAID ON SONG-POEMS and Musical Compositions We arrange and popularize
PIONEER MUSIC PUB. CO. (Inc.
B 321 Manhattan Building CHICAGO, ILL.

KRINOGALON is better, purer, more pleasant than soap for your toilet, but not dearer. Try it. Made by the NEW JERSEY MFG. CO., Jersey City, N. J. Since 1890.

$75 MONTH & EXPENSES POSITION PERMANENT. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED. PEASE MFG. CO. STA. K CIN. O. SELF SELLER.

THE STORY OF BLIND DENOCIA

An Episode of Christian Missionary Work in Cuba

THE BATHS AT MADRUGA, CUBA

ABOUT forty miles southeast from Havana, on the north edge of a great plain that extends south to he Caribbean Sea, is the little town of Madruga (in English, "Sunrise.") This town estles at night safe and secure amongst he hills that surround it. It is invisible your train approaches it. The train vists in around the hills and soon reaches he estacion, which is in charge of the chef, ho often amuses his patrons with the panish phonograph and shows his gallant- by bouquets of roses of every perfume nd hue, as well as of many varieties of ape Jasmine, picked from his garden.

Upon arrival, your notice is attracted by he huge carts loaded with sugar-cane, and he obedient oxen that stand waiting to ive their share of elp. Innumerable aggage agents, om ten years of ge upward, impor- me you to decide ho shall carry your alise, trunk, or ther baggage. As ou walk through he carriageless own to your hotel, he well-known ames of the streets —"General Lee," General Gomez," General Cespe- es"—interest you. ou walk along the atter street, past he baths a block or o, and you reach he quiet, clean and ome-like mission of El Faro Cristiano.

THE HOME OF AGED PETRONIA

Probably thirty people are present at the evening meeting in the Mission. There is very little emotion, but there are many touching testimonies. The praises are intensely earnest, and after the meeting there are many hospitable invitations to call at their homes on the morrow.

Early next morning, we are off to see the town, ere the heat of the day beats on us. Going up by the plaza, we pass the iron spring which, with the main sulphur one, gives Madruga its reputation throughout the island as a health resort. We ascend towards the Eastern hills, which were the camping grounds of the Cuban patriots, from which the Spanish soldiery could not dislodge them.

The main business of Madruga is healing, and thousands have been benefited and healed through the efficacy of its mineral springs. During the season, from April to fall, the town is full of sick, and anything that appeals to the curing of invalids must touch the people. In this we account for the remarkable way in which the instances of divine healing in our Saviour's teachings have taken hold of our Madruga Christians.

We called at the home of Petronia. On one of the hill-tops, overlooking both the village and the sugar-mill, she lives with her two daughters, in a wee hut-house built of wicker work, bedaubed with clay. Years ago the husband died, and left the mother with the two blind daughters, now about forty-five years of age, and for twenty-five years their lives have been plunged in darkness, physical and spiritual.

About three years ago the steps of Mrs. Pain, of our Madruga Mission, were directed to this cottage and God opened Petronia's heart to receive the Gospel message. She accepted Jesus as her Saviour. One day the query came to her, "I am old; I will soon be gone; four-score years have passed; possibly ten more, but they will soon be flown, and who will lead my eyeless children? Lord Jesus, heal one of my children, Denocia or Flora, so that one may lead the other in my place, for I will soon be with thee." This thought formed itself into a prayer, constant and without shadow of turning.

Strangely, indeed, has that prayer been answered. Slowly and by degrees, amid floods of tears and much pain, Denocia began to regain her sight. Now she is able to attend to the housework, and even leads her sister about. These events have stirred the little church in Madruga and its faith has been strengthened. Many hearing of God's gift to Petronia, come to her for assistance, as well as to her friends.

Thus the good work of the Lord goes on, and El Faro Cristiano is preaching to many.

JOHN B. WOOD.

Pyne Poynt, Camden, N. J.

CALLED HIGHER

Mrs. Jane Elizabeth Scales, a pioneer woman of the West, died at her home in Pendleton, Oreg. Mrs. Scales was the daughter of David Crozier, and was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania. She removed when quite young to Joliet, Ill., where she was united in marriage to John L. Scales in 1845. Mrs. Scales had resided in Pendleton since 1889 and was an active and prominent member of the First Presbyterian Church. She was an earnest and devout Christian, and possessed the energy character and hardiness, such virtues that were found in the pioneer woman of the West.

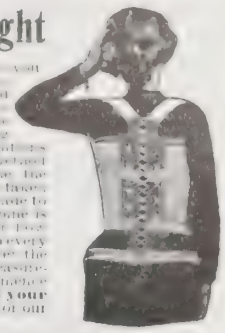
On Dec. 28, 1904, Mrs. Daniel Shaw, of Shawbridge, Que., was suddenly called home. While visiting her daughter, Mrs. Campbell, at Hawkesbury, Ont., fire broke out in their residence during the night, and Mrs. Shaw lost her life. Her last effort was to throw her infant granddaughter from a window fifteen feet from the ground. The child and the other members of the family escaped, but Mrs. Shaw lost her life in the flames. Her death was a noble one. She was a loving mother and devoted wife, was ever a "friend in need." She was a Christian for many years; a lover of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Her husband and four daughters and a son survive her.

Passed into the Paradise rest on Tuesday morning, Jan. 10, 1905, Mrs. Susanna Bonebrake Mentzer, in the eighty-first year of her age. All her life she resided in the vicinity of Wanesboro, Franklin Co., Pa. Born April 11, 1824, married to the late Jacob Mentzer in 1843, she became an earnest Christian, and among her children she raised one who has been a minister of the Gospel for almost a quarter of a century—the Rev. D. B. Mentzer, Waynesboro, Pa. She sleeps in the blessed hope of life eternal.

The Milwaukee Revival

The Gordon revival campaign on the South Side, of Milwaukee, has had the most favorable effect upon all the churches adjacent. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon have transferred their revival labors to the fashionable West End, and have made an auspicious beginning in the Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. Charles N. Crittenton, the merchant-evangelist, accompanied by Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, Superintendent of the Florence Crittenton Association, and Miss Gordon, of the Crittenton Training School, of Washington City, will join Mr. and Mrs. Gordon the third week in May, and conduct a great mass meeting in the Pabst Theatre, Milwaukee, with the view of establishing in the near future a Crittenton Rescue Home.

Crooked Spines Made Straight



If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who removed himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected. Noted physicians in prominent medical institutes and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheldon Vertebral removes the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness leaves one of the back, the cartilage between the vertebrae is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction, or refund your money at the end of thirty days' trial. Write for our new book giving full information and references.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 207 Fifth St., Jamestown, N. Y.

From Sunrise to Sunset poor paint cracks and crumbles in heat and weather. The paint that endures is

PATTON'S SUN-PROOF PAINT

Lasts for years. We are always glad to advise on any paint question. Book free.

PATTON PAINT COMPANY
218 Lake Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

A Wonderful Business Offer

$50 to $150 per week and upwards POSITIVE. We want representatives to operate sales parlors for the BEST, most attractive rapid selling Ladies' and Gents' shoe known; ten NEW sight selling health and comfort features; factory to consumer; previous experience unnecessary; NO RISK; reply quick.

KUSHION KOMFORT SHOE CO., Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Four Little Bee Books FREE

All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.

A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

WING PIANOS

ARE SOLD DIRECT FROM THE FACTORY, AND IN NO OTHER WAY

You SAVE from $75.00 to $200.00

When you buy a Wing Piano, you buy at wholesale. You pay the actual cost of making it with only our wholesale profit added. When you buy a piano, as many still do—at retail—you pay the retail dealer's store rent and other expenses. You pay his profit and the commission or salary of the agents or salesmen he employs—all these on top of what the dealer himself has to pay to the manufacturer. The retail profit on a piano is from $75 to $200. Isn't this worth saving?

SENT ON TRIAL

Anywhere WE PAY FREIGHT No Money in Advance

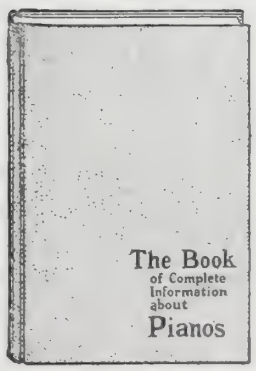
We will place a Wing Piano in any home in the United States on trial, without asking for any advance payment or deposit. We pay the freight and all other charges in advance. There is nothing to be paid either before the piano is sent or when it is received. If the piano is not satisfactory after 20 days' trial in your home, we take it back entirely at our expense. You pay us nothing, and are under no more obligation to keep the piano than if you were examining it at our factory. There can be absolutely no risk or expense to you.

Do not imagine that it is impossible for us to do as we say. Our system is so perfect that we can without any trouble deliver a piano in the smallest town in any part of the United States just as easily as we can in New York City, and with absolutely no trouble or annoyance to you, and without anything being paid in advance or on arrival either for freight or any other expense. We take old pianos and organs in exchange. A guarantee for 12 years against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material is given with every Wing Piano.

SMALL, EASY MONTHLY PAYMENTS

In 37 years over 40,000 Wing Pianos have been manufactured and sold. They are recommended by seven governors of States, by musical colleges and schools, by prominent orchestra leaders, music teachers and musicians. Thousands of these pianos are in your own State, some of them undoubtedly in your very neighborhood. Our catalogue contains names and addresses.

Mandolin, Guitar, Harp, Zither, Banjo The tones of any or all of these instruments may be reproduced perfectly by any ordinary player on the piano by means of our Instrumental Attachment. This improvement is patented by us and cannot be had in any other piano. WING ORGANS are made with the same care and sold in the same way as Wing Pianos. Separate organ catalogue sent on request.



You Need This Book

If You Intend to Buy a Piano—No Matter What Make

A book—not a catalogue—that gives you all the information possessed by experts. It tells about the different materials used in the different parts of a piano; the way the different parts are put together, what causes pianos to get out of order, and in fact is a complete encyclopedia. It makes the selection of a piano easy. If read carefully, it will make you a judge of tone, action, workmanship and finish. It tells you how to test a piano and how to tell good from bad. It is absolutely the only book of its kind ever published. It contains 156 large pages and hundreds of illustrations, all devoted to piano construction. Its name is "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos." We send it free to anyone wishing to buy a piano. All you have to do is to send us your name and address.

SEND A POSTAL TO-DAY while you think of it, just giving your name and address, or send us the attached coupon and the valuable book of information, also full particulars about the WING PIANO, with prices, terms of payment, etc., will be sent to you promptly by mail.

WING & SON, 352-364 W. 13th St., New York
1868——37th Year——1905

Cut or tear out this coupon and mail to us, after writing your name and address at bottom. We will promptly mail book and other information.

WING & SON
352-364 W. 13th Street, New York

Send to the nearest dealer in your town Wing Pianos.

Name .....

Address .....

.....

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

If you want a good food for your baby, — a food that is endorsed by physicians, a food that contains a large amount of digestible constituents, a food that feeds, a food that will nourish, sustain and promote the growth of your baby, — try Mellin's Food. We will send a sample for you to try.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

The Somnola Medicated Pillow

Relieves You While You Sleep

Guaranteed to stop the "night cough" in CONSUMPTION and BRONCHITIS; and to relieve the worst cases of ASTHMA, by cumulative effect, in from three to six weeks.

INSOMNIA and NERVOUS TROUBLES rapidly and completely relieved; HAY FEVER and CATARRH entirely eradicated from the system by the SOMNOLA MEDICATED PILLOW. Endorsed by physicians generally. Relief guaranteed or price refunded.

Write for descriptive booklet, etc.

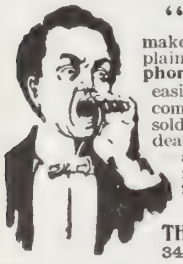
Somnola Medicated Pillow Co., Inc.
741 Washington Street, Louisville, Ky.

POND'S EXTRACT
THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR
The Baby
should be rubbed gently with Pond's Extract after the bath. It wards off colds, strengthens and invigorates.

Witch Hazel is not the same thing. On analysis of seventy samples of Witch Hazel—so often offered as "just as good"—fifty two were found to contain wood alcohol or formaldehyde or both. To avoid danger of poisoning insist on having

THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR
POND'S EXTRACT

DON'T SHOUT!
"The Morley"



makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear — invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE
IN JARS AND TUBES.

For photo or general use. Dries quickly — never discolors print. Very strong — corners will not curl. Largest bottle now sold for 5c. (by mail, 10c.) In bulk for large users, carton work, etc.

LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE
2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.

LE PAGE'S GLUE—1 oz., 10c.; by mail, 12c., bot. or tube. RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Avenue, Gloucester, Mass.

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES
$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK
and getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New York

BONANZA FOR CANVASSERS
You can make $50.00 a week. Spare time $1.00 an hour. Salary if preferred. Outfit free. ZIEGLER CO., Philadelphia.

$5.80 A DAY is the average salary made by agents selling our COOKER and line of KITCHEN SPECIALTIES. Free samples. Write at once.
H. S. ROBINSON, 899 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, Ohio

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 435

On this occasion, the evening offering consisted of three chapters from Chronicles, full of curious names, hard to pronounce. Miss Cynthia toiled bravely through them, paying anxious heed to the many-syllabled words. She was haunted by an uneasy sense that she ought to be unusually serious, in view of the event which loomed terribly in her near future.

She remained long on her knees. When, at last, all was finished, she climbed into her chilly bed, and lay there crying quietly. "I don't see why I want to live so!" she moaned to herself. The Self who is always unobtrusively ready to listen to our weak complainings, to our futile regrets, to our voiceless aspirations. "But, oh, I do want to live! I want to be happy like other folks. Why should I have to go to heaven now? I've been expecting something to happen all these years — something — beautiful! But it hasn't happened—yet. I wish it would happen right away. I wish I had friends, and some pretty clothes—pink dresses and blue. I wish—I wish——"

Who can explain what actually happens to us when we sleep? Does the unseen self slip out into the vast, gray void and wander far—far from its inert shell? Do strange, wise helpers find it there in that dim border-land, staggering beneath its burden of pitiful wants? Do they plead with it—to understand?

CHAPTER X.

At exactly six-thirty by the clock on Thursday morning, Deacon Scrimger tied his dejected white horse, drawing a roomy spring wagon, to the hitching-post in front of the Breyfogle house on Maple Street. Nellie Ryan was sweeping the front piazza with long, even strokes of her broom, but she stopped short to watch the old man as he crunched briskly up the gravel walk.

He was very thin and angular, was Deacon Scrimger, so stooped that his large, lean, aquiline old face appeared to be curiously attached to the front of his body. He moved with an agile nimbleness of foot, which somehow offended the youthful eyes of the girl. "I've called around to git the stuff," he began, with a preliminary wheeze and snuffle like that of a rusty engine. "I says to m' wife, I c'n save Cynthy Day a deal of trouble, I says, fust an' last, by jest haulin' the hull outfit over to my place. No doubt some of it 'll want fixin' up it bein' old stuff, an' I'll ten' t' that; arterward, we'll see to disposin' of it to the right parties. I'll jest take it right out now, if you'll show me where 't is."

"Does Miss Day expect you?" asked Nellie coldly.

"Why, cert'nly, my good girl, cert'nly; I tol' her a-Sunday I'd call around. If she ain't up yit there 's no use to disturb her. I'll jest look the stuff over an' take my pick right now; I dunno as I c'n haul it all one trip, but 't ain't fur."

"I'll have to ask Miss Day," said Nellie, with a disdainful smile, "and I never disturb her till seven o'clock."

"The' 's the cause of foreign missions," pursued Deacon Scrimger thoughtfully, as he edged past the girl so as to command a view of the front hall, "an' the pastor's salary, more 'n a hundred dollars in arrears, an' no way to git it, times bein' hard an' money close; an' necessary repairs on the meetin-house roof, I figure 'at I c'n turn this 'ere occasion into one of rejoicin' fer the cause, an' at the same time——. Was these 'ere the articles?"

"Miss Day intends to set them out in the front yard at ten o'clock, an' let people take their pick," said Nellie stonily. "Mr. and Mrs. Pettibone are comin', an' they 'll help see that the right folks get their share."

"The' ain't a particle o' use o' all that," argued Deacon Scrimger amiably. "It 'll tromp up the front yard terrible; I don't s'pose she's thought of that; an' more n' likely the most undeservin' folks in town 'll be on han'. 'Tain't right to give things away, anyhow. 'Tain't law, an' 'tain't' gospil, if you git right down to it. Folks 'd ought to pay fer what they git in this world. They don't value nothin' 'at they don't pay fer in hard cash."

"Did you want to buy the things, sir?"

Deacon Scrimger scratched his head thoughtfully. "Well!" he ejaculated at length, "I—was thinkin' o' haulin' the stuff over to my place, as I tol' ye; and arter I'd put it in order, sellin' it fer a low price to d'servin' folks as 'd ought to hev it. You see I c'd ten' to that part of it as she can't, bein' a female. The resultin' cash I'd 'lotted to donate to the church, reservin' a small sum to compensate me fer my trouble. An' say! I shan't mind givin' you, well—say a dollar, fer yer good will."

"Do you mean that if I let you take all these things away now without telling Miss Day, that you 'll give me a dollar?"

"Well, I dunno 's I'd put it jest that way; but—yes, that 's about the idee. I won't pay you, though, till the stuff 's delivered."

"But what would you do if Miss Day objected to your plan when she found it out. She 'll be coming down pretty soon."

"Tee-hee-hee!" giggled Deacon Scrimger. "You ain't nobody's fool, be ye? It's somethin' like this, m' gal; she giv out in public meetin' that she was calc'latin' to give away the stuff to anybody that wanted it. Now I want it. I want the hull of it, fer religious purposes, as I tol' ye. 'F I take it on those air conditions, I guess she'd find it purty middlin' hard to git a-holt of it ag'in, even if she went to law 'bout it. D' ye understan'?"

"Yes, I do," said Nellie Ryan, her pretty face in a blaze of indignation. "And do you know what I think of you? I think you're a horrid, mean, old skinflint, that 's what you are! A lot you'd give it to the church, would n't you? An' you'd give me a dollar, indeed! What do you take me for?"

"I take ye fer a mighty sassy little tyke, that 's what I take ye fer! You'd ought to be switched right smart fer talkin' that way to me. But, say!"—the old man's manner suddenly changed—"mebbe I didn't offer ye 'nough. S'pose we say a dollar down, right now, an'—well, I don't keer if I make it a dollar an' a half extry, arter——"

"Stop!" cried Nellie, stamping her foot. "Don't you talk to me no more. I'll tell Miss Day what you've said. I'll tell everybody you——"

"An' I'll tell everybody you lie," retorted the old man, eyeing the girl malevolently. "I'll tell 'em——. Well, you jest hold your horses fer a spell an' see what happens. Mebbe you'll be sorry yit 'at you 've been so mighty brash. I'll be eround agin."

He hopped nimbly into his wagon and rattled away, and Nellie Ryan, breathing hard, marched into her kitchen and broke the treasured cracked tea-pot and two plates in the stormy process of getting breakfast.

Miss Cynthia merely laughed when the girl told her what had happened. "That was certainly a bright idea of Deacon Scrimger's," she agreed, "and it would undoubtedly save us trouble."

The little lady's eyes were very bright, and her cheeks were actually pink as she helped to carry the smaller articles into the fresh bright morning. She was wearing a blue dress, hastily constructed by Malvina Bennett. The Puffer twins put in a busy but delightful hour before school-time, and George Blossom and William Cartright — commonly known as Bill — cleared the big rooms in an astonishingly short space of time.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 441

CORNISH PIANO AND ORGAN

TWO YEARS' CREDIT IF NEEDED
Simple as A B C to furnish your home with a beautiful Hi Grade Cornish Piano or Organ, on a plan of paymentarran to meet your convenience. Special terms. We can satisfy honest person and s one-half what age and dealers charge. erybody has the ber of our Factory prices. can buy on any term reason. We will ship Piano or Organ on days' trial. Freight p —no money in vance. Goods ship at our risk and safe delivery guaranteed. Payment commer after one month's use in your own home. We do not make or cheap, trashy goods, but only the old reliable Cornish Pianos Organs—High Grade, First Class Warranted for twenty-five ye

$25 FIRST PAYMENT
Balance at your own convenience

Distance is no objection. We ship promptly everywhere. We have 250,000 satisfied patrons.

If you want to buy a first-class Piano or Organ at factory cost we invite you to write to us to-day for our remarkable collection of aids to purchasers.

FREE
1. The Beauti Cornish Album, marvel of printi color and design.
2. A set of colo and embossed Mi ture Pianos Organs.
3. Our uni registered ref ence book—5 recent purchas names and dresses — a o that you know
4. Our plan give every l chaser 96 FR music lesson the most succe ful tuition in world.

All these FREE if you write AT ONCE and mention this magaz

REMEMBER!!! We make here in our own large and c plete Factories in beautiful North New Jersey, the World Renowned Cornish American Pianos Organs. We employ hundreds of skilled mechanics, and we build and sell at First Cost direct to the general public the finest Pianos and Organs in America. You can't get a Cornish if you don't come to us direct, and if you do we insure your satisfaction by our iron-clad bond backed up by a Million D lars of Plant and Property. Don't think of buying el where—Get the Cornish Plan First.

$10 FIRST PAYMENT
Balance $5 a month o at your convenience

CORNISH CO. Washington, New Jers
Established 50 Years

4%
And your money quickly available when needed

THERE are investments that pay more than 4 per cent. They are speculative in character. Your money may be safe—and it may not.

This bank accepts your money on deposit—subject to your withdrawal notice at any time.

It is never in danger of loss or depreciation. It is always here when you want it, and it earns for you 4 per cent. a year—compounded semi-annually.

Write for Department G Booklet — Do it to-day

THE UNION SAVINGS BANK
CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00
Frick Building PITTSBURG, PA.

EHRICH BROS. New York's Best Store.

Forty-eight years catering to the wants of the best people in New York is certainly evidence that we give the right merchandise at the right prices. In order to have you become acquainted with our store and its wonderful inducements to out-of-town buyers, we offer this waist at actual cost to manufacture. We would like every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to have this waist.

Catalogue and special sheets used mailed free on request.

No. 34. White Persian Lawn Waist with yoke of four strips of both English and blind embroidery, and five rows of insertion, detachable lace collar, tucked back, full sleeve with deep tucked cuff, buttoned in back. The newest and latest style and a beauty.

Price (the actual cost to manufacture) $1.00

Write us about your needs; we handle everything.

Agents wanted; write for plan.

Mention this paper and send us $1, enclosing 10c. extra for postage, and we will mail this beautiful white Persian lawn shirt-waist to you. If you do not think it one of the greatest bargains you ever purchased, you are privileged to return, and we will cheerfully refund you the money. Our guarantee is—you must be satisfied.

6th Ave. 22nd & 23rd Sts. EHRICH BROS. NEW YORK. 6th Ave. 22nd & 23rd sts.

A. LEN'S FOOT-EASE

Shake Into Your Shoes

Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It relieves painful, swollen, smarting nervous feet, and instantly takes the sting out of corns and bunions. It's the greatest comfort discovery of the age. Allen's Foot Ease makes tight-fitting or new shoes feel easy. It is a certain relief for ingrowing nails, sweating, callous and hot, tired, aching feet. We have over 30,000 testimonials. TRY IT TO-DAY. Sold by all Druggists and Shoe Stores, 25c. Do not accept any substitute. Sent by mail for 25c. in stamps.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE sent by mail.

MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS, the best remedy for Feverish, Sickly Children. Sold by Druggists everywhere. Trial Package FREE. Address,

"In pinch, use Allen's Foot-Ease."

ALLEN S. OLMSTED, Le Roy, N. Y.

[Mention this paper.]

DIAMONDS ON CREDIT

All Transactions on Honor.

Mothers buy Diamonds on credit for sons and daughters. Husbands buy Diamonds on credit for wives. Brothers and sisters buy Diamonds on credit for each other. Lovers buy Diamonds on credit for sweethearts. All classes take advantage of the famous Loftis Credit System. Save a Diamond. Win a heart. Write today for our Diamond Catalog—1000 illustrations. Select the Diamond you want and we will send it. If you like the Diamond on its arrival, pay one-fifth of the price. Keep it, pay the balance in eight equal monthly payments.

LOFTIS BROS & CO. EST'D 1858 DIAMOND CUTTERS WATCHMAKERS, JEWELERS Dept. E—95, 82 to 98 State St. CHICAGO, ILL., U. S. A.

$50.00 Split Hickory

SPECIAL TOP BUGGY TO ORDER

2-year guarantee, sold on 30 days free trial is THE WORLD'S STANDARD 100 points of superiority. Send for 192-page free catalog of vehicles and harness. The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co., (H. C Phelps, Pres.,) Station 236 Cincinnati, Ohio

FENCE Strongest Made

See how closely it is woven. Sold direct to the farmer at factory prices, on 30 Days Free Trial. Your money back if not satisfied. Write today for free Catalogue.

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY Box 47, Winchester, Indiana.

100% HATCH GUARANTEED

30 DAYS' TRIAL To prove it.

50 Egg $4.50 $5.00 100 Egg $8.50 $9.50 200 Egg $13.75 $15.00

Self regulating; Automatic moisture. Brooders, sizes and kinds, $3.00 up. 50,000 in use. Catalogue FREE.

Buckeye Incubator Co., Box 60 Springfield, O.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 440

Heavy curtains of dignified brocade; dingy, old-fashioned shades; musty carpets, their colors religiously preserved through years of use; stuffed furniture; footstools innumerable; fancy work and bric-a-brac of every degree of hideousness, trooped out into the green yard in a long procession. Clothing, too, of every sort and description; queer, full-skirted dresses, and nondescript hats; broadcloth coats with long, voluminous tails, dating back to Grandfather Breyfogle's time; great coats, waistcoats and trousers, canes, umbrellas and shoes—all looking shabby and ashamed in the light of the radiant spring morning. Miss Cynthia, surveying them hopelessly, was moved to wish that a strong wind might sweep them all away, like the withered and forgotten leaves of yester year. The stupendous tides of life stirred strangely in her blood; for the first time she dimly sensed the fact that old things must pass away before the on-rushing flood of the new.

"I don't believe anybody will want one of these things," she said. "I don't see how anybody can want them."

But at nine o'clock the street began to fill with people. A stranger coming into Innisfield on that Thursday morning might have guessed a fair or a circus procession.

As a matter of fact, a stranger did come to town, and seeing the vehicles hitched to every convenient post, and the people congregated in little gossiping knots on every street corner, asked a few casual questions. The answers he received filled him with curiosity and astonishment. He was a tall man, with a strong, clean-shaven face, and a pair of youthful dark eyes which belied his gray hair.

"'Tain't an auction, 'xactly," one old farmer informed him. "I do' know what you 'd call it. We come to town to see the show more 'n anything else; but I b'lieve m' wife 's got a marble-topped table an' some kind of a fancy book. She 's always been hankerin' arter one of them tables with a gravestun top sence we was married; but we ain't seen our way clear to gettin' it. I tol' m' wife I 'd feel kind o' shabby 'bout takin' it home, seein' we didn't pay nothin' fer it; but she says she was fair urged to take it. Miss Day, she jest insisted. It doos beat all!"

"Miss Day?" repeated the stranger inquiringly, "I used to know a person by that name who lived about here—a Miss Cynthia Day."

"Same name," the farmer told him with a chuckle. "An', my gracious! I guess she 's a-losin her mind! If you ever knew any o' the fam'bly, I reckon you 'll remember that the hull kit an' caboodle of 'em was closer 'an the bark to a tree. They never giv up anythin' they once got their han's onto; you couldn't git 'em to even think of it. Miss Cynthia is the last of 'em, an' a chip of the old block, as we always s'posed; but she 's took an awful curious turn all of a sudden, an' is givin' away pretty much everythin' in the house."

"Perhaps she means to move away," hazarded the stranger.

"No, that ain't it; she's repairin' her house, an' most likely wants to fix up bran' new. 'Tain't gettin' red of her things that's s'prised folks so; but it 's the way she 's gone about it. If she 'd auctioned 'em off nobody 'd have said anythin'; but to give 'em away—Gosh!"

The stranger thoughtfully made his way toward the Breyfogle house on Maple Street. He met numerous persons coming away, some laughing derisively, others solemnly content; nearly everybody carried something. Nobody noticed him when he quietly opened Miss Cynthia's gate and walked in.

A group of excited persons were arguing hotly over an arm-chair, which seemed in danger of being rent in twain. The matter was presently settled by a small lady in a blue dress, who marched up to the combatants with an air of authority. "I've already given this chair to Sarah Hopkins," she said, "and this footstool; she needs them for her old mother."

The lady in the blue dress did not glance at the stranger; she was evidently exceedingly busy and very much in demand. But the stranger followed her with his eyes as she hurried away to another group.

"Were you looking for anything in particular, sir?" asked a polite voice at his elbow. He glanced down at the speaker. She was a little woman, with a fluff of light brown hair shading childish eyes. "I am the minister's wife," she went on, with a pretty air of importance, "and I am trying to help distribute these gifts of Miss Day's to the best advantage. It's a beautiful idea, isn't it?"

"I don't think I quite understand it," he said, his dark eyes full of a laughing light. "Just why is Miss Day giving her things away?"

"Do you know her?" demanded Mrs. Pettibone.

"I used to know her," he answered. "I knew something of the family when I was a boy. You probably don't remember me. I remember you as Miss Philura Rice."

The minister's wife stared hard at the stranger. "Why, you're not——"

"I am James Blake," he said briefly. "I left Innisfield about fifteen years ago."

The minister's wife continued to look earnestly at him, and he laughed apologetically. "I suppose you are wondering why I'm here now. Really, I don't know. I happened to be in Boston, and concluded to take a look at the old place."

"I'm real glad you've come," said Mrs. Pettibone hospitably. "I remember you very well now; of course, you'll——"

"I'm going back to town directly," he told her hastily. "In fact, I must go now—this minute; I've an important engagement." He consulted his watch.

"Did you bring your wife with you?" cordially inquired the minister's wife. "I should so much like to have you both stop to dinner with us at the parsonage; Mr. Pettibone would be delighted. You really mustn't go away without——"

"I didn't bring my wife," he told her quizzically. He seemed to have forgotten his pressing engagement, his eyes were upon Miss Cynthia, who was standing on the steps talking to a very large woman in a fortress-like bonnet. "She's changed very little," he said.

"You mean Mrs. Buckthorn? She's the sort of person who doesn't change, you know," said the minister's wife. She was thinking very hard, was Mrs. Pettibone, and to very little purpose. "I expect Electa Pratt would remember," she thought aloud.

James Blake smiled observantly. "Is Electa Pratt still in evidence?" he asked. "If she is she certainly would remember—what, for example?"

"I was only trying to think," murmured Mrs. Pettibone, very much confused. "I was wondering——"

"I think I should like to speak to Miss Day," he said. "Will you—will you present me. She will have forgotten me, I'm sure."

Mrs. Pettibone flushed an agitated pink. "She is coming to speak to me now," she said.

Miss Cynthia in her blue dress, with her brown hair ruffled into tiny waves, came swiftly across the grass. She still did not appear to notice the tall stranger who waited at Mrs. Pettibone's side. There had been so many strangers and so many old friends and neighbors.

TO BE CONTINUED

Summer Suits $6 to $25.

Everything Made to Order. Nothing Ready-made.

Catalogue, Samples, and Simple Measurement Directions sent FREE.

You can have a garment made to your order in New York City, in the latest style and of the newest material without leaving your home.

Our Catalogue of New York Fashions illustrates 158 of the prevailing styles, and shows you how to take your measurements accurately.

We send with our Catalogue a selected line of samples from our stock of over 500 fabrics in which are included all the newest weaves and colors.

Why purchase a last season's garment made in some locality which is months behind the real fashions, when for less money you can have the very latest New York styles made to your order?

WE GUARANTEE TO FIT YOU OR REFUND YOUR MONEY.

SHIRT-WAIST SUITS	$6 to $20
TAILOR-MADE SUITS	$7.50 to $25
RAIN COATS	$9.75 to $18
JACKETS	$5.75 to $15
SILK COATS	$10 to $20
SEPARATE SKIRTS	$3.50 to $12

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our Summer Catalogue, showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of Samples of the Newest Materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. Write for them to-day; you will get them by return mail.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.

119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York

Mail Orders Only. No Agts. or Branches. Est. 17 Yrs.

A Paper Proposal

is a story of a summer love match, well told and beautifully illustrated. The small picture above only suggests the real charm of these illustrations. As a bit of readable fiction the story is well worth writing for. It is contained in a handsomely bound book of 128 pages, a portion of which is devoted to the attractive mountain and lake resorts along the Lackawanna Railroad. It is a book you will like to see. It may be had by sending 10 cents in postage stamps to T. W Lee, General Passenger Agent Lackawanna Railroad, New York has been installed in thousands of homes, churches and public buildings. It means true economy in heating. Do not experiment with unknown, untried systems. Such practice is costly and unsatisfactory.

HEATING

The "PIERCE" SYSTEM OF STEAM and WATER HEATING.

Write for booklet explaining our perfect system of Heating and Sanitary Plumbing.

PIERCE, BUTLER & PIERCE MFG CO., Dept. K, Syracuse, N. Y., Manufacturers Heating and Sanitary Goods.

PLUMBING

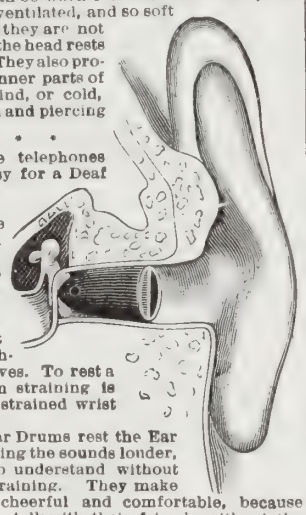
Deaf People Now Hear Whispers

Listening Machines Invented by a Kentuckian.

Invisible, When Worn, but Act Like Eye-Glasses.

Ever see a pair of Listening Machines?
They make the Deaf hear distinctly.
They are so soft in the ears one can't tell they are wearing them.
And, no one else can tell either, because they are out of sight when worn. Wilson's Ear Drums are to weak hearing what spectacles are to weak sight.
Because, they are sound-magnifiers, just as glasses are sight-magnifiers.
They rest the Ear Nerves by taking the strain off them—the strain of trying to hear dim sounds. They can be put into the ears, or taken out, in a minute, just as comfortably as spectacles can be put on and off.
And, they can be worn for weeks at a time, because they are ventilated, and so soft in the ear holes they are not felt even when the head rests on the pillow. They also protect any raw inner parts of the ear from wind, or cold, dust, or sudden and piercing sounds.

* * * *



These little telephones make it as easy for a Deaf person to hear weak sounds as spectacles make it easy to read fine print. And, the longer one wears them the better his hearing grows, because they rest up, and strengthen, the ear nerves. To rest a weak ear from straining is like resting a strained wrist from working.

Wilson's Ear Drums rest the Ear Nerves by making the sounds louder, so it is easy to understand without trying and straining. They make Deaf people cheerful and comfortable, because such people can talk with their friends without the friends having to shout back at them. They can hear without straining. It is the straining that puts such a queer, anxious look on the face of a deaf person.

* * * *

Wilson's Ear Drums make all the sound strike hard on the center of the human ear drum, instead of spreading it weakly all over the surface. It thus makes the center of the human ear drum vibrate ten times as much as if the same sound struck the whole drum head. It is this vibration of the ear drum that carries sound to the hearing Nerves. When we make the drum vibrate ten times as much we make the sound ten times as loud and ten times as easy to understand.

This is why people who had not in years heard a clock strike can now hear that same clock tick anywhere in the room, while wearing Wilson's Ear Drums.

Deafness, from any cause, ear-ache, buzzing noises in the head, raw and running ears, broken ear-drums, and other ear troubles, are relieved and cured (even after Ear Doctors have given up the cases), by the use of these comfortable little ear-resters and sound-magnifiers.

A sensible book, about Deafness, tells how they are made, and has printed in it letters from hundreds of people who are using them.

Clergymen, Lawyers, Physicians, Telegraph Operators, Trainmen, Workers in Boiler Shops and Foundries—four hundred people of all ranks who were Deaf, tell their experience in this free book. They tell how their hearing was brought back to them almost instantly, by the proper use of Wilson's Ear Drums.

Some of these very people may live near you, and be well known to you. What they have to say is mighty strong proof.

This book has been the means of making 326,000 Deaf people hear again. It will be mailed free to you if you merely write a post card for it today. Don't put off getting back your hearing. Write now, while you think of it. Get the free book of proof.

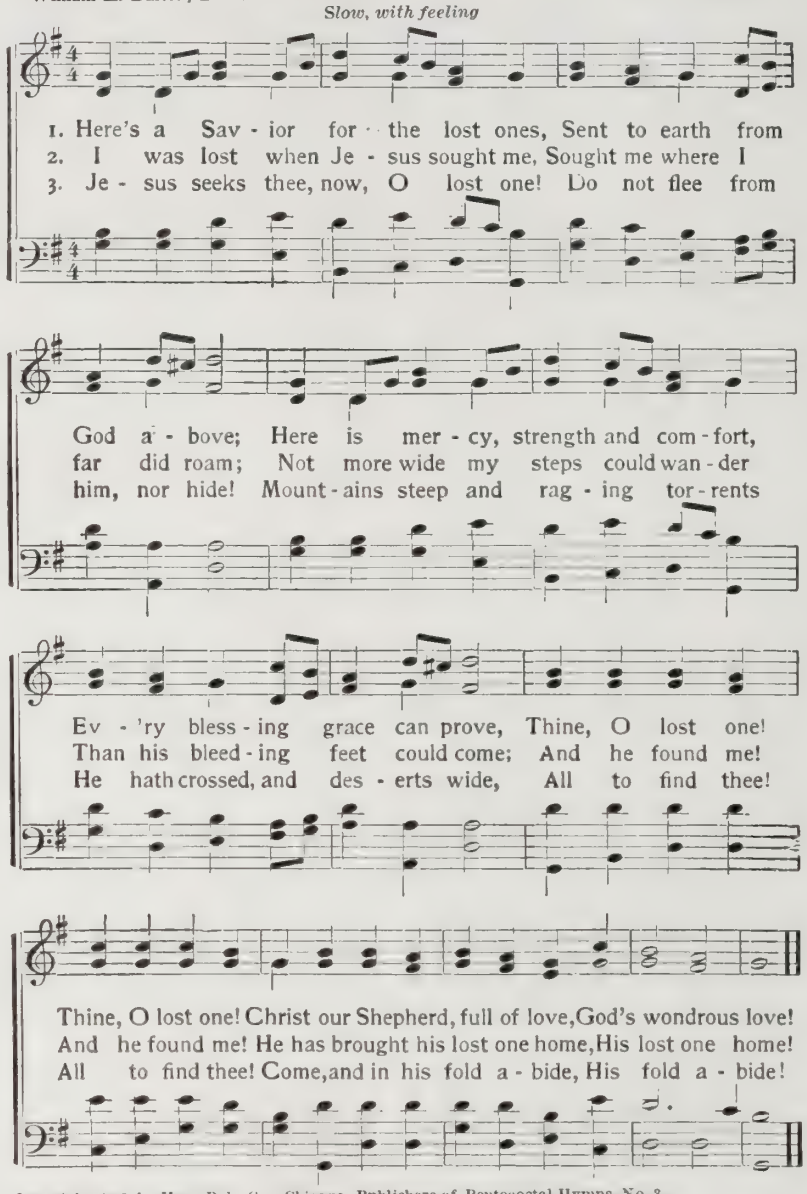
Write for it today to the Wilson Ear Drum Co. 334 Todd Building, Louisville, Ky.

Here's a Saviour for the Lost Ones!

The popular tune which has been most commonly sung at the Great Welsh Revival

William E. Barton, D.D. Tune—Caersalem

Slow, with feeling



1. Here's a Sav - ior for the lost ones, Sent to earth from
2. I was lost when Je - sus sought me, Sought me where I
3. Je - sus seeks thee, now, O lost one! Do not flee from God a - bove; Here is mer - cy, strength and com - fort, far did roam; Not more wide my steps could wan - der him, nor hide! Mount - ains steep and rag - ing tor - rents
Ev - 'ry bless - ing grace can prove, Thine, O lost one!
Than his bleed - ing feet could come; And he found me!
He hath crossed, and des - erts wide, All to find thee!
Thine, O lost one! Christ our Shepherd, full of love, God's wondrous love!
And he found me! He has brought his lost one home, His lost one home!
All to find thee! Come, and in his fold a - bide, His fold a - bide!

Copyright, 1905, by Hope Pub. Co., Chicago, Publishers of Pentecostal Hymns, No. 3.

The words of the hymn were composed for the Crossley-Hunter Revival meetings

The "Praying Company"

YOUR announcement in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the death of Rev. Richard Winsor, of Sirur, India, will be read with sadness by many people, but to none did the news come with more interest and sorrow than to his old college classmates and army comrades. Permit me, as one holding both these relations to him, to add my tribute to his memory. Responding to President Lincoln's first call for volunteers, young Winsor, together with a hundred other students of Oberlin, left his books and bright hopes of completing his college course, and enlisted April 25, 1861. These students became Company C, Seventh Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and made a famous record in the war of '61-65 against the slave-holder's rebellion.

Called, in derision at first, in camp, the "Praying Company" these Christian boys soon, in the serious business of marches and battles, won the respect of the officers and men of the regiment. Just as young Winsor had been earnest, lovable and unselfish at school, so he was faithful, patriotic and true in the army. After serving with great credit through the previous campaigns and battles of his command, Winsor was seriously wounded in the battle of Winchester, Va., March 23, 1862. On account of disability from this wound, he was honorably discharged.

His comrades remember him with love. His cheerful and unselfish disposition in the midst of the severest trials of army life endeared him to us all. His fidelity to the Master never wavered. The same qualities of mind and heart have since made him eminently successful in his chosen life work. Loyal to his flag and loyal to his Christ, he was indeed one of the true heroes of the world. M. M. ANDREWS.

Bay City, Mich. Formerly 1st Sergt. Co. C, 7th O. V. I.

Is it Hard to Believe?

IS it hard to believe, is it hard to believe
That we live again, dearest, you and I?
To me it is hardest of all to conceive
That having once lived we can ever die!—
For a moment, even, to cease to breathe,
Or to love, or to smile, or to shed glad tears,
Or ever in dreams to cease to wreathe
Some happiness out of the coming years.

Why, here is the earth, the sweet old earth,
With her violets, her daisies, her thrushes again!— [mirth,
With a plaintiveness throbbing amid the
For the joy of it all is akin to pain.
Has the very dust of the earth the power
To be young each May, and to bloom and sing, [flower
And are we less immortal than bird and
To be granted only one youth, one Spring?

From a risen earth to a risen heaven
Is no bold dream, or the fancy's leap,
And love is a sunshine to wake us even
From something deeper than winter's sleep.
And so is it hard to believe, to believe
That we live again, dearest, you and I?
To me it is hardest of all to conceive
That having once lived we can ever die!

MARY A. MASON, in the Chautauquan.

You want to kno how to get my lam- chimneys.

(1) Your grocer se them, if he is fit to your grocer; may he don't.

(2) If you'll wri me, I'll send you n Index; that tells ever thing.

MACBETH, Pittsburg

RHEUMATISM

Relieved Without Medicine

New Remedy Discovered Which Absorbs Acid Impurities Through the Large Foot Pores.

A DOLLAR PAIR FRE

On Approval—Write To-day.

Don't take medicine for Rheumatism, send your name to the makers of Magic F Drafts, the great Michigan discovery whic relieving every kind of Rheumatism with medicine—chronic or acute—Muscular, atic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter in w part of the body. You'll get the Drafts return mail. If you are satisfied with the re they give, send us one dollar. If not, s nothing. decide.

Magic Fo Drafts possess remarkable q ity of absorb from the blood impurities which cause Rheumatism, reliev where everything else has failed. They even relieving cases of 30 and 40 years' sta ing. They will relieve you. Send your na to-day to Magic Foot Draft Co., R A 20 Oli Bldg., Jackson, Mich. Our splendid new bo on Rheumatism comes free with the Dra Send no money—only your name. W to-day.

STOPS Any Toothache

instantly—whether there's a cavity or not; cleanses the cavity; removes all odors; prevents further decay and further aching; stays in place; will not burn or melt in the mouth; will not waste or dry up if kept fo years. DENT'S Toothache Gu is used by leading dentists. by druggists, 15c; or by ma receipt of price. Be sure DENT'S. Dent's Corn C removes corns, bunions warts—15c at druggists, by mail. "The Arch Pearls," sent free to any a dress, tells how to take ca of and preserve the teeth.

C. S. DENT & CO 47 Larned St., Detroit, Mich.

Model "B" Top Buggy

Price Complete

$32.50

Sold on inspection for Good Faith Deposit of $1. Sold on One Month's Free Trial. The best buggy for the money in America. Catalogue of Vehicles and Harness free. Write at once.

THE MODEL CARRIAGE & HARNESS CO.
192 West Sixth St., Cincinnati, O.

No Money Require

until you receive and approve of bicycle. We ship to anyone on

TEN DAYS FREE TRI
Finest guaranteed 1905 Models with Coaster-Brakes & Puncturelss $10 to $2
1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes..... $7 to $1
500 Second-Hand Whe All makes & Models good as new $3 to $
GREAT FACTORY CLEARING SA
RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at pay. Write at once for catalog and Special
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILI
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHIC

The Old Ex-Slave

SHE sits beneath the branches,
With the sere and yellow leaves,
Ah! never will life bring to her
Its fullest golden sheaves.
The droughts of spring and summer
A straitened harvest bring;
Before the glory of autumn
Comes the tender bloom of spring.

She sits beneath the branches
While the sun is sinking low,
Its parting gleams light up the face
Which lacked the morning's glow.
Oh, life beyond the river,
From care and trial shorn,
Give back to her the bloom of spring,
The fragrant dew of morn.

Hastings, Neb. C. C.

Missions in Latin America*

MORE difficult, probably, than work among absolute heathen, are efforts to preach the Gospel to Latin peoples, who are under the influence of the Roman Catholic Church. The people regard themselves as already Christians, and cannot understand their need of the Gospel in any other form than that which they have accepted. It is related of a master of the violin, that he charged twice as much for teaching a pupil who had already received instruction from an inferior teacher, than for teaching one who was altogether ignorant of the instrument. In the former case the pupil had so much to unlearn. It is also with people who have learned all they know of Christianity from the Roman Catholic priests. When the Protestant missionary pleads with them to turn from sin and follow Jesus, he is met with the contention that, having confessed to a priest and received absolution, they are already pardoned, and have no need of further repentance.

The difficulty, however, is no excuse for neglecting the work. As we have learned in other lands, the Holy Spirit honors every sincere attempt to evangelize a country. In this case, too, the duty is the more imperative because it is near at hand, and the field is vast. All Central America and the greater part of South America are included in the Latin field. In Central America the population is estimated at five millions. Venezuela is nearly three millions; Colombia over four; Peru has five millions; Brazil eighteen; Uruguay one; Argentina five; Chile four, and Bolivia two and a-half millions. In all these, the population is Roman Catholic in overwhelming proportions, and there is reason to believe that of those who nominally belong to that church, many are at heart unbelievers.

Whatever may be said of the character of the early Roman Catholic missionaries, of their self-sacrifice and devotion, the present condition of the people proves that their successors have not maintained the high standard of life and teaching. The Protestant missionaries who have gone there find the people ignorant of the Bible, and superstitious to an almost incredible degree. The men of the educated class are largely opposed to the church and seldom attend its services. The women who do attend have not a clear conception of its doctrines, or of the fundamental truths of the Gospel. Among the poorer classes there is a perfunctory observance of the sacraments, but a pitiful lack of spiritual knowledge and of vital faith in Christ. Even the Roman Catholics of the United States and of Europe who go to Central and South America, fail to recognize the religion prevailing there as their own, so debased and corrupt has it become. In many of those countries the name of Christianity has become a by-word for intolerance and oppression. The civil power strives, often vainly, to rid itself of clerical control, and to be free and independent. Thus the church has injured itself by being regarded as the foe of liberty and progress.

It is estimated that there are not more than five hundred Protestant missionaries in all this vast field, though there are some unattached workers who have gone forth in faith to labor, who are not included in that estimate. The work has to be done with infinite tact, for the Roman Catholic priests are bitterly hostile and arouse the ignorant mobs to drive out the missionary. But the Bible has been sent forward, and it is bought and read by stealth in the towns and villages. God's own Word is doing its work, and the missionary going into a new district is often surprised to find that some family is prepared for his message, by the study of a Testament that has found its way thither. Dr. D. H. Scott, of Paris Tex., of the Central American Mission says: "We verily believe that there are more crowns of rejoicing within the reach of God's children in this special field, than in any other." The seed has been sown, often in tears, but the harvest will be large.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for May 28. Ps. 67 : 1-7; I Tim. 2 : 5; Heb. 10 : 19-22.

An Influence in His Life

FORTY THOUSAND Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts received in good condition. I love to roam amidst the thoughts of great and noble men and women, now I have found a vast roaming ground. I certainly cannot find words to express my appreciation of your beautiful premium. I cannot allow this premium to lie upon a shelf to accumulate dust. No; it treats of too many subjects that come under my observation. I intend to use it. It is a grand reference book, and should be in the library of every thinking man.

Now as regards THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I must say a word in appreciation of its help and blessing to me. It was in the month of February, 1894, that I first gained a knowledge of the value of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. There were being held in our church a series of revival services. I was thinking seriously of the matter of deciding for Christ. Just then, a friend who was interested in me, sent me a number of CHRISTIAN HERALDS. I must say here, that in reading these papers, the many evidences therein contained of the truth of the religion of our Lord and Saviour, were, no doubt, more powerful in moving me to make a decision than I was aware of. It was a friend in a time of need. The following month I sent in my subscription, and have continued to do so each year ever since.

My prayer goes out for the blessing of God upon the proprietor and all who contribute a part in making THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a message of spiritual blessing in thousands of homes, and may it ever be a beacon of light to the weary and worn sinners, in leading them into a right path—a path of peace, light and joy.

Brisbane, Ont. JACOB BURT.

LAST OF THE SEASON.

WASHINGTON.

Low-Rate Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

May 18 is the date on which will be run the last Personally-Conducted Tour of the Pennsylvania Railroad to Washington for the present season. This tour will cover a period of three days, affording ample time to visit all the principal points of interest at the National Capital, including the Congressional Library and the new Corcoran Art Gallery. Rate, covering railroad transportation for the round trip and hotel accommodations, $14.50 or $12.00 from New York, $13.00 or $10.50 from Trenton, and proportionate rates from other points, according to hotel selected. Rates cover accommodations at hotel for two days. Special side trip to Mount Vernon.

All tickets good for ten days, with special hotel rates after expiration of hotel coupon.

For itineraries and full information apply to Ticket Agents; C. Studds, Eastern Passenger Agent, 263 Fifth Avenue, New York; or address Geo. W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Linen—Glass—China—Silver

—EVERYTHING for the well appointed table should be washed with

Pearline

The Choicer the article the Greater the need of PEARLINE'S Gentle, Harmless, yet Effective way of washing. Intelligent and Thrifty women are those most Enthusiastic about Pearline

$21.00 PRICE-EXPLAINED

FOR $21.00 TO $23.00 TOP BUGGIES, similar to one illustrated, HAVE BEEN WIDELY ADVERTISED. also ROAD WAGONS at $14.00 to $17.00, SURREYS at $34.00 to $38.00.

HOW BUGGIES can be offered at these prices and why we can sell buggies and all other vehicles at much lower prices than any other house is all fully explained in our Four Big Free Vehicle Catalogues. Cut this ad. out and send to us and you will receive by return mail, Free, Postpaid, Four Big Vehicle Catalogues showing the most complete line of everything in Buggies, Road Wagons, Carts, Surreys, Phaetons, Carriages, Light and Heavy Wagons, Vehicles of all kinds, also everything in Harness, Saddles and Saddlery, all shown in large handsome halftone Illustrations full descriptions and all priced at prices much lower than any other house can possibly make.

WITH THE FOUR FREE CATALOGUES you will receive the most astonishing Buggy Offer ever heard of, a new and astonishing proposition. How others can offer top buggies at $21.00 to $23.00 and why we can sell at much lower prices than all others will be fully explained. We will explain why we ship so as to make freight charges amount to next to nothing. We will explain why we are the only makers or dealers in the world that can ship buggies the day we receive your order. OUR FREE TRIAL OFFER, OUR PAY AFTER RECEIVED TERMS, OUR BINDING GUARANTEE ARE ALL EXPLAINED WHEN WE SEND YOU THE FOUR FREE CATALOGUES.

HAVE YOU ANY USE FOR A BUGGY? If you have, don't fail to cut this ad. out today and mail to us. If you can't use A TOP BUGGY AT ANY PRICE, call your neighbor's attention to this announcement. Don't buy any kind of a buggy until after you cut this ad. out and send to us and get THE FOUR BIG FREE CATALOGUES, THE MOST LIBERAL OFFER, The Very Latest Proposition, everything explained, all free for the asking. Write Today. SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

32 Years Selling Direct

We are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling to consumers exclusively.

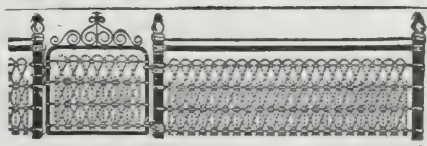
We Have No Agents but ship anywhere for examination and approval, guaranteeing safe delivery. You are out nothing if not satisfied as to style, quality and price. We make 200 styles of vehicles and 65 styles of harness.

No. 636. Combination Buggy with extra stick seat and ¾ in. rubber tires. Price complete $68.00. As good as sells for $80 more.

No. 327. Canopy Top Surrey. Price complete $73.00. As good as sells for $25 more.

Our large Catalogue is FREE. Send for it.

Elkhart Carriage & Harness Mfg. Co., Elkhart, Ind.



ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free. Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

Steel Roofing 100 Square Feet, $2.00

WE PAY FREIGHT EAST of COLORADO

Except Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Texas. Strictly new, perfect steel sheets, 6 and 8 feet long. The best roofing, siding or ceiling you can use; painted two sides. Flat, $2; corrugated or V crimped, $2.10 per square. Write for free catalogue No. D 373 of material from Sheriffs' and Receivers' Sales.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO. 35th & Iron Sts., Chicago.

FREE TO AGENTS

Pat. pan knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

STARK FRUIT BOOK

shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution. We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo.

LIFE INSURANCE

THE BEST IN — AT LOW COST.

Will YOU be too late? An applicant for a hundred thousand dollars was recently rejected by the medical directors. He had waited to make application, till it was too late.

Better fix up your application today.

THE PRUDENTIAL

Insurance Co. of America

INCORPORATED AS A STOCK COMPANY BY THE STATE OF NEW JERSEY

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President. Home Office NEWARK, N. J.

Write for Application Blank—No Charge.

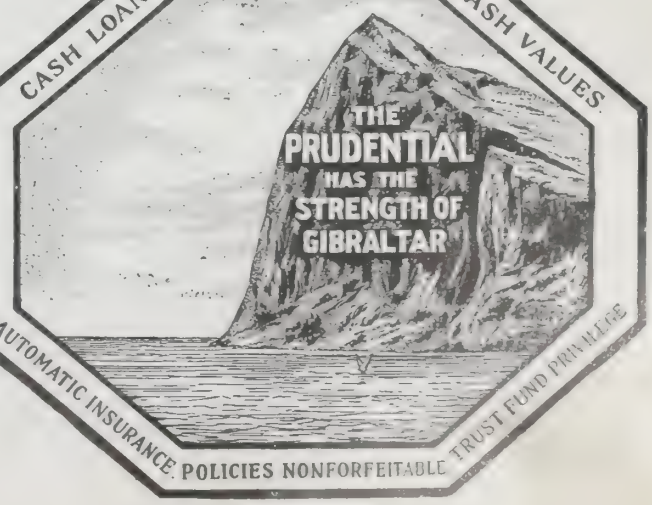
DEPT 70

BOTH SEXES. — AGES 1 TO 70

AMOUNTS UP TO $100,000.

GOOD DIVIDENDS. — CASH VALUES.

CASH LOANS.



AUTOMATIC INSURANCE. POLICIES NONFORFEITABLE. TRUST FUND PRINCIPLE

The Poetry of Dining

Journeying through a dinner from one prose dish to another, you reach that goodly spot where the lights grow brighter, the flowers sweeter, the jests merrier—it is the delightsome place of

NABISCO Sugar Wafers

Exquisite dessert confections which shed a poetic charm over the feast, and translate the prose of eating to the poetry of dining.

FLAVORS—Lemon, Chocolate, Orange, Vanilla, Mint.

FESTINO—A new confection in the shape of an almond shell which encloses a kernel of delicately flavored cream

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

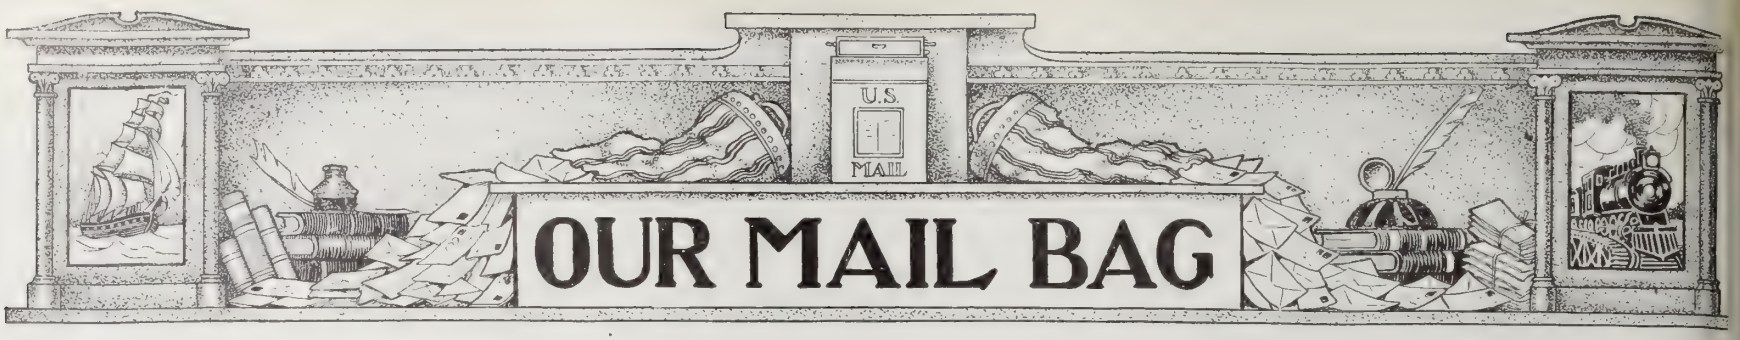
NEW YORK, MAY 24, 1905
Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch
VOL. 28 — NO. 21. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SEE PAGE 451

PHOTOGRAPHED FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BY WHITESIDE

OPENING THE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE Y. M. C. A. IN PARIS



OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

G. B. C., Montreal, Canada. Are pagans and children who die in infancy under a different dispensation? If not, will they be lost?

God is never unjust; he never expects from us what it is not in our power to give. He has not enlightened us about the destiny of children who die in infancy, but we cannot believe that anyone can be lost. Of pagans there is similar silence in Scripture, except that Christ assures us that "he who knows not his Lord's will and commits things worthy of stripes shall be beaten with few stripes" (Luke 12: 48). The serious side of the subject for us is Christ's concluding remark that "to whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required."

Remorse, ——, N. Y. Is it possible for one who has denied Christ, and knows that she is in the power of Satan, to ever come to Christ?

It is in the power of anyone to go to Christ. While we have life and reason, there is nothing that can prevent, if we are really in earnest. The power of Satan certainly cannot. He is a beaten foe; his power was broken by Christ, and he holds in captivity only those who do not ask Christ's deliverance. You may not only go to Christ, but may be sure of a welcome. It is precisely such as you that he delights to receive. How did he treat Peter? If you will send your address, it will be treated confidentially, and we will do all we can to help you. Address Editor of MAIL-BAG.

William Taylor, an ex-soldier, writes:

Last fall I went to the National Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee, Wis. The old soldiers are liberally supplied with everything except the precious Word of Life. If you would appeal to some soul winner who would present this thing in its true light, Congress might grant this spiritual blessing to the men who risked their own lives for the life of their government.

S. N., Niagara Falls, N. Y. Is a deed given to an alien binding? They tell me that it would only be good as long as he lived, and then the property would go to the government.

A deed to an alien is good under some circumstances. If the nation to which he belongs allows our citizens to hold real estate there, then he may hold real estate here, as if he were a citizen. If he has filed, or files a deposition with the Secretary of State at Albany, stating his intention to become a citizen, and to remain a resident of the United States, and that he has declared this intention as required by the laws of the United States, he may hold real estate. In any case, no one but the State of New York can take the property from him. The best thing is for the alien to file his first papers, and then file the deposition referred to.

Ellen Gault, Baltimore, Md. If Jesus was crucified on a Friday and rose again on a Sunday, how could he be said to have risen on the third day?

It was the Jewish mode of reckoning to include in any statement of time parts of days as the whole. (See I. Sam. 30: 12, 13; II. Chron. 10: 5-12). Thus Friday would be counted as a day, and Sunday would be the third day, though the resurrection took place before dawn on that morning.

F. A. G., Iota, La. Please tell me whether you are the only proprietor of the Red Letter Bible, and sole owner of its print?

The Red-Letter New Testament and the Red-Letter New Bible both originated with Dr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of this paper. He spent many months in applying the Red-Letter principle to the Sacred text. Very shortly after the publication of his first edition of the Red-Letter New Testament, several Bible publishers in England appropriated the idea without giving any credit whatever to the originator. Their example was soon followed by several publishers in the United States. In nearly every instance, all the errors which had crept into the first edition of the Red-Letter Testament as published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, have been retained in the pirated editions of this work, showing that those who had appropriated to themselves the benefits of the work of the originator had not even exercised the ordinary precaution of testing the accuracy of his first attempt.

Every genuine Red-Letter Testament and every genuine Red-Letter Bible has the imprint of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and unless a purchaser desires to give his endorsement to this flagrant piracy, he will decline to purchase any other.

There is a breath redolent of summer gardens in this letter from Miss Susie M. L., of Los Angeles:

We are sitting out under the rose trees and they are laden with thousands of roses. Everywhere one looks, a gorgeous garden of flowers and brilliant color is seen. Just before me now is an orange grove, the trees loaded with fruit and blossoms, from which I gathered a quantity to send East this week. At my left is a terrace a hundred and fifty feet long. The terrace is covered at the sides with a small moss vine with rose-pink blossoms, and this comes clear to the street, or sidewalk. Outside the sidewalk, between the walk and the curbstone, is a space entirely planted to all manner of beautiful, bright blooming plants, and beyond the terrace, at the top, is, first, a row of narcissus in full blossom. Then, directly back of that, a hedge of calla lilies in full bloom—thousands of lilies. At the front is a wall. The terrace runs to the wall, and between the wall and walk are scarlet geraniums trimmed and trained like young trees, and in full blossom. This is a semi-tropical climate. I live out of doors continually, except night, to sleep, and when it rains. On Saturday, the 31st day of December, I gathered from the garden ripe hubbard squashes, striped red apples, quinces, quarts of tomatoes, a handful of white figs, a basket of ripe lemons, a handful of blackberry blossoms, and a hundred roses of various kinds.

C. J. S., Newark, N. J. The Assembly's Shorter Catechism represents Christ as equal in power and glory with the Father, yet Christ himself said "My Father is greater than I." How is it possible to reconcile these statements?

The doctrine of the Holy Trinity is a mystery that the mind of man cannot fully grasp. Even John, whose explanation in the first chapter of his Gospel is the clearest statement we have, does not relieve us of difficulty. It is conceivable, however, that in the days of his flesh Christ voluntarily took a lower place than was his in his pre-existence. As Paul says, "He emptied himself and took upon him the form of a servant." Many of his sayings imply a temporary humiliation. Indeed, it is impossible to understand his suffering and death in any other way than that he laid aside his Godhead during his life on earth, in order to become like unto his brethren.

M. E. H., Livingston, Calif. What are the earthenware jars used in hot countries for cooling water called?

They are called "chatties" in Egypt and some parts of Syria.

Constant Reader, Pa. Do you think it is very wicked for one to wish he were dead? I have prayed and prayed about it, and try hard to overcome the feeling. I have tried to be a Christian for several years, and I feel as if I am sinning every time I have such thoughts, but simply cannot overcome them.

It is wicked to indulge such thoughts, but we believe that if you pray in Jesus' name for strength to overcome them, you will receive divine help. Try to become engaged in Christian work, however simple the form, and this will help to take your mind away from brooding. While helping others, you yourself will be helped.

J. S., Payette, Idaho. Why do ministers take their texts from the Old Testament? Why use it at all, now the New has superseded it?

The Old Testament is not superseded, but is fulfilled in the New. Christ referred to it and quoted it continually. The Psalms and the Prophecies it contains will never lose their value. The types and symbols it describes shed a flood of light on the New Testament and enable us to understand it better.

B. V., Pella, Iowa. What was Christ's meaning when he said (Matt. 11: 11) that John the Baptist was the greatest of the prophets, yet that the least in the kingdom of heaven was greater than he?

That he belonged to the old dispensation. The proclamation of the Gospel had made so much difference that the humblest Christian was more enlightened than the greatest before Christ. Thus our schoolboys know more than did Isaac Newton. The modern discoveries place them on a higher level than the greatest of the old philosophers.

From a Kansas reader (Mrs. Nellie M.) we have this interesting little budget of news from that State:

When Prohibition went into operation Kansas had a population of 996,616. She had 917 convicts. After twenty-one years of Prohibition the population is 1,470,495, an increase of nearly 50 per cent., but she now has only 788 prisoners; while the population has increased nearly 50 per cent., crime has decreased in proportion to the pres population 65 per cent. Liquor is the great ca of crime. Chaplain McBrain, of the Kansas St Prison, practiced law twenty-five years bef becoming chaplain. He says 75 per cent. of crime is due to liquor. Kansas has 105 counti Five of these counties are notorious for the vi tion of the prohibitory law. These counties, w 17 per cent. of the State's population, furn over 30 per cent. of its crime. There are for seven counties in Kansas without a pauper; th are forty-five counties without a prisoner in th jails.

M. C., Canal Dover, O. Why did Jesus weep the tomb of Lazarus?

He wept, doubtless, because he w moved to sympathy by the sorrow of Ma and Martha, and because he loved Lazaru

J. P. D., Diamond Spring, Colo. I read in T CHRISTIAN HERALD that Unitarians helped revival work in New England recently. they do not believe in Christ how could th invite others to do so? What do they belie Unitarians certainly did take part in th revival. They do not believe that Chri was the Son of God in the orthodox mea ing of the word, but they do believe tha he was the greatest of the teachers se from God. They believe in his teachin and that his revelation of God's charact was the highest and purest we have ha They regard his death as a martyrdo and in no sense as an expiatory sacrifice.

Subscriber, Salt Point, N. Y. Where in the Bib is this text found: "With twain they cov their eyes, with twain they cover their fee and with twain they do fly," speaking angels?

See Isaiah 6: 2. It was written concer ing the seraphim or celestial beings, wh stand around the throne of God.

F. G. M., Philomath, Ore. Is not the titl "Father," as applied to priests, a violation Christ's command, Matt. 23: 9?

The mere title is not so much a violatio of the command as the spirit of reverenc implied. No man under the Christian dis pensation has the right to arrogate to him self a paternal authority in spiritual things Christ warned his disciples against exercis ing such authority. The title is used, as i the case of Reverend, as a sign of respect Where it implies more than this, either i the man so called, or in the person givin him the title, it is contrary to Christ' teaching.

J. E. R., Fort Mitchell, Va. Is the negro a de scendant from Adam?

Students of ethnology and physiology d not question his descent from Adam. Th Bible record confirms this. (See Gen. 9:2 and 10:6, 7). The color of the skin and othe peculiarities are probably due to many gen erations of exposure to the tropical sun.

PONCA, OKLAHOMA, NEAR THE SCENE OF THE RECENT TORNADO

It is reported that nearly 100 or more people lost their lives in the tornado that swept over Oklahoma during the night of May 10. The storm came from the southwest, and, as the country is level, with nothing to break the violence of the wind, it seemed to grow in fury as it swept northward. The town of Snyder was almost completely wrecked, the buildings falling as if made of cardboard. One report states that only two buildings are standing. Relief trains were sent from various points to aid the sufferers. Ponca is not reported as being in the main path of the storm, but it gives a good idea of the appearance of an Oklahoma town, and of the level and exposed country.

Miscellaneous

Reader, Julian, N. C. Address Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C.

Heart-broken Wife, Pennsylvania. We have sent your letter to the Bowery Mission, to be laid before the Converts' Prayer Meeting.

V. W. W., North Topeka, Kans., J. A. B., Willow Hill, Pa. and others. The questions sent appear to have been given to you to stimulate research. You can find the answers in your histories and encyclopedias.

F. A. N., Milton, Ind. Nearly all the important houses in Scotland are built of granite or some equally durable stone. The Montgomery family seat at Coilsfield, is probably no exception. Write to The Scotsman, Edinburgh, for details.

Pastor Gustav Blomgren, of the Finnish Evangelical Mission Church in Harlem, gratefully acknowledges receipt of $13 in gifts from various donors for the Church's work, and also of a fine parlor pipe organ from Mr. Charles V. Faile of New York City.

Leroy H., Popeka, Ind. There is no teaching concerning insurance in the Bible, one way or the other. Christ told his disciples to take no thought of the morrow, what they should eat and drink; but that related to their individual wants, and not to their duty to provide for those dependent upon them. See I. Timothy 5: 8, in which Paul clearly sets forth the duty of making provision for one's household.

Citizen, Schenectady, N. Y. The public debts of the leading nations, at latest accounts were as follows:

France	$5,856,000,000
Portugal	670,000,000
Spain	2,000,000,000
Great Britain	3,885,000,000
Italy	2,560,000,000
Germany	3,385,000,000
Austria Hungary	1,112,000,000
Russia	3,333,000,000
United States	925,000,000

NEW YORK, MAY 24, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

THE EXPERIMENTAL GARDENS

THE STATUE OF SACAJAWEA

A VIEW IN CENTENNIAL PARK

THE LEWIS AND CLARK EXPOSITION OF PORTLAND, ORE.*

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, on Thursday, June 1, will touch an electric button in his office in the White House, and the current, speeding three thousand miles across the continent to Portland, Ore., will set all of the machinery of the great Lewis and Clark Exposition in motion. The same electric spark from Washington will start at that instant the chimes in one of the tall towers of the Government Building, and, with a joyous clang from their brazen throats, the notes of "America" will ring out over the greatest Exposition ever held in the Northwest. It is not by any means an affair of local interest, nor is its interest confined to the Pacific Slope. It has been conceived on such a magnificent scale, and the plans have been carried out with such enthusiasm by the people of the Northwest, that it will be an eye-opener to the visitors from the East, to whom Portland, the State of Oregon, and the other States of the territory explored by Lewis and Clark, have been but names, and with which they associated, in a more or less definite way, scenes of Indian massacres and hair-breadth escapes from grizzlies.

The National Government and ten States have erected buildings and sent valuable exhibits. There is hardly a nation worthy of the name that has not appropriated money to be well represented by its arts and industries.

The beautiful Exposition Park is but a short ride from the main part of the city of Portland; and this ride itself is of no common interest, as it gives one a good idea of this city of the West, in its push and resourcefulness, typical of the whole region. It is a city with fine business blocks, public buildings, including a large library that would do credit to any city in the East, and an air of prosperity about its modern homes. The park lies on both sides of a river that is studded with numerous islands, which have been utilized in various ways for the purposes of the Exposition. Landscape gardeners have added to the natural beauty of the spot, until the most exacting must be satisfied with the setting provided for the buildings and the "Trail."

The Goverment Building is a large structure with two wings. Two towers rise high above the roof. The Government has installed the entire exhibit that was shown at St. Louis; and, in addition, a great many things connected with the exploration and history of the Northwest never before shown. Large models of some of the Government's great irrigation projects, now being carried out, are placed in an annex to the main building. Here the visitor can see an enormous Arizona irrigation plant, with water running from a large dam into the sub-canals and ditches. There are three panoramas of the Yellowstone Park in Wyoming, Yosemite Park in California, and the Grand Canyon of the Colorado in the territory of Arizona. Special Agent James Boykin, of the Department of the Interior, made special trips through these national reservations, accompanied by an expert photographer and a painter. From the pictures taken and sketches made on the ground, these panoramas were constructed. An ingenious arrangement of lights gives the illusion of great depths and magnificent distances. There is a territorial display in a twin building to the irrigation annex, that includes exhibits from Alaska and the Philippines. A large hunting party was sent to Alaska to kill specimens of the animals of the territory, and the collection made by them is considered as practically complete. Over $200,000,000 worth of gold has been mined in Oregon; and the exhibit in the Mines and Metallurgy Building is overwhelming to people who think in dollars and cents instead of millions. There is a single piece of copper from Josephine County, that weighs 1,000 pounds, taken from the Golden Standard Ledge.

THE FORESTRY BUILDING, BUILT OF GIANT TREES

North Dakota has sent, as one of the attractions of its exhibit, the log cabin in which President Roosevelt lived for three years when he was a ranchman at Chimney Butte. Each log was numbered when it was taken down, and it has been reconstructed exactly as it stood originally. The interior furnishings have been brought with it, and among the relics is the President's old gun, that proved such a terror to evil-doers on the plains.

Portland, as well as San Francisco, is one of the great gateways to the Far East, and, as a natural result, the Oriental Exhibits Building is worth a long journey to see. Japan has a large section in which are specimens of everything she grows or manufactures. There are beautiful specimens of native embroidery worth a fortune in themselves, from decorated kimonos to elaborate wall panels and screens. There are carved ivories, bronzes, lacquer work, and gold and silver hammered into gun metal, cloisonne, satsuma ware, and hand-painted porcelain. China has given up much of her space to a large collection of inlaid furniture and Chinese bronzes. India ranks about third in the number of her exhibits. Ceylon is also represented.

Turkey, Algeria, Persia, and Egypt have an exhibit in common. One of the most interesting features is an Egyptian mausoleum, containing mummies that date back five thousand years.

Italy, France, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Austria-Hungary, and Switzerland are represented in the European Building. The exhibit from Italy is the largest, and takes up nearly

CONTINUED ON PAGE 449

*A short account of the Lewis and Clark Exposition was given in our issue of May 3.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

TWILIGHT FORGIVENESS

TEXT: EPHESIANS 4: 26

"Let not the sun go down upon your wrath"

"RIGHTEOUS indignation! An absurb verbal team that," says some one. "Two such antithetical words should never be yoked together. The first is found in God's lexicon of honored names. The second is of Satanic terminology. Can the lightnings and the sunbeams play together in a garden at the same hour? Can the blackness of midnight and the brightness of midnoon, be wedded at the same altar? Is not anger a sin? Is not anger's ebon featured twin-sister, Wrath, condemned again and again in sacred Scripture? 'Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous,' is the Solomonic arraignment of Hate's evil companions. And yet here, to-day, by this suggestive caption, you are going to talk about 'Twilight Forgivenesses,' as though it was right sometimes to be angry until sunset.

Righteous Anger

Anger always a sin? Wrath, always under divine condemnation? Oh no, my brother, you are wrong. Righteous indignation has a right to live by divine commandment. Supposing I go down the street and see a great, burly, drunken loafer abusing and kicking a little, helpless, cripple. If I have the heart of a man, shall not my eyes flash and my cheeks flush, and my fists clinch in the protection of that suffering child? Did not Christ in anger drive the money-changers out of the Temple? Supposing I should be called to my front door by a ring of the bell, and there I should meet a man who, with cowhide or club, should begin to beat me and to knock me down. Must I quietly submit to being knocked down? Oh no. That is not the Gospel. Paul says, "Be ye angry and sin not. Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." That means that there are times when we have a right to be indignant. There are times when we have a right to strike back. There are times when you and I must stand up for our rights. We are not doing justice to others, when we allow others to be unjust to us. "But," says my text," there comes a time when your anger must cool, and when your striking back must cease. With the setting sun you must bear no man a hard, a bitter, or an angry thought, or else that anger will do you more spiritual damage, than it can ever do your adversary."

This fact, then, I think we may take for granted. Now comes a practical question: How are you and I going to treat those people who have been unjust to us in the past? There are scores of them who have done us wrong. At the time, we did all we could to counteract this evil. Shall we continue to bear them a grudge? Shall we continue to be unforgiving and to bear malice towards them? Oh no. Having done our best to counteract the evil deeds they have done to us, we should forgive and forget. Let each day that is dead, bury the injustices of the past. "Twilight forgiveness" in the store, in the home, in the church, in our professional careers, and on the playground and in the schoolroom. May God help me to show you that every resentment harbored will curse you, as well as curse your fellow-men. Perhaps, when we attempt to pluck the motes out of our brother's eyes, we overlook huge beams in our own.

There is so much bad in the best of us,
  There is so much good in the worst of us,
It hardly behooves any of us,
  To think ill of the rest of us.

"Anger in itself is no sin," once wrote Dr. Goulburn. "But it has a tendency rapidly to become so, if it be harbored too long.

Like the Manna of the Wilderness

It corrupts and breeds worms if kept overnight in the close chambers of the heart. Then it will appear in the morbid shapes of spite, malice and revenge. The Christian rule is to throw it all away, before fermentation commences." Why? Because, inevitably, if a person harbors ill-will towards another, he will focus his vision simply and entirely upon the evil which a man does, and not upon the good he is capable of doing and has done. Because of some fault of character, because of some weakness of nature, because of some meanness, because of some poor, little, petty fault-finding disposition or some deprecatory jealousy in the make-up of your friend, you are ready to turn your back upon him, and let the future part you, as the waves of the sea separate the New Hemisphere from the old.

One offense is often sufficient to break up a life-time of friendship. "What is the matter, Mr. So and So?" I ask. "Has any one done you an injury? You look angry enough to make somebody suffer." "Well, I should say so," you answer. "You know my old friend, John Newman. We have been for years the closest of associates. We grew up together as boys. We have had many business dealings in common. Some months ago he came to me and said, 'Harry, I have a fine herd of cattle out in Western Kansas. I want you to help me weather the winter through.' I lent him $500. He has not only lost every cent of it, but as far as I can make out, he lied to me about the cattle. He never owned a horn or a hoof. He squandered my money in Wall street." "Is that so? What are you going to do?" "Nothing," you answer. "What can I do, except contemptuously leave him alone." Yes, you can do that if you will. But tell me, friend, has John Newman ever failed you before? I grant that he was not truthful. I grant that he did not do right. But are you going to let that one act, that one sin, blot out the five hundred good deeds he has done you in the past and the five hundred good deeds he would do for you in the future, if you would only forgive him this once, and give him another chance?

Injures Good Causes

But the danger of harboring resentment is not limited to the breaking of friendships; we may suffer it to prejudice us against good causes. Try as hard as we will, we must and do associate the success or the failure of the onward movements of great principles and causes with the personalities of our friends and neighbors. When Charles Stewart Parnell was dethroned from the respect and affections of his colleagues, the Irish cause of Home Rule met its Waterloo. Home Rule was defeated at the time when the palm of victory was about to be grasped by the outreaching hands of its advocates. When Mark Antony loved his sinful Egyptian enchantress more than he loved Rome, then the mightiest war chieftain who ever trod in the footsteps of Julius Cæsar, saw his followers flee his standards, even as the birds of the forests seek the shelter of their nests before the tempest blasts of the onsweeping tornado. When Mirabeau breathed his last and was thought to be untrue by his henchmen, then the Royalists' cause was defeated in France, and the guillotine had to be drenched with the blood of a Marie Antoinette and a Louis XVI. Say what you may, every man naturally represents a cause, or a principle, apart from his personality. When you bear grudges against men, you bear grudges against causes. When you divorce your affections from individuals, you lose your fidelity to the causes and movements which those men, in more than one sense, may typify.

Let me illustrate. Why are you prejudiced against the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ? You are not bad. You believe in Jesus as your Saviour. You were reared in a Christian home. Some of the best and happiest recollections of your life are of the Sunday School and of the church of which your mother was a member. "I know it," you answer. "I never think of the church of my youth but with moistened eyes and tremulous lips. I would not be the woman I am to-day, had I not had that past church training. But about ten years ago we had an awful church row. They say the worst rows on earth are church rows, and I believe it. The people in our church divided themselves into factions. My husband was a trustee. They charged him with dishonesty, and no more honest man ever lived than he. The minister might have stopped the difficulty, but he did not. We left the church. We took our letters. The result? My husband and I have never been inside of a church since. We are not infidels, however. We pray; we read the Bible; but we simply have no use for church people." Oh, my sister, your words are tragical. What! you have no use for the Church of Jesus Christ, merely because you are harboring a bitterness against some church members who did not do as they ought to do? Do you mean to tell me that you to-day have divorced all your interests from the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, which has done so much for your spiritual life, and is doing so much for the salvation of the world merely because you do not like a few members in it? Are you going to be such a narrow-minded, short sighted and unreasonable Christian as that?

Aloof From the Church

When I speak to you thus I am not talking at random There are hundreds and thousands of just such people as you, who have turned their backs upon the church. God's mightiest agency for doing good, merely because they have had an unfortunate experience with some of its members. The other day I was talking to a noble man. He gives away hundreds and thousands of dollars each year. Within his large mercantile establishment he runs a school, that his girl clerks and his boy clerks who have to earn a living at the time they should be in the schoolroom, should not be entirely deprived of an education. He gives hundreds of dollars annually for the temperance cause. No man who is trying to do right and is flung on his back ever appealed to him for help in vain. Yet that man, with all his vast influence, has not for years darkened church doors. Years ago, there was a church difficulty which revolved about him and his family. Sad, sad, infinitely sad, that he should refuse to be one with the church, because of a bitter grudge he holds against some church members, who did not treat him right! For, in spite of all he has done, I confidently assert that the seed he had sown, would have multiplied a thousandfold, instead of as now producing only sixtyfold, had he been working inside of the Church of God, instead of outside. That man for years has held aloof from the church, because he cherished resentment against some of its members. He disobeyed the injunction of my text: "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

"Never ask me to be a member of the Humane Society again," said the wife of one of my elders a short time ago. "Why not?" "About ten years ago I went to one of their meetings. Of all the backbitings and censorious criticisms ever heard, theirs were the worst." Oh, friend, is such a statement right? Because Judas betrayed Christ, is that any reason you should refuse to be a disciple of Christ? Because last year one of our missionary leaders, or one of the trustees of an orphan's home proved a rascal, and was found to be a defaulter, is that any reason we should refuse our aid towards those beneficent institutions? In your hatred for man you are blinding your eyes to the good you can do to institutions and great reformatory movements. Live for movements. Live for institutions. If some people who are working by your side for those causes are not what they ought to be, then do not, as a coward, desert your post on the picket lines of the world's great armies in the time of mortal combat.

Anger Alienates Friends

But there is yet another reason why you should drop all your hatreds and animosities as kindlings into the great conflagrations of the setting sun. You may be purified by the divine fires of trouble. But no man was ever able to make a brother better and truer and purer, by hatred and malice and wrath and contempt. You have tried it in the past. You have piled up your excoriating remarks in great heaps. You have rolled down great avalanches of denunciation. You have exhausted your whole vocabulary, and roamed through hundreds of dictionary pages to find verbiage sulphurous enough to depict your withering contempt. But did it do any good? Have you made your brother love you any better? Have you made him a truer or a better man? Have you helped your relationship with him in the least? For fifteen years you have walked down the street and met him on an average at least once a week. You stare at him. What good are you accomplishing by such bitter actions? Absolutely none. Absolutely no good results for yourself. Absolutely no good results for him.

What is the purpose hidden in your heart of harboring up that grudge or malice or hatred against your neighbors or your past friend? One of the first moves of a prosecuting attorney in trying a criminal, is to find a motive for the crime. Every crime, as a rule, has a motive. What motive have you for the sinful hatred against your neighbor? Because you hate him, do you think he will be inspired by love to return to you four-ld of what he took? Because you hate him, do you ink he will be influenced to be a better and a nobler aracter? Because you hate him, do you think the l bonds of affection will be knitted together again? We should renounce all our hatreds and bitternesses d animosities, toward our brothers, because these treds are cursing our spiritual lives as well as theirs. u can denounce your neighbor for doing wrong. u can hate him or despise him. Oh, yes. But en you do, be well aware that your own spiritual e is gradually ebbing away. Week by week, month month, year by year, on account of that bitterness u have been lifting higher and higher and higher, insurmountable wall between you and God. Brother, ter, it is high time you tore down that obstructing ll. It is high time you consumed that hatred in the nflagration of the setting sun. It is destroying your iritual hopes. There is no doubt about it; you can- t love your God with all your soul and mind and rength, and hate your neighbor at the same time.

Can you not forgive others as you would have Christ rgive you? Not many years ago, wrote a famous riter, a missionary was preaching to a crowd of natives far-off India. Suddenly a native who stood behind m, lifted a huge stick to crush in the missionary's ull, but happily the blow fell short. The crowd ould have torn this would-be murderer to pieces, but e speaker commanded them to stop. "Kill him! kill m!" cried the multitude. "No," said the missionary, I will not allow you to kill him." Then turning to e affrighted man, he said, "Brother, my religion mmands me to love my enemies, and to do good to ose who injure me. I forgive you, brother. But remember, that though you escaped punishment at my hands, you cannot escape punishment at the hands of God, unless you repent of your sins." Men, women, can you forgive as this missionary forgave? Christ bids you to forgive. Can you not feel as the missionary taught, that when you are hating your brother, you are hating Christ? There is no escape from eternal punishment, unless you repent of your sins, and forgive those who have injured you. See! the sun is set. It is now the twilight hour. Hear ye not the Divine commandment? "Be ye angry and sin not. Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

In closing, I would draw a picture of the evening hour which we used to spend in our childhood days, and find in it a symbol of our evening relationship with God. The breakfast was nearly always a hurried meal. The children had to get off to school. The father had to rush away to business. The mother had no servants in those days, and all the housework had to be done with her own hands. Many cares came with their imminent demands and said, " 'Tend to me, 'tend to me now." Then, when the lunch hour rolled around, the dining-room table was set only for two or three. Most of the family were away. But in the evening hour father came home from the store. Then mother had her work finished. She had put on her clean dress. The boys were home from school or work, and the girls were all ready for the games and innocent pleasures of the evening. "How did you get on, father?" mother asked. "Oh," said he, "things were kind of topsy-turvy at the store. It did seem as though I had to scold and find fault an awful lot. But after all, mother, I think the boys at the store will improve, if I only continue to teach them right." Then mother told her experience of the day. The children had all their happy stories to repeat. Then one of the girls began to tell how some one had treated her badly, and she said, "Mother, I am just as mad at Clara as I can be." "There, there, there, child," said your mother, "Stop that. You have no right to bring home disagreeable things and feel unhappy towards any one. Let us leave all our cares and worries and bitternesses on our front door step. This is family night. Let us all love everybody and be happy."

Love one another, and be happy you did. No one who ever came in touch with mother's sweet smile could ever do anything but love. Thus God wants us to come to him in the twilight hour. Employer, you have scolded that clerk enough because he broke the glass counter, check your anger. Business man, many hours ago you denounced that business associate who did you wrong. He knows that you will not allow him to be unjust again. Let the matter drop. Schoolgirl, no need of telling the mean things that you know about your classmate. Forget and forgive. Remember, this is the evening hour. The twilight has grown darker and darker. The myriads of stars, as torches in the heavens, have been lighted. "Come!" says Christ, "Come and sit by my side, my child. Leave all of the injustices of the past behind. Remember, son, that as you have been misrepresented, so have I. Remember, daughter, as others have ill-used you, so have they ill-used your Christ. Forget and forgive the tresspassess of others, as I am blotting out your sins in my blood. This is the twilight hour. Come, and sit, and talk with me. I am your friend and Saviour, Jesus." "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

THE LEWIS AND CLARK EXPOSITION OF PORTLAND, ORE.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 447

alf the space in the building. It is valued at one mil- on dollars. There are famous groups of statuary from ne Loggia in Florence, and figures from Naples, Rome, nd Venice. All of the great modern masters of Italy re represented. Venice and Genoa have sent mosaics, nd Florence, silver filigree work.

France has the second largest exhibit. There is a rench drawing-room of the time of Louis Le Grand, nd a display of gowns that will prove irresistible to eminine visitors. The collection of ceramics, tapestries, ronzes and paintings complete the French exhibit. In ddition, both Italy and France are well represented in he Fine Arts Building. Germany has sent a fac-simile f the famous Sistine Madonna done in embroidery. It equired three years for its completion, and is worth 10,000. There is a large organ, with an orchestra ttachment, that is greatly valued by the Germans hemselves as a masterpiece of construction.

Great Britain's exhibit is rich in the graphic arts, linen, orcelain and cutlery. Holland sends a large number f Delft pieces, hammered brass and copper. Sweden nd Norway have a joint exhibit. Austria has a large lisplay of art work, while Hungary is not far behind in nany beautiful carvings and embroideries.

The Art Building contains a collection that will include aintings illustrating events in American history. In ne room may be seen relics of the Lewis and Clark xpedition. There are a number of powder horns and ther pieces of equipment carried by the party, and now wned by Major O. F. Clark, a grandson of the explorer; also a camp chest that was given to Captain Clark by the Marquis de Lafayette. From an artistic standpoint, one of the most interesting features of the fair is the statue of Sacajawea, the Shoshone Indian woman, who acted as guide to Lewis and Clark. It has been placed in Columbia Court, the central plaza of the Exposition. It is the work of Miss Alice Hooper, of Denver. The Indian girl, looking westward toward the Pacific, is dressed in a short hunting shirt and deerskin leggings. A blanket is draped about her shoulders and a papoose is strapped to her back. The figure is full-size, and very life-like. It was modeled from the last full-blood Shoshone woman in the West. It is the first statue ever erected in honor of an Indian woman, and will be placed, after the Exposition, in some public square in the city of Portland. Her story is as familiar now as is that of Pocahontas. It is extremely doubtful if the explorers would have succeeded in reaching the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, if it had not been for Sacajawea's untiring zeal and courage.

A CORNER OF THE FORESTRY BUILDING
Showing Logs Weighing 32 Tons Apiece

The Forestry Building is constructed entirely of native timber, and has the appearance of an enormous Swiss chalet. The logs of the lower stories are from the "giant tree," and average thirty-two tons apiece. The bark has been left, adding much to the rustic appearance of the edifice. Besides the buildings that have been mentioned, there are the Agricultural Building, Machinery Building, Transportation Building, where all means of conveyance are shown, from the old prairie schooner to the type of engine that draws the Empire State Express; the Festival Hall, where thirty-four conventions will be held during the coming summer, and several edifices devoted to various industries.

The great Northwest is surely to be congratulated in taking up the somewhat worn idea of an Exposition, and making it something new.

THE PRESENT SITUATION IN UTAH

DO the people of the country properly understand the issue that came before the Mormon Church at their recent annual Conference, April 6th, and how it was decided? The facts are these:

Reed Smoot and others, who were brought before the Senate Committee in Washington, admitted that the President of the Mormon Church and his Apostles were living in polygamy, thus violating civil and ecclesiastical law. Smoot was quick to see that a knowledge of this fact jeopardized the retention of his seat in the Senate. Thereupon, when he returned home, for his own protection, he made a demand that at the ensuing annual Conference of the Church, two of the apostles be suspended, that is, that their names be not given to the congregations to vote upon, which would be practically to remove them. In other words (as says the Salt Lake Tribune), Reed Smoot and President Smith, by recognizing Smoot's complaint, pretended to arrange that the Church should be monogamistic. Some steps were taken in the direction of an inquiry. Whereupon, the following startling situation was developed: the two apostles for whose suspension Mr. Smoot had asked, remarked that they were polygamists when Reed Smoot was inducted into the quorum, and that he knew it; that inasmuch as the law of God, called the manifesto, was just as explicit in forbidding present plural marriage relation with wives who were taken before the manifesto, as it was in relation to polygamous marriages made since the manifesto, there was no more justification for an inquiry concerning them than there was for an investigation of the apostles or officials who were living with their plural wives.

"In point of fact," continues the Salt Lake Tribune, "it was rather plainly indicated that the Church would find a pretty lively scrap on its hands, in the quorum of the twelve, if it attempted to put these particular men on trial and convict them, and probably dismiss or suspend them, for the sake of Reed Smoot's ambition. At this important juncture, when it was most desirable that no further disquietude among the 'saints' should be apparent, when the annual Conference was about to assemble, and while the public awaited the pressing of these charges; then was Reed Smoot called to San Francisco by urgent business (?) and so was unable to attend the Conference and press the charges. In his desertion of the championship of monogamy in the quorum of the twelve apostles; in his utter abandonment of the fight against polygamy in his quorum, the last vestige of opposition, or even pretended opposition, has vanished.

"On April 6, 1905, after the Church had been officially challenged, when two, if not more apostles, who have taken plural wives since the manifesto, were voted into apostolic office; and when seven others, living equally in violation of the manifesto (for they live in the plural marriage relation), were sustained as president and apostles, the Church deliberately, with due notice given to all the world that the case was on for decision, voted itself to be polygamistic.

"There is no possible escape from this; and [illegible] should take instant recognition of the fact that the Church, with the issue plainly drawn, or pretended to be drawn, after due challenge, has made its choice."

THE REVIVAL AT ASHEVILLE, N. C.

A CHILDREN'S MEETING IN THE PUBLIC SQUARE

MR. AND MRS. J. J. LOWE

THE GREAT CHORUS CHOIR OF THE REVIVAL MEETINGS

FROM Asheville, N. C., comes news of a deeply interesting movement which has brought many souls into the Kingdom. All the churches in the city are receiving accessions to their membership, and there are many others inquiring their way to Christ, who will doubtless be led under the care of the local pastors to find peace in believing. The following story of the movement comes from an eye-witness who has been in the work from the beginning:

Asheville, N. C. is the queen city of the Appalachians, resting upon a plateau nearly 2,500 feet above the sea level, and encircled by the highest mountains in the United States east of the Rockies. The city is well built and governed; the streets are well-paved, and the people are industrious, wide-awake and progressive. There are a number of educational interests here, among them being the Normal Collegiate Institute, and the Bingham Military Institute. There are also, of course, numerous well built, well equipped, and well supplied churches. The Ministerial Association includes the pastors of all the Protestant churches of the city.

Some months ago they decided upon a concerted evangelistic movement, and Dr. L. W. Munhall of Philadelphia was invited to take charge of it. The Auditorium, with accommodations for 2,500, was rented for three weeks. A chorus choir of about 200 voices was organized and drilled by one of the city pastors, Rev. A. T. Bell. Dr. Munhall was assisted by Prof. and Mrs. John J. Lowe, Gospel singers of Philadelphia.

The union of the pastors has been perfect, and the members of the various churches have vied with one another in the good work. Dr. Munhall is a stalwart believer in the power of the Bible as the Word of God, and is unswervingly loyal to the orthodox faith. His sermons and addresses have been plain, pointed, direct and intensely Scriptural. The audiences that have gathered, both afternoon and night, have been large, intelligent and serious. A large corps of personal workers was organized and instructed in dealing with inquirers, by Dr. Campbell, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. These were so located in the night meetings as to be able to reach anyone who gave indication of desiring to become a Christian. Dr. Munhall never asks anyone to sign a card, but at the close of each meeting makes a clear statement of what is required of one to become a Christian, and then those that accept Christ as Saviour ar Lord, are asked to confess him verbally before th audience. The names and church preferences of suc as do this are then secured by the workers, and th information is given to the pastors. Several hundre have been thus brought into personal relation of th most hopeful kind with the pastors.

EVANGELIST MUNHALL (1) AND HIS ASSOCIATE WORKERS

Members of the Asheville, N. C., Ministerial Conference Uniting for the Revival

Prof. Lowe conducted six meetin for the children, in the First Presb terian Church, with an average atten ance of nearly six hundred, and or meeting on the public square. Saturda nights these children had reserved sea in the Auditorium, the rest of the hou being occupied to its full capacity b older people, while Professor Low assisted by his wife, gave "The Stor of Jesus" in speech and song, illus rated by several hundred stereoscopi pictures.

A systematic house-to-house visitatio was made, including every home in th city, in the interests of the work. On day was set apart as a day of fastin and prayer. Nearly every place of bus ness in the city was closed that day a 2.30 P. M. for two hours, and the me in large numbers, attended the meet ing in the Auditorium. On the morn ing of that day, prayer-meetings wer held all over the city, in the homes o the people. A number of open-air meet ings were held on the public square one of which was of the Young Peoples societies. At its close they marche to the Auditorium, half a mile distant singing heartily as they went.

The churches have been greatly revived. The entir city has been impressed as never before. Asheville will without doubt, for many years to come, reap blesse results from this movement. R. U. G.

PROMINENT MEN of the HOUR

PROFESSOR JACOB HOLLANDER, of the faculty of Johns Hopkins University, has been sent as special commissioner to Santo Domingo, by President Roosevelt. The treaty preventing forcible debt collecting in that country by European nations, it will be remembered, was not ratified by the Senate. The situation has reached an acute stage, and it is likely that President Morales will agree to the proposition of the United States, that America collect the custom-house duties, turn over forty five per cent. to the island government, and the remainder to be held in New York until a definite line of action in regard to the foreign claims can be decided on.

* * *

ROB'T WATCHORN

Copyright, Collier's Weekly

CARLO MORALES

CARL BAUM

CARL BAUM, Chief Engineer of the Kaiser Wilhelm II., of the North German Lloyd Line, has traveled more miles than any other officer afloat. The Kaiser Wilhelm displayed all of its bunting recently in honor of the completion of Engineer Baum's 300th round trip across the Atlantic. He made his first trip over in the Hansa, in 1861, and it took fifteen days. At present the running time is less than six. When he first took charge as engineer, a few hundred tons of coal sufficed for a whole voyage. Now he burns about 550 tons a day. Mr. Baum was born in Lamsdorf, Bavaria, and is a graduate of a German technical school, and received a thorough training in his exacting profession. He has never had an accident in his engine room. Physically he is an ideal seaman, large, with gray beard, and a bluff and hearty manner. Probably there is no other officer so well known to the trans-Atlantic traveler as he.

CHARLES B. AYCOCK

JACOB HOLLANDER

ROBERT WATCHORN is the new Immigration Commissioner for the port of New York. His office, at Ellis Island, has received during the last six weeks the larges number of immigrants tha have ever passed through a given point in the same space of time. The new Commissioner has coped successfully with this sudden rush, and all have been examined, passed, or rejected, with no more than the usual delay neces sary for a thorough examination.

* * *

CHARLES B. AYCOCK, Governor of North Carolina, is one of the active, pushing men of the New South. He is especially interested in improved schools throughout the Southern States. His advocacy of better district schools for whites and blacks, which must be the foundation of better conditions in the rural communities, has won the commendation of America's most prominent educators. The consolidation of school districts has resulted in better buildings and in the hiring of more competent teachers.

* * *

PRESIDENT CARLO MORALES, of Santo Domingo, has been occupying a prominent place in the news of the day. The small island over which he rules, more or less autocratically, has been in trouble with a number of European nations, on account of long standing debts. Constant revolutions have interfered seriously with President Morales administration, and have affected the general prosperity of Santo Domingo. Morales is a man of strong will, and is probably one of the most intellectual men that has ever directed the destinies of the island republic.

International Jubilee of the Y. M. C. A.

PRINCE OSCAR OF SWEDEN, AND HIS WIFE

SOME OF THE NOTABLE LEADERS IN THE CONGRESS

BARONESS BARTHOLDI AND AMERICAN DELEGATES

AN event of unusual interest to Christian workers of all denominations throughout the world, has just taken place in Paris. The occasion was the celebration of the International Jubilee of the Young Men's Christian Association. Coincident with the Sixteenth International Conference of the organization, was the fiftieth anniversary of the first World's Conference, and it was decided to commemorate it in a suitable manner. Accordingly, arrangements were made many months in advance, and invitations were extended to branches of the organization in different countries, inviting the largest representation possible at the anniversary exercises in the French capital.

An organizing committee was appointed, consisting of G. Gaspari, president; J. Galtier, vice-president; Count J. de Pourtales, vice-president; Dr. A. Morin, president of the commission of board and lodging, and M. Em. Sutter, secretary. This committee perfected all the necessary arrangements for the coming meetings.

The delegates from the United States and Canada were:

L. C. Morse, J. R. Mott, C. J. Hicks, W. B. Millar, Cyton S. Cooper, H. P. Andersen, Secretaries of International Committee; H. W. Ober, Editor of Association Men, New York; W. M. Birks, Montreal, Que.; Dr. Robert C. Paterson, Montreal, Quebec; Frederick Thomas, Denver, Colo.; Henry D. Dickson, G. Sanford, Fleming H. Revell, James Stokes, New York; J. Jenkins, Detroit, Mich.; C. F. Tibbitts, S. W. Woodward, Washington, D. C.; J. W. Frost, Milwaukee, Wis.; Dr. Edw. P. George, Denver, Colo.; Hon. Clarence P. Dodge, Colorado Springs, Colo.; R. B. Roush, Baltimore, Md.; Henry Clara, Toronto, Ont.; B. F. Pierce, Brockton, Mass.; William H. Cook, Worcester, Mass.; W. H. Eagleson, Ottawa, Ont.; O. A. Eberhardt, Springfield, Mass.; J. G. Bookwalter, Boston, Mass.; J. H. Edwards, Reading, Pa.; Dr. M. H. Watts, Terre Haute, Ind.

Delegations from twenty-five to thirty nations were present when the Conference assembled in the great Charity Bazar Building. It was shown that the organization has in recent years become particularly strong and well organized in India, China, Japan, South Africa and Australasia, as well as greatly increasing in membership in the older countries.

It was at the first Paris Conference in 1855 that the platform was adopted, which has proved to be the broad basis upon which the World's Y. M. C. A. movement has been developed. This action was shaped largely by two Americans, George H. Stuart and Abel Stevens, who were distinguished Association men of their day. The adherence of the Associations to the basis adopted fifty years ago was the important issue on which discussion centred this year. In some countries of Europe, the Association has become largely the organization of a single church, of which the pastor is the president, and the Association is merely a class of young men. In a number of the larger cities in Europe, such as Berlin, Rome, Paris, Stuttgart, the Associations have adopted the type of Associations which prevail in the English-speaking nations and the Orient.

The Conference headquarters in Paris were in the James Stokes Memorial Y. M. C. A. Building.

The Congress opened on May 27, and was called to order by Dean Hall, of Christiania, Norway. Count de Pourtales was elected president. Lord Kinnaird, who was one of the vice-presidents, tendered to the delegates present, the good wishes of King Edward of England, for the success of the Congress. Messages of similar import from the rulers of other countries were also presented and read to the great audience.

THE ENTIRE GROUP OF DELEGATES AND THEIR WIVES

Prince Bernadotte, the second son of the King of Sweden and Norway, and one of the vice-presidents of the Congress, delivered an address in sympathy with the efforts of the Young Men's Christian Association. "That organization," he said, "had now 7,061 branches, and a total membership of 688,000 persons."

At the following day's session, addresses were delivered by Count de Pourtales, Lord Kinnaird, and Count von Bernstorff, dealing with the work and present status of the Association. Later in the day, a reception was tendered by Sir George Williams, the founder of the Y. M. C. A., at which all the members of the Congress attended. It was in 1844, while he was occupying a humble clerical position, that he conceived the idea of organizing the body of workers which, today, is known throughout the entire world.

The Ambassadors of the United States and Great Britain, the Minister of Norway and Sweden, with the other ambassadors and ministers, also gave receptions in honor of the members of the Congress.

It was a splendid assemblage that gathered in the great hall at the opening of the Congress. Looking round upon the imposing scene, no thoughtful observer could help being struck by the remarkable rise of the organization which, half a century ago, originated in the brain of a poor clerk in a commercial house in London. The story of the modest beginning of the Y. M. C. A. is already well known to many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. George Williams was one of a dozen or more clerks who were not only earnest Christians, but who had pledged themselves to use their influence to bring others into the Kingdom. Every day they devoted an hour to religious services in an upper room, and always kept steadily in view the one great purpose of their lives—the reclamation of young men.

During the latter half of the year 1844, these meetings were kept up, and it was not till the following year that they began to bear fruit. Very soon thereafter, these pioneers formed themselves into an organization known as "The Society for Improving the Condition of Young Men in the Drapery and Other Trades." This was changed soon afterward to the simpler and more serviceable title: "Young Men's Christian Association." Other cities caught the idea, and, before long, there were many such clubs or societies in different parts of the United Kingdom, and a few even across the Channel in Paris. The work begun in that little "upper room" was timely and even providential. It was under divine blessing from the very outset.

Soon Canada fell into line, and an Association was formed in Montreal in 1851. The following year saw similar societies organized in Boston and New York. Cincinnati is said to have had a regular organization as early as 1848. It was not until 1854, however, that a Confederation of Societies in the United States and British Provinces was formed, constituting what was really the first Y. M. C. A. This step was taken by the Convention which met in Buffalo, where thirty-five societies united, with an aggregate membership of some 3,000. The first World's Conference of the Y. M. C. A. was held in Paris in 1855, and it is the semi-centenary of that event which has just been celebrated so enthusiastically in the French capital.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

A Personal Revival

WE read a great deal just now about great waves of revival that sweep over towns, counties and kingdoms, States and communities. Oh, we say, if we had the wings of a dove, we would hasten thither and share in the blessedness of that revival. But we are fast bound at home.

What is the reason we cannot have a personal revival? Do we need to be in a crowd? Is not God near us? Has he not bidden us to enter into the closet, shut the door and pray to Him? Is Bible reading not our own privilege? Can we not be candid with ourselves, repent our sins and our backslidings, and ask God to let us begin anew? If we do this, ours will be a personal revival of religion. Should a number of Christians, hitherto lukewarm, without contact with each other, but moved by a divine breath, a divine impulse, have this sort of personal revival, presently the church and society would be stirred to the centre, and all life would be brightened, beautified and uplifted, while heaven would begin below.

Mont-Lawn and the Children

IT is now eleven years since, on a June day in 1894, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD threw open to the tenement waifs of New York City the hospitable doors of its Children's Home at beautiful Mont-Lawn on the Hudson. No blare of trumpets announced the humble beginning of this work, which has since spread beyond all our expectations. That first season convinced us that the choice of situation was a wise one, when we noted the beneficial effects upon the poor little thin-bodied, wan-cheeked boys and girls, who became bronzed and invigorated by the mountain air and wholesome food. Since that first opening day over 22,000 tenement children, many of them orphans, and all of them belonging to the very poorest class, have sojourned at Mont-Lawn, and have gone back to their alley and tenement homes, carrying with them recollections of happy days and kind friends.

From the very first, our readers have been heart and soul with us in this enterprise. Their hearts have warmed toward the children of the poor, and as they looked with love and gratitude upon their own little ones, they have been touched with a feeling of infinite pity and sadness for those unfortunate waifs whose lives are passed in the shadow of poverty and suffering. They have seen the work at Mont-Lawn go forward steadily, increasing in scope and usefulness with each year; they have watched the buildings multiply, until now the Home group includes three large dormitories, a main building, annex, summer kitchen, dining tent, outdoor gymnasium, etc., instead of the few old-fashioned buildings with which we began. This summer, God willing, it is proposed to crown the work by the dedication and formal opening of the beautiful new Chapel—our Children's Temple, wherein hereafter the little ones of all nationalities who come to Mont-Lawn may worship the great Father of all, and where visitors to the Home may unite with its inmates in their simple exercises.

On another page of this issue, we present a comparative statement covering the last three years' work at Mont-Lawn, which will be especially gratifying to all who have been in sympathy with the work and contributors to its advancement. Every dollar so given has found its mark, and has helped in bringing health and happiness to some forlorn little specimen of humanity, to whom "holidays" and "the country" were words in a strange and unknown tongue. Conducted with rigid economy, the money has been made to do a wonderful work in the keeping of over 2,000 child visitors yearly, and in the maintenance and extension of the Home and its working facilities.

We ask the co-operation of our friends in the effort to make the present summer the banner season of our Children's Home. When you are arranging your own holiday, don't forget the little lads and lasses of the tenements. With $3 you may send some little one to Mont-Lawn as your special protege; with $21, you may endow a bed for the season, assuring seven little waifs of rest, shelter, and entertainment for the summer. Your own pleasure will be the keener, and your sleep the sweeter, if you have remembered the Saviour's injunction and done a willing kindness even to "the least of these."

The Y. M. C. A. Celebration

MORE than ordinary interest attaches to the celebration of the Young Men's Christian Association in the French capital, of which detailed account appears on another page. It is hard to believe that an organization so important and so useful is so young. From that small beginning in that London dry-goods house, to the present world-wide existence, is an immense development. The idea in the mind of Sir George Williams was an inspiration, which was immediately recognized as a means of meeting a real need. The rich men had their clubs, but the young men in business, away from home influences, had no place of meeting except such as were inimical to their religious interests. The value of an institution in which they could enjoy religious intercourse was obvious. Yet no one had thought of it. The idea was clearly of God, and it took hold and spread, as a divine idea will.

How much the world owes to that institution no man can estimate. Parents the world over owe to it the salvation of their sons. It is with anxious hearts that they send their boys into the cities in the midst of temptations. The young man must have diversion, amusement, relaxation. Where could he go when he was released from business? Would home ties keep him out of bad company? The Y. M. C. A. took hold of him. Probably he would rather be in good company than in evil, and here was his opportunity. There he found pleasant companions, wholesome amusement, mental stimulus. In every city where the institution exists there are numbers whom it has saved at the most critical period of their lives. It deserves from every Christian the most cordial and hearty support for the work it has done and is still doing in the world.

The Jewish Massacres

REPORTS of a renewal of anti-Jewish outrages come from Southwestern Russia. Attempts are made to suppress the news, but there is no reason to doubt that fatal riots have occurred. At Gostynin, in the Province of Warsaw; at Melitopol, in the government of Taurida, and at Zhitomir, in the government of Volhynia, there were almost simultaneous outbreaks. In Zhitomir, the rioting continued through Sunday, May 7, until the following Tuesday, with the result that fifteen Jews were killed and about two hundred wounded. The Jews telegraphed to friends in St. Petersburg, begging them to appeal to the Government for protection. In response, martial law was proclaimed and troops were sent to restore order. A Russian paper notices the coincidence, that Kroushevan, formerly the editor of an anti-Semitic paper at Kishineff, had begun the publication of a new paper on the same lines. It suggests that the new massacres are probably the result of Kroushevan's violent articles. Hostility to the Jews is latent throughout the district and is easily kindled into flame by small provocation.

We do not know to what extent religion enters into this hatred of the Jews. The lower classes of the Russian people are so ignorant and superstitious, that it is possible they still believe the hideous stories invented of Jewish rites, or it may be that they cherish the resultant prejudices which once were common throughout Europe. It is probable, however, that their antipathy is a race, rather than a religious, hatred. The Jew succeeds in business, he is provident and enterprising, and, in spite of being handicapped by Russian law, he amasses a fortune, where the ordinary citizen fails. In many minds, doubtless envy of his commercial success is at the root of the popular hatred, and if it happens that his fellow-citizens are in his debt, a motive is at once obvious for killing him or driving him out of the country.

It is worthy of notice that the country which is at the present time overwhelmed with calamity in a disastrous foreign war, and in domestic upheavals that threaten to develop into revolution, is the country which has won a bad reputation by the persecution of the Jews. This is in the line of past history. God is f filling the warning that accompanied the blessing of people: "I will bless them that bless thee, and cu them that curse thee." The nations which have per cuted the Jews have learned by bitter experience wh that curse means. Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Ron and, in later times, Spain, have fallen under that cur while the nations that have given the Jews asylum a protection, have inherited the blessing. The Jews ha been scattered among the nations, according to Goo word, but he "hath not cast away his people," and is something more than a coincidence that during t long centuries of their affliction, the blessing and t curse uttered so long ago have been exactly fulfilled.

Your Influence

DO not despise your influence because it may appe small and insignificant. Small things may posse a potentiality that is well-nigh immeasurable.

Many years ago, there was a slave in North Caroli named Omeroh. He was born in West Africa, on th banks of the Senegal River, and was taken from h native land in his youth. Mohammedan in faith, h afterward became a Christian, and when he had learne the truth, it was his highest wish that he might be abl somehow, to convey the precious Gospel message to h kindred. So heavily was this burden laid on his hear that he continually spoke of it. His intense intere attracted attention among many who believed in h sincerity, and this at last led to the realization of h dearest desire.

These friends informed the American Bible Societ of the pleadings and the prayers of Omeroh for th enlightenment of his native land, and the Societ ordered its agents to tell the traders on the Africa coast to carry the message to Omeroh's old home in th far interior; that the Bible would be sent there if would be welcomed. No answer came to this offer o the Gospel, but Omeroh kept on praying and pleading For nearly twenty years the message was duly sen every year, but it still remained unanswered. At last just as a new Arabic translation of the Scriptures wa completed, the answer came that the Bible would b welcomed by the Foulahs, the tribe to which Omero had belonged. To-day, that whole section is evangelized The slave's prayer of many years is answered, and th great object for which he used all the influence at hi command, is a thing accomplished. He died long ago but his memory lives, and his influence is felt on tw continents in the uplifting of the Cross of Christ for th salvation of men.

Every one of us, no matter how humble, exerts som influence, either for good or evil, upon our fellow-men If we consecrate that influence to the highest purposes be sure that it will not fail of Divine blessing an ultimate realization.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST J. D. BELKNAP has just closed a series o successful meetings in Great Barrington, Mass.

—REV. G. S. ROBERTS and the Singing Evangelist Mr E. A. Vail, have conducted a nine days' series of meetings at Daisy, La., at which much good was accomplished —EVANGELIST CLARENCE B. STROUSE has just closed a series of remarkable meetings at Milledgeville, Ga. The whole town was spiritually shaken. The meetings were under the auspices of the Business Men's Gospel Union. Business was suspended during the day services. Dr. Strouse is now conducting a similar work at Helena, Ark.

—REV. JOHN E. BROWN, with his choir director, Mr. Curry, has lately conducted a series of very successful meetings in Epworth M. E. Church, Norfolk, Va. At the sixth day's service, the people flocked to the altar. More than 400 confessed Christ. Cordial interest was shown by other churches, and Baptists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians worked actively together.

—EVANGELISTS REV. MARTIN ARMSTRONG of Baldwin, Kans., and Prof. Clarence E. Kimbill, of Dixon, Ill., who have been conducting meetings throughout Colorado, Wyoming, Texas and Arizona since last October, have just closed a successful series of services in the First Methodist Church, Williams, Ariz. The meetings have resulted in many conversions and accessions to the local church.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Russian Fleets Unite

AFTER its long voyage, the Russian squadron, under the command of Admiral Niebogatoff, has effected a junction with Vice-Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet. The junction was made in the ben sea on May 9. Niebogatoff apparently expected find his comrade at Saigon, in French Indo-China, r he was heading for that port, when he was met by a ruiser from Rojestvensky's fleet, giving him a new ren-ezvous. He was probably unaware of the change in e situation, which had followed Japan's protest to rance, against the Russians being allowed to use rench ports as their own. That they have been doing throughout the war is now clearly proved. A cor-spondent of the New York Sun reported that Rojest-nsky was allowed to stay in Kamranh Bay for ten ys, during which he took aboard immense supplies coal, cattle, water, and provisions, in defiance of the utrality laws. This aid to Russia naturally exaspe-ted Japan, and a formal protest was made to the rench Government. Friendly representations were o made to France by Great Britain, which is directly terested. Under her treaty with pan, she is liable to be called on to go to Japan's assistance, the event of her becoming in-lved with a second enemy. It therefore to England's interest at France should not give um-age to Japan. Orders were mediately sent out warning jestvensky away from Kam-nh Bay and from other French rts. It is contended by Japan at the Russians have enjoyed rench hospitality for twenty-four ys altogether, and besides re-iving supplies, were permitted use the French telegraph fa-ities at Saigon. They were thus abled to communicate with St. tersburg and direct the move-nt of the Vladivostok squadron. blic opinion in Japan is violently sturbed, and though the Govern-nt declares it will be patient, it rns France that there are limits its forbearance. Already a vement is on foot to boycott rench goods, and there is talk insisting on damages when the r is over. Japan contends at in supplying the Russian et, France has really taken rt in the war, and has given Russia precisely the sistance of which she was most in need, and this in ite of her boasted neutrality and professed national iendship.

He hath put forth his hands against such as were at peace with m; he hath broken his covenant (Psalm 55: 20).

THE THIRD BALTIC FLEET, SEEN FROM ONE OF ADMIRAL NIEBOGATOFF'S CRUISERS

he Railroad Horror

The whole country was shocked on May 11 by the ws of a distressing railroad disaster, which occurred ar Harrisburg, Pa., in the early morning hours. It pears, as near as can be learned, that a freight train nsisting of sixty-eight cars, east bound, was proceed-g on its way about one o'clock in the morning, when e engineer saw a shifting engine and several cars fore him on the same track. He at once shut off eam and applied the brakes. The train was a heavy e and the rear cars pressed sharply on the forward rs when they came to the sudden stop. The strain the air-valves was severe, and a connection in the iddle of the train blew out. This caused two of the rs to buckle, and they fell over on the parallel track. st at that moment the Cleveland and Cincinnati press, which had left Philadelphia about eleven clock, came thundering past and struck the overturn-d cars. The express was not badly injured and was on brought to a stop. But one of the overturned rs it had struck was loaded with dynamite, and almost instantly there was an explosion, which could be felt for miles around. People at Harrisburg thought an earthquake had occurred. The discharge tore both trains to fragments and set them on fire. Then there was a scene of horror that baffles description. Most of the passengers in the express were in the sleepers. Some were blown through the sides of the cars by the explosion, and torn and bleeding, and almost naked, wandered away in a dazed condition. Others were pinned beneath the wreckage and, unable to move, were burned to death. The survivors heroically tried to rescue them, but the flames set their clothes on fire and drove them away. The shrieks of the sufferers could be plainly heard, but it was impossible to reach them. Firemen were quickly brought to the scene, but they could do nothing to check the flames. Physicians also were brought and were soon busy with the injured, who were lying on the ground in all directions. People along the line brought sheets and clothing to be used as bandages, and received the wounded into their houses. At least a hundred persons were hurt more or less seriously. How many perished will probably never be known. Nineteen bodies were taken from the wreck, of which not more than ten could be identified. Some were mere fragments, and there were heaps of ashes, which, it is feared, represented bodies. It is a melancholy story, and its memory will doubtless weigh on the minds of many who will shortly be starting for their summer vacation. It should not be a pointless impression. The possibility of sudden death ought to warn everyone against delaying preparation for eternity.

Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation (II. Cor. 6: 2).

Searching for Relatives

An orphan boy living at Hilton, N. J., who believed himself to be alone in the world, has just received startling news from Canada. He is sixteen years of age, and has no recollection of his parents. They died during his infancy, and he was adopted by a neighbor, under whose care he lived until he was able to earn his own living, when he drifted to New Jersey. Recently he received a letter from a firm of lawyers in Toronto, who informed him that a wealthy client of theirs was dead, and under directions contained in his will they had been searching for his heirs. They believed the boy was their client's grandson, and requested him to furnish them with particulars of his birth and parentage. The boy went to the neighborhood in which he was born and collected the facts. To his astonishment, he found that he had two sisters, of whose existence he had never heard. They had been adopted like himself, when their parents died, and had drifted away whither he does not know. He is now seeking them, and is more anxious to find them than he is to secure the fortune that awaits him. Like the Christian who becomes heir to an eternal inheritance, he discovers that he is not alone in the world, but belongs to the household of faith.

Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God (Eph. 2:19).

Alaska Honors a Babe

A citizen of Connecticut, who has been living for the last two years at Wales, Alaska, reports that the natives have paid unusual honors to his infant son. The child was born in December last, and soon afterwards a deputation of the natives arrived at the house in formal state. They informed the parents of the child that they had found, by their incantations, that the boy was endowed with all the virtues and would never die. They declared that he was the successor of Nel-u-ka-zus-ruk, a shaman who, two generations ago, had been worshiped by the tribe. He was credited with having effected some wonderful cures, and with having led an ascetic life. He had been murdered by enemies when he was in extreme old age. Since his death the tribe had been looking for his successor, but none had been born fulfilling the astrological auguries, until this child. They brought gifts of all kinds, including ivory images fantastically carved, and little fur garments of the finest skins. They begged that he be named after the famous shaman, whose qualities they believed he would inherit. The parents listened in wonder to the deputation, but have no faith in their superstition. Happily they know that the child may indeed live forever, as the Esquimaux said, but their faith has a better foundation than magical auguries.

He that believeth on me shall never die (John 11 : 26).

Lost in the Woods

Two children, neither of them over six years of age, wandered away from their home in Port Chester, N. Y., a few days ago. It was some hours before they were missed, but immediately it was known, the police were notified, and search parties were organized by the parents and neighbors. All through the night the search was kept up without avail. Near noon the next day one of the boys was found asleep at the foot of a big boulder. He said that he and his playmate had gone to the woods to get wildflowers. When it began to get dark they had been frightened, and tried to find their way home. They missed one another in the woods, and the boy said he had walked until he was tired out and lay down to sleep. The search was continued for the other boy, and at last his body was found nearly a mile away, in the river. It was a grievous discovery for his parents, by whom he was deeply loved. How many of God's children there are, who, wandering from him, are unable to find their way back! They who search for them and restore them to the way of life are doing a service that will surely be rewarded.

Let him know that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins (James 5: 20).

BRIEF NOTE

There is hope of a union between the [illegible] and the Cumberland Presbyterian [illegible]. The [illegible] is almost unanimous in favor of union; the Cumberland [illegible] are about evenly divided.

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN

A Gospel Newspaper for a Day

Evangelist Chapman's Experiment in Seattle and its Results

WILL P. STRANDBORG, EDITOR SEATTLE "STAR"

W. P. STRANDBORG

THE well-known evangelist, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, and five of his associate evangelists, Revs. Chas. Stelzle, Henry Ostrom, R. A. Walton, and C.T. Schaeffer, and Mr. O. F. Pugh, a singer, edited the Star newspaper, of Seattle, Wash., for one day, Monday, April 24th. Their object was to show how a city newspaper could be edited in accordance with the principles of Christianity. The evangelists were given absolute freedom in their work in all departments of the paper except the contract advertising.

This experiment was an outgrowth of the great religious revival, which, for two weeks, under the sway of Dr. Chapman and his band of two dozen evangelists, stirred Seattle's population of 160,000 souls, and which was marked by such dramatic incidents as these: The suspension of business throughout the city during noontide meetings, a midnight march of 15,000 men and women through the "Tenderloin district" of the city (a quarter which probably has few equals for moral depravity in any American community), and a monster evangelistic gathering in the Strand Theatre and Music Hall, one of the worst dens of iniquity on the Pacific Coast. In the fortnight during which Dr. Chapman and his associates were in the city, the converts reached well into the thousands, and the number of those who renewed their purpose, with Divine help, to lead better lives can only be conjectured.

When the offer to turn over the newspaper's plant to the evangelists was made to Dr. Chapman, he readily accepted it, seeing instantly an opportunity to speak to vastly multiplied audiences through the printed page. He chose as the day for his editorial experiment, Easter Monday, the last day but one of his sojourn in Seattle. In selecting his staff and assistants, for the important position of City Editor he named Rev. Charles Stelzle, whose powers of organization and adaptability to his new environment were soon apparent. He displayed a talent for news selection that would have put many a veteran editor to shame.

In order to make the task of the evangelistic editors less onerous, the regular staff of the paper was, for two days prior to the publication of the Chapman edition, loaned to them, though not a jot or tittle of news went to the linotype men without the official approval of City Editor Stelzle, or of Editor-in-Chief Chapman.

In the Star, ordinary news items are "boiled down" so that the greatest number of articles may be crowded into the smallest possible space. It also uses large headlines, which tell the story in themselves. To my own surprise, Dr. Chapman approved of both these features, and the result was that, in typographical appearance, the Chapman edition did not differ in any material respect from the regular issue. The editorial page, however, was as unlike as it well could be. The names of the one-day editors appeared at the head of the editorial column. The sworn circulation statement gave way to a Scripture text and a prayer. Where ordinarily two columns are given to editorials, more than five columns appeared in the Chapman edition, each editorial being signed. All were aimed at the heart, rather than at the head. They were not striking for their depth of argument or intellectual appeal, but were rich in human interest and little "heart-to-heart talks."

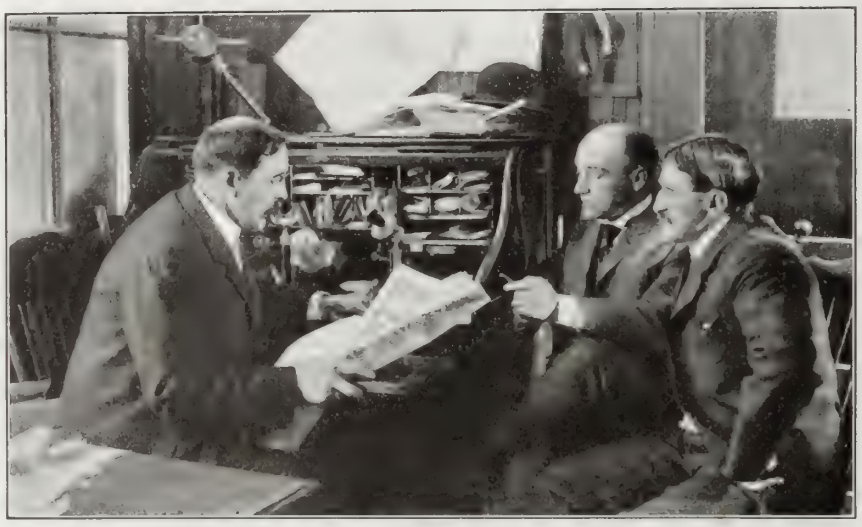
There also appeared an editorial symposium entitled, "Seattle of To-morrow," which was contributed to by leading men in the industrial, commercial, and professional world. Another striking feature of the edition was a half-page of space donated to Dr. Chapman by the Star's leading advertiser. This space, of course, was devoted entirely to religious matter.

The leading story of the day was a detailed account of the "Men's Meetings," held on Easter Day, at which more conversions were reported than at any other meeting during the series. Prominence was given to a vigorous and scathing arraignment of prominent Seattle men, who were daily violating speed ordinances by the too fast driving of their automobiles, and the names of a number of the richest citizens were published as "law-breakers" in this connection. This crusade against reckless driving was afterward followed by arrests and heavy police fines, in a number of instances.

All divorce cases and unsavory police stories were suppressed, while crimes, petty and felonious, were barely mentioned. It happened on that day that four particularly distressing cases of insanity were reported, all of which were ruthlessly "blue-penciled," on the ground that it was inhuman to parade the misfortunes of the blameless. Nothing but the cleanest of athletic sports escaped the merciless censor.

Was the experiment a success? That depends upon the viewpoint. The only parallel to the Chapman experiment was that of Rev. Mr. Sheldon, in Topeka, Kan., but circumstances in the two instances were not similar. Pastor Sheldon was editor long enough to shape an editorial policy and inject individuality into the columns of his paper. On the other hand, Dr. Chapman and his associates could hardly more than indicate the lines along which a newspaper would be conducted under his direction. Had he the opportunity afforded by a series of editions, no doubt the policy would have been more strongly manifest. Besides, Easter Monday is known throughout the newspaper world as "blue Monday," there being invariably a dearth of news on that day. Therefore, the evangelists had comparatively little opportunity to exercise their censorship. Whether, as a whole, the cause of religion was materially advanced by the experiment cannot now be judged. Dr. Chapman spoke to thousands through the columns of the paper, whereas from the pulpit, his voice would have fallen upon the ears of but scores, or hundreds at most. Whether the spirit behind the cold, black type, forced the message as deeply into the hearts of the many who read, as his voice would have carried it into the hearts of his hearers, is a question that I am not ready to answer.

From the standpoint of circulation, the Chapman edition was a success. An addition of 30,000 readers in a single day is something that demonstrates the widespread interest in the experiment of producing a newspaper edited on Gospel lines.



THE EVANGELIST-EDITOR AND HIS ASSOCIATES AT WORK

Progress of "The Soul-Winners"

THE American Inland Mission (or Soul-Winners' Society) was organized in 1897, to send the Gospel to the thousands of countrymen in the mountains. Beginning in 1898 with one missionary and no resource but God's promise, it has now seventy-one missionaries, and the annual receipts are over twelve thousand dollars, being voluntary gifts from Christians all over the world. Not a single collection was taken in any church. $4,230 have been expended on new buildings at the Witherspoon Log College in the Cumberlands, $450 on the Great Smoky Mountain Seminary in the Alleghanies, $308.43 on school property in the Clinch Mountains, and $266.03 were collected for the missions. During the year the missionaries of the society have labored in the mountains of Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina and Virginia, many of them all the year, some for the summer only. During the year they have held 2,733 religious services; had 631 public confessions of faith in Christ; taught 115 Sunday Schools.

"The Soul-Winners' Society" asks the prayers and the gifts of God's people to further its work. Address Rev. Edward O. Guerrant, president, or Henry S. Crockett, secretary, at Wilmore, Ky.

A Unique Photograph

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will doubtless remember some queries that were published a short time ago in OUR MAIL-BAG, in regard to Sojourner Truth, the famous colored woman, who did so much to secure the freedom of her race. Mr. C. C. Thompson, of Cedar Springs, Mich. has sent us some additional facts about this remarkable woman, and a unique photograph of President Lincoln, taken with Sojourner, at Mr. Lincoln's request, in 1864. The President took this means to show his respect for the woman, and his interest in her race.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND SOJOURNER TRUTH

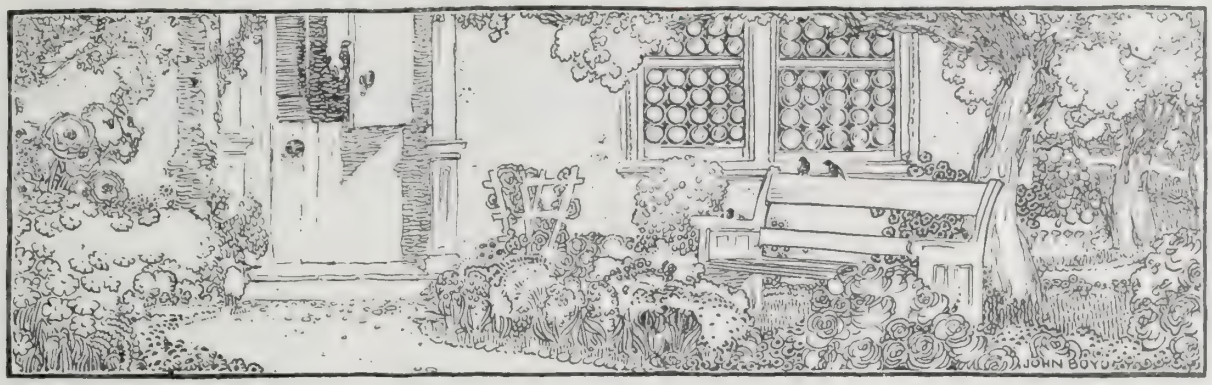
Sojourner Truth was born in Georgia, in 1780, on the plantation of John Dumont. In 1840 she secured her freedom, and came North. Entering the lecture field, she became most successful in presenting the case of the colored people of the South to Northern audiences. She also gained fame as a temperance advocate. Of an intensely religious nature, she never lost faith in the dark days just before the war. She died in 1883.

A Voice from China

IN Runing-fu, in the interior of China, Province of Honan, there is a mission which was commenced several years ago, in the midst of a specially hostile people, by Rev. and Mrs. K. S. Stokke, who seemed providentially directed to this place, and gifted with faith and patience to make known to the benighted people the blessed news of the Gospel. A measure of success attended their labors, but in the terrible Boxer movement, their home and furniture were destroyed. They escaped by being individually carried by coolies, in a fourteen days' journey, to the nearest seaport. The next year they returned to the same place, and much blessing has been granted to them in their faithful work.

They are aided by an American Norwegian Society, but means are very limited. The number of converts and inquirers have so increased that the Chinese dwelling-house in which services are held is much too small to receive all who would gladly attend. They have thought that some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in this country might esteem it a privilege to contribute towards the erection of a very plain, but larger place of worship for their Chinese people, who are now sincerely desirous to learn the precious Gospel.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia



By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Miss Cynthia Day had been for years under the control of rigid and harsh grandparents, as well as a severe mother. All the natural inclinations of girlhood had been suppressed. After the death of her relatives, she continues the same narrow existence, economizing from habit, and ably assisted in this by the old servant, Abby Whiton. Troubled by a pain in her chest she visits a doctor, who shocks her with the announcement that she has only a year to live. Her whole soul revolts against the thought of death. She meets the Puffer twins, and she joins them in her first ride down hill, and also accepts an invitation to their picnic, much to Abby Whiton's annoyance. The twins stray off, and Cynthia, searching for them, loses her way and is found by George Blossom, a young house-painter, with decorative ambitions. On the way home she engages him to paint and paper the Breyfogle house. Abby Whiton endeavors, but in vain, to assert her old-time power in the house, and at last Cynthia decides to dismiss her, and writes her a note of discharge, inclosing $50 extra "for long and faithful service." She decides to make a clearance of the heterogeneous collection of old furniture and other things in the house, burning the useless rubbish, and giving the serviceable articles to the poor who needed them. A notice of the contemplated distribution on a certain day is read in church to the astonishment of the congregation, many of whom assure Cynthia they will attend. Meanwhile Cynthia, with the aid of the Puffer twins, makes a bonfire in the Breyfogle back-yard, of many old articles she does not wish to give away. When the eventful day of the distribution arrives, nearly all the village attends. A tall, dark stranger is present, too, who makes herself known to Mrs. Pettibone, and wishes to speak with Cynthia.

CHAPTER X.—Continued

NEARLY everything had been given away, and the remaining articles had been marked "Reserved" by the minister's careful hand. Cynthia, happier than she had ever been in her life, in the unaccustomed glow of making other people happy, did not appear surprised in the least when Mrs. Pettibone caught her warmly by the hand. "An old friend," she murmured. "Perhaps you will remember." Then the minister's little wife slipped away and left the two standing there together.

Miss Cynthia looked up and met the dark eyes of the tall man. He was smiling down at her with a half admiring, half quizzical glance. "Now I wonder," he said softly, "if you have the slightest idea who I am? It's a long, long, while since you've seen me, and the years haven't been kind to me, as you can plainly see. You are changed very little, Miss Day."

Miss Cynthia drew a deep breath. Then she smiled a wistful, mysterious sort of a smile. "How strange that you should come back—now," she said.

"Then you do remember me?" He was puzzled by her look, which seemed to lend a strange aloofness to her small person. "I should have known you anywhere," he added briskly. "But, perhaps, I'm hardly fair when I say that, for I've seen you once before—five years ago."

"Yes?" Her voice was gentle and abstracted—indifferent, the man thought.

"It was in Boston," he went on, in a matter of fact tone. "You were buying something in a shop; so was I. I thought at first that I would speak to you, but——"

She looked at him with quiet understanding, "but you changed your mind," she finished. "I am glad you did not speak to me then."

"Luckily I'm not planning to bore you now," he went on, with an embarrassed little laugh. "I really can't tell why I came here at all. A curious desire to see the place overtook me. One cannot account for the freaks of impulse, you know. And this—this——" He glanced about the disordered yard with a slight lifting of his broad shoulders. "What impelled you, Miss Day, to distribute your cherished ancestral belongings to the countryside at large?"

"Don't you know?" she asked, in a choked little whisper. "Can't you guess?"

Manifestly he could not, for he was regarding her with astonishment, not unmixed with dismay.

"I think you ought to know—you," she went on. "Because it was for this—I—sent you away. I lied to you—then—because——"

"DON'T ENCOURAGE HIM TO COME HERE TOO MUCH, DAUGHTER," PURRED THE ANXIOUS MATRON

He frowned perplexedly. "Oh, I had forgotten all that," he said with cheerful decision. "A boy and girl affair—one can afford to forget or laugh at it all, when one's hair turns gray."

"Have you forgotten? Do you laugh—when you think of it?" she asked wonderingly. "I have never laughed to think that——"

"I beg that you will not think of it again," he interposed hastily. "It is not worth while, I assure you."

Miss Cynthia did not seem to hear his last words. "I am glad you came, I wanted to see you," she said, with a happy little sigh. "It seems to—to match—everything else."

"You're very good to say that," he cried, pulling out his watch; "it makes me sorry that I must bid you good-bye. I had almost forgotten my train."

Her little hand lay for a moment in his, the strange aloof happiness of her look brimming over in two large, bright tears. "Good-bye," she said softly, and turned away. She did not look at him again.

He saw that much as he strode away down the street, for he deliberately turned and looked back.

CHAPTER XI.

MISS ROSALIE SCOTT, having arranged and re-arranged her possessions in her grandmother's well-rubbed mahogany chests of drawers, and hung and rehung the pictures and ornaments on her newly-papered walls, and admired for the hundredth time the sweet freshness of the metamorphosed parlor, was feeling slightly bored with life. There was, to be sure, plenty of good, wholesome work to occupy her time in the big farmhouse. "Helping mother" was a broad and comprehensive term, which seemed to the young girl's impatient fancy to involve slow years, spent in endless small, irritating duties.

Mother Scott was sweet and placid as she compassed her unvarying round; indeed, to her daughter's secret wonderment, she actually seemed to enjoy herself in a staid, elderly fashion. But she appeared (to Rosalie) to regard her young daughter as entirely ready to become staid and elderly, too.

Rosalie's education—including three terms of painting lessons and four years of piano lessons had seemed expensive; but it was now well over. There was a new piano in the parlor, and over it hung a water-color painting of a yard of pansies. These objects represented very concretely the ornamental side of the young woman's attainments. For the rest, she was vaguely supposed to have assimilated the contents of the pile of dull-colored text-books which had been incontinently consigned to the attic. She did her hair becomingly and wore her clothes stylishly. Father and Mother Scott exchanged stealthy glances of delight over her pretty, uncommon ways. Her tall, well-rounded figure, her smooth, abundant dark hair, her flashing white teeth, her sparkling, long-lashed eyes were a perpetual wonder and delight to them. They were complacently glad that they had been able to "do for Rosalie." But all was now completed—finished. Nothing remained to be expected or desired beyond the monotonous though perfectly comfortable level of the present, which stretched away into an equally monotonous and comfortable future.

With the girl herself it was vastly different. She was merely waiting—though quite unconsciously—for something wonderful to happen. She did not picture to herself what this wonderful something was to be; but she nevertheless longed for it with ill-concealed impatience.

When, therefore, George Blossom, driving his new phaeton, and wearing a smart, ready-made suit, appeared at the Scott farmhouse, he was made very welcome by Miss Rosalie. Almost any interruption would have served to break the colorless monotony of her

CONTINUED ON PAGE 464

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

"SEE THE PLACE WHERE HE LAY"

His Resurrection and Ours

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

LET us hear the witnesses to the resurrection of Jesus.

1st Witness, the angel: "I was sent from heaven to roll the stone away from the door of his tomb, and he came forth alive."

2d Witness, the Roman guard: "We saw him come out of his grave alive, and we were so frightened that we fell to the ground on our faces."

3d Witness, Mary Magdalene: "I was standing by the grave weeping, when I heard a step behind me. I thought it was the gardener, and I asked him if he could tell me where the body of my Lord had been taken. I had mistaken the gardener for Jesus himself! I recognized him by the sweet tones of his voice, when he called me 'Mary!' I fell at his feet to worship him."

4th Witness, the woman who came with spices: "When the angel had told us that Jesus had risen from the dead, and after we had looked in the place where he had lain, we ran to tell the apostles that Jesus had indeed risen. We had not gone far when Jesus himself met us, and greeted us with 'All hail.' We fell at his feet to worship him. He told us to rise, and go to tell his apostles that they should soon see him in Galilee."

5th Witness, the two friends on their way to Emmaus: "A stranger joined us as we walked from Jerusalem to Emmaus, and we talked with him about what had been told us concerning the resurrection of Jesus that very morning. We expressed our opinion that it was 'an idle tale.' But he showed us from the Scriptures that the resurrection of Jesus was to be expected. When we reached Emmaus we invited the stranger to come in and abide with us, as it was toward evening. When he sat down with us to eat, and brake the bread to bless it, we knew it was Jesus himself."

6th Witness, the apostles (Thomas being absent, and Judas dead): "We were gathered in a room together on the evening of that eventful Sabbath day. Some of our number had seen the empty grave of Jesus. We had received the message from Jesus, sent by the women, that he was alive. The two friends from Emmaus had come to tell us of their interview with Jesus, when all at once he stood in our midst. We could hardly believe our senses. He showed us the prints of the nails in his hands and feet. We could but believe it was he. He asked for food, which he ate, to assure us that he was alive again."

7th Witness, the apostles, including Thomas: "On the following Sabbath evening, he came to us again, while we were gathered in the upper room. He suddenly stood in our midst as before. And then he addressed himself to Thomas, telling him to put his fingers in the print of the nails in his hands, and into the hole which the spear had made in his side, for he knew that Thomas had said he must do this before he would believe that it was Jesus himself. With great feeling, Thomas answered, 'My Lord, and my God.'"

8th Witness, seven apostles at the Sea of Galilee: "In our company were Peter, Thomas, Nathaniel, James and John, and two others. We had been fishing all night, and had caught nothing. We saw a man on the beach, when it was hardly light, and heard him call to us to let our nets down on the right side. We had no sooner done this than our nets were filled to breaking. We knew then that it was Jesus who stood on the shore. We immediately rowed to the shore, but Peter threw himself into the water, and swam ashore to get there first. Wonderful to tell, we found that Jesus had a breakfast prepared for us. After we had eaten, Jesus spoke many words to us, but he had a special message for Peter."

9th Witness, eleven apostles (including Matthias, upon whom the lot had fallen to take the place of Judas): "Jesus had told the women to tell us that he would meet us in Galilee, and so he did upon the mountain-top. It was then he gave us the great commission to go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

10th Witness, five hundred of his apostles and friends: "We stood upon Mt. Olivet, over toward Bethany, and we knew he was about to return to his Father. He bade us go back to Jerusalem after we had seen him go, and wait for the coming of the Holy Spirit. We saw him spread out his hands and rise above the clouds until he passed out of our sight. Then we saw and heard the two angels who came to tell us that he would come again to earth as we had seen him ascend."

"IN THE PLACE WHERE HE WAS CRUCIFIED THERE WAS A GARDEN, AND IN THE GARDEN A NEW TOMB"

Illustration and Application

I. Physical Resurrection. Mr. T. R. Teske tells this beautiful story, apropos for this lesson or for the coming review: "I was standing before the window of an art store where a picture of the crucifixion was on exhibition. As I gazed I was conscious of the approach of another, and turning, beheld a little street Arab gazing intently at the picture. I asked, pointing to the picture, 'Do you know who it is?' 'Yes, that's our Saviour,' he said, with a look of mingled pity and surprise that I should not know. After a pause, he said, 'Them's the Roman soldiers, and [with a long drawn sigh] that woman crying there is his mother.' He waited for me to question him further, then with a reverent and subdued voice, added: 'They killed him, mister. Yes, sir, they killed him!' I looked at the little ragged fellow, and asked, 'Where did you learn this?' He replied, 'At the mission Sunday School.' I turned away and resumed my walk, leaving the little lad looking at the picture. I had not walked a block when I heard his childish treble: 'Mister! Say, mister!' I turned. He was running toward me, but paused; then up went his little hand, and with a triumphant tone, he said: 'I wanted to tell you he rose again! Yes, mister, he rose again.' His message delivered, he smiled, waved his hand, turned and went his way." Are we as faithfully and joyfully preaching "Jesus and the resurrection?" In order to do it we should, if possible, be as assured as he was that "the Lord is risen indeed." What are the proofs?

The Bible says he rose; but are there no other confirming proofs? Yes, and they are not alone the miracles and martyrdoms of nineteen centuries ago. Miracles are mostly for those who see them, but when well attested are of value to others also. The martyrdoms which the apostles endured because of their belief that Christ had risen from the dead and was a living Lord and Saviour proves that they fully believed it. That Paul, the educated persecutor, became a witness unto death that Christ lived and reigned, converted one great infidel, Lyttleton, who could find no other cause than the resurrection of Christ that would be adequate to produce such a marvelous result. Greenleaf, the standard authority among lawyers on the laws of evidence, finds that the New Testament proof of the resurrection and of other facts of Christ's life bears all the legal tests of historic evidence, seeming discrepancies being especially valuable as showing the independence and truthfulness of the witnesses, whose testimony would have been under suspicion of collusion if more uniform.

But there are other evidences that are under our own eyes. This is the way Lord Salisbury put the old a new evidences, in a letter asking the grounds of his Chr tian faith, which Gladstone said was the faith of near all the great leaders of civilization with whom he h been associated in his long career. Lord Salisbury wro thus: "Everyone has his own point of view from which looks at these things. To me, the central point is t Resurrection of Christ, which I believe. Firstly, becau it is testified by men who had every opportunity of seei and knowing, and whose veracity was tested by the mo tremendous trials, both of energy and endurance, duri long lives. Secondly, because of the marvelous effect had upon the world. As a moral phenomenon, the spre and mastery of Christianity is without a parallel. I ca no more believe that colossal moral effects lasting f 2,000 years can be without a cause, than I can belie that the various motions of the magnet are without cause, though I cannot wholly explain them. To anyo who believes the resurrection of Christ, the rest presen little difficulty. No one who has that belief will doul that those who were commissioned by him to speak- Paul, Peter, Mark, John—carried a divine message. S Matthew falls into the same category. St. Luke has t warrant of the generation of Christians who saw an heard the others. That is the barest and roughest form the line which the evidence of the inspiration of the Ne Testament has always taken in my mind."

It might be added that the Old Testament's inspiratio is fully attested in the words of Christ and his apostle The resurrection of Europe is our present miracle, an the conclusive proof of the resurrection of Christ, t which is due the transformation—greater than of deat to life—of paganism in Greece an Rome, in Germany and Britain, into th modern civilization of Europe, with it new conceptions of human rights, it new attitude to women and children, t the toiler and the alien, all uplifted b the Christian doctrine of the sacre individuality of every human soul a the son or daughter of God, the brothe or sister of Christ for whom he died and so the brother or sister of ever other soul, to be loved and helped, no hated or harmed. The resurrection o Lazarus was but a trifle to the resurrec tion that is seen when the Greece o Socrates and the Rome of Seneca, an the Briton of the Druids is contraste with the Europe of to-day. The grave clothes are not all removed, but ther has been a real resurrection.

Talk about "decisive battles!" Mar athon, where Persian barbarism wa barred from Greece by a living wall o patriots; Tours, where Mohammedan barbarism was checked at the gates o Europe; Waterloo, where he who said "War is the trade of barbarians," an was himself the chief barbarian in thi bloody work for fame, was checked i his mad career—all these together have had less influence in checking man's downward tendencies and accelerating his best social impulses than the decisive battle that ended in Joseph's garden i the victory of Christ over bigotry and death!

When Napoleon had gained his great bloodless victory at Ulm, the news was brought to him that his navy had been shattered at Trafalgar. He sighed heavily and remarked, after a pause: "Well, I can't be everywhere." Christ can be everywhere since he has risen, leaving us the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway."

"Christ has risen, and man shall rise."

His resurrection is full assurance of ours. The symbols in heathen graveyards mostly signify that death is the end—a broken pillar, an unstrung harp, a crushed flower, leaving only the fragrance of influence and memory. But Christ's resurrection prompts the promise, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God." It is there the pillar is to be completed, the harp attuned, the bud unclosed. Not a few Christians relapse into paganism in what they do and say and think as to their dead.

Let us not repeat the materialism of Thomas, seeking to feel of our resurrection body and analyze it, saying, "With what body do they come?" Enough that we come not with a body like that of Jairus' daughter or the son of the widow of Nain or Lazarus, that may die again, but with such a body as Christ bore to heaven; such as Moses and Elijah showed on Hermon.

II. Spiritual Resurrection. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above." That is the most important resurrection. A sinful, selfish life is but a form of death. The rising of such dead souls is the supreme miracle, and in that resurrection of ourselves and others we can have a part.

What is it in our animal appetites and passions that we are clinging to, that prevents our rising into the highest, freest life of which we are capable?

---

* International Sunday School Lesson for June 4. The Resurrection, John 20: 11-23. Golden text: "Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept," I. Cor. 15: 20. HOME READINGS. Sunday, June 4, (let one read Mark, another Luke, etc.) John 19: 31-37; Mark 15: 42-46; John 19: 39-42; Luke 23: 55, 56; Matt. 27: 62-66. Monday, Matt. 28: 2-4; Mark 16: 1; Luke 24: 1; Mark 16: 3, 4; John 20: 1, 2; Luke 24: 3, 7; Matt. 28: 7, 8; John 20: 2-10. Tuesday, Mark 16: 9; John 20: 11-17; Mark 16: 10, 11; Matt. 28: 9 15; Luke 24: 9 11. Wednesday, Mark 16: 12; Luke 24: 13 35; Thursday, Luke 24: 36-43; John 20: 21; Mark 16: 15 18; John 20: 22 29. Friday, Matt. 28: 16; John 21: 1 24. Saturday, Matt. 28: 16; I. Cor. 15: 6; Matt. 28: 17; I. Cor. 15: 7; Acts 1: 3, 4; Luke 24: 44-49; Acts 1: 5-8; Matt. 28: 18-20; Luke 16: 50, 51; Acts 1: 10, 11; Luke 24: 52, 53; Mark 16: 20; John 20: 30, 31; 21: 25.

IN THE SHADE OF THE VINE

BY MARGARET E SANGSTER

At the Eleventh Hour

THE sound of singing, sweet, clear, and soft, came from a lighted building on the corner of a city street. It was accompanied by the tender strain of a violin, the music as sympathetic as the harp of an angel. On the opposite street corner, a gaily lighted window sent a broad flaring brightness across the pavement. It gave promise of warmth and cheer, and men with flushed faces and unsteady steps turned toward the swinging door beside the window, not seeing the writing, in lines invisible, that is inscribed over every saloon door: "All hope abandon, ye who enter here."

Gabriel Plumstead came slowly down the street and stopped. Both lighted places beckoned him. He was a man approaching forty, but that night he felt as if almost seventy. Twenty years had passed since he left his home, with fair prospects and glittering ambitions. He was then a fair-haired gallant boy, the darling of an exclusive circle, and his mother's peculiar pride. His father, the Judge, had died when he was yet a child. Gabriel had taken the initiative in recklessness when still at college. In the city he had yielded to temptation, being brilliant, erratic and weak. All at once. He had gone down hill fast. For years he had been a wanderer and an outcast.

To-night, in shabby, threadbare garments, his money spent, his faith in himself gone, his faith in God gone, it was with him the eleventh hour, and he stood at the last parting of the ways.

Unsuspected, two angels fought for Gabriel's soul that night. One, baleful, black of wing and of face, sought to draw him into the saloon. The other, white, shining, in armor of heavenly temper, touched his arm, to lead him into the mission chapel. Which should gain the victory?

Gabriel felt in his pocket. He still had a coin or two; enough he felt to pay for the drink that would deaden remorse, and bring forgetfulness. Later, there was always the river for a refuge.

A rough-and-tumble scuffle suddenly took place in front of the saloon. There were oaths and blows, and the sickening thud of a policeman's club. It was over in a minute, the man of the law bore away the lawbreaker, and the crowd melted away. The light streamed out from the saloon, with its false promise of good-fellowship. Gabriel took a step nearer.

But he had always loved music. He had once played the violin. Sweet, soft, thrilling, urgent, came the sound of a song: "Jesus is calling, calling to-day! Come! oh, come! to the lowly Jesus!" Gabriel's blighted youth waked from its trance of paralysis and despair. "Jesus is calling, calling, calling to-day!" He turned from the saloon. He put a trembling hand on the chapel door. It opened. He stepped inside.

Instantly his hand was grasped in a close, cordial, brotherly fashion. Instantly he was invited to a table where coffee steamed, and there was bread and soup. With the kindest comradeship he was pressed to eat. And as he ate and dashed away the tears from his eyes, he looked up, and saw everywhere faces refined, or gentle, or hopeful; or faces of the struggling, who were yet to conquer, even though the battle seemed against them.

The singing went on. There was speaking, too, but Gabriel scarcely heard it. For, seated on the platform, at the far end, was a lady in deepest robes of mourning, with hair blanched by the snows of many a winter. Surely he knew that countenance! Surely he knew the way she used to sit with hands folded on her lap! Surely! surely he knew that smile, like a moonbeam on a church window, so pure, so wonderful!

Gabriel left his place. Regardless of curious eyes, he tottered, gropingly, toward the platform, toward the Lady of Sorrows, in the robes of clinging black. Suddenly she saw him. Suddenly she rose. There was a cry. The music ceased, but it went on again.

"Gabriel! Gabriel! My boy! My boy!" "Mother!"

That was all; but at the eleventh hour a man was saved. And there was joy in the presence of the angels of God.

Politeness as a Coat-of-Mail

A coat-of-mail in the Middle Ages was sometimes worn by the knight in the tournament, that his body might be protected from the dagger-thrust of his antagonist. In the daily battles of modern life, we are all exposed to stabs and blows which wound and hurt, though they do not kill. Words that are keen-edged as swords, looks that pierce, scornful glances and sneering innuendoes that rankle like poisonous thorns, are among the malevolent enginery of hate and malice. We often need a coat-of-mail to protect us against such dastardly attacks. Men are wounded again and again in the house of their friends.

The coat-of-mail that surpasses every other as an armor of proof, is perfect courtesy. From the shield and breastplate of an unflawed politeness, the arrows of ill-temper and the darts of envy recoil and fall to earth, missing their mark and doing no harm. Politeness turns the blow; politeness presents a face of uncomprehending sweetness to the fiend who comes forward with venomous jealousy or selfish wrath; politeness is a coat-of-mail worth purchasing at a great price, worth keeping when once possessed, though to keep it costs no little time and pains.

Copyright, 1896, by G. M. Elton.

SUCH FUN!

Hello! Grandpa doesn't know
What it is that tickles so.

If he did he'd only say,
"Hello! How is Jack to-day?"

Good Housekeeping

WHEREIN consists good housekeeping? For one thing it implies such keeping of a house as makes everybody, from daddy to the baby, happy and comfortable. The housekeeper is responsible for the smooth running of the family machine. The order of the home depends upon her management. If she is a heedless person who has no system, meals will never be in season, and things will be at sixes and sevens all through her domain. If she be a slave to her system, cramped by it and unable to give or take any freedom, the family will suffer. System must needs be elastic in the best regulated home.

In good housekeeping, there are well-kept, tidy and clean rooms; dust and cobwebs are not in evidence. Breakfast dinner and supper are appetizing meals, however simple. The house is restful. Old people enjoy its repose. The children bring their friends into the home sure of a welcome. The work is done; it does not drag. If there is a maid, she is loyal. She holds a relation of friendliness to the whole family and is not a mere hireling.

Good housekeeping means room for expansion in every faculty of soul and body. It takes no ordinary woman to be a perfect housekeeper and homemaker.

President Roosevelt on the Home

President Roosevelt, who has the gift of going straight to the point, in an interview with Bishop Doane, of Albany, said, the other day, something well worth remembering. The Bishop, accompanied by a committee of the Inter-Church Conference on Marriage and Divorce, called on the President. Replying to the Bishop, the President said, "Questions like the tariff and the currency are of literally no consequence whatsoever compared with the vital question of having the union of our social life, the home, preserved. It is impossible to overstate the importance of the cause you represent. If the average husband and wife fulfil their duties toward one another, and toward their children as Christianity teaches them, then we may rest absolutely assured that the other problems will solve themselves. But if we have solved every other problem in the wisest possible way, it shall profit us nothing if we have lost our own National soul, and we will have lost it if we do not have the question of the relations of the family put on the proper basis. One of the most unpleasant and dangerous features of our American life is the diminishing birth-rate and the loosening of the marital tie among the old native American families.

"It goes without saying," he added, "that for the race as for the individual, no material prosperity, no business growth, no artistic or scientific development will count, if the race commits suicide."

Beautiful Summer Sabbaths

With daisies carpeting the fields with cloth of gold fit for kings to wear or to walk on; with birds singing in the bush and tree; with dancing streams and soft zephyrs, come the beautiful summer Sabbaths in the country. In the city they are beautiful too, with the [illegible] of grass in back-yards and the garden borders all green or flowering; with cheerful people going to and fro, and with the chime of the church bell replacing the clamor of the work-day traffic.

Beautiful summer Sabbaths, that are a gift of our Father in heaven, how much they bring of peace and joy to all his children!

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD CHILDREN'S HOME

GRATIFYING PROGRESS EVIDENCED BY THE FOLLOWING COMPARATIVE ANNUAL STATEMENTS

1902

IMPROVEMENTS AND MAINTENANCE

John N. Wesel, contract painting, etc	$366 35
Wm. VanVoorst, for stone	100 00
J. H. Post & Co., carpenters	222 89
G. R. Wyman, for plumbing	282 90
Rider Erickson Co., repairing	29 25
C. Schmidt, for gravel	27 10
I. M. Rooney, contractor	40 00
I. T. Gaynor & Co., for seeds	19 26
Ploughing and fertilizer	53 80
		$1,141.55

HOUSE FURNISHINGS, Etc.

Central Gas Fixture Co	52 00
Frank A. Hall, for beds	298 35
John Wanamaker, sundries	102 53
Harrison & Dalley, supplies	141 65
Ernst Bros., for furnishings	66 00
Goodyear Rubber Co	14 05
Townsend Bros., sundries	4 46
A. Binger, for frames	50 80
Sundry cash items	68 71
		778.55

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING AND SUPPLIES

T. Glynn, for shoes	35 35
I. Neisner, for clothes	19 90
I. Eisenstein, for canes	26 10
Children's games	16 97
Sundry cash items	5 23
		103.55

MEDICAL

J. D. Blauvelt, for drugs	10 39
Dr. Lewi, for services	55 00
		65.39

FOOD SUPPLIES

J. E. Morris & Co., for groceries	707 23
H. Kolb, for bread	630 38
H. Koehler, for meat	518 60
G. F. Wood, for milk	484 01
Randolph Bros., for groceries	108 51
I. T. Gaynor, for groceries	89 32
Nyack Ice Co., for ice	41 40
Sundry cash items	70 27
		2,649.72

LIVERY AND STABLES

A. E. & J. H. Christie, repairs and supplies	42 20
I. T. Gaynor & Co., feed bills	103 99
D. D. Kessler, for livery	122 50
Blauvelt's Livery, for livery	71 50
J. Blauvelt, blacksmithing	19 25
Purchase and sale of horses	182 50
		541.94

FREIGHT AND TRANSPORTATION

New York Steamboat Co., Transportation of Children to and from Nyack; freight, etc	313 50
Miscellaneous railroad and traveling expenses	289 50
Miscellaneous expressages	40 79
		643.79

SALARIES AND WAGES

Salary of Superintendent	209 92
Salaries of helpers	683 28
Salaries of office help	152 00
Caretakers, hostler and kitchen	846 40
		1,891.60

MISCELLANEOUS

Blauvelt & Morrell, for insurance	225 00
Consolidated Fireworks Co., for fireworks	42 18
W. H. White & Co., for coal	31 45
J. F. Hagrand, for coal	17 00
F. J. Tallman, for piano hire	45 00
H. Apham & Co., for sign painting	81 00
Telephone and telegraph service	139 85
Stationery and printing	57 81
Photographs of various, buildings, etc.	113 04
Postage	61 92
Rent of rooms	112 50
Laundry	209 21
Administration expenses donated to Any Good Cause	148 16
Sundry cash items	23 65
		1,403.77
		$9,219.86
Deficit carried over from 1901		1,326.51
Grand total		10,546.37
Receipts during 1902		14,815.77
Balance Credited to Real Estate Account		$4,269.40

1903

IMPROVEMENTS AND MAINTENANCE

John N. Wesel, contract painting, etc	$271 06
G. R. Wyman & Son, contract plumbing, etc	388 57
Jno. Magee, for mason work, etc	410 92
John H. Post, carpentry, etc	315 71
Rider Erickson Co., repairing, etc.	24 65
F. C. Ross, repairing fan-motor	12 50
I. T. Gaynor & Co., for seeds	37 07
C. Schmidt, for gravel	27 55
R. C. & E. H. Pye, for flowers	25 00
Ploughing and fertilizer for lands	40 00
Wages of farm hands	193 55
Sundry items	12 09
		1,756.67

HOUSE FURNISHINGS, Etc.

Harrison & Dalley, for dry goods, etc	$195 40
B. Altman & Co., for blankets	145 12
Ernst Bros., for sundries	119 42
John Wanamaker, for sundries	86 81
F. J. N. Tallman, for piano hire	45 00
Shepard Knapp & Co., for carpets	9 50
Townsend Bros., for sundries	7 32
J. L. Mott, for heater	15 00
A. J. Borst, for picture frames	21 00
S. F. Raymond, for fire pails	14 06
Sundry items	59 64
		718.27

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING AND SUPPLIES

I. Neisner, for clothing	$9 00
T. Glynn, for shoes	18 73
I. Eisenstein, for canes	10 35
Children's games	23 43
Sundry cash items	16 00
		77.51

MEDICAL

J. D. Blauvelt, for drugs, etc	$9 01
Dr. Lewi, services	60 00
		69.01

FOOD SUPPLIES

J. E. Morris & Co., for groceries	$695 63
A. J. Gross, for butcher meat	654 63
H. Kolb, for bread	748 88
G. F. Wood, for milk	560 08
Randolph Bros., for groceries	123 67
H. Koehler, for fish, etc	45 70
R. Schmitt, for confectionery	21 00
Nyack Ice Co., for ice	61 25
Sundry cash items	55 01
		2,885.85

LIVERY AND STABLES

I. T. Gaynor & Co., for feed	$208 95
I. E. Hartwick, for cart and harness	18 00
A. E. & J. H. Christie, supplies and repairs	147 28
P. Tribert, for livery	144 00
D. D. Kessler, for livery	18 25
Blauvelt's Livery, for livery	122 50
D. Albright, for blacksmithing	18 10
Purchase and sale of horses	161 50
Sundry cash items	61 37
		898.95

FREIGHT AND TRANSPORTATION

North River Steamboat Co., Transportation of children to and from Nyack; freight, etc	$301 55
Miscellaneous railroad and traveling expenses	243 32
Miscellaneous expressages	6 10
		610.97

SALARIES AND WAGES

Salary of Superintendent	$238 80
Salaries of helpers	612 05
Salaries of office help	248 32
Caretakers, hostler and kitchen	894 12
		1,993.29

MISCELLANEOUS

W. H. White & Co., for coal	$67 40
Consolidated Fireworks Co., for fireworks	42 18
Telephone and telegraph service	120 24
Photo-Engraving Co	136 00
Stationery and printing	63 11
Taxes, school	41 37
Postage	54 61
Laundry	214 49
Administration expenses donated to Any Good Cause	136 70
Other miscellaneous items, including cash sundries and acknowledgments of contributions since Jan. 1st, 1902	902 45
		1,778.55
		$10,789.07
Receipts during 1903		13,661.11
Balance Credited to Real Estate Account		$2,872.04

1904

IMPROVEMENTS AND MAINTENANCE

T. D. Garrabrant, for shingling barn, etc	$294 21
Devoe & Reynolds, for paint	77 44
Rider Erickson Co., for repairing	47 47
J. N. Wesel, sundry painting	121 88
G. R. Wyman & Son, for moving iron work	12 38
W. H. White & Co., for cement	15 00
John Simons, carpentry work	48 75
I. T. Gaynor, for seeds	64 13
A. L. Henry, for plumbing	78 49
Miscellaneous repairs	54 75
Wages of laborers improving and const'ng grading	2,196 55
Limestone for roads	120 12
Ploughing and fertilizer for land	122 50
		3,253.67

HOUSE FURNISHINGS, Etc.

Harrison & Dalley, for sundry articles	148 34
John Wanamaker, for sundry articles	181 20
M. R. Kunkely, for tents	366 23
Shepard Knapp & Co., for carpets	26 89
Howard Gowner Co., for hardware, etc	35 72
Buffalo Specialty Co., for bread cutter	11 20
A. J. Borst, for frames	14 50
G. J. Laurence, for piano hire	50 00
Ernst Bros., for sundries	13 71
Miscellaneous furnishings	89 56
		937.35

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING AND SUPPLIES

Walter Keller, for suits	106 95
Thos. Glynn, for shoes	20 56
I. Neisner, for clothing	13 41
I. Eisenstein, for canes	25 62
Children's games	42 45
Miscellaneous repairing	14 26
		223.25

MEDICAL

J. D. Blauvelt, for drugs	13 11
Dr. Lewi, for services	55 00
Dr. Maynard	7 00
		75.11

FOOD SUPPLIES

A. J. Gross, for butcher meat	770 21
H. Kolb, for bread	787 67
Randolph Bros., for groceries	110 37
J. E. Morris & Co., for groceries	464 34
G. F. Wood, for milk	490 06
Savona Elgin Butter & Cheese Associa'n, for butter	173 00
Lydecker Bros., for groceries	10 91
R. Schmitt and others, for confectionery	25 87
Nyack Ice Co., for ice	62 33
Spring Lake Ice Co., for ice	16 50
Miscellaneous cash purchases	95 75
		3,007.01

LIVERY AND STABLES

I. T. Gaynor, for feed, etc	$107 70
Blauvelt's Livery, and others, for feed, etc	229 43
Philip Tribert, for hire of stage, etc	331 25
D. Albright, horseshoeing	12 15
A. E. & J. H. Christie, harness and repairing	93 10
Pye & Towt, feed	13 50
Horses, purchase and sale of	100 00
Miscellaneous items	30 50
		917.63

FREIGHT AND TRANSPORTATION

North River Steamboat Co., Transportation of children and freight	$330 49
Miscellaneous railroad and traveling expenses	313 70
Miscellaneous expressages	23 54
		667.73

SALARIES AND WAGES

Salary of Superintendent	$239 17
Salaries of helpers	732 88
Salaries of office help	141 50
Caretakers, hostler and kitchen	893 53
Children's help	16 00
		2,023.08

MISCELLANEOUS

Consolidated Fireworks Co., for fireworks	$42 18
Whitehead, Hoag & Co., for illuminated buttons	69 62
Spaulding Mfg. Co., for children's swings, etc	300 00
Am. Bible Soc., rent of rooms	30 00
W. H. White & Co., for fuel	142 14
Telephone and telegraph service	160 22
Miscellaneous printing and stationery	140 89
Postage	71 08
Photos	26 60
Administration expenses donated to Any Good Cause	154 15
Laundry	221 22
Auditor's charges (four years)	74 75
Sundry cash items	29 79
		1,462.64
		$12,567.47
Receipts during 1904		15,409.62
Balance Credited to Real Estate Account		$2,842.15

SWORN TO before me this 15th day of May, A. D. 1905.

Notary Public

Public Accountant's Certification

This is to certify that I have carefully examined every item of receipts and disbursements in connection with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, and have diligently compared every stub, receipt, voucher and check, and find the same correct and in accord with the above statement in every particular.

Public Accountant,
150 Broadway, New York

Answered Prayers

M. A. P., Ohio. "We have trusted him in sorrow and he has been an ever-present help."

Mrs. I. W. S., New York. "I am a firm believer in prayer, having received direct answers to my petitions to my Heavenly Father."

Lizzie M., Rhode Island. "I desire to acknowledge God's goodness to me when the way is most dark and we feel he has forgotten us; then comes the surprising answer."

Milford M. D., Camden, N. Y. "I wish to acknowledge a wonderful answer to prayer. I was in trouble, which seemed almost unendurable, but blessed be God, he brought me safely through. All things are possible with God if we ask in faith."

F. M., New York. "My wife was ill. Our physician could do nothing to relieve her. I took the matter to the Lord, beseeching him to give her relief. She dropped into a sweet sleep. No word of mine can add to this simple narrative, nor can word of mine express my thanks for a prayer-answering God."

N. W. M., Massachusetts. "Forty years ago I asked myself how can I be sure of being led by the Holy Spirit in all that I do, and the answer came to me, 'Commit thy ways to the Lord, and he shall direct thy paths,and covenant with him,' that when in doubt, in either temporal or spiritual matters, ask him to hedge up all the wrong ways and open up the right way, and be sure to walk in the open way, nothing doubting, no matter even if it is against your better judgment, and my experience has taught me to firmly believe that when you thus enter into solemn covenant with the Lord, and as faithfully obey or do your part, that he will not disappoint you."

Lucy L. H., Michigan. "I am nearly sixty-four years old, and have had many answers to prayer."

A. G., Kansas. "I have found the list of Answered Prayers an uplifting help to me, and have been assured my prayers have been answered, in having one of my family restored to health."

Mrs. M. S. B., Illinois. "My faith has been greatly strengthened by reading of God's faithfulness in answering prayers. I wish to acknowledge his goodness to me in removing a heavy burden. I took it to the Lord and he sent deliverance. I believe he is always faithful to his promises and will help us if we go to him in faith, and trust him."

H. B., New York. "I have been strengthened many a time through the 'Answered Prayer' column and took new courage, and my faith has been strengthened to hold on to Christ, who is ever faithful, when he says he will never leave us or forsake us. I have proved him. I know God will answer prayer."

C. S. C., Kans. "I am sure I could not count all the prayers that have been directly answered. Some of my most anxious prayers are still unanswered, but I continue to pray and trust, knowing He will give me just what is best in his own good way and time. The Bible is so full of precious, comforting promises, why should we ever despond?"

A Friend, Mo. "I desire to acknowledge God's goodness and mercy to prayers answered in my behalf. If we ask aright, he will hear and answer."

Mrs. E. B., N. M. "I was sore troubled, and God heard my supplication and brought joy to my heart."

A. E. A., N. Y. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God to me in many ways in answered prayer."

Mr. & Mrs. E. P. B., Mo. "We want to testify to the efficacy of prayer. Our daughter was very ill for five weeks, and earnest prayer was offered. She has been restored. We are so grateful, and want to encourage others."

Mrs. H. J., N. Y. "God has heard and answered my feeble prayers many times. I had a great burden upon me; I took it to him and the answer came."

A Reader, Tenn. "When in trouble, either spiritual or worldly matters, I always take it to God, and he never fails to answer in his own time and way."

L. H. H. "I have had before me a serious proposition, which concerned my own welfare as well as the welfare of my little family. I promised that if my prayer was answered I would acknowledge it in this way. It was answered before twenty-four hours had gone by."

Shots at Sundry Targets

BY T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.

AIMED AT

Wrongs to be Righted,
Errors to be Corrected,
Dangers to be Avoided,
Burdens to be Lightened,
Follies to be Shunned,
Sorrows to be Mitigated,
Victories to be Won.

This great volume, consisting of over 700 large pages, contains some of the best things ever penned by T. DeWitt Talmage, the greatest word-painter of the 19th century. It is bound in cloth, with gold side, back stamp, and beautifully illustrated. Regular price, $2.00, our price, $1.00. All charges prepaid. Address

The Christian Herald Book Department
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 455

ery-day life would have been welcome; but when the interruption took the shape of a good-looking young man (wearing passable clothes and a really creditable necktie), Miss Rosalie exhibited an elation which alarmed her prudent mother.

"I don't want you should encourage him to come here too much, daughter," inspired the anxious matron, hovering uncertainly about her daughter, as she stood before her mirror patting and coaxing herself into shape as a bird preens its feathers. "Of course the Blossoms are real nice folks, an' all that; but——"

The girl broke into a light trill of laughter. "Why, Mother Scott! do you suppose I'd think of such a thing?" she demanded. "He's only a common working man. But I suppose I've got to be decently polite to him, haven't I? I do wish we lived in the city; things are so different there. The girls at school would be so amused to think I actually had a call from the young man who papered and painted our house!"

She shrugged her pretty shoulders in a way she had learned from her French teacher, and her mother breathed an anxious sigh. "Dear me!" she murmured, as the girl left the room, "it is such a task to bring up a girl. I wonder——" She paused to straighten the silver trifles on the dressing-table, then went down to her kitchen, her honest American heart filled with vague reproaches.

George Blossom had a great deal to say for himself. He was not at all a timid young man, and he exhibited a certain masculine masterfulness of manner, to which Miss Rosalie responded with brief sentences and fleeting smiles and pretty airs of deference.

"I wish," said Mr. Blossom confidently, "that you would let me drive you down to the village to call on Miss Day. She hasn't the remotest idea about the papers for her rooms, and yet she doesn't want me to pick them out for her. Perhaps you could advise her; you have such beautiful taste, Miss Rosalie, and you know exactly what you want every time."

"That Miss Day must be an awfully queer person about 'most everything," said the girl, with one of her little shrugs. "I never heard of anything so amusing as that affair of her's last week. Just fancy pulling all sorts and conditions of things out of one's house and giving them away in that public manner! Really, I don't think I should have cared to have everybody see what I'd been saving up all these years. It must have been rather embarrassing, I should think."

"I hadn't thought of it in that light; but I guess it was rather queer of her," said Mr. Blossom, with an admiring look. "The fact is, I guess I'm responsible for the whole affair. I got into a pretty plain sort of a talk with her, and without really meaning to do so, I told her the truth about herself for once. She seemed dreadfully stirred-up and in earnest by the time I got through. It was really that that put her up to giving her things away, though I haven't mentioned it to anyone else except mother."

The girl lifted her pretty eyebrows. "What a dangerous person you must be," she said coquettishly. "I shall have to look out or you'll be telling me the truth about myself; I'm sure that would be awfully unpleasant!"

"I mean to do that some day," he told her.

"Mean to do what?" she asked, with the wide eyes of uncomprehending innocence.

"I mean to tell you the truth about yourself—and about myself." He held her dark eyes determinedly with his own. "But I can't do it yet. I shall wait till——"

"I'll advise you never to do anything of the kind!" breathed the girl, with a nervous little laugh. Her smooth cheeks were deeply flushed; her eyes shone; her strong brown hands trembled in her lap. This was life. It thrilled and interested her.

"I will ask mother if I may go with you to see that funny, little Miss Day," she added, with a pretty air of condescension. "She must be one of the quaintest persons in the world, almost like a character in a book. I love to study quaint persons!"

"Do you know I'm not going to paint houses or paper rooms all the rest of my life," he told her abruptly, when they were driving away through the gay, young landscape. Her richly colored face under its plumed black hat was turned toward him inquiringly.

"I'm going to study designing next year in earnest. In fact, I've commenced already. I'm taking a regular course in a correspondence school!"

"You are?"

He nodded. "It's simply great! I'm putting in every minute I can get on it. It's fine to go away to school; but if you can't do that——. Anyway, I'm going in to win. Do you understand?"

"Do you know, I think it's awfully nice and ambitious for you to try and improve yourself," she drawled, bending her long neck to one side. "Every one owes it to themselves to do what they can, I think."

"They owe it to other people, too," he said, staring hard at her handsome profile. "I'll tell you one thing, Rosalie, I shouldn't care a darn whether I improved or not, if it wasn't for——"

"But you ought to care, if there wasn't another person in the whole world," interrupted the girl, in a kindly didactic tone. She looked enchantingly pretty, but dangerous, as she said it.

The young man bit his lip frowningly. "Of course you don't care what I do," he said gloomily, "there's no reason why you should."

"Why, certainly I care!" she replied, with lifted eyebrows. "I'm always glad to see everybody improve."

He jerked his lines and spoke sharply to his horse; then appeared entirely absorbed in the resulting phenomena.

The girl sat silent, a slight smile of entire happiness dimpling the corners of her red lips.

"What a comfortable carriage this is," she said after awhile, raising her voice a little as the wheels rattled over the loose stones.

"Glad you think so," he said tersely. "I bought it for mother."

She stole a sidelong glance at his stern young face. "How nice of you!" she murmured.

"Oh, I'm a pretty decent sort of a fellow for an ordinary workman," he answered, with a careless flick at the brown horse. There was a queer aching lump in his throat; he swallowed hard to get rid of it.

"Oh, but you aren't an ordinary workman," she cooed. "You have lots and lots of talent. Anybody could see that."

"Do you think so!" He turned and beamed on her like a young god. "I believe I can do anything, Rosalie, if you'll only—only believe in me," he whispered.

The girl straightened herself with a pretty air of coldness. "I am always interested in talented persons," she said gently. "But isn't that Miss Day's house? How improved it is! It is astonishing what a coat of paint will do for a shabby old house. It looks positively rejuvenated. Really, do you know I should think you would be perfectly satisfied to work such miracles with your paint-pots and brushes. It's ever so much better than painting poor pictures or making poor designs!" She smiled brilliantly into his abashed face.

Miss Cynthia was eagerly glad to see them. She held the tall girl's hand in both her own and looked up at her

CONTINUED ON PAGE 460

"And a Box of Ivory Soap, Please."

The better the store, the greater, proportionately, is the sale of Ivory Soap.

To illustrate: In a certain store in New York which has almost a monopoly of the trade of the wealthiest people of that city, Ivory Soap is usually sold, not by the cake or quarter's worth, but by the box.

And it is used, not only for the bath and in the laundry, but for the toilet as well.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
It Floats

Mason & Hamlin
PIPE ORGANS

embody every feature of tone and mechanism essential to the beautiful performance of musical worship, and to a degree of perfection which fifty-one years of experience has developed.

Estimates furnished on application for organs with or without automatic attachment.

MASON & HAMLIN CO., BOSTON, MASS.

FREE

Cram's Atlas of the World, containing a complete series of 106 Newly Engraved and Colored Maps covering every portion of the Globe, including separate maps of every state and territory in the Union, and special maps of our new possessions of Porto Rico, Philippines, etc. Send 25 cents to cover cost of postage and mailing of TIMELY TOPICS for one year, and get this fine Atlas FREE. TIMELY TOPICS is a handsomely illustrated, high-class publication, with cover lithographed in five colors. Sample of TIMELY TOPICS FREE. Write to-day.

TIMELY TOPICS
345 Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

$30 Church Money

No Investment. No Risk. Send No Money.

If you wish to raise money quickly and easily for any church purpose, send us the photographs of your church and your pastor, and we will reproduce them, together, in carbon photography, on 20 satin finished, aluminum pin trays, and send trays to you express prepaid. Everybody wants this exquisite souvenir of church and pastor, and your members quickly sell them at 25c each. You keep $30 for your profit and send us $20 in full payment for the 20 souvenirs. Send photographs (any size) and names to-day. Send no money. Your workers will sell all the souvenirs in ten days, as hundreds of others have, and you can send us our money any time within a month. Write and learn success of others.

Free Sample Tray on Request.

NEW METHOD CO. (Money-raising Plans for Church Workers) 5560 South Park Ave., Chicago

SAVE 1/3

No Dealer Can Duplicate Our Factory Price

Our high grade carriages are made in our own factory, and sold exclusively by mail order at a saving of from $15 to $30 to the buyer. We warrant every vehicle to be just as represented or refund money and pay freight both ways. Send for free catalogue. It tells the advantage of buying from factory.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE AND HARNESS CO., Columbus, Ohio.

A garment knitted or crocheted of The "Fleisher" Yarns will stand the test of wear and wash.

The "Fleisher" Yarns are uniform, lofty and elastic. They are dyed in a full line of beautiful colors—from the deep rich shades used for afghans, etc., to the light delicate tints for children's garments.

If you use The "Fleisher" Yarns you can be sure that the working will be a pleasure and the finished garment satisfactory.

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

Your dealer should carry them.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL" mailed for four tickets from The "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B" PHILADELPHIA

5% a Fair Return on Your Savings

PER YEAR

We desire the accounts of conservative investors who seek profitable earnings on their money while being assured of its safety. For twelve years our business conducted under has been steadily progressing. During this time we have never paid less than 5% per annum on savings entrusted to our care, distributing to holders of our certificates profits amounting to nearly three-quarters of a million dollars, while materially adding to our surplus.

NEW YORK BANKING DEPARTMENT SUPERVISION

OUR PATRONS ARE PROTECTED

by assets amounting to almost two million dollars. Our loans are made upon the best class of New York and Suburban Real Estate—to home-buyers, who pay us interest and part of the principal each month, which is in turn reinvested.

We Pay 5% PER YEAR On Your Savings

which bear earnings for every day in our care. Your money is always subject to your control if required for other purposes. START NOW. Earnings begin as soon as your money is received, and are mailed you by check semi-annually, or compounded, if desired.

Full particulars with letters of endorsement from prominent clergymen, professional and business men—some, doubtless, in your locality—to whom we are privileged to refer you, will be sent to any one interested.

Assets . . . $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, $150,000

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.,
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N. Y. City

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

PAPER YOUR OWN WALLS

Now Is The Time to Decorate Your Home.
Don't Buy Wall Papers until you see our offer. Gilt Embossed Satins and Tapestries at 5 to 12½ cents per roll.

WE SAVE YOU 50%. WE DEFY COMPETITION.

Write for free book of samples, containing complete estimates for hanging your own wall paper.

CONSUMERS WALL PAPER & SUPPLY COMPANY,
No. 285 Greene Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

for getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and special Terms address at once Mr. P. E., care of

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New York

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 459

wistfully. "How you have changed, my dear," she said. "It was so good of you to think of helping me in my task of picking out my wall-papers. First, I think I want one thing, then I am quite sure I shall prefer something different, and it is all so confusing."

Miss Rosalie's bright eyes rested meditatively on the small person of her hostess. She was thinking that it was really very odd for a person of Miss Cynthia's age to care what sort of wall-papers she had, or what sort of clothes she wore. And Miss Cynthia so evidently did care. She was wearing a gown of soft pale green, the color of young leaves, enlivened with touches of white—the tender white of half-blown blossoms. Her cheeks were delicately flushed, and her blue eyes had somehow taken to themselves the soft, deep color of early violets.

"She is really quite good-looking—considering," the girl told herself, with ingenuous surprise. "But I don't see what possible difference it can make to her now."

She was delightfully conscious that George Blossom had not noticed Miss Cynthia's finery, and that he was looking furtively, but persistenly, at herself, his honest eyes pleading with her to be kind. She was prettily indifferent to all this, was Rosalie, and so very sure of her accomplished self, that she was quite ready to give her undivided attention to the subject of Miss Cynthia's wall-papers.

It was absurdly easy, for a person of artistic tastes and cultivated perceptions. A soft leaf-green was obviously the thing for the big southwest parlor. And the rather dark and narrow entrance hall must be illuminated with a cheerful pale yellow, which would greet the incoming guest like a burst of sunlight. Nothing could be prettier for the dining-room than a dull gold, with a frieze of ripe pumpkins and great shadowy leaves.

And so they went through the empty rooms, where only a bit of old-fashioned furniture remained here and there—a tiny work-table, a bookcase with queer, diamond-shaped glass, a mahogany sideboard with claw feet.

"These pieces of old furniture are simply dear!" declared the girl. "But just what do you mean to put with them, now that you've given away all the rest?"

Miss Cynthia hesitated. "I'm sure you will think me very odd," she said appealingly; "but all I gave away was so associated—with——. Do you know, my dear, I've never had a very good time—that is, not yet. Oh, I do hope you'll begin right away to have a good time—while you're young."

"I expect to," said Rosalie Scott, with conviction. "Why shouldn't I have a good time?"

She held her little chin very high, and her dark lashes cast bewitching shadows on her soft cheeks. But how palpably absurd it was for an elderly person, like Miss Cynthia, to think about having good times! She shrugged her shoulders gently and glanced sidewise at George Blossom. She felt sure that he would agree with her. "You were speaking of the furniture, were you not?" she reminded her hostess sweetly.

"Yes, I believe I was—of the furniture. I was going to tell you that I have in the attic, stored away by itself, some furniture that I did not give away. It has never been used since I can remember. It belonged to the Breyfogle family ever so far back. When mother was married she wanted to have things different, you know, so she refurnished all of the rooms downstairs and most of the chambers. She wanted everything to be new and—yes, I suppose she liked her furniture to be fashionable; so she bought all black walnut, with a great deal of carving and gilt lines; the bureaus and tables all had white marble tops, and the carpets were covered with large wreaths of bright-colored flowers. Perhaps you remember?"

Miss Scott nodded. "Dreadful wasn't it?" she said, with a brilliant smile. "The early Victorian style of furniture is quite as hideous as hoop-skirts. Really, I think you were sensible to get rid of it, even if you had to give it away."

Miss Cynthia looked puzzled. "Everything was very nice and—expensive," she said doubtfully. "I gave it away because—because I was tired of keeping everything for myself. Besides, I disliked it for—for other reasons. The furniture upstairs is as old-fashioned as can be; but I thought it would do for the little while——"

"I wish you'd show it to me," said Rosalie, her girlish curiosity getting the better of her. "Is it mahogany? Mahogany is all the rage now."

"Is it?" said Miss Cynthia vaguely. "Really, I didn't notice. The pieces are of some dark wood, I know, very old and queer. If you won't mind coming upstairs I shall be glad to show them to you."

The girl burst into a little ecstatic shriek of surprise and delight when her eyes fell upon the dusty shapes huddled together in a dark corner of the Breyfogle attic. "Oh!" she cried. "What a find! You are certainly a lucky person. Do you know these are the dearest, sweetest, loveliest old mahogany!"

"Are they really nice?" asked Miss Cynthia, in unaffected surprise. "I should like the rooms to look pretty and—different."

"Pretty!" echoed Miss Scott. "Do look at that sofa! Isn't it the sweetest thing! and those chairs, and that exquisite table! And not one piece broken, or even marred!"

The girl was really carried out of herself with delight. "You know I learned all about the value of Colonial furniture, and all that sort of thing, when I was in school in Boston," she went on, with a serious air of superior culture. "I went through our attic the minute I got home; but we never had such exquisite things as these."

"They have been in the family for generations," observed Miss Cynthia, with a touch of her vanished pride. "We always kept everything; and we took good care of everything we kept. But mother thought them very ugly and old-fashioned."

"The idea!" laughed the girl. "Well, you'll have the most stylish house imaginable. Do let me help arrange it when it is ready; won't you?"

"I shall be so glad if you will," Miss Cynthia told her.

Her blue eyes beamed upon the two young people, with innocent pleasure in their supposed happiness. "George—Mr. Blossom has told me all about your pretty rooms," she went on. "I hope he can make my old walls look just as pretty. Then we can do the rest."

Rosalie's scarlet lip curled cruelly. "We found Mr. Blossom a most careful and conscientious workman," she drawled indifferently. "I am recommending him to all our friends."

The young man grew suddenly pale. He turned on his heel to conceal the uncontrollable quiver of his boyish mouth.

"I think I must ask you to take me home now, Mr. Blossom; mother will be growing anxious," Miss Rosalie concluded, with a nice propriety of manner.

Miss Cynthia watched the two uneasily, as they walked down to the front gate, the girl smiling and brilliant, the boy, still pale and downcast.

"Oh!" murmured Miss Cynthia, "I'm afraid!" She lifted one fragile little hand to the breast of her gay spring gown and held it there, while the smiling girl and the unhappy-looking boy drove away down the street.

TO BE CONTINUED

Summer Suits

Everything Made to Order. Nothing Ready-Made. $6 to $25

Catalogue, Samples and Simple Measurement Directions Sent FREE.

Every lady who contemplates the purchase of a Summer costume should have a copy of our Catalogue of New York Fashions and samples of the season's newest materials. Better than a visit to your local store, because our catalogue and samples offer you a much greater variety, and show at a glance what is being worn by women of fashion.

The Catalogue illustrates 158 of the latest styles, tells the proper costume for every occasion, and our stock of materials consists of the most popular weaves and colors.

We make everything to order, and under our exclusive system every garment is made and trimmed to suit the individual customer.

Correct style, perfect workmanship and faultless fit distinguish our garments.

WE GUARANTEE TO FIT YOU OR REFUND YOUR MONEY.

SHIRT-WAIST SUITS	$6 to $20
Made of Mohair, Serge, Brilliantine, etc.
SILK SHIRT-WAIST SUITS . .	$12 to $25
TAILOR-MADE SUITS . . .	$7.50 to $25
RAIN COATS & LONG COATS	$9.75 to $18
JACKETS	$5.75 to $15
SEPARATE SKIRTS	$3.50 to $12

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our Summer Catalogue showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of Samples of the Newest Materials and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. Write for them to-day. You will get them by return mail.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York
Mail Orders Only. No Agts. or Branches. Est. 17 Yrs.

Established 1857. EHRICH BROS. New York's Best Store.

Forty-eight years' catering to the wants of the best people in New York is certainly evidence that we give the right merchandise at the right prices. In order to have you become acquainted with our store and its wonderful inducements to out-of-town buyers, we offer this waist at actual cost to manufacture. We would like every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to have one.

No. 32. China Silk Waist, made with four rows of two patterns of Val. lace forming a round yoke, three rows of same lace down front to match, lace collar, 14 fine tucks on each side of the front to bust line, tucked and buttoned back, full leg-o'-mutton sleeve, with fancy lace cuff. Comes in white only. The new and latest style. Price (the actual cost to manufacture)

$1.98

Catalogue and special sale sheets issued monthly will be mailed free upon request. Write us about your needs; we handle everything. Agents wanted; write for plan.

Mention this paper and send us $1.98, enclosing 10c. extra for postage, and we will mail this beautiful white China Silk waist to you. If you do not think it one of the greatest bargains you ever purchased, you are privileged to return, and we will cheerfully refund you the money. Our guarantee is—you must be satisfied.

6th Ave. 22nd & 23rd sts. EHRICH BROS. 6th Ave. 22nd & 23rd sts.
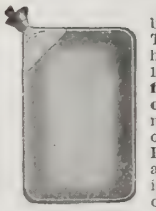
NEW YORK.

The Wonderful new self-heating

Thermalite Bag



Looks like the ordinary hot water bag, but is far superior in every way. The "Thermalite" Bag No. 3 will give heat at a uniform temperature (about 135° F.) for 8 hours. It stores heat for future use—turn the heat on any time you wish, day or night. Lasts a lifetime. No refilling or renewal of contents. No danger. Imparts a refreshing fragrance. Guaranteed. Price $2.50. Money back if not satisfactory. We send prepaid on receipt of price if druggist cannot supply you. Descriptive book free.

THE THERMALITE CO., 164 Elm Street, New York, U. S. A

Oread Institute of Domestic Science.
School motto: "We learn to do by doing."
Normal Course in one year.
Graduates readily find employment.
Good health at end of term.
Term begins Sept. 6th, 1905.
Catalogue Free. Worcester, Mass.

A SWEATSHOP IN THE HOME, WHERE EVEN THE BABIES WORK

To Save the Sweatshop Babies

ittle Candidates for Mont-Lawn in the Hot Tenement Work-Rooms of New York

AMONG the throngs, which in some localities of New York make the sidewalks almost impassable, may ften be seen women and children with eat bundles of clothing, which they are rrying to the manufacturers. These ndles are composed of men's and boy's its, representing many days' labor of the mbined family, all of whom are pressed to the service. From old men and wom-, too feeble to work at anything that uld take them out of their dreary, owded home, down to the little three-ar-old, whose tiny fingers are taught to ll basting threads, every one must do a are; otherwise, so poor is the pay that ey would starve.

In these homes so rich in love, yet so or in everything else, conditions exist hich only those who have seen them can elieve possible in a city, rich and power-l as is New York. Often these homes nsist of but one room, where necessarily erything pertaining to domestic life, ich as it is, must be carried on—cooking, ashing, eating, sleeping, besides the daily ind of labor.

From the little three-year-old's fingers, the child of six or eight who is sewing buttons, is but a step. Next comes the rl of ten or twelve, who can "finish" as ilfully as her mother and father. Some-mes this factory work is done entirely by e feminine part of the family, while the ther and boys are traveling about the reets, or "tending" a pushcart or boot-ack stand upon a corner.

It is seldom one can find a family in hich there is not at least one member ho lies pallid and exhausted upon a mis-rable bed, sick from overwork, privation nd wretched, unhealthful surroundings. he atmosphere is always bad and the ght poor; and if grown people, inured to rivation and hardship, cannot stand the rain, what must be the condition of inno-ent little children, compelled to work ntinuously as long as strength holds out? hildren of only ten years often labor ten ours at a time, beginning immediately on eir return from school, and working ntil late at night, all day Saturday, and metimes on Sunday, for necessity says, Seven days shalt thou labor and do all thy ork. The seventh is not the Lord's in a weatshop; it is the landlord's." The ours are not regulated except by the mount of work on hand, and by the capa-ility of the workers to hold out.

Not long ago, the writer visited a family wing in a basement room. Here were athered several women and young girls, l sewing away for dear life. When sked where the younger children were, he reply was, "at school," a busy finger opping long enough to point to several w seats, where the missing children would e seated at their toil upon their return. Where are the babies," was asked. It as so unusual not to see any—there being so indisputable evidence about the room hat there had been babies there very ecently (little ragged garments and a roken, untidy cradle in one corner). Two an-eyed women smiled at the question, artly dropping the garments they were bending over, disclosed an infant each, held to its mother's breast. Poor mothers! they had no time even to nurse their babies, but must perforce work and hold child and garment at the same time, as the fingers flew over the "finishing."

These women usually begin work at five o'clock in the morning, and keep at it steadily for five or six hours, taking perhaps only a cup of coffee in lieu of breakfast. Nothing, absolutely nothing, must be allowed to interfere, if the job must be finished at a certain time, even if they toil until midnight and after. These poor mothers work because they must, from dire necessity. When a man's average weekly income is but a little over three dollars, and the average rent, which must be paid promptly, is nearly and sometimes quite nine dollars per month; it is not inclination or a desire to neglect their children which drives these mothers to such a slave's life.

Often, to save rent, two families will huddle together in one or two small rooms, or boarders will be taken, and then conditions beggar description. No home-life is possible in a tenement workroom, and imagination cannot picture anything more pitiable than the condition of children born and forced to live amid such surroundings. There are many instances where their lives have been saved by a visit to the country, where pure air, and good, abundant food, work wonders for their weary bodies, and where the love and care they receive give their poor, little, starved souls an uplift, which influences all their after lives,

Is there a nobler, more God-given work than trying to help some of these little ones? Could anyone have a sweeter or happier thought, than that which would lead to the rescue of such innocent sufferers? Let us do what we can.

Twenty-one dollars endows a cot for the season at Mont-Lawn, where seven little children can each have ten blessed days of life in a real home, such as they never dreamed of, and which will strengthen them for the life of toil before them, when the vacation is over. Let us not fail in our duty to these, the helpless ones, who call from their tenement homes asking so little from us, but which means so much to them.

All contributions for our Fresh-Air work at Mont-Lawn should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York. Every contribution will be gratefully acknowledged. M. S. HOPKINS.

The Prison-Gate Mission

The record of the first six months work of the Prison-Gate Mission of New York City, is a very remarkable one:

Men met and advised with (ex-prisoners)	2,322
Fed and lodged	645
Found employment for	219
Clothing supplied to	47
Hopeful conversions	77
Visits to the Prison-Gate office for inquiry	870

The headquarters of the Mission are at No. 150 Baxter Street, New York City.

Fresh Milk

is always obtainable. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is absolutely pure cows' milk combined with the finest grade of granulated sugar. For sale at your grocers. Avoid unknown brands.

A Nutritious Food-Drink for all Ages

HORLICK'S MALTED MILK

Should be in every home. It makes a delightful restorative beverage at a moment's notice. A very invigorating and healthful table drink for all, more wholesome than tea, coffee, or cocoa. An ideal nutrient for the infant, growing child, and the aged. Delicious, refreshing, and nutritious as a light luncheon for every member of the family.

Pure, rich milk from our own inspected dairies, with the extract of the cereals carefully selected and malted by our special process. Elaborate precautions insure purity, excellence, and uniformity of the product.

Also in Lunch Tablet form, with chocolate flavor. A delightful confection for children, far superior to candy. It upbuilds the body and satisfies the natural craving. A palatable, quick lunch for busy professional and business men.

At all druggists.

Sample mailed free upon request. Our Booklet gives many valuable recipes, and is also sent free, if mentioned.

Ask for HORLICK'S; others are imitations.

Horlick's Food Company
Racine, Wis., U. S. A.
London, England.
Montreal, Canada.

Shakespeare's Seven Ages

5th: "And then the Justice, full of wise saws"

A KALAMAZOO Direct to You

We will send you direct from our factory, freight prepaid, any Kalamazoo Stove or Range on a

360 DAYS APPROVAL TEST

If not as represented, the range or stove is to be returned at our expense. We save you from 20% to 40%, because we give you cutting out all dealers', jobbers', middlemen's and agents' profits. We are the only stove manufacturers in the world who sell their entire product direct to the user. We guarantee quality under a $20,000 bond.

Lowest Factory Prices

Send Postal for Catalog No. 103

describing full line of ranges, cook stoves and heaters of all kinds.

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., MFRS.,
Kalamazoo, Mich.

We fit all our ranges and coal stoves with our patent oven thermometer, which makes baking easy.

SANE FINANCE

Is Taught in Monthly Lessons by

"The Federal Exchange"

A Journal devoted to Finance and Investments.

Send name and address for three months' free trial subscription.

FEDERAL STOCK AND BOND EXCHANGE

NEW YORK,	PHILADELPHIA,	CHICAGO,
52 Broadway.	308 Chestnut St.	140 Dearborn St.

A FINE COOK FOR $1.00 A YEAR

By using the

O-HI-O Combined Steam Cooker & Baker

Guaranteed to save 50 per cent in fuel, labor, time and provisions. A whole meal, from soup to dessert, cooked over one burner on any style stove. No intermingling of odors or tastes. Insures you deliciously cooked, easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals. Thirty days trial. Fine for summer cottages. Grand for Canning Fruit.

Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue Free.

61 Cook Book for 4c postage. We want Good Agents. Guarantee $30 to $40 weekly and expenses.

O-HI-O COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, O.

PATTON'S Sun-Proof Paints

Insure your property against decay. A few dollars in Sun-Proof Paint will do it. Advice and Book FREE

PATTON PAINT CO., 111 LAKE STREET, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

THE "BEST" LIGHT

Produces a safe, [illegible] useful light [illegible] or oil [illegible] at [illegible]

No dirt, smoke [illegible]

THE BEST LIGHT COMPANY,
[illegible] E. 5th St., Canton, Ohio

"Use the means and heaven will give you the Blessing." Never neglect a useful article like

SAPOLIO

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

All goes well when the baby is well. Keep the baby well by giving him Mellin's Food, it will nourish him, make him grow strong and keep him happy. We are sure of it; try it. Ask the mothers of Mellin's Food children. Send for our free book about Mellin's Food.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

GETTYSBURG AND WASHINGTON

Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The battlefield of Gettysburg, and the National Capital in all the glory of its Spring freshness, are attractions so alluring that few would feel like refusing to visit them. It is to place these two attractions within easy reach of every one that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company announces a tour over the interesting battlefield, through the picturesque valleys of Maryland, and an entertaining stay at Washington.

The tour will leave New York, West Twenty-third Street, 7.55 A. M., and Philadelphia 12.20 P. M., Saturday, May 27, in charge of one of the Company's tourist agents, and will cover a period of six days. An experienced chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies, will accompany the party throughout. Round-trip tickets, covering transportation, carriage drives, and hotel accommodations, will be sold at the extremely low rate of $22, from New York, $21 from Trenton, $19 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

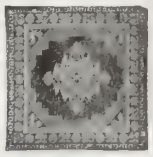
For itineraries and full information apply to ticket agents; Tourist Agent, 263 Fifth Avenue, New York; 342 Fulton Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address Geo. W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.25

Sent to your home by Express, Prepaid.

Sizes and Prices
9x 6 ft.,	$3.25
9x 7½ ft.,	3.75
9x 9 ft.,	4.25
9x10½ ft.,	4.75
9x12 ft.,	5.25
9x15 ft.,	6.25

Beautiful and attractive patterns, choice colorings. Woven in one piece. Both sides can be used, more durable than high priced carpets. Sold to you direct at one profit. Money refunded if not satisfactory



Also Importers of Portieres and Lace Curtains.
New Spring Catalogue showing goods in actual colors, sent free.
ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 689 Bourse, Philadelphia, Pa

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

By Geo. C. Stebbins.

30c. a copy, postpaid. $25 per 100

Returnable Sample free to Pastors, etc.

The Biglow & Main Co., Chicago-New York

4% to 6% Interest

Any investment paying more is accompanied by greater risk. We have only first-class loans and high grade bonds. Put your savings where you will be earning money on them. Write for particulars.

E. LeRoy Galt, 327 Locust St., Sterling, Ill.

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT

LAKE CHAMPLAIN and THE GREEN MOUNTAINS. Illustrated Book with complete list of hotels and boarding houses. Board, $4.00 per week and upward. Mailed for 6c. postage.

A. W. ECCLESTONE, S.P.A., C. V. Ry., 385 Broadway, N. Y.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington, and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

Four Little Bee Books FREE

All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.

A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio

GOV'T REVOLVERS, GUNS, SWORDS, Military Goods NEW and old as bought to F. Bannerman, 579 Broadway, New York. 15c Catalog mailed 6c

HELPING OTHERS*

WHEN the lawyer asked Jesus, "Who is my neighbor?" he doubtless expected to hear that his neighbors were people living near him, or at most, people of his own nation. Instead of thus limiting the class of people who had claims on him, Jesus turns the question on the lawyer himself. The question for him to consider was whether he had the neighborly spirit. Nothing could be further from the Samaritan, than the Jew who despised him, who would have no dealings with him. Yet the Samaritan, perceiving his need, went to his assistance when the Jews had passed him by. That is the keynote of Christianity—help to the man who needs it, love to all, whether they be friends or strangers or even enemies. In the description Christ drew of the judgment day (Matt. 25: 31-46), in which he represents certain men as being rewarded because they had fed the hungry, clothed the naked, and visited the prisoner, the same principle is embodied. It is not a question whether these people have a claim on the Christian; the question is whether the Christian has the Christ spirit which is distinctly one of helpfulness.

Our Lord's own example emphasized his teaching. "I came, he said, not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." The publicans, whom all men despised, found in him a friend; the sick found in him a healer, and even the social outcast was permitted to approach him and anoint his feet. At the very last he made excuse for his murderers on the plea that they were sinning in ignorance, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." "By this," he said, "shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." It is the test that is too often forgotten, which marks the man who has the Christ spirit. Is he kind to all—benevolent, helpful—in a word, like Christ?

The injunction of helpfulness is not laid on the rich alone. It is true that they have more opportunities of obeying it than have the poor; but the poor are not excluded. Visitors in the tenements tell us that the helpfulness of one poor person to another is often wonderful. The mother who has a large family of her own to look after, will take care of the children of a sick neighbor. The poor man who does not know where the next day's food is coming from, will divide his meal with one poorer than himself. They help one another and so fulfil the law of Christ.

Nor is the giving of money always the best way of obeying the injunction. It is very easy for a rich man to give of his abundance, but sometimes his gift does harm rather than good. The truly helpful man takes pains to understand what his neighbor needs and adapts his help to the need. To find work for a man who is unemployed, to give a boy a start in life, to spend an hour with a sick and lonely person is often better help than the gift of money. One of the best loved men in New York that we have ever known, was a man whose income was barely enough for his own needs. He was a man whose visits were always welcome wherever there was trouble. Day by day he was in the homes of people who were in distress; he would plead with the landlord to have patience with the tenant in arrears and with the employer to take back an employee who had been discharged. There are plenty of opportunities of rendering service for one who desires to render it, and his own poverty does not disable him from the work.

Sooner or later the Church will have to take up the problem of poverty. It will do so when it realizes its Lord's concern for the poor. In a Christian land there ought to be no one who lacks food and clothing. After all that Christ has said, it will be a grave indictment of his professed followers that any one of them had more than he needed and yet allowed people near him to perish for lack of necessaries. Not until the Christian Church makes this problem of misery and want its own and intelligently grapples with it, will it fulfil Christ's command.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for June 4. Eph. 4: 1-3; Heb. 10: 24, 25.

BEWILDERED DISCIPLES

By MRS. M. BAXTER

WHAT a searching test to human nature is the cross of the Lord Jesus! Where were the multitudes which had followed him and hung upon his words? Where were the healed ones, which in numbers had received their sight and their hearing, and had been delivered from all manner of sickness and all manner of disease? Where were the liberated ones, who had been set free from the possession of the devil? Where were the healed lepers? One only of them all was found true to Jesus at the cross—Mary Magdalene, "out of whom he had cast seven devils!" But where were the disciples, who had left all to follow him? Judas had betrayed him; Peter had denied him; all had forsaken him; and when compunction had seized them, they did not venture near him; but, with the women that followed him, they "stood afar off" (Luke 23: 49). Only the faithful four ran the risk of being identified with the crucified Jesus.

As a Teacher, the Lord Jesus had been popular; he is so still. The Sermon on the Mount is lauded as the masterpiece of ethics by the very men who deny the spiritual death and the moral depravity of man by nature, and the consequent need for, and the blessed existence of, an atonement which exalts the God who conceived it, and humbles to the dust man, who so greatly needs it.

The Jew, the Unitarian, and the Brahmin join hands in extolling the teaching of our Lord; for such a standard as he sets up would exalt man if he could attain to it by his unaided will power. But the cross! the need for such a sacrifice to put away sin, and the confession of sin which demands such a sacrifice, is an abomination in the eyes of all men who have not come near enough to God to cry out with Isaiah, "Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (Isa. 6: 5).

After the cross, Peter could no longer boast of his zeal for his Master; the whole of the eleven were ashamed and broken; they had nothing to fall back upon in their past relations with Jesus which could excuse their desertion of him in the hour of his trial. But it showed them where they were, and what they were. And this is what the cross does still. Therefore, unbroken men, who still have a belief in themselves, and who are ready to patronize and to endorse the teaching of Jesus, will have nothing of the cross. The disciples were searched out and discovered. Their real love for themselves, which exceeded their love to Jesus, had come to the surface, and they stood exposed and ashamed. This was their preparation for being filled with the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. "Now the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy," could find a dwelling place in them (Isa. 57: 15).

But the cross which so showed them up to themselves, brought out also the real hypocrisy and unreality of the chief priests, elders, and scribes, and showed their utter corruption; and when the changed lives of those who were filled with the Spirit at Pentecost were contrasted with those of the elders of the people — their corruption could not remain hidden. Was it in part a disgust at the proceedings of the authorities which influenced two men of distinction to put away their unworthy fears — which had caused the rich Joseph of Arimathea to hide his faith, and Nicodemus to come to Jesus only by night—and at last to throw in their lot with his cause?

They and the ministering women secured for the body of the Lord a decent burial. It had been foretold, "He made his grave with the wicked and with the rich in his death" (Isaiah 53: 9; Luke 23: 50-56; John 19: 38-42).

A Paper Proposal

is a story of a summer love match well told and beautifully illustrated. The small picture above only suggests the real charm of these illustrations. As a bit of readable fiction the story is well worth writing for. It is contained in a handsomely bound book of 128 pages a portion of which is devoted to the attractive mountain and lake resorts along the Lackawanna Railroad. It is a book you will like to see. It may be had by sending 10 cents in postage stamps to T. W. Lee, General Passenger Agent Lackawanna Railroad, New York that has every one thinking nowadays is "How can I get the largest returns on my money?"

The Money Question

How much does your money earn?

Wouldn't you rather have 5% than only 3% or 4%? We pay

5% interest

on all money deposited here and the interest starts the day the money is received. Interest is compounded semi-annually and additional deposits can be made at any time. The capital is absolutely safe and can be withdrawn immediately.

Write for our free booklet

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co

Dept. E. Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md

AGENTS $20 to $50 weekly Entire or spare time Selling STANDARD SELF-Filling -Cleaning Fountain PENS

No ink dropper. No smeared fingers No "blow" No taking apart to clean No twisted rubber No valve or piston No awkward hump No complication

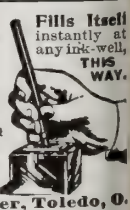
FREE LESSONS in Successful Salesmanship make experience unnecessary. Write for new plan and do it NOW.

Standard Pen Co., 1506 Spitzer, Toledo, O.



THE WAY OF LIFE

By H. M. McCLUSKY

The most important thing in the world is to possess and lead others in the Way of Life. Therefore send $1.00 at once and THE WAY OF LIFE will be sent postpaid.

M. E. MUNSON, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Life in Labrador*

A CLUSTER of islands, lying off the Cape, made the shelter of our harbor. They were but great rocks, gray, ragged, wet with fog and surf, rising bleak and barren out of the sea that forever fretted a thousand miles of rocky coast as barren and as sombre and as desolate as they; but they broke wave and wind unfailingly and with vast unconcern—they were of old time, mighty, steadfast, remote from the rage of weather and the changing mood of the sea, surely providing safe shelter for us folk of the coast—and we loved them, as true men everywhere love home.

"'Tis the cleverest harbor on the Labrador!" said we.

When the wind was in the northeast—when it broke, swift and vicious, from the dullen waste of water beyond, whipping up the gray sea, driving in the vagrant ice, spreading clammy mist over the reefs and rocky headlands of the long coast—our harbor lay unruffled in the lee of God's Warning. Skull Island and a shoulder of God's Warning broke the winds from the north; the froth of the breakers, to be sure, came creeping through the north tickle, when the sea was high; but no great wave from the open ever disturbed the quiet water within. We were fended from the southerly gales by the massive, beetling front on the Isle of Good Promise, which, grandly unmoved by their fuming rage, turned them up into the black sky, where they went screaming northward, high over the heads of the white houses huddled in the calm below; and the seas they brought—gigantic, breaking seas—went to waste on Raven Rock and the Reef of Thirty Black Devils, ere, their strength spent, they growled over the jagged rocks at the base of the great cliffs of Good Promise, and came softly swelling through the broad south tickle to the basin. The west wind came out of the wilderness, fragrant of the far-off forest, lying unknown and dread in the inland, from which the mountains, bold and blue and forbidding, lifted high their heads; and the mist was then driven back into the gloomy seas of the east, and the sun was out, shining warm and yellow, and the sea, lying in the lee of the land, was all a-ripple and a-flash.

When the spring gales blew—the sea being yet white with drift-ice—the schooners of the Newfoundland fleet, bound north to the fishing, often came scurrying into our harbor for shelter. And when the skippers, still dripping the spray of the gale from the beard and sou'wester, came ashore for a yarn and a hospitable glass with my father, the trader, many a tale of wind and wreck and far-away harbors I heard, while we sat by the roaring stove in my father's little shop: such as those that began, "Well, 'twas the wonderfullest gale o' wind you ever seed—snowin' an' blowin', with the sea in mountains, an' it as black as a wolf's throat—an' we was somewheres off Cape Mugford. She were drivin' with a nor-east gale, with the shore somewheres handy t' le' ward. But look! nar a one of us knowed where she were to, less 'twas in the thick o' the Blackheart Reefs . . ." Stout, hearty fellows they were who told yarns like these — thick and broad about the chest and lanky below, long-armed, hammer-fisted, with frowsy beards, bushy eyebrows and clear blue eyes, which were fearless and quick to look.

When the weather turned civil, I would away to the summit of the Watchman—a scamper and a mad climb—to watch the doughty little schooners on their way. And it made my heart swell and flutter to see them dig their noses into the swelling seas—to watch them heel and leap and make the white dust fly—to feel the rush of the wet wind that drove them—to know that the gray path of a thousand miles was every league of the way beset with peril. Brave craft! Stout hearts to sail them! It thrilled me to watch them beating up the suddy coast, lying low and black in the north, and through the leaden, ice-strewn seas, with the murky night creeping in from the open. I, too, would be a skipper of a schooner, and sail with the best of them.

"A schooner an' a wet deck for me!" thought I.

And I loved our harbor all the more for that.

* Doctor Luke, of the Labrador, by Norman Duncan. The story gives a graphic picture of the lives of the fisher folk in this far away and almost forgotten part of the world. The extract from the first chapter, given above, shows well the picturesque setting in which the characters play out their parts in this touching tale of the sea. Published by Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago, Toronto. Price $1.50.

Books Received

Beautiful Stories from the Good Old Book, by Isabel C. Byrum. Illustrated. A welcome volume of Bible Stories for the young. Illuminated cloth covers; pp. 315. Published by the Gospel Trumpet Co., Moundsville, W. Va.

The Horse, by Isaac Philips Roberts, late Dean of the Cornell College of Agriculture. A comprehensive and well-written manual which should be in the hands of every lover of horses. Copiously illustrated; pp. 401; cloth binding. Price $1.25. The Macmillan Co., London and New York, publishers.

The Way of Life, by H. M. McClusky, a volume of much spiritual helpfulness, and containing many hints as to the formation of Christian character and the molding of one's life to the highest purposes. Worthy of a place in every Christian household. Pp. 252. Cloth covers, with portrait. Price $1. M. E. Munson, Bible House, New York, publisher.

Successful Advertising and How to Accomplish it. A practical work for advertisers and business men. by J. Angus MacDonald. This book is the result of many years' experience with some of the largest advertising successes, and the writer may therefore be accepted as speaking with authority. It is a book that ought to be worth a good deal to the general advertiser for the hints it contains, which he can make serviceable. 400 pages. Cloth covers. Price $2. Lincoln Publishing Co., Philadelphia.

An Indian Priestess, the Life of Chundra Lela, by Ada Lee. This is a story of deep interest, and is full of encouragement for workers in the mission field. In the introduction by the Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird, he says: "This is a remarkable life-story. The long and weary search for peace, the utter failure of Hinduism to help, and the glad reception of the true light, are graphically told." Price 50 cents net. Published by Fleming H. Revell Co., New York.

The New 250-Year Calendar

A fine new edition of the 250-Year Calendar has been issued in colors, and is a marked improvement on former editions. It is beautifully printed from new plates on fine coated stock. Its popularity as a work of reference is steadily growing. What the dictionary is in giving proper pronunciation and definition of words, and the encyclopedia in supplying information biographic, historic, scientific, etc., this 250-Year Calendar does chronologically, giving all the days, weeks, months and years, between 1762 and 2012. Adapted for use in the home circle, it is well-nigh invaluable to business and professional men for quick and handy reference. This beautiful Encyclopedic Calendar sent, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents. W. H. McIntyre, 221 Pearsall Ave., Jersey City, N. J., Publisher.

DAME NATURE HINTS

When the Food Is Not Suited

When Nature gives her signal that something is wrong it is generally with the food; the old Dame is always faithful and one should act at once.

To put off the change is to risk that which may be irreparable. An Arizona man says:

"For years I could not safely eat any breakfast. I tried all kinds of breakfast foods, but they were all soft, starchy messes, which gave me distressing headaches. I drank strong coffee, too, which appeared to benefit me at the time, but added to the headaches afterwards. Toast and coffee were no better, for I found the toast very constipating.

"A friend persuaded me to quit the old coffee and the starchy breakfast foods, and use Postum Coffee and Grape-Nuts instead. I shall never regret taking his advice. I began using them three months ago.

"The change they have worked in me is wonderful. I now have no more of the distressing sensations in my stomach after eating, and I never have any headaches. I have gained 12 pounds in weight and feel better in every way. Grape-nuts make a delicious as well as a nutritious dish, and I find that Postum Coffee is easily digested and never produces dyspepsia symptoms."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Get the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

THE Overland Limited

Special low round-trip rates will be in effect to the Pacific Coast throughout the summer. These strictly first-class tickets are good on the famous electric-lighted daily Overland Limited, over the only double-track railway between Chicago and the Missouri River, via the

CHICAGO, UNION PACIFIC AND NORTH-WESTERN LINE.

Less than three days en route. Two fast daily trains to San Francisco, Los Angeles and Portland. Daily and personally conducted excursions in Pullman tourist sleeping cars.

The Best of Everything.

All agents sell tickets via this line.

Send 4 cents in stamps for full particulars concerning these low rates, with folder regarding the Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland.

W. B. KNISKERN, Pass'r Traffic Mgr. C. & N.-W. Ry. CHICAGO.

OL156

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

UNION PACIFIC THE OVERLAND ROUTE

$35.00 Split Hickory

Top Buggy guaranteed 2 years. Sold on 30 Days Free Trial. It's a genuine Split Hickory that means 25% more value. The biggest buggy bargain of the year. Free 192 page catalogue. The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co. H. C. Phelps, Pres. Station 236 Cincinnati, Ohio

$35

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable.—Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemeteries. Catalogue free. KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 445 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

DEATH TO HEAVES! NEWTON'S

GUARANTEED

Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A specific for wind, throat and stomach troubles. Recommended by veterinarians and owners. Every druggist in America has it or can get it.

Send for Booklet.

$1.00 per can, at dealers, or by Express, prepaid.

THE NEWTON REMEDY CO., Toledo, Ohio

WIRE-$1.40 Per 100 Lbs.

Smooth galvanized wire, put up 100 lbs. to a bale, lengths running up to 250ft. No. 14 guage, per 100 lbs. $1.40. Write for prices on other gauges. Fence staples, per 100 lbs., $2.00. Wire nails, mixed in a keg, per 100 lbs., $1.60. Barbed wire, per 100 lbs., $2.35. Poultry netting, steel fence, etc., at low prices. Ask for Catalogue No. F, 373 on merchandise of all kinds from Sheriffs' and Receivers' sales.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO., West 35th & Iron Sts., Chicago

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address COILED SPRING FENCE CO. Box D, Winchester, Ind.

$39.50 BUYS THIS

We save you dealer's profits. Ship on approval 30 days free trial. Money back if not satisfactory. Send for 200 page Style Book containing 1000 wonderful bargains. UNION BUGGY CO. Dept. 823 Pontiac, Mich.

STARK FRUIT BOOK

shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution. We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo.

ARE YOU DEAF?

We have 25 kinds of Instruments to Assist Hearing. Sent on approval. Write for Catalogue. WM. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia.

BONANZA FOR CANVASSERS

You can make $50.00 a week. Spare time $1.00 an hour. Salary if preferred. Outfit free. ZIEGLER CO., Philadelphia.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Delight, Biscuit, Cake and Doughnut Cutter, Apple Corer, and Strainer, 5 articles in one. Sells on sight. Large Catalog free. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N.Y.

The DEAF can now HEAR

SHOWING POSITION OF DRUM IN THE EAR.

After 25 years of deafness, Mr. Geo. P. Way invented and can now hear as well as any one.

THE WAY EAR DRUM

It has restored the hearing of thousands who were entirely deaf. If you are deaf, or becoming so, write to-day for a full description of this wonderful invention to

GEO. P. WAY, 1003 Majestic Bldg., DETROIT, MICH.

COILED SPRING FENCE

That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.

SOLD DIRECT TO YOU

At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.

Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.

KITSELMAN BROTHERS, Box 297, Muncie Indiana.

WE WANT AGENTS

in every town to ride and sell our Bicycles. Good pay. Finest guaranteed 1905 MODELS, with Puncture-Proof tires, Coaster Brakes $10 to $24
1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes, $7 to $12
500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8
CLEARING SALE at half cost.
We SHIP ON APPROVAL and TEN DAYS TRIAL to anyone without a cent deposit. Write at once for Special Offer on sample Bicycle.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAGO

NEW INVENTION!

Write for new booklet, Special Offer this month. Our new Quaker Folding Vapor Bath Cabinets, finest produced. Everybody delighted. Enjoy at home for 3c each all the marvelous cleansing, invigorating, curative effects of the famous Turkish Baths. Open the 5,000,000 skin pores, purifies the entire system. Beats Hot Springs. Prevents disease. Saves Dr. bills. Better to-day than Nature's drugless remedy for colds, grip, rheumatism, aches, pains, blood and skin diseases, kidney trouble, children's diseases and female ills. Guaranteed. Sent on 30 days' trial. $100 a month, salesmen, managers, general workers. Write QUAKER WORLD MFG. CO., 82 WORLD BUILDING, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Corns The sure remedy that cures Corns by the roots—A-CORN SALVE. Easy, safe, painless. 15c at your druggist's or by mail. Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

$100 A YEAR FOR EVERY FAMILY

IF YOU KNEW

of a plan that will positively save you $100.00 a year on your living expenses alone, how much would you pay for the information? You would consider such knowledge cheap at $50.00; but you can have it and $10.00 worth of other valuable information besides,

For Only One Dollar

I personally guarantee every transaction with the Cash Buyers Union First National Co-operative Society, and if you are dissatisfied with your purchases for any reason whatsoever, write to me and I will see that your money is promptly refunded, without question, quibble or controversy.
JULIUS KAHN, Pres. and Gen'l Mgr.

IN ADDITION to our mammoth 1350-page catalogue and your choice of Hill's Twentieth Century Manual or Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, we will give you a year's subscription to our Wholesale Grocery Price List, a year's subscription to the National Co-Operator and all special price bulletins issued by us from time to time. The actual cash value of all this is MORE THAN TEN DOLLARS, but you get it all for ONLY ONE DOLLAR.

$1 $1

THE GREATEST OFFER EVER MADE——READ EVERY WORD OF IT——THEN ACT

WE GUARANTEE that our Mammoth Co-operative Catalogue and Price List No. 3 will save every family at least $100 a year on their living expenses. With this catalogue in your home you can save $100 a year or more, whether you buy your supplies from us or not, because it quotes the prices you ought to pay when buying elsewhere. If you pay more than our prices for anything you buy you are paying too much. Our wonderful co-operative plan has established the lowest prices ever known on high grade, reliable merchandise; our plan does away with the middlemen, and saves you the enormous profits and losses which you have to pay under the competitive system. Our great catalogue is the most remarkable known example of what co-operation will do. Over one million people, living in every civilized country, have given this catalogue their enthusiastic endorsement. They have approved it as the WORLD'S GUIDE TO ECONOMY because it places them in touch with goods of the highest quality at prices 30 to 50 per cent less than they formerly paid for low grade goods sold elsewhere. These people buy everything they eat, wear or use from our store, because they know that every article we send them must be absolutely satisfactory, and even better than represented in our catalogue, or the transaction will not cost them one cent.

COST $30,000 The cost of illustrations and typesetting alone in this wonderful book amounts to more than Thirty Thousand Dollars, to say nothing of the enormous cost of compiling, printing and binding. This catalogue consists of 1350 pages, 8½x11¼ inches, more than 100,000 illustrations, descriptions and money-saving prices on every known article of merchandise, from a needle to a threshing machine. It is beautifully bound in red de luxe cloth, and is the largest, handsomest and most complete catalogue ever issued by any house in any line of business. It is a perfect guide to economical buying, and you need it in your home. It will save you $100 a year or more whether you buy from us or not.

FOR ONLY $1.00 we will send you this great co-operative catalogue and your choice of Hill's Twentieth Century Manual or Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, both of which are fully described below. The two books will be sent to you with the full understanding that they must be ABSOLUTELY SATISFACTORY TO YOU, and exactly as we represent them, or you may return them and we will immediately REFUND EVERY CENT OF YOUR MOEEY. You cannot afford to be without these books. Send a dollar for them to-day.

Contains Over 1,350 Pages, More than 100,000 Illustrations; Weighs Over 4 Pounds; Beautifully Bound in Cloth.

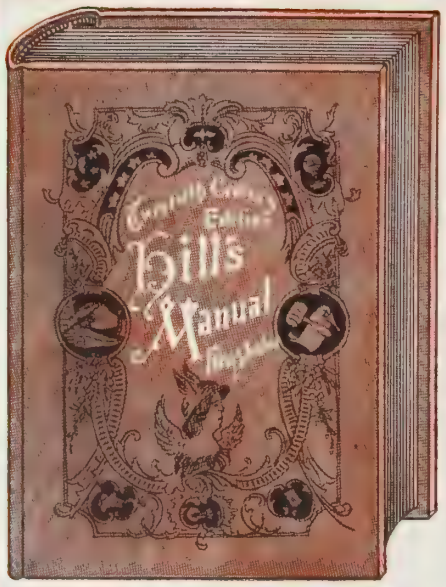
WHAT IT CONTAINS This Peerless Catalogue consists of over 1350 pages, 8½x11¼ inches, and more than 100,000 illustrations and descriptions of every conceivable kind of merchandise, including the following lines: Agricultural Implements; Artists' Materials; Athletic Goods; Baby Carriages; Bicycles; Bicycle Sundries; Blacksmiths' Tools; Books; Boots and Shoes; Builders' Hardware; Carpets, Curtains; Cloaks, Suits, Furs; Clocks; Clothing, Made-to-order; Clothing, Ready-to-wear; Cream Separators; Crockery and Glassware; Cutlery; Dairy Supplies; Desks and Office Furniture; Drugs; Dry Goods; Electrical Goods; Fishing Tackle; Furnaces; Furnishing Goods; Furniture; Gasoline Engines; Groceries; Guns and Sporting Goods; Hardware; Harness and Saddlery; Hats and Caps; Hosiery; House Furnishing Goods; Invalid Chairs; Jewelry, Silverware; Ladies' Waists and Underskirts; Ladies' Wearing Apparel; Lamps; Mackintoshes and Rain Coats; Millinery; Miners' and Prospectors' Outfits; Moving Picture Machines; Musical Instruments; Notions; Optical Goods; Organs, Pianos; Paints; Photographic Goods; Plumbers' Supplies; Public Entertainment Outfits; Refrigerators; Sewing Machines; Shirts, Men's and Boys'; Stationery; Stoves and Ranges; Surgical Instruments; Talking Machines; Tinware; Tools of Every Description; Toys; Trunks and Satchels; Underwear; Vehicles; Wall Paper; Watches; Windmills; Woodenware.

THE BEAUTIFUL COLOR PLATES show the goods in their actual colors exactly as they appear in our show rooms. With this catalogue you can buy from us with more satisfaction than from your local dealer. You have the advantage of immense wholesale stocks worth millions of dollars. You can make up your order in your own home, without suggestion or interference from salesmen, and every dollar you send us will buy nearly twice as much as it would if you spent it elsewhere. CO-OPERATION MAKES THIS POSSIBLE.

CO-OPERATION EXPLAINED This catalogue fully explains our great co-operative plan, and how we have reduced the cost and raised the quality of all merchandise; how we can undersell all competition, saving you all the profits you are now paying your grocer, your clothier, and every other merchant whom you patronize under the competitive systems. It also gives a complete history of the mail-order business, and explains why over one million people have accepted our plan as the only true, economical plan.

ON FREE TRIAL You can order many things from us, such as Pianos, Organs, Sewing Machines, Vehicles, Stoves, Ranges, Tools, Implements, etc., and test them in your own home before paying us any money. Our confidence in the high quality of our goods is so great that we are willing to do this. We guarantee every article you buy from us to be absolutely satisfactory to you or the transaction WILL NOT COST YOU ONE CENT.

HILL'S TWENTIETH CENTURY MANUAL



Revised Edition. Over 500 pages, 7 1-2 x 10 inches. Bound in green cloth and gold.

The only book of its kind ever printed. Every page tells you something that will be worth money to you. It tells you everything about Bookkeeping, Commercial Paper, Legal Forms, Business Law, Deeds, Wills, Contracts, Acknowledgments, Leases, Notes, Spelling, Penmanship, Proofreading, Composition, Correspondence, Etiquette, Great Wars, Politics, Finance, Agricultural Statistics, Parliamentary Rules, How to Debate, How to Read, Write and Speak Correctly, and 1000 other subjects. It is almost as GOOD AS A COLLEGE EDUCATION, because it treats each subject extensively. The bookkeeping section will make you a first-class bookkeeper; the chapters on shorthand will enable you to write shorthand; the chapters on Legal Business Forms is worth at least $10 to you, because it prevents you from making possible mistakes which cost lawsuits. It is one of the most fascinating books ever written, and you will read it through many times and thank us for making it possible for you to own such a valuable book.

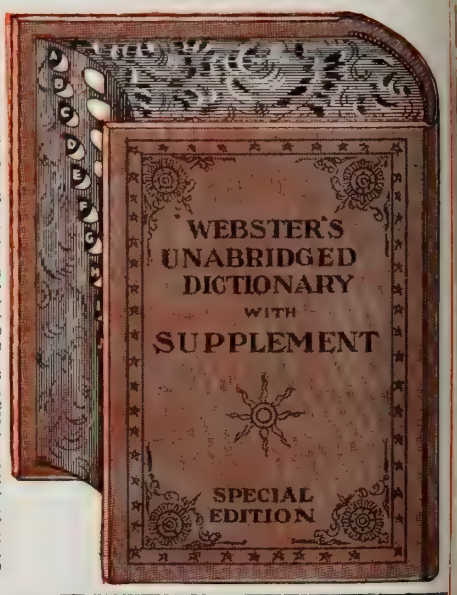
ITS CASH VALUE. Hill's Twentieth Century Manual is sold by subscription for $6.00 to $8.00 per copy, yet we offer it to you in exactly the same binding and printing, together with our magnificent 1350-page catalogue and all other literature for ONLY ONE DOLLAR. But, if you prefer it, you may have Webster's Unabridged Dictionary instead of Hill's Twentieth Century Manual. Cut off coupon and send TO-DAY.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY



With Supplement. Over 1350 pages, 7 1-2 x 10 inches. Bound in buckram, gold stamped.

Many families have been deprived of the benefits of a Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, because of the high prices charged for these valuable books. It has never been possible, heretofore, to get a really good and complete dictionary for less than $5.00, but we offer you a perfect Unabridged Dictionary for less than you have always paid for the small pocket editions. This is THE GREATEST OFFER EVER MADE. This is the standard Webster's Unabridged Dictionary of 1363 pages, 7½x10 inches, printed on good paper, with thumb index, as illustrated. It is solidly bound in heavy boards and de luxe buckram, stamped in gold with marbled edges. It contains all the words in the English language, and in addition, 68 pages of synonyms, a table on pronunciation, illustrations showing the flags of all nations in natural colors, complete supplement, and full-page portrait of Noah Webster. The great value of this book cannot be overestimated.

OUR OFFER We will send you this magnificent Dictionary, together with our great 1350-page catalogue and all our other literature, for ONLY ONE DOLLAR. Or, if you already have a dictionary, will send you Hill's Twentieth Century Manual instead. This is the most liberal offer the world has ever known, and you cannot afford to miss this grand opportunity. Remember, if you order these books, and they are not satisfactory, you may return them, and we will immediately refund your money. Cut off Coupon below, and mail to us right now, while you are thinking about it.

Cut off, fill out and mail this Coupon with $1.00 right now, while you are thinking about it

First National Co-operative Society
Dept. 18-DA CHICAGO, ILL.

COUPON

Find enclosed.....for which please send me:

1. Your 1350-page Catalogue and Price List.
2. Hill's Twentieth Century Manual / Webster's Unabridged Dictionary. (Mark off one not wanted.)
3. One Year's subscription to Wholesale Grocery Price List.
4. A Year's subscription to "The National Co-operator."
5. All Special Bulletins and Literature issued by you.

You are to refund my money if above is not satisfactory.

*Name*_____

Occupation _____

*P. O.*_____ *State*_____

18-DA

The Home of the First National Co-operative Society, of Chicago

WHY WE MAKE THIS OFFER We do not make this astounding offer for the purpose of realizing immediate cash returns, but to test the efficiency of this publication. Our immense co-operative store is one of the largest mercantile institutions in the world and our trade encircles the earth. We employ no salesmen, our trade being obtained entirely through the medium of our Big 1350-page Catalogue. Were we to offer this expensive catalogue free, a great many children and curiosity-seekers would send for it, and we would have to do as other catalogue houses do—either send an inferior catalogue, or charge a greater profit on our merchandise, to make up for the waste in catalogue circulation. We advertise the catalogue extensively in newspapers and magazines, therefore, and send it only to those who evidence their good faith by remitting a small part of the cost of the book, and it is to test the merits of this paper that this offer is made. This offer will prove beyond question the publications that do produce results, and while we are finding this out, YOU are the one who receives the benefit.

3 BOOKS, $1.50 If you desire both the Dictionary and Hill's Manual, remit $1.50 instead of $1.00, and we will send you ALL THREE of the books. If you are not satisfied when you get them, you may return the package and we will promptly refund your money. Consider well the magnitude of this offer and send the coupon to the left at once.

FIRST NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY
CAPITAL, FIVE MILLION DOLLARS DEPT. 18-DA CHICAGO, ILL.

$1 50 A YEAR—5c. A COPY
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK ≡ MAGAZINE NUMBER ≡ MAY 31, 1905

VOL. 28—NO. 22
Offices: Bible House, N. Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

"THE SEED TIME O' THE YEAR"

BY ELIZABETH
SHIPPEN
GREEN

"A Picnic"

We'll send you this picture

REPRODUCED
IN FOUR COLORS
FROM THE ORIGINAL

In two more colors than the above picture—an exquisite reproduction. One of the most successful of Miss Green's highly-prized studies of child life. Something to frame and enjoy. 12 x 12 inches, without lettering. Send us 10 cents to cover mailing. Drawn exclusively for the

Peerless Iceland Freezer

SOLD BY DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

A boy or girl, no older than those in the picture, can freeze ice-cream smooth, fine and firm in three minutes with the Peerless Iceland. Never turns hard. The can only revolves, the stationary dasher simply scrapes a thin film of frozen cream off the can, throws it to the center where it is stirred fine and smooth by dasher blades. Write for our booklet, "Six Cooks and a Freezer," new frozen desserts by Mrs. Rorer, Lincoln, Blay, Herrick, Miss J. McK. Hill, Miss F. M. Farmer, and describing the simplest, most practical freezer made.

Address, THE DANA MFG. CO., Dept. R., CINCINNATI.

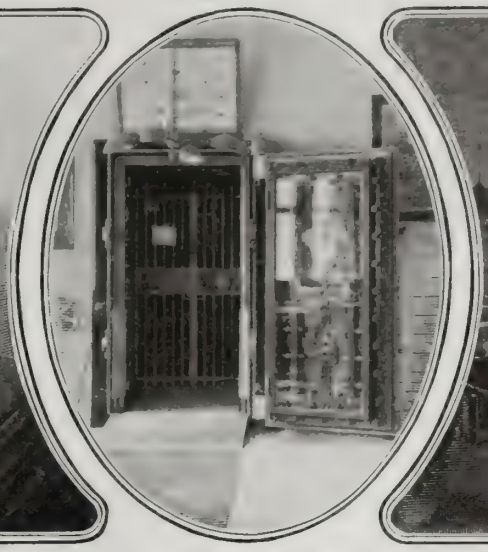
NEW YORK, MAY 31, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

EXPERT MONEY COUNTERS AT WORK

THE BIG U. S. TREASURY VAULT



A BUSY WING OF THE COUNTING FORCE

Copyright 1904, by Waldon Fawcett

COUNTING UNCLE SAM'S MONEY

BY WALDON FAWCETT

THE stupendous task of counting the money in the possession of the United States Government, down to the last dollar and penny, will begin on June 30 of this year. Uncle Sam balances his books daily and weekly and monthly and yearly, just as do all methodical private business institutions; but the cash in the government strong boxes is not counted at such regular intervals—perhaps because it is such a tremendous undertaking. On the other hand, the savings of the national government are enumerated in detail only when there is a change in the office of Treasurer of the United States.

The Treasurer is the one government official who is in supreme control of Uncle Sam's wealth, and he is directly and personally responsible for its safe-keeping. Thus, when a man retires as Treasurer of the United States, the thousands of tons of coin and paper money must be counted, in order to make sure that he is surrendering all the money called for by the books. This is done not only for the protection of the government, but also for the satisfaction of the incoming Treasurer, who wishes to know that he is actually receiving all the money that is coming to him, and for which he, in turn, will later be called to account.

On the last day of June next, Hon. Ellis H. Roberts, who, for eight years past, has been Treasurer of the United States, will surrender the office which he has held since the late President McKinley took up the reins of government, and on the following day, a new Treasurer will be installed. Simultaneously with this change will begin the great count of the nation's cash. The change in the Treasurer's office, and the consequent counting of billions of cash, might occur at any time in the year; but usually, as in the present instance, such changes take place at the beginning of the official year. In the government calendar, New Year's Day is not January 1, but July 1, and this beginning of a new year in midsummer, 1905, will be especially significant, because it will usher in a money counting which may continue until Christmas, or even beyond.

Eight years ago, when Mr. Roberts took office, there was nearly $800,000,000 in the Treasury, and it required constant work by a corps of fifty clerks from July 1, when the new official was sworn in, until late in the following February, ere every piece of money, from the copper penny to the $10,000 notes and $50,000 bonds, had been accounted for. The Treasurer of the United States is under heavy bonds to insure the faithful discharge of his great trust, and he is not released from this obligation until the count of the money has been completed, and all the funds have been turned over to the new Treasurer in satisfactory shape, no matter how long a time may be required to do this.

Of course, the incoming Treasurer merely gives his receipt for the exact amount of money that is actually turned over to him, and if the man who is retiring from office does not turn over the amount called for by Uncle Sam's account books, the government can compel him or his bondsmen to make good the discrepancy. This question, however, seldom arises, because any difference between the sum called for by the books and that actually found in the vaults, is usually due to some mistake in bookkeeping, or in counting, and not to any carelessness on the part of the Treasurer. There have been occasions when the money in the Treasury, upon being counted, was found to tally to a penny with the sum called for by the books; but, on the other hand, there have been times when the accounts and the cash would not balance. For instance—when Mr. Roberts entered the Treasurer's office eight years ago, the count showed that there was on hand $800 less than there should be, according to the books. However, the outgoing official was not required to supply this out of his own pocket. Instead, Congress passed an act relieving him of responsibility in the matter. Such actions seldom occasion any criticism, for it is realized that the Treasurer of the United States is at the mercy of his assistants.

Copyright 1904, by Waldon Fawcett

ONE OF THE MOST SKILFUL MONEY COUNTERS

In the counting of the government wealth, the handling of the paper money, is, in a way, the more arduous task, for the reason that each piece of currency must be counted separately by hand, whereas much of the gold and silver coin is simply weighed. Moreover, it must be taken into consideration that while much of the paper money consists of crisp, new bills, the counters also come across not a few torn and ragged notes, which must be patched and handled with care, all of which requires time. Nevertheless, an expert money counter will count as many as 16,000 bills in a day of seven hours' work.

The enumeration of the contents of the gold and silver vaults might be termed the weighing of coin, rather than the counting of it. The gold is put into eight-ounce duck bags, each holding $5,000, and the silver into similar bags, each holding $1,000, and as a number of these bags can be weighed at a time, this part of the counting proceeds rapidly. However, there is found every now and then a bag that is light weight. This occurs when coin has been bagged for many years, and when the friction of the coins rubbing against one another has worn them down. Under such circumstances, or when a bag is found to be worn out, and to need replacing, the coin must be counted piece by piece. The old bags are burned, in order to extract the gold and silver dust which they hold, and the coins that are found to be below the proper weight, are sent to the mint to be recoined.

Among veteran Treasury officials, there is much difference of opinion as to whether men or women are the most proficient counters. The employees of the cash room at the Treasury, where vast sums of money are counted every day, year in year out, are almost all men; but in the special counting of the whole contents of the Treasury vaults, such as that about to be undertaken, the most remarkable records have been made by women. When counting paper money that has been in use long enough to lose its stiffness, and yet is perfectly clean and whole, some members of the fair sex have handled, one by one, as many as 20,000 bills in five hours. Of course, each bundle of bills is counted over and over again by different persons, in order to guard as much as possible against errors; but even with these precautions, mistakes do creep in.

This counting of paper money is largely entrusted to women, while the counting of coin is left to their masculine co-workers. This is because of the great weight of the bags of money. It is difficult for the average mind to realize the magnitude of the metal money in Uncle Sam's Treasury. The coin alone weighs more than 5,000 tons, of which 30,000 pounds is gold. If all this gold and silver were put in coal carts holding a ton each, the line of teams would be upward of twenty-five miles in length. In the course of the counting, each of the men detailed to count the coin will handle from 100 to 200 tons.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS IN COUNCIL

THE approaching International Sunday School Convention, which is to assemble on June 23 in Massey Hall, Toronto, promises to be a most remarkable and interesting gathering. Massey Hall, in which the evening meetings will be held, is capable of accommodating 4,000 persons, but even that large building will scarcely hold the throngs which will want to hear the addresses of the acknowledged leaders of Sunday School work from both hemispheres. The morning meetings will be held in the historic Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church, which is said to be the finest Methodist church property in the world. It is almost cathedral like in appearance and bears a striking resemblance to Westminster Abbey.

PROF. F. H. JACOBS — HON. JUSTICE MACLAREN — MR. W. N. HARTSHORN

The composition of the Convention is thoroughly representative. Delegates have been assigned to each State of the Union on the basis of the electoral vote. Each State is entitled to four times the number of delegates that it has votes in the Electoral College. In Canada, one delegate is assigned to every 40,000 of population. In all, this representation gives a total of 2,214 delegates.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Maclaren is to be the host of the Convention, being the representative from Ontario on the International Executive Committee. Associated with him as a committee of management are some of the leading business men of Toronto.

The Honorary Chairman of the Committee is His Honor William Mortimer Clark, LL.D., K.C., Lieut.-Governor of the Province of Ontario. The Committee is preparing to give the Convention a most hearty welcome, which is seconded by all Canadian Sunday School workers, who have been asking for several years, "When will the Convention come to us again?" They have waited long. The Convention was held in Toronto in 1881. The meetings are triennial, and the Convention has been held in Louisville, Ky., Chicago, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Boston, Atlanta, and Denver, since 1881. The delegates are invited to fill all of the Toronto pulpits, and address all of the Sunday Schools on June 25.

The broad scope of the deliberations of the Convention is to be judged by the following suggested topics: Discovering and Unifying the Relations of the Sunday School to the Home; To Reform; To the Art of Pedagogy; To the Civic Government; To the Theological Seminary; To the Public Schools; To the University; To the Religious and Secular Press; To the Home and Foreign Missions; Reverence in the Sunday School; Worship in the Sunday School; The Sunday School at the Centre of the World's Issues; The Sunday School as an Educational Force; The Sunday School as an Evangelistic Force; The Sunday School and World Wide Missions; The Place of the Sunday School in the Theological Curriculum.

THE METROPOLITAN METHODIST CHURCH, TORONTO

These topics are to be presented the following distinguished persons, others: Bishop John H. Vincent, D. LL.D.; Bishop Wm. F. McDowell, D. LL.D., President of the Religious E cational Association; Mr. Robert Speer, Associate Secretary Presbyter Missions; John Potts, D.D., Chairm of International Lesson Committe R. A. Falconer, LL.D, Principal of Presbyterian Theological College, H fax; Principal I. E. Rexford, Member the Lesson Committee from Quebe Frank K. Sanders, Ph.D., D.D., De Yale Divinity School, New Haven, Con Rev. Carey Bonner, General Secreta London Sunday School Union; W Douglas Mackenzie, D.D., Preside Hartford Theological Seminary; E. Mullins, D.D., President Southern Ba tist Theological Seminary; Prof. M. G. Brumbaug Ph.D., Professor in Pedagogy, University of Pen sylvania.

Rev. Floyd W. Tompkins, D.D., Rector Holy Trini Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, Pa., will conduct t preparation service, Friday, June 23, and also the "qui half hour" sessions daily, from 11:45 to 12:15 o'cloc Mr. W. N. Hartshorn, of Boston, is the Chairman of t Programme Committee. Professor F. H. Jacobs, Ne York, assisted by local talent, will have charge of t music.

The Convention will be preceded by an Internation Institute of Sunday School workers from June 20-2 The International Lesson Committee will meet on t morning of June 21. MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

. . .

One of the subjects to be considered at the Conve tion, will be the composition of the Committee whic has charge of the International Sunday School Lesson At the following Convention, which will assemble thre years hence, a new Committee will have to be appointe and various changes are proposed which will have to b accepted or rejected by the Toronto Convention. On of these is the proposal to reduce the number of mem bers from fifteen to five. It is obvious that this proposa if accepted, would limit the representative character c the Committee. Some denominations would necessaril have no representative on the Committee, and dissatis faction might result. Another proposal is that the ex penses of the members of the Committee should be pai either by publishing houses, or by the Internationa Convention. This, it may be hoped, will be agree to. It is unfair to the Committee that the member should be taxed for their expenses in attending th meetings which are involved by their office.

A SAD SOUVENIR FROM TIBET

IT is now over four months since news was received of the death of Francis H. Nichols, the talented young author and explorer, on the borders of Tibet. Our readers will remember Mr. Nichols' excellent work as correspondent of this journal in China during the great famine in the ancient provinces, Shansi and Shensi. His letters describing his long and perilous journey overland from Tientsin to Sian-fu, and his zealous and valuable work in connection with the relief operations in the famine districts, when the fund contributed through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was being distributed by a missionary committee, are still fresh in the minds of the American people, and so are his pathetic descriptions of famine scenes and incidents, which did much to arouse the sympathy of the Christian world in behalf of the sufferers. On his return home, he wrote a book entitled, Hidden Shensi, which brought him fame and the reward of young authorship, and won for him high recognition by the literary and scientific societies.

For his next field of travel and exploration he chose the practically unknown land of Tibet, being commissioned by the American Geographical Society, and by a New York publishing house to attempt an expedition to Lhasa, the capital of the Lama's realm. He was also to write for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD letters of travel, describing the Tibetan people and their strange religious and social system. But his mission was destined to remain unaccomplished. After a long and arduous journey, he crossed the Tibetan frontier, at Gyantse, a point to which the British military expedition had already penetrated. Here he was overtaken by sickness, doubtless caused by exposure to the intense cold of that bleak mountainous region, which is many thousands of feet above the level of the sea. Pneumonia was developed, to which he succumbed, after a few days' illness. In his dying hours, even in that lonely region, he was surrounded by friends, and the faithful missionaries paid to him the last tribute of regard, as though he had been one of themselves. He was greatly beloved by all who knew him, no less by the missionaries than by the British officers at the military outpost. His faithful Chinese man-servant was with him to the end.

To one of Mr. Nichols' military friends in that remote part of the globe we are indebted for the photograph which appears on this page — the last ever taken of the explorer. He is dressed in the costume of the Tibetans.

THE LATE EXPLORER NICHOLS

Looking across the bleak plain, one can see the snow-clad mountains, the passage of which proved so difficult to the British troops. They must have been at least equally hard for the explorer, yet his pluck was indomitable. Weak and worn out from long exposure, he struggled manfully until the goal was fairly in view, but he could continue the battle no longer.

In forwarding the photograph to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Lieutenant Arundell, of the 2d Regiment Queen's Own Rajput Light Infantry, writes:

"I am sending you a photo of the late Mr. Nichols, F.A.G.S., which I took of him just before he left Phari-Jong, Tibet, for Gyantse. . . . I was exceedingly sorry to hear of his death, as he was such a splendid fellow. I was alone at Phari when he turned up, and he was the best company I have ever had. He gave me your address, in case I wanted to write. R. T. ARUNDELL (Lieut.)"

Among the Workers

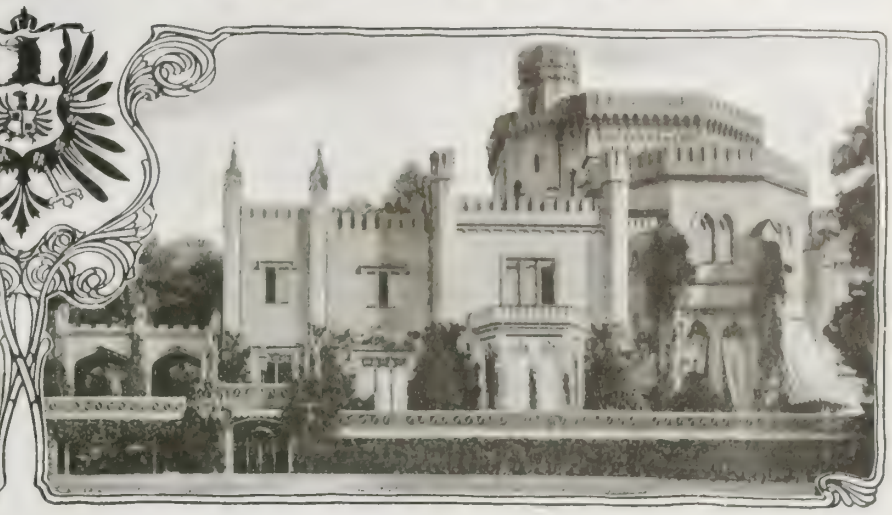
—EVANGELIST D. H. KIRKPATRICK, of Springfield, Mo., has closed a very gracious revival at Hatfield, Ark. A number confessed Christ.

—MISSIONARY JOHN G. PATON, of the New Hebrides Mission, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that the Mission prospers, although French traders are selling rum, brandy, rifles, and ammunition to the natives, several of whom have shot each other lately.

—A. E. BISHOP AND F. G. TOMS, missionaries in Guatemala, had a narrow escape from death lately at the hands of a mob, incited by fanatical priests. The mission building and its contents were almost totally demolished, including a new organ. The missionaries were stoned and threatened with death by the rabble, and were only saved by the prompt intervention of the authorities, at the request of Mr. Combs, the American Minister.

A ROYAL BRIDE AND GROOM

THE CASTLE OF SCHWERIN, THE HOME OF THE BRIDE



CASTLE OF BABELSBURG, POTSDAM, WHERE THE YOUNG COUPLE WILL LIVE

HOW true it is that "all the world loves a lover" is evident in the widespread interest shown in the approaching marriage of Friedrich Wilhelm, rown Prince of Germany, to the Princess Cecilie of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, for that the Prince is indeed an ardent lover the Germans can admit with pride and pleasure, since they have watched their future sovereign's stormy adventures on the sea of Love with an interest not unmixed with apprehension. But at last his long "search for the well-beloved" has been rewarded, and the heart of his Royal Highness has been safely moored in the still waters of his genuine attachment for this charming young girl.

THE CROWN PRINCE

The Princess Cecilie is the daughter of the widowed Duchess of Mecklenburg-hwerin—who was the Russian Princess nastasia. She was born on the 20th of eptember, 1886, which makes her just neteen years of age. She is tall and ender, with masses of dark hair and onderful eyes, and her manners, which e gracious and natural, have already ndeared her to the people.

As a future sovereign of the German mpire she has been made doubly welme to her prospective subjects from the ct that she is of the same royal house the much-beloved and idealized Queen uise of Prussia, the great-grandmother the present Kaiser. She is also the ird of the house of Mecklenburg to beme Queen of Prussia and prospective mpress of Germany. All of this to the erman mind presages good fortune to the use of Hohenzollern, and to the Gerans as a people, and added to this, is the ct that she loves her future homeland ith sincerity and enthusiasm, which might e prophetic of a life of happiness for the ung Princess as well as her people.

To crown her many graces of person, the Princess has the superior charm of an educated mind, and reads and speaks English, French, and Russian with fluency. She is also an accomplished musician, but she takes as much pleasure in all housewifely arts as in any of the others, and, in the field, is a fearless rider and an excellent shot, so that in all respects it would seem that she will be a most congenial consort for her royal husband, whose tastes for all active sports are well known.

EMPEROR WILLIAM

The Princess is now living at Cannes, France, in the "Villa Venden," which was purchased by her father, the late Archduke Franz of Mecklenburg, who was ordered to France by his physician with the hope that he might regain his health there, but who unhappily met a tragic death instead, by plunging over a balcony to the street below. The shock of her father's death made a deep and sorrowful impression upon the mind of the young girl, and she has thrown it off only with difficulty.

The Crown Prince has had a severe and thorough training for his future position as German Emperor. Everything was conducted with military precision. He was accustomed to rise early, and immediately after a simple breakfast, he had to put in several hard hours of study with his various tutors. He was fond of music, and received a good musical education, playing both the piano and violin well. An old sergeant-major gave him his first lessons in the military art, while the Kaiser himself took charge of his instruction in horsemanship. All of the Emperor's children are good riders, and are taught, as soon as they can sit on a horse, to ride over hurdles, ditches and walls. He is the master of a trade, as are all of his brothers. It has long been a custom of the Imperial house to have all the sons learn one of the mechanical trades, carpentry, typesetting, etc.

CROWN PRINCE FRIEDRICH WILHELM, AND HIS BRIDE, DUCHESS CECILIE

So seldom does the romance of love linger about a royal alliance of this kind, that its existence in this instance has lent an additional charm to the engagement itself, and to the fact that it has been conducted with the simplicity of ordinary mortals even to the point of their having been secretly engaged for a year and a half before the world was acquainted with the news. And in their attitude toward the engagement the royal parents as well have acted as any sensible ordinary parents would have done under the circumstances, for, while strongly desiring the alliance, they have waited to see whether the attachment was deep enough to warrant their formal sanction and its announcement. When it was time to make his engagement known to his relatives and friends, the Prince merely telegraphed or wrote to them the simple statement: "Cecilie and I are engaged."

All Germany has been interested in the controversy over the Duchess' wedding trousseau. Her mother was determined that it should be made by the most famous dressmakers of Paris. The German papers grumbled, and said that the garment for a German Princess, who some day would be empress, should be made in Germany. The Kaiser also made a protest to the Grand Duchess Anastasia. The Grand Duchess was not to be moved from her original plans, not even by an emperor, and the Paris establishments were ordered to complete the work they had begun. As a matter of fact, the bridal dress itself was made in Berlin, as well as the fur mantles.

The date for the marriage of the Prince and Princess fluctuates between the 6th and 23d of May, after which latter date the Kaiser will go for his accustomed voyage on his yacht to the North Sea. The programme for the ceremonies of the wedding is not yet made public, but it is probable that the principal services will be held in the new "Dom," or cathedral, consecrated on Feb. 27 of this year. The bride and groom will for a time reside at the Marmor Palace in Pottsdam, the private residence of the Prince, and will afterwards spend the winter in his palace in Berlin.

Meanwhile, the small but charming Palace Babelsburg in Potsdam; formerly the residence of the old Kaiser, and which has not been opened since his death, save upon the occasion of a grand ball which was given there in honor of the then Crown Prince and Princess of Italy, is being remodelled and prepared to receive them. It is to be enlarged. The dining-room is to be made more spacious, so as to accommodate one hundred and fifty guests, and the stables are to be made large enough to shelter fifty horses more than formerly.

From a romantic point of view, there is everything about this villa-palace to make an ideal home for newly married lovers, and surrounded by its daintiness and charm, with a nation's love and interest centred in them, and a future full of great possibilities for country, home, and personal happiness, what richer life of earthly fulfillment could await two young people whether they be sovereigns or not?

LOUISE D. MITCHELL.

EMPRESS AUGUSTA

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Please send in Coupon Subscriptions as soon as received. We will credit you with all you send in. Subscriptions run from the date of receipt until January 1, 1906. Hence, every day's delay means a loss to the Subscriber.

Send for as many Coupons as you may need. They will be sent to you Free of Charge. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

War's Tattoo

TEXT: ISAIAH 2: 4

"Neither shall they learn war any more"

EVERY great catastrophe is an inspiration for overcoming, or at least for lessening danger. No sooner did the awful conflagration of the Iroquois Theatre take place in December, 1904, than the whole city of Chicago arose in protest. Excoriating denunciations appeared in all the daily newspapers. Editors as well as people declared, "No firetrap like that had a right to exist." At once there was a scurrying about of the city officials. The fire regulations were overhauled. The means for fighting fire were increased. The fire inspectors were clearly and emphatically told, that, hereafter there was to be no evading of the fire laws and of the building restrictions.

What is true in reference to fire catastrophes is also true about railroad accidents. The tragedy of the Tay Bridge in old Scotland, strengthened the abutments of many bridges in many lands. The terrific annual slaughter of human life upon the railroads of our country, was the cause of creating the block system, the Westinghouse brake, and the automatic coupling, whereby car can be joined to car without endangering the body of brakeman or other railroad employee. So the awful tragedy of the Civil War, with its million dead, ought to be an inspiration to teach us not only how we should honor the soldiers who fought and bled and died, but also how we should honor those who are living, to prevent such a horrible butchery of human life in the future.

Honor Men of Peace

As man has to be taught the art of war, so he must learn the art of peace. Shall he not honor his preceptors, who are teaching him how to cover the valleys with houses, and factories, and schools, and churches, instead of with campfires and fortresses, and burning towns? Shall we not honor the men who are teaching us how to change our Plains of Esdraelon into "Cities of Refuge," which were once battle-fields in many wars?

Shall we not honor Theodore Roosevelt's pen as well as Theodore Roosevelt's sword? The pen which summons the representatives of all the civilized nations to the Peace Conference at the Hague, is just as truly brave and patriotic as was the sword which our President drew at San Juan Hill, and the sword which to-day is ready to be drawn if foreign nations dare trample upon the rights of American citizens. Yes, the Pen of Peace is to be honored quite as much as the Sword of War. Therefore, on this Memorial Sunday, when friends and loved ones are strewing the graves of our dead soldiers with flowers, I would place garlands upon the brows of the living heroes; upon the brows of the men and the women who are living and working to prevent future civil wars, and future international strife.

Peace Founded on Righteousness

This subject which we are about to discuss, is one which is uppermost to-day in the minds and hearts of many. "It has occurred to me recently," wrote a dear friend from the East, "that a good subject for a sermon at some early day would be 'Peace'; and the movements being made for the preservation of the world's peace. Now that the statue of Frederick the Great has been set up in Washington, it is seriously proposed to supplement it with the statues of Cæsar, Napoleon and Hannibal. This may be a War College idea. I do not know who made the suggestion, but it is not in line with the true spirit of the age, which is one of peace and arbitration. Instead of glorifying these great destroyers of nations, we might do well to emulate the South American Republics of Chile and Argentina, which have entered into mutual arbitration compacts, melted their cannon, and set up a huge statue of Christ on a peak of the Andes, as the Bringer of Peace to the World." That letter has in it the true ring of the Gospel and of the best Christian statesmanship. May God help us, one and all, to honor the dead soldier to-day, in the best of all ways, by teaching mankind to honor the Gospel and the agencies that are at work to prevent future wars.

The dead soldier of the Civil War, in the first place, should teach us that the statesman who ought to be the most respected in American politics is not necessarily the man who is elected to office, but the man who would sooner be defeated for advocating a just principle, than elected for advocating a wrong one. He should teach us that a Jeroboam in exile may be more of a true friend to his country than a Rehoboam, the heir-apparent to a throne; a publicly denounced and disgraced Queen Vashti, is infinitely to be preferred to a Jezebel holding in her right hand the signet ring of a reigning king. He should teach us that a Toussaint L'Ouverture, fighting for the liberation of his beloved Hayti, and dying in the dark dungeon of a French prison; or a William Wallace, foully executed in London for fighting for the freedom of Scotland; or an Oliver Cromwell, endangering his life by denouncing the tyrannies of King Charles, are to be honored infinitely above the apostates, who, for wealth or fame or position, sold their honor and their principles and betrayed their country's rights. And yet, strange to say, often does a country estimate a statesman's successes not by the fealty with which he guards her rights, but by his ability to force himself into office, no matter what means he may use, or what methods he may adopt to attain it.

Is not this fact absolutely true in reference to Napoleon Bonaparte? He was not only honored when he was alive, but he was and is honored by the French people and by the world, when he is dead. Never was there a funeral procession like that which brought his dust back from St. Helena, to sleep its last sleep upon the banks of the River Seine! Yet in what way did Napoleon benefit France? Did he live for her peace or her strength or her honor! No. He was simply great as a murderer, great as a robber, great as a merciless tyrant. He made wars, he levied taxes, he led his people to the slaughter, merely for his own aggrandizement. He crushed the members of his own home under his iron heel for his own convenience, when it suited him. He banqueted year after year upon the sufferings and agonies of France, and cared not how many hearts ached and bled, as long as Napoleon's standards were to the fore and Napoleon's throne was lifted higher, even though it was remorsely raised upon a pile of dead corpses.

Historical Contrasts

Shall Napoleon Bonaparte be honored above Stephen Langton, who wrested from King John of England the Magna Charta, and made the English people a nation of kings? Shall he be honored above Martin Luther, who, single-handed and alone, defied the temporal authority of the Church of Rome, and drove in the opening wedge which will ultimately everywhere separate Church from State? Shall he be honored above that wonderful assemblage of men who, under the leadership of Thomas Jefferson, penned the "Declaration of Independence," and of James Madison, who penned the "Constitution of the United States," whereby man, in a republican form of government, is compelled to respect the rights of man? Shall his name he honored above that of Abraham Lincoln, who was born in a hut, lived for the most part of his life upon a Western prairie, and yet, by the Proclamation of Emancipation, taught the world that all men upon this North American Continent are free and equal?

All wars, both civil and international, are caused by injustice. The statesman who works to make right might; who labors to have no law press more heavily upon one class than upon another class; who struggles to give "a square deal" to the poor man, as well as to the rich—that man is a public benefactor. That man is a preventer of future carnage. That man is teaching the world that each nation must respect the rights of other nations; that one social class must respect the rights of other social classes, and that all peoples are independent, only as they respect the independence of others. May God bless to-day the Christian statesmen who are not serving one people, but all peoples in their own and other lands.

The Power of Education

The just ruler or statesman is a preventer of future war. Yes. But in this eulogy of the "Heroes of Peace," the schoolhouse must be built alongside of the legislative halls. No people in any land are safe against the crime of making unjust wars, unless at the schoolhouse desk their eyes have become intelligent eyes; unless their ears have become deaf to the calls of the demagogue, and their minds have been developed to do their own thinking. A safe nation is not built upon the autocracy of a throne. It is not anchored upon the rock of a liberal constitution. It is dependent upon the intel gence and the wisdom of the people, the common pe ple, who associate themselves together with a gover ment, be it a monarchy, an oligarchy, or a republ

Let me illustrate this idea from the history of sor of our Southern Republics. I used to think that the for of the United States Government was the cause of mc of our national prosperity. That is not true. As I tu to these republics of South America, I find that most them were patterned after our own Constitution. Wh is the result? A noted English writer declares th though there have been, within late years, three hu dred and fifty different instances of started, most of them have, in the end, been dead failure In the Bolivian Republic alone, out of fourteen conse utive presidents, thirteen have either been assassinate or have died in exile. The history of most of th South American imitations of the United States Const tution has been merely a long series of wars betwee the military and civil authorities; governmental convu sion after convulsion; revolution after revolution, an upheaval after upheaval. What is the cause of all this The reason the American ballot box, for the last hur dred years has stood as solid as Plymouth Rock, is du largely to the fact that it is handed to the America boys over the schoolhouse desk. We have a stron Republic to-day because we have strong, intelligen individual voters.

Constitutional Government

Has any government offered greater educational fa cilities than ours? No sooner did the Puritan settle i old New England, than he immediately began to erec his institutions of learning. The Pilgrim Fathers lande in Plymouth in 1620, yet only sixteen years later, or i 1636, we find that Harvard College was founded i Cambridge, on the outskirts of Boston. We find th Dutch and the English settlers drifting down into Con necticut, and what happened? There, Yale College i started in 1701 at Saybrook. We go South, and what do we find? Pennsylvania and all the Middle State honeycombed with Colleges and Academies. We gc West, and there institutions of learning are scattered everywhere. The schoolroom desk is seen at almost every cross-road, and the college is entrenched in nearly every large town. Ah, yes, the modern Napoleon would have hard work here to start an international conflict just for fun, or to gratify his ambitions. He would have hard work to upset us financially, socially, or politically. Why? Because the people of this age, in our beloved land, have too much intelligence to follow such a leader as the "Little Corsican."

Philanthropic Benefactors

What is the practical application of this thought? Chief among the enduring guarantees of future peace is the presence of our schools and school-teachers in foreign lands. Too much money cannot be expended upon our public school system. Porto Rico and the Philippines will never be truly conquered for America until American schools have educated those colonists and taught them to realize the meaning of American liberty. That was a very wise move of the United States Government which, a few years ago, brought the Cuban school-teachers under the classic walls of old Harvard. Roberts' College in Constantinople and the Presbyterian schools at Beirut, are the two wedges which shall overthrow the brutalities of the Turkish Empire. China, through the influence of our missionary schools, shall yet become a gigantic nation, sworn to perpetual peace and to forever avert the horrors of another Boxer uprising. And that vast Government of Russia, made up of many mixed peoples and heterogeneous nationalities, speaking as many different tongues as did the workmen at the Tower of Babel, shall yet become one through the missions of peace. Oh, my friends, we cannot honor too much our public school-teachers and the professors of our colleges, as among the greatest of wonder-workers, who are teaching us that war shall be no more.

And here let me state another fact. We not only honor the teachers and professors who have given to us our education, but we also honor men like D. K. Pearson, who, with their money, have made it possible for his same kind of teachers to carry that education to ome who would never be able to get it but for heir beneficence. I consider D. K. Pearson one f the most practical and far-reaching philanthro-ists of this age. He does not take his money and pile up in some great city university, while the young eople can find an education in many other schools ear at hand; but he gives here and there a few thou-and dollars to struggling colleges far out in the country, way from the great centres. He gives there a few housand dollars and yonder a few thousand dollars, and verywhere his money goes to struggling colleges, where is bringing forth its fruit, some thirty, some sixty, and ome a hundredfold. To show what good his money doing, I would quote the words spoken by a great udge in the East. A friend came to him one day and aid, "Judge, don't you think you would have made our success quicker if you had graduated from Yale, r Harvard, or Princeton, and had had the help of the lumni association of one of these institutions?" "Well," nswered the distinguished jurist, "I do not know whether would have made a greater success had I been educated n the East, instead of in a little farmers' college in the Vest. But this one fact I know, had there not been a ttle farmers' college near to my father's farm, I would never have received an education at all." When we praise the school-teacher as a messenger of international peace, we must also praise the noble men who give of their wealth to support the schools in out-of-the-way places.

But what good does mere knowledge do, unless it is ballasted by moral character? What good does it do to plant Dr. Duff's missionary schools in India, or Roberts' College in Constantinople, or our own schools in America, unless moral and spiritual development keeps pace with mental growth? None, absolutely none. So, to-day, as the greatest messenger of international peace, I plant the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ between the legislative hall of the just statesman, and the school-house of the just teacher. For I find that the Church of Christ is the main leaven which leavens the purity of governmental law, as well as the chief herald which is scattering true knowledge to the furthermost parts of the earth.

Never since the coming of Jesus Christ to earth, was there a better time for the consummation of the world's peace than the present. Cannot the laws of international arbitration, through the power of the Holy Spirit, accomplish this most beneficent achievement? In order to lead all nations to join this international compact, and to disarm our armies, and to dismantle our fortresses, we need not wait until all nations are converted to Jesus Christ. We must have the sentiment of the civilized world longing for peace. Are not the better elements of Europe, and Asia, and Africa, and America longing for the stopping of such carnage as was lately witnessed at Port Arthur and Moukden? Are we not longing that the sword may be turned into the plough-share, and the spear into the pruning-hook, and that men may not war any more?

So, my friends, as never before, I want you to pray for the President of the United States. Pray that God may enable him to lead the rulers of the nations to enter into a compact to stop hellish war, and, by the laws of international arbitration, to stop it forever. I want you to pray, and pray as never before, for the teachers of our public schools and colleges, and for the teachers who are laboring in our colonies and missionary schools in foreign lands as missionaries of perpetual peace. Oh, God of Paul, who sat at the feet of Gamaliel, teach thy teachers to lead their scholars to thee!

May God bless those who are teaching men to love their fellow-men, and to help them, and to forgive them, and to lead them to the Cross of that Christ, whose nativity song was "Peace on earth, good-will to men."

SUMMER GATHERINGS AT NORTHFIELD

A GENERAL VIEW OF THE CAMPUS AT NORTHFIELD

N the plans of a summer outing, the problem where to go is a puzzling one. Shall it be the sea, or to the mountains? To a place founded wholly for leasure, or to one where enjoyment is found in higher ings? To a place where the surrounding influence is oubtful, or to one that is known to be pure and whole-me in its influence?

America abounds in the former places, everybody nows them, along the coasts and in the hills. It has few of the latter places, Lake Geneva, Ocean Grove, hautauqua, Winona, and Northfield. All these are miliar. The name of Northfield has been the com-on property of every Christian family in the United tates since D. L. Moody first established his schools nd conferences there. It is known abroad as "The Home of the Summer Conferences," and it is loved by ll who have been there, as the one place where reli-ion and recreation, moral cleanness and pleasure, go and in hand. This has been the criterion which has itherto guided its development, and this is to be the andard this summer also.

First on the schedule, is the Conference dedicated to students. This is the Eastern branch of the National Student Association Assemblies, including all the colleges and preparatory schools east of Ohio. The purpose of the Conferences, as explained by J. R. Mott, the leader, is to bring students together in a social and religious way, without the rivalry of athletics, and to train them as aggressive Christian leaders. Hundreds of men stay at Northfield each year, spending their mornings and evenings at the meetings, and their afternoons at base-ball or on the athletic track or swimming. The same thing is duplicated at the Young Women's gathering, except that athletics take the milder form of golf and tennis, and the social life is stronger.

The two following assemblies, while carrying out the essential purpose of the former, are widely divergent in their application. The first of these—a Summer School for Sunday School workers—is concerned entirely in teaching Sunday School teachers how to teach. It is practically conducted, and its courses in psychology, drawing and history, are invaluable to any city or country teacher. In close connection with this, is the Summer School for Women's Missionary Societies, a far-reaching institution, taking up in detail Foreign Mission work, and the conditions in Egypt, China, Africa and India. Here again the skilled instruction and panoramic study of the entire field are helpful, both from an anthropological as well as a religious point of view.

With the close of the schools, begins the annual General Conference for Christian Workers, which lasts this year from August 4 to 20. This Conference has no parallel in this country as a Mecca for the world's best preachers, professors and teachers. It has no equal in assembling brilliant men and brilliant women, men of the stamp of Professor Orr of Glasgow, and Prebendary Webb-Peploe of London, and women like Margaret Sangster and Mrs. W. A. Montgomery of this country.

Immediately after the General Conference, comes a series of quiet, thoughtful addresses, which last until September 15. This marks the close of the Northfield season, and the end of a vacation which leaves a greater impression than the memory of merely good times.

BAPTISTS IN CONVENTION

By Warren C. Partridge, D.D.

THERE is a great movement on foot to amalgamate the Baptists of North America. Like many other denominations, the Baptists were ivided by the Civil War, and by the bitter controver-es over slavery which culminated in internecine strife. s a result, there was the Presbyterian, Methodist, and aptist Church of the North, and of the South. In 1846, aptists North and South separated, and their one mis-onary society, popularly known as the Triennial Con-ention, became several societies, and each society had s sectional constituency. Later came the Civil War, ith its horrible carnage and bitterness. After this ame, what some one has called, for us Baptists, the pe-od of "armed neutrality."

During the last ten years especially, there has arisen widespread desire both North and South, for Baptist nity, and for denominational brotherliness, which shall e continent-wide. Two influences have helped bring this about. One is that the North and South have been getting a better knowledge of each other, and a profounder knowledge of each other's methods of work. Another influence has been the "calling" of so many men from the South to the North, and vice versa, to fill important pulpits. Time has also softened the hearts of Northern and Southern men, and real fraternity is desired both north and south of Mason and Dixon's line.

An epoch-making Conference was held by the Baptists in the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church in New York City, January 24 and 25, 1905. This general meeting of representative Baptists was called together by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and proved to be one of the most important meetings held by the Baptists in many years. Representatives from the North, South, East and West were unanimously in favor of some national organization to include all the Baptists of North America. There was a wonderful unanimity of opinion among all the representatives present that the hour had struck for Baptists of North America "to get together." Nearly every Baptist paper in America favors a federation of Baptist forces. Many believe that a permanent organization for the Baptists of North America will be effected. It will mean greater denominational unity, increased co-operation and closer fellowship. It will give a tremendous impetus to more effective missionary and educational achievements. It will mean volumes for the progress of the Kingdom.

The Baptist World Congress will be held in London, July 11-18, and a very large attendance is expected. This is the first Pan-Baptist Congress ever held, and it will be a very noteworthy occasion. Baptists and adherents now number about 20,000,000 in the world. The Baptists in the United States now number over 5,000,000, and, after the Methodists, are the largest denomination in the United States.

BRINGING LIGHT TO LITTLE ITALY

AMONG the many worthy charities of New York City, there is none more interesting than the Home Garden of Harlem, and its summer place in Brunswick, N. J. The Home Garden is in the heart of a large foreign quarter, the greater portion of the inhabitants having first seen the light of day in Sunny Italy. Its main object is to keep the children off the street after school hours.

"Osceola" is the musical name of the summer home. It is open from June until September, and accommodates about fifteen children at a time. It is a picturesque old farm-house, surrounded by beautiful trees, on the banks of the Raritan. It has large halls and wide piazzas, a very paradise to the little Antonias and Francescas. Limited numbers makes the personal touch possible, which goes so far in influencing character. Either Miss Ruddy or her assistant are on hand at all times to supervise the children's work and play. The children come from homes where elbow room and fresh air are at a premium, and where there is little joy for their mothers or themselves. One little girl, immediately after her arrival, came to the teacher and asked: "Are we goin' to eat three times to-day? The girls said we are, but I don't believe 'em." The pinched face of the little girl wore a look of eager inquiry. "I know they was only foolin'," she continued; "three times is an awful lot."

"Why, Mary, does that seem too often?" asked the teacher, smiling, "do you only have two meals a day at home?"

"If I get one I'm happy," responded the girl. "Hungry! We just stay hungry." The child grew plump and happy, but in all her life she will never have a greater feeling of luxury than when she found there would be three meals a day.

"OSCEOLA" NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

A short time ago Miss Ruddy left a bunch of roses with John, a sick boy, who lives on the sixth floor of a great tenement. He placed them at the open window, where they were seen from across the street by a little woman at the wash-tub. All her life she had wanted a rose, and had never had her wish gratified.

She sent her little girl across the street and up the long stairs to beg for "just one flower." It was given to her, and in a few minutes the child came back with a paper bag, which she laid on John's bed. "A present from mamma." It contained three or four onions. Rather ungraciously John pushed them away, saying: "Take them back; I don't want them!"

"I can't do that," the child faltered, with a choke in her voice and the tears starting to her eyes. "I can't do that, because mamma hasn't another thing in the house to send you, and she wants to make you a present, because you gave her that beautiful flower."

From such homes come the children the Home Garden and to "Osceola," a to such lives is being brought the s shine and good fellowship of the Gospel Jesus Christ.

The Home Garden Sunday School c ebrates this year its fifteenth anniversa Its teachers are almost all Italian childı brought up in its own fold. Through t week, in the house at 419 East One Hı dred and Fifteenth Street, which it ow there are clubs and classes, and play scho which is the joy of every childish heart.

Many young business men, painte sculptors, and teachers, owe to the Ho Garden and to the Italian Mission, out which it grew, their first impulse to right, when they were neglected boys the street. It reaches out to the poor and most neglected, and gathers in thc for whom nobody cares.

Some time ago a family of five lit children were noticed in the play-roc to be especially pale and lifeless. On vestigation, it was discovered that for thr days they had been without food. It h never occurred to them to tell of th need. Many cases of distressing pover come to the notice of the workers, and a relieved as promptly as means will perm

The Home Garden needs funds for t carrying on of its fresh-air work this su mer. Every dollar sent for this purpc is applied directly to the comfort and plea ure of these boys and girls, to whom means not only a ten days' outing, b health and strength for the entire yea and, in many cases, a change in their e tire lives. All communications and i quiries should be addressed to Miss Anna Ruddy, the Home Garden, 419 East O Hundred and Fifteenth Street, New Yor

PROMINENT MEN and WOMEN of the HOUR

Photo, Aime Dupont
Dr. Wallerstein

P. Tecumseh Sherman

Stuyvesant Fish

Theophile Delcasse

Rev. Putnam Cady

MRS. HENRY WALLERSTEIN, prominent as a society and club woman in New York City, has just completed the four years' course in the New York Medical College and Hospital for Women. She was, for a number of years, interested in charitable work in the tenement districts of the Metropolis. She decided to take an active part in alleviating the misery that she saw on every hand. She went first to the Law School of New York University and received a degree in 1898. It was her plan to assist the poor, who were frequently thrown out on the street by heartless landlords. She began her medical studies in 1900. She intends shortly to establish a free clinic for women and children, in a poor section of upper New York.

THEOPHILE DELCASSE, Foreign Minister of France, has been a member of the French Cabinet for a longer time than usually falls to anyone in that country. He has increased his former prestige by his skilful management of the foreign office, during the recent unpleasantness with Germany over the Morocco question. The question of French neutrality in China, is, however, a much more important matter, as Japan has apparently some ground for her contention that French officers played into the hands of Russia. M. Delcasse was a journalist before entering politics. He became under-secretary of the colonies in 1893, and in 1898, acted as mediator between Spain and the United States.

PHILEMON TECUMSEH SHERMAN, son of General William Tecumseh Sherman, has been appointed Labor Commissioner for the State of New York. Mr. Sherman was born in St. Louis, Mo., in 1867. He graduated from St. Louis University in 1886, and from Yale University two years later. He received his legal education at Columbia College Law School, and has been very successful in practice. He at one time was a member of the New York Board of Aldermen, being elected on the Citizens' Union ticket. He is the author of Inside the Machine, that was published in 1900.

STUYVESANT FISH, President of the Illinois Central Railroad, has been the most prominent figure in the great Railway Congress that has just been held in Washington. Prominent railroad men from all over the world were present, and the Congress is considered the most successful so f held. The delegates w be taken to many of t most interesting places America, some will ev go as far as the Phili pines. Mr. Fish is a s of the late Hamilton Fis who was Secretary State during Grant's a ministration. He was e ucated at Columbia Co lege, and became a cle in the office of the Illinc Central, in 1871. He b came, after several pr motions, President of tl road in 1887. He w made a member of th Monetary Commissio that was created at tl Indianapolis Monetar Conference, in 1897. As railroad administrator is considered as standir in the front rank, his reputation in that connection beir already practically international.

REV. PUTNAM CADY, pastor of the Emmanuel Presbyterian Churcl at Amsterdam, N.Y., has been elected a fellow of the Royal Geo graphical Society of England. It is a highly coveted distinctior and one that has been conferred on but a few Americans. M Cady made many discoveries in the country lying to the east of th Dead Sea, and was the first to make photographs of the region, a well as the first explorer to ascend the Arnon River. He nov ranks as one of the world's most famous Orientalists. His wor has been of great value to Bible scholars, both in Europe and thi country, where his writings are well known.

The Purdah Women of India

IT is not many who have the opportunity of personal contact with the social and domestic affairs of a purdah lady. But first, the word "purdah" requires some explanation. It is an Urdu word for "curtain"; and so we have a "curtained lady," i.e., one who is shut off from the male sex of every nationality. Few are admitted into the zenanas, and it is only in late years that education has spread to them. They are under the iron discipline of custom, one which is purely religious, and which prevents Mohammedan women from appearing before any male person, except within a limited range of their own family. Many of them own large and important properties; and they cannot escape from the responsibilities of ownership, nor can they perform the duties attached to these properties, unless they can enter into legal relations with the outer world.

The law allows a woman to possess property in her own name, even if she is married; this is very advantageous in many respects. However, as they are getting more educated and mix in the society of white people, they are beginning to see that it is for their own good "to break purdah" with doctors, lawyers, managers of their properties, and all male servants. This purdah system does not begin until a girl is about fifteen, just as she is beginning to appreciate the pleasures and enjoyments of life. Purdah parties are now arranged to enable them to gain an insight into the lives and customs of English people; at theatres and other gaieties, special arrangements are made for them.

Their every-day life is very monotonous, as they very seldom leave their houses. When they do go out for a drive, their carriage blinds are drawn, and they do not enjoy the benefits of fresh air. These mothers are very much attached to their children. Perhaps you will say they have nothing else to do. But what then is a mother's duty? Where is the blessedness of having children, if the mother does not attend to them personally? Some English ladies who devote themselves to the pleasures around them, neglecting their children, would benefit greatly if they could peep into the lives of these Mohammedan women. They are by no means lazy, as one would be led to imagine. They are good needlewomen, and make their own and their children's clothes. They are good cooks, and are now found to be good students.

A very noticeable feature is the way in which the virtues of patience, charity, self-forgetfulness, and devotion to duty flourish in this silent and secluded world. Their lives must seem unbearable at times, especially when they are one of many wives of the "harem." VERA BURROWS.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Please send in Coupon Subscriptions as soon as received. We will credit you with all you send in. Subscriptions run from the date of receipt until January 1st, 1906. Hence, every day's delay means a loss to the subscriber.

Send for as many Coupons as you may need. They will be sent to you free of charge. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

THE OLDEST STATUE IN THE WORLD

DR. BANKS IN ARAB COSTUME

SOME OF THE NATIVE HELPERS AT BISMYA

WORKERS' HUTS AT BISMYA

SOMETIME ago, students of Bible history, scientists and archæologists, were greatly interested to learn from the cable dispatches, that Dr. Edgar Banks, of the University of Chicago, had made some wonderful discoveries during his explorations in Bismya, in Southern Babylonia. It was announced that, mong other remarkable things, he had unearthed a marble statue of an ancient ng belonging to some long-past, pre-Babylonian age. This statue, which is of arble, and in an excellent state of preservation, bears an inscription in hiero- yphics, which have been successfully deciphered. It is the statue of a monarch ho, according to Dr. Bank's statement, lived in an age 5,000 years B. C., or over 000 years before the date fixed by chronology as that of the world's beginning! f course, as the scientists point out, the chronology in question is not an inte- al portion of the Bible itself, nor is it inspired, having been the result of mputations by a famous theologian and chronologist, Archbishop Ussher, ho lived several centuries ago. The exhumation of this ancient statue, erefore, brings to light nothing that is in conflict with Scripture, t it furnishes evidence that human civilization has existed in the rld much earlier than even the scientists had supposed, and at the condition of man even at that remote period, s as far removed as possible from the semi-brutish ate upon which evolutionists have dwelt with such sistence in propounding their theories of moral and ysical development.

Dr. Banks has prepared for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD e following description of his valuable find:

"The statue of the pre-Babylonian or Sumerian King avid, or Da-udu, according to the Oriental pronun- ation of that name, was found at a corner of the stage wer of the temple at Bismya, in Southern Babylonia. hen discovered, its head and toes were missing; but e latter, broken into several fragments, were found ing beneath the fallen statue. The head was not covered until nearly a month later, and at a consider- le distance from the spot where the trunk was found.

"The statue, complete, is about three feet high. It made of soft, white marble, which, in some places, is jured by a coating of saltpetre. The upper half is nude; e lower is draped in an embroidered skirt of six folds, style of dress appearing only in the very earliest art Babylonia. The head is bald, the face smooth; the mond-shaped eyes, now hollow, once contained eye- lls, probably of ivory, and the nose forms nearly a aight line with the forehead. The shoulders and the ms (which at the elbows are free from the body), are ll formed, and the hands are clasped in front.

"Upon the right shoulder is an inscription of three hes. It bears the name of the king, of the temple in hich the statue stood, and of the city over which he led.

"It would be difficult to overestimate the value of his statue to the students of Assyriology and of ancient story. The character of the inscription, the style of t it represents, and the known age of the ruins in which it was found, point to about 4500 B.C. as its age. It is, therefore, 1,500 years older than any other Babylonian statue known. Its perfect condition presents a wonderful example of the art of more than seven thousand years ago. It has pushed the history of the world back nearly a thousand years, giving us the name of a city, Ud-nun-ki, unknown until the discovery of the Hammurabi law, and of a king absolutely new to history. Moreover, in all probability, it explains the derivation of the name of the great king David."

STATUE OF KING DA-UDU, OR DAVID, 7,500 YEARS OLD

There is, perhaps, no chapter of modern discovery that is so full of interest for the general reader and especially for the Bible student, as that which relates to the explorations conducted in Babylonia in recent years. In this great land, once marked by populous cities, all is now solitude and utter devastation. Every vestige of the cities and their once powerful rulers had apparently vanished from the face of the earth. Even history held little more than mere hints of their existence, and beyond these allusions all was a blank. It was not until the desire for a wider knowledge of the beginnings of things took hold of the scientific world that any attempt was made to penetrate the Babylonian wilderness, from the Euphrates to the Tigris, and that travelers, explorers, and Oriental scholars turned their attention to the mounds, which have yielded up many of their treasures. Some of the discoveries have been epoch-making, opening up new vistas in the world's history and affording glimpses of a civilization more ancient and remote than had ever been dreamed of by the investigators. Botta, Layard, Rassam and other explorers made many important finds in Northern Babylonia, while up to a comparatively late date the Southern investigators—with a few notable exceptions—had to be content with a few unbaked and crumbling tablets, bearing inscriptions and hieroglyphs in almost unknown phrases and commanding but little interest.

Prior to the "find" of the statue of King Da-udu by Dr. Banks, which is believed to date from 4500 B.C., the oldest inscriptions that had been brought to light in Babylonia were believed to belong to the period of 3000 B.C. These were cuneiform inscriptions discovered by Glaser.

Other investigators found in Southern Babylonia some very old Sumerian inscriptions of the kings and priest-kings of Sirgulla. Many of these inscriptions, when deciphered, were found to relate to merchandise and timber, and the names of ancient deities—some Sumerian, some Arabic—were intermingled with the names of districts or cities, from which it was inferred that Sumerian sanctuaries must have existed there in those far-off days. These inscriptions dealt with various remote periods—one with 2200 B.C., another with the kings of Ur, about 2500 B.C., and still another with a ruler of Akkad about 3700 B.C. One of peculiar interest related to Khammurabi or Am-murabi (the Biblical Amraphel mentioned in Gen. 14: 1), who was the contemporary of Abraham, and whose rule probably extended over all Babylonia.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

E. A. C., New York. "I know from personal perience that God answers prayer, and our wn has just gone 'No License,' in answer to ayer."

S. W., Idaho. "'Answered Prayers' are a source nspiration and help to many, even as they are me. I now add my testimony of his great good- ss and mercy. He will hear us and answer, if r prayer is faithful and in Jesus' name."

J. C. H., Paterson. "I wish to publicly acknowl- ge God's answer to prayer for deliverance from rrible disaster to my husband and son. He most nderfully interposed. He also answered my ayer for a friend's health to be restored."

A Believer in Prayer, New Jersey. "God has ny times answered my humble petitions. I ve been praying for a long time to have a great rden removed from my life, and I believe God will answer it in his own time, if my faith fail not."

Mrs. M. K. R., Missouri. "I desire to acknowledge the divine goodness of God in answering my prayer. Four years ago a dear son was lost in a snowstorm. I prayed that we might know what had become of him. A few weeks ago his body was found and brought home. Praise be his holy name. Dear children of God, trust in him and believe he does answer prayer."

Subscriber. "I've never for once doubted the kindness and love of Jesus. Have had some wonderful answers to my prayers. I am now passing through an awful heart-breaking trouble. I want everyone that reads this to make an earnest, special prayer that I may be guided by God's hand. I always breathe a silent prayer for everyone asking aid in the 'Answered Prayers.'"

Mrs. A. E. M., Vermont. "A great burden was removed, and a calamity averted in direct answer to prayer, and I want to publicly thank God and praise his holy name."

L. F. B., Illinois. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayers. For three months I prayed for the recovery of one very dear to me, and now God has answered my prayer."

Mrs. W. A., Minnesota. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to prayer that I might hear from a dear, absent boy. I have been greatly comforted by hearing from him. May other mothers be encouraged to keep on praying."

Mrs. M. M. O'M. "My daughter is suffering from nervous prostration, brought on, the doctors say, by overstudy, and they do not seem to be able to do much for her. I have great faith in the prayers of Christian people, and I believe that the 'effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much,' and I wish the prayers of all the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a little girl who is supporting a little orphan in India, and who has lost her health, that if it is the Lord's will, he will restore her to perfect health and strength."

Miss C. M. S., Pennsylvania. "I was in great bodily distress, indeed, hopeless. I prayed to God to heal me, and he did, not [illegible] own good time. Readers, have faith in God."

Mrs. H. B., Oklahoma. [illegible] for a long time, then I [illegible] into deep sorrow. [illegible] alone and there was no help [illegible] ventively and believingly [illegible] I asked him for [illegible] troubles, and before [illegible] God answered my prayer."

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Champions of the Bible

EVERY Christian must be glad to notice the valiant defense of the Scriptures, which was maintained at the recent convention in New York, organized by the American Bible League. It is well that men who have not time to examine the evidences for themselves, should know that the case is not going by default. The Bible critics have had their say, but their theories have been examined, and many of them are already proved to be unsound. The questions of authenticity, of date and of integrity, are by no means settled by the assailants of the sacred Book. As was explained by the eminent men who addressed the Convention, many of the destructive theories formerly advanced by German scholars, are now abandoned by their quondam supporters, and others are admitted to be doubtful. The results of recent research and exploration, have tended to confirm the orthodox view of the Bible, and to corroborate the history contained in the Book.

To the Christian, however, who goes to the Bible for guidance and instruction, these questions, though interesting, are not so important as the critics would have us believe. As Mr. Moody used to say, "I know the Bible is inspired, because it inspires me." They who have studied it that they may know the will of God, who have put its principles and promises to the proof in their lives, would not be disturbed if it was proved that some book was written at a later date than was supposed, or that another book was written by two men instead of by one. The main question is of the doctrine and the essential teaching, and we know by experience that Paul was right when he said, that the Scriptures were able to make men wise unto salvation. The pitiful insignificance of some of the questions raised, is apparent to every man who is intent on putting the Bible to the use for which it was intended. Even if it was conceded that some of the passages we have hitherto regarded as history, were merely parables, the essential truth of them remains for our use. Was there a real Samaritan who relieved the man wounded by robbers? What does it matter, when we know so well the type of character that our Lord intended to describe? Better than spending time in arguing about the historic character of the parable, that we should obey the injunction of Christ and follow the Good Samaritan's example. There is no incident either in the Old Testament or the New, that has not in it a lesson for our edification, which would be just as valuable if the incident was merely employed by the writer as an illustration. It was, therefore, an unfortunate remark that one of the speakers is reported to have made, that "the Scriptures stand or fall with the historical character of the book of Jonah." Oh no, the Scriptures have a value and a power that would never fail, even if the book of Jonah could be proved to be a myth. They do not depend on any such question, but on the fundamental truths which they contain, and which have proved in every land to which they have been sent, and in every age, the power of God unto salvation.

Social Sabbath-Breaking

NO one can be blind to the fact that a gradual change has come over American society in regard to the observance of the Lord's Day. Twenty years ago, or, for that matter, ten years ago, those among decent people who constantly ignored the obligation to attend church and preserve some semblance of reverence for the Lord's Day, were in the minority. At least they were apologetic when they spent the hours of the Sabbath wholly in recreation. Little by little it has become common with those who compose fashionable society to take the Lord's Day as their day for visiting and outdoor amusement. Week-end parties regularly leave New York on Saturday bound for hospitable houses, at a convenient distance, by rail or boat, and there is no thought on the part of those who go or those who receive other than to have the gayest and most festive time in yachting, driving, golfing, or in any other way in which pleasant outdoor relaxation can be taken.

Bishop Frederick Burgess, addressing the Thirty-Ninth Annual Convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Long Island, in Garden City, lately, spoke very plainly of the lack of Sunday observance. He said:

> Race courses, golf links, ball fields, shooting clubs, abound in our limits. In all this hunting for pleasure, Sunday has been seized upon as the one day in the week most convenient for sport. All the morning the crowds flock into the country, and late into the night the trains are filled with weary people returning to their homes. The handsome palaces of the rich, the spacious, comfortable villas of the well-to-do, are filled every Saturday night with house parties, made up generally of young men and women, who in the city pay some slight observance to Sunday, but who in the country seldom or never go to the church services, and spend the day in yachting, golfing, tennis, and even racing and gambling. If their guests wanted to go to church, they would have every drag and auto in the stables put at their service, but if they prefer the golf course or the ball field, they are equally at their disposal.

The earnest words of the Bishop sound a warning which it is high time every Christian should heed. More than this, every man and woman who has at heart the future of the Republic, should pause and think what will become of a country which forgets God, and openly tramples on one of his commandments. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," is as old as the world itself.

No country which forgets God to the extent of universally slighting the one day he claims as his own, can hope to have permanent prosperity.

The Pompeiian Girl

FROM Rome there comes a story that an Italian peasant, digging in the ruins of buried Pompeii, unearthed the skeleton of a young woman. To the charred remains there still clung a molten mass of ornaments of antique gold, which had once been finely wrought and heavily studded with emeralds, pearls and precious stones. Her bracelets, necklace and earrings had been worth a prince's ransom. The wearer lay a shrivelled, blackened heap, covered with ashes, and in a position which showed that she had been overtaken by the scoria from Vesuvius while in flight, seeking in vain for a place of safety. She had clothed herself hurriedly with her richest jewels, hoping to save them, and by this delay had probably lost her life.

What was the story of that Pompeiian? Was she as beautiful and accomplished as she was rich—one of the petted and pampered belles of fashion in that city of luxury and sin? Was hers a life given over to vanity and display; to foolish pride and selfish indulgence; to the excitements of the race-course, the amphitheatre, and the brutal sports of the arena? Or was she a devoted daughter, a cherished and loving wife, a devout worshiper at the temples, and a generous friend of the poor and the suffering?

Whatever her story, none may know it now. All is forgotten—obliterated. Even her great wealth, her proud social position and her splendid jewels have not preserved to posterity a single clue to her identity. But if in her brief career—so quickly eclipsed in volcanic blackness—she had endeared herself to others by kindness, by gentleness, by good deeds, by charity and by the nobility of her mind and the purity of her heart, she had something which not even the fires of Vesuvius could destroy.

She can now be known only as the rich and beautiful Pompeiian girl who, seeking to save her jewels, lost her life—an object-lesson from the buried city that has its application in this later age, when all that is most precious is too often sacrificed for the sake of wealth and pleasure, which turn to dust and ashes in the end.

About Minding Trifles

TRIFLES do make up a large part of existence. Yet she who would be happy, must learn to rise above them, and live in an atmosphere secure from fretting care. None of us can escape care, but it need not be of the fretting, consuming, and corroding kind. If little things go wrong, is it not better to accept them without too much disturbance of our mental poise. Life should not be clouded because the roast beef is overdone, or the potatoes burnt; because we could not finish the new dress for little Jennie on Saturday night, and so she has to wear her old one on Sunday; because we miss a train and are an hour later in reaching home. These and other trifling causes of irritation look very small when compared with the great joys and the great sorrows of a human life; yet we make a fuss over them, upset the surrounding peace, and wear ourselves out by emotional fluster and expression. Let us meet life's trifles with calmness and composure. God can give us grace to do this, if only we ask him for it day by day.

Taking Chances

OF all traits of American character, that of taking chances is, perhaps, the most prominent, and, while the spirit of adventure has done much to make the country what it is to-day, yet that form of taking risk almost for risk's sake, has caused incalculable misfortune. Collisions on railroads are often the result of some one's taking the chance of getting to the next siding, when the train has been ordered to stop where it is. The engineer has succeeded in making the next stop times before, so he takes one more chance, and, if he is not killed outright, he can live only with the haunting memory of an awful crash and a heap of burning cars. It will probably never be known whether the recent railway disaster in Pennsylvania was the result of the carelessness of someone who "took chances," but there is no doubt that the passenger train was "making up time," which is one of the worst forms of risk taking.

Time and again, captains of ships have put to sea while the danger signal was flying from the flag-staff of the weather station. The storm comes, and a floating bit of wreckage washed in by the tide, tells that the adventurer and the hundreds of lives entrusted to his care have been claimed by Old Ocean as its own. The famous case of the steamer Portland, is an illustration of the insane desire to risk everything for the sake of getting somewhere a few hours earlier than was really necessary. The captain left Boston in the face of a rising gale, and tried to make his way up the rock-bound coast of New England, toward Portland, Me. The steamer had an unusually large passenger list. None of them were ever seen again. These are but instances of what is occurring every day in some part of the country, and such cases are, apparently, on the increase.

To get there first, "to cut in ahead," seems to be a national passion. Risks such as were taken by Admiral Dewey, when he floated over the mines of Manila Bay, we applaud, because there was a real object to be gained worth the cost involved in ships and men; but the hurried rush to pass some one else; to jump on a train, one later serving just as well as a usual thing, is enough to cause people to stop and ponder whether we are not losing far more in our business and social life by this insane desire to get there first. Health, wealth, happiness may go by the board, but the only motto that seems to hold, is to be "at the head of the procession."

Religious Freedom in Russia

PROBABLY no event since the emancipation of the serfs has excited more interest or afforded more general satisfaction in Russia, than the Czar's recent proclamation of religious liberty and freedom of worship. Even amid the gloom and distress caused by the war with Japan and the labor troubles at home, the Russian people of all classes find cause for rejoicing in this new policy of the government, which permits all of the various denominations among the 130,000,000 Russian subjects to worship God in their own way and according to the dictates of their own conscience.

Shortly after the issuance of the manifesto, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in the name of its readers, sent the following cable message to the Czar:

"NEW YORK, MAY 2.

"HIS IMPERIAL MAJESTY NICHOLAS II.

"TSARSKOE SELO:

"May our Heavenly Father requite your Imperial Majesty for decreeing liberty of religious worship throughout your realm. Russia has progressed half a century in a single day. LOUIS KLOPSCH."

To this a reply was received by cable through Count Cassini, the Russian Ambassador at Washington. The following is a translation:

"SIR:—I am directed to convey to you an expression of sincere appreciation from my august master, his Majesty the Emperor, for the telegram of sympathy you have addressed to him. In performing this agreeable duty, I beg to assure you of my highest regard.

"(Signed) COMTE CASSINI."

"M. Louis Klopsch, New York."

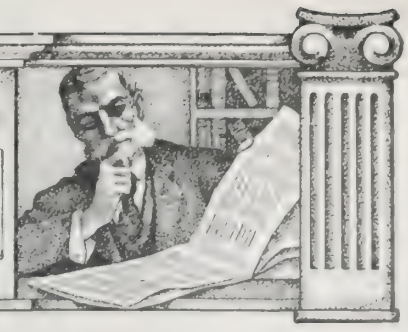
The BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER



Honor to a Veteran

SOLE survivor of the war of 1812, Hiram Cronk, who celebrated his one-hundred-and-fifth birthday last month, died on May 13. On his hundredth birthday, he was able to boast that he retained his eyesight, his hearing, and all his faculties, but since that time he gradually failed, and for several months was unable to leave his bed. He became blind and deaf, and was almost speechless. His daughter, with whom he lived, who is over seventy years of age, waited upon him assiduously until the last. Before he began to fail, he delighted to recall the events of his boyhood, and used to tell how, when his father and his two brothers volunteered for service against the British, he refused to be left behind. He was the youngest soldier in the army, and was ridiculed as a boy by his comrades. Nevertheless, he behaved so well in a skirmish, that he received the praise of his commanding officer. The war was near its close when he enlisted, and on Nov. 16, 1814, he was honorably discharged, after little more than five weeks of service. He subsequently re-enlisted, and served six weeks. After the war he learned the trade of a shoemaker, and prospered. He married in 1825, and he and his wife lived together for over sixty years. They had seven children, of whom five survive him. In his later years he was a devout Methodist, and spent much of his time in reading the Bible, especially since his infirmities prevented his attending the services of the church.

THE LATE HIRAM CRONK

Six months ago, the Aldermen of New York, hearing that the veteran's death could not be far off, arranged to give him a public funeral, whenever it might occur. Accordingly, when the news of his death arrived, a committee went to Inn Brook, N. Y., to take charge of the ceremonies. The body was brought to New York, and conducted with military honors to the City Hall, which was draped within and without with black cloth. There the remains lay in state, and for several hours a continuous stream of citizens passed the casket, and gazed on the venerable form. It was attired in the uniform of the Society of 1812, with a broad sash over the breast. Numerous floral tributes were piled on the coffin. A guard of G. A. R. men was set, and watched over the remains all night. On the following morning a crowd around the Hall was waiting for admittance, and for over an hour the chamber was thronged with reverent spectators. At ten o'clock the doors were closed and shortly afterwards the casket was carried out. Escorted by the Fourteenth Regiment and by members of the U. S. Grant Post of the G. A. R., the body of the veteran was borne to Cypress Hills Cemetery and interred on Victory Hill, among those of his comrades. Thus the city honored its aged man who was the last relic of the war, which to others was only an historic event, but had been to the veteran throughout his long life, a personal memory.

One generation passeth away and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth forever (Eccles. 1: 4).

THE FUNERAL PROCESSION OF THE LAST SURVIVOR OF THE WAR OF 1812

A 3,000-Mile Race

Europe is as much interested as America in the race of the yachts for the Emperor William's cup, which began on May 17. The course is from New York to the Lizard, in England, a distance of 3,000 miles. The start was to have been made on Tuesday, May 16, but the fog was heavy and the weather unpropitious. On the following day, shortly after noon, the starting gun was fired and the long race began. Eleven vessels were gathered at the appointed place. A ship, a bark, a barkentine, a yawl, and seven schooners composed the fleet. One, the Hamburg, flies the German flag; two, the Sunbeam and the Valhalla, belong to the English Royal Yacht Club; the Ailsa, the Fleur de Lys, the Apache and the Utowana belong to the New York Yacht Club; the Hildegarde hails from Philadelphia; the Atlantic, Larchmont; the Endymion, Indian Harbor. The yachts will cross an imaginary line drawn between the Sandy Hook lightship and a German vessel stationed off the English coast. No time allowance is to be made and no conditions are imposed, but covering the vast stretch of tossing waters that lie between our coast and that of England. What weather they will encounter and what danger they may incur none can foresee, but they run the risk for the sake of the glory to be gained by the yacht that first reaches the finish. How much higher is the Christian's ambition, to which he should consecrate all his powers.

Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may attain (1. Cor. 9: 24).

A Thief's Mistake

A robber made his entrance into St. Mary's Hospital, Jamaica, N. Y., a few nights ago, intending to steal the many gold and silver vessels which are stored in the chapel of the institution, with any other money and valuables he could find. He had evidently learned the plan of the building, for he made his way to the electric switchboard which controls the lights. It is supposed that he wanted to turn out the electric lights, which are kept burning in the chapel, and to search the place with his dark lantern. He had, however, failed to find out the mechanism of the switchboard, and, instead of turning out the lights, he moved the switch that turned on every light in the building. The inmates were startled by the sudden outburst of light and one of them ran to the switchboard to ascertain the cause. She was just in time to see the robber rushing from the room and she called up the police, but before they arrived the thief had made good his escape. He had gone, however, empty-handed. It was a curious mistake to make, for of all things light was precisely the thing he did not want.

Men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil (John 3: 19).

A Search for a Benefactor

Inquiries are being made for a girl on Long Island, by a citizen of Colorado. He is said to be a very wealthy man, and it is supposed that he is desirous of doing her a substantial service. It appears that about seven years ago he was being taken from Montauk Point to a hospital in Long Island City. He was then a private in the Seventh Volunteer Infantry, and was returning on sick leave from the Spanish-American war. In a letter to the Postmaster of Babylon, L. I., he says that when the train stopped at that place, a young woman entered the car, and, noticing how he was suffering, placed a pillow under his head. On the pillow was the young woman's card, giving her name and address. Arriving at Long Island City, he was hurried to a hospital, and the pillow was lost. There is little doubt that the girl will be found, and will receive a reward for the service that she rendered to a stranger, though at the time she thought she was merely doing a kindness that would be forgotten. There are many who will be similarly surprised when Christ comes by being rewarded for services to his people.

Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me (Matt. 25: 40).

An Involuntary Journey

Four sad and homesick little boys, one of them about twelve years old and the others about ten, were released from a freight car at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a few days ago. They had been playing about the New York Central's yards, and had crawled into an empty freight car to hide from their companions. Just then a yardman came along, slammed the doors shut and sealed them. The car was one of a number bound west. The boys hammered on the doors and shouted, but there were puffing engines and the usual noises of a big freight yard, which drowned their cries. Presently the car began to move and their distress increased. It seemed to them many hours before the car came to a stand at Poughkeepsie, and they resumed their knocks on the doors and their cries for release. A trainman passing along heard them and opened the doors. They were delighted to be free again, but were detained until word was sent to their parents, who were almost frantic over their loss. When they grow older perhaps their recollection of their escapade may be useful to them. It will be well if it leads them to avoid dangerous places, where they may be lured from their heavenly home.

Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established: turn not to the right hand nor to the left: remove thy foot from evil (Prov. 4: 26).

The SECRET OF IMMORTAL YOUTH

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

LETTER-WRITING took on a new significance when the message of the risen Christ came to the Apostle John, that Lord's Day long ago in Patmos. To the aged apostle, nearing his one hundredth year, his glorified Saviou. dictated seven letters. How the work of a private secretary and of the mail-carrier is ennobled by this scene on the verge of heaven! Let the dictation be written, the letters be carried "in His Name." John was told to write to the church at Ephesus, commending them for their good works, and for their patient, yet faithful dealing with false teachers. And some words of sorrowful reproof were to be added that their love and zeal was less than it had been. He was to write to the church of Smyrna, a letter of consolation for the presence of hypocrites in her midst. And the promise was to be given to the faithful that they should have a crown of life. John was to write to the church of Pergamos, stern words of rebuke concerning the character of its membership who associated vice and the eating of things sacrificed to idols with an outward profession of Christianity. He was to write to the church at Thyatira, words of commendation concerning their service and charity and faith. And there were also words of warning against the sufferance of a false teacher, a Jezebel, in their midst. And John was to write to the church at Sardis, and upbraid them for being a Christian church only in name. He was to write to the church at Philadelphia, with gratification concerning the noble way they had faced their opportunity for doing good, even while they were few in numbers and their strength small. A promise was to be given them that as they had kept the word of God, they should be shielded by God's power in the day of their trial. And John was to write to the church of Laodicea, that their lukewarm condition was displeasing to their God, and that only those who should make a great effort to do his will could have any share with him in heavenly things.

How glorious in appearance was he who told John to write! About sixty years before, the apostles and others had seen Jesus return to his Father that day on Olivet. Although gloriously transfigured, John knew him on the instant—the spiritual body was so like the earthly body, only glorified. Striving for words to describe the divine beauty of Christ's appearance, John compares his brightness with fire and shining brass, and even with the sun; and his voice with the music of waters, and the power of his words with a two-edged sword. The great dignity of his presence John described by likening his hair to wool and snow. He described him as in the midst of the seven branched candlestick, signifying that he was indeed the light of the churches and of the world.

Oh what a glorious vision to the lonely prisoner on Patmos! It could no longer be called a desolate place. From that time it has been mentioned among the sacred spots of earth, so that more than eighteen centuries afterward, a company of several hundred Sunday School pilgrims sat up nearly all night, even to the gray of the morning, that they might not miss seeing Patmos as they should pass by. Never will these same Pilgrims cease to be grateful to the kind captain, who took the great vessel several miles out of its course, in order to sail as near to the island as possible, for the gratification of those to whom Revelation had made it sacred.

Illustration and Application

The striking fact about this first chapter of Revelation is, that we behold here, face to face, two friends, each about one hundred years old, one on earth and the other in heaven; the first a noble illustration of what an old man may be, and say, and do on earth, "his eyes not dim," though, like Moses, they had seen a hundred years; the other picturing the immortal youth of the resurrection body, in the face of fire and voice of thunder of one whose white hair proclaimed that he too had been born into his humanity a hundred years before. And lest we should think it was only because Christ was divine as well as human that he embodied the maturity of white-haired age with the enthusiasm of youth's flashing eyes, we are taught by two of the most wonderful verses of Revelation (19 : 10; 22:9) that Christian men were in heaven so rejuvenated and glorified, that even John twice knelt to worship one and another of them, mistaking him for the Christ he knew so well, only to hear the protest, "See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God." What significance these incidents give to the words, "We shall be like him!" "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness."

I was in the isle that is called Patmos. The place was an island prison, suggesting that we can worship God and draw near to heaven when we are located in most unfavorable surroundings. We ought to choose places for ourselves, and especially for our children, that are morally as well as physically favorable for living, and especially for worshiping. But when we find ourselves in surroundings as unfavorable as those of John, the aged prisoner, sentenced to work in the mines of Patmos, with no church within his reach, and only criminals about him, we can, nevertheless, by "being in the Spirit," get near to Christ and heaven, and find some Christian work to do.

Where'er ascends the sacrifice
Of mingled praise and prayer,
Or on the earth, or on the sea,
The Lord of heaven is there.

Much hypocrisy is put into the excuses of Sabbath-breakers about "worshiping God in nature," but he who is of necessity shut away from the Church of God, and has no temple roof but the sky, no incense but God's wondrous flowers, no altar but the hills, no laver but the sea, may worship God in the great temple of his works, as devoutly and profitably as did John that "day of heaven upon earth."

All around him Patmos lies
Who has spirit-gifted eyes.
Doubt not but he holds in view
A new earth and heaven new;
Doubt not but his ear doth catch
Sounds no voice nor reed can match.—EDITH M. THOMAS.

Let us not miss the clear message of this story of heaven, seen from a prison, that God can be worshiped and Christ fellowshiped and obeyed, in the most unfavorable surroundings to which necessity may confine a true man of God. Obadiah was a saint in Jezebel's home, and Daniel in Babylon, and there were saints in Nero's household. Let us avoid morally perilous occupations, but if we are carried, as Paul was to Rome, let us do as the Romans ought to do, and as Christians ought to do.

And let us do our duty in unfavorable conditions chiefly, as John manifestly did. It is said of Michael Angelo, that he always worked with a lamp fastened to his hat, to "keep his shadow off his work." John had suffered great persecutions from the heathen, and saw great unfaithfulness among Christians, but he also saw God on his throne, and Christ standing among the churches, and so he kept the light of hope and faith ever burning, as he chiseled the image of God in man. Lieutenant Greely, one of the six survivors of an ill-fated arctic expedition, said: "It was the feeling of responsibility that sustained me. I felt that I had to live anyhow. I felt that I must stand by the men. A hundred times I should have been glad to die." Such a sense of responsibility sustained Paul when he was so tired of battling the wicked heathen in front, and faithless church members in the rear, that he desired to depart, but was willing to stay, because it was better for others. So it was with John, and so it should be with us. Wishing for death or heaven before we are called, is like lazy workmen, or cowardly soldiers, wanting pay before their assigned duty is done. An old man, faithful to the end, despite temptation and persecution, is like a ship that has outlived a stormy voyage, and reached a harbor at last.

Safe home, safe home in port;
Strained cordage, shattered deck,
Torn sails, provisions short,
And only not a wreck.
But, oh, the joy, upon the shore,
To tell our voyage perils o'er!

The most beautiful modern illustration of the exile of Patmos is the story of Regina, who was stolen with other children by Indians and kept in slavery for nine years. The children were recaptured and brought to Carlisle, Pa., and all parents from whom children had been stolen were asked to come and identify them if possible. But the children had grown up and changed their appearance and had become half wild like the Indians, and had forgotten their parents and their very names. Regina's mother went among these recovered children in vain. No one responded to the name "Regina," or recognized the mother. Col. Boquet, in charge, said, "You cannot expect to recognize one another after nine years, but can you not remember something you taught your child?" "Oh, yes, there was a hymn she loved to hear:

"Alone, yet not alone am I;
Though in this solitude so drear,
I feel my Saviour always nigh,
He comes the weary hours to cheer.
I am with him, and he with me—
E'en here, alone I cannot be."

The mother had scarcely sung two lines when Regina's memory awoke and her affection with it, and she rushed, singing herself also, into her mother's arms.

In the Spirit on the Lord's Day—write.—Here we have, in the first printed passage known to us, in which the Sabbath was called by its new Christian name, a profound intimation of the two essentials of its right observance. How many centuries will it take to teach all members of the Church what is taught here, and still more in the Sabbaths of Christ, that the day is not truly observed by doing nothing, but by doing good. And here is a form of doing good that is within reach of every intelligent person—"Write." Teach in the Sunday School if you can. Patmos makes it pertinent to suggest also that those who can should use the day so that Christ will say, "I was in prison and ye came unto me." But if you can do nothing else on the Lord's day for the Lord, you can write seven letters that will harmonize with the spirit of the day, that will arouse or save or comfort or enlist in some good cause, if not seven churches, at least seven souls. An Indian carried a chip upon which a Plymouth soldier had written a message to his family. It was to him a deep mystery, that awed him. He held it in a split stick and carried it with reverence and holy fear. He could not read and understand what was written, but he saw the marks, and knew that the chip would tell to those who could read the writing.

This art of writing should indeed be considered with reverence, as something with which we can speak to those far away in space and time. Let us write only what Christ bids us "write," and let no one fail to write that

"THE ISLE THAT IS CALLED PATMOS"

"I TURNED TO SEE THE VOICE THAT SPAKE WITH ME"

*International Sunday School Lesson for June 11. The Message of the Risen Christ. Rev. 1: 10-20. Golden text: "I am he that liveth, and was dead: and behold I am alive forever more" Rev. 1: 18. HOME READINGS. (Appearances and messages and manifestations of Christ after the ascension): Sunday, June 11, Acts 2: 1-38. Monday, Acts 6: 8-15; 7: 1-3, 51-60. Tuesday, Acts 23: 10-24. Wednesday, Rev. 1: 9-20. Thursday, Rev. 4. Friday, Rev. 5. Saturday, Rev. 6.

A Great Summer Campaign

A SUCCESSFUL newspaper always seeks to interest new people. The larger the circulation the richer, as a rule, the contents. If THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had only 100,000 subscribers, it could not afford to provide such interesting, attractive, edifying and instructive features as it does with its tremendous weekly output of nearly A QUARTER OF A MILLION COPIES. Every subscriber profits by the addition of another subscriber, and when these come at the rate of twenty thousand new subscribers yearly, the improvement assumes noticeable proportions. Such has been the history of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the past ten years, and hence the wonderful changes for the better that have characterized it from year to year.

We know that we are making a good paper and we are glad of it. Started for the sole purpose of disseminating a spiritual truth, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been true and loyal to its mission, and tens of thousands have been led by its means into the clearer, fuller light that now irradiates their lives and makes the world through them brighter, better and happier. And what THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has done for these tens of thousands it can and will and must do for other hundreds of thousands, perhaps even, and may God grant that it be so, for millions.

It is with this in view that we have determined, at financial sacrifice to ourselves, and with the hearty co-operation of our present subscribers—of which we feel thoroughly assured—to make a great effort to largely increase our subscription list, and thus to circulate more widely than ever before among the Christian people of this country, the brightest and best Family paper in all the world, which we verily believe THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to be.

Expecting Great Things

We confidently believe that all of our present subscribers are so thoroughly pleased with the paper that they would be glad to see our hopes fully realized. They know the blessed influence THE CHRISTIAN HERALD exerts; for they themselves have felt it. Week after week they have scanned its beautiful pages, have read its inspiring messages, have reveled in its literary and artistic wealth, have been deeply interested, edified and instructed, and, after having read it from beginning to end, have sent it to some distant friends that they also might share its perennial riches.

All Love It

Few papers published are read and re-read as is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and none affords greater pleasure and delight, or makes warmer or more lasting friends. It is an indisputable fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has a larger percentage of renewals than any other paper, and that, from its very beginning, it has retained a larger percentage of permanent subscriptions than any other publication; and its subscription list is constantly increasing. Now what has been done in the past is only an indication of what may be done in the future, provided we all work heartily together with a view to securing the object on which we have now set our hearts.

A Financial Sacrifice

To bring this about we have determined to enlist the cordial co-operation of our friends, and ourselves to make such a financial sacrifice as will demonstrate our own sincerity in the matter. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be produced at less than its regular subscription price, which is $1.50 per annum. But to interest those who cannot appreciate its beauties, simply because they do not see the paper, we have decided to accept, during the month of June, an unlimited number of HALF YEARLY TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS AT 25 CENTS EACH, subject to the easy conditions set forth in the annexed coupons. We could not make this sacrifice but for the experience of the past, that a very large percentage of our subscribers renew, and when they renew they are glad to pay the regular subscription price, because they are satisfied that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is well worth all we ask for it.

A Magnificent Record

This year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD completes the twenty-seventh year of its existence. Its history is grand beyond compare. It has collected and distributed over TWO AND A HALF MILLION DOLLARS IN CHARITY. The farmers of Finland, Sweden, Norway and Russia, the martyrs of Armenia, the orphans of India, the reconcentrados of Cuba, the famine sufferers in China, the rescued men of the Bowery, the unfortunate girls of the Bethesda Home, the thousands of hapless waifs of the tenements, all rise up and call it blessed. God be thanked for the opportunities and the privileges which were ours in the past; and may He graciously continue to pour out his blessing upon THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, its editors and proprietor and its readers, and make us one and all increasingly useful in his service.

The Best Home Paper

But, in addition to these great monumental charities, there is the mission of blessedness and usefulness of the paper itself, which results in light, cheer, hope and happiness in the home circle. And it is this which we now wish to extend. We are engaged in a great Home Missionary effort. You can help us. We know you will help us, and thus have part and parcel in all the good which, under divine blessing, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shall accomplish in years to come.

We Look to Our Friends

Let us begin the work of doubling the present number of its subscribers. While this is a great undertaking, an unprecedented task, it is nevertheless an easy one, for it means just one new subscriber for each and every one now on our list. Surely every subscriber can do this, and we believe you will do YOUR share, while we will gladly do everything within our power to help you.

How to Do It

Our plan is as follows: On the following page you will find six coupons. Please tear them apart at the perforated lines, then distribute them among such of your Church and Sunday School friends as will be likely to subscribe. They will thank you for doing so. Explain to them the beauties, the riches, the great attractiveness of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and urge them to give it a trial. Tell them that EACH COUPON SAVES HALF A DOLLAR on this semi-yearly trial subscription, and you will be surprised how quickly they will avail themselves of the exceptional opportunity thus offered.

If six coupons are not enough for your purpose, write us, and we will send you as many more as you may require, absolutely free of all charge. Do not forget, however, that the coupons are good only until June 30, and cannot be received after that date.

Your Opportunity

Or, if you prefer, you may make a regular canvass among your friends and solicit, by mail or in person, their subscription at our regular price—75 cents for six months. Then retain half a dollar from each subscription, and send us a coupon and 25 cents in cash. Thus, while doing good by spreading the glorious influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, you are actually benefiting yourself.

Now for Victory!

Whichever plan you adopt, may success attend your efforts. We shall never rest until we have a full round million subscribers, and we feel sure that the most active friends in this aggressive campaign will be our present subscribers, who know and appreciate the good THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing, and will be glad of this opportunity to encourage the efforts of its editors and proprietor, to maintain its high standard as the brightest and best family paper in the wide, wide world.

Let All Co-operate

Now for united co-operation! Let the glorious month of roses bring a harvest of subscriptions greater than any in the unequaled history of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and full of encouragement for the faith that is strong enough to believe that we shall some day attain our million!

Alfred Tholbeck

Please read the next page, setting forth a series of liberal rewards, arranged for all who will join with us in this Great Midsummer Campaign.

A List of Liberal Rewards

FOR all who will co-operate with us in our efforts to secure for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the largest number of subscribers ever on our list, a Series of Liberal Rewards has been arranged. This list is published on the next page, and we sincerely believe that it will prove of exceptional interest and attractiveness to our large army of readers.

Premiums We Offer as Inducements

Declaration of Independence

THE original Declaration of Independence will never again be exhibited. It is securely fastened between two plates of glass, hermetically sealed and safely stored, where neither light nor moisture can reach it. This precious document, the charter of our nation's liberties, is thus forever hidden from the sight of the people. Years ago, while it was yet in a perfect state of preservation and clearly legible, the Department of State at Washington gave permission to have it used as the original design for a lithographic reproduction. For that purpose it was dampened to soften the ink on its surface, in order to transfer, with absolute and unfailing accuracy, the face of the document to a stone, from which afterwards a very limited number of copies were made. Two of these copies are in the possession of the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and have just been reproduced in full life-size, measuring 26x31. The handwriting is in every respect just as plain and as clear as on the day when the original Declaration, newly engrossed, was for the first time exhibited in Independence Hall, to the heroic patriots who imperilled their lives and their fortunes, when subscribing their names to the precious document on that ever memorable July 4, 1776.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD deems it peculiarly fitting at

Thomas Jefferson

this time to place within easy reach of its every reader, a facsimile of the Declaration itself, as engrossed by order of the Congress, and we feel confident that no one will miss this opportunity of securing a copy before the Fourth of July, now soon at hand. Sent Free on receipt of only two coupon subscriptions. $5 is the price usually asked for such facsimile.

Select Readings and Recitations

BY B. J. FERNIE, PH.D.

There is no end of books of this kind, but, alas! how few there are that can honestly claim the distinction of being particularly choice. Dr. Fernie, in this volume, has succeeded in combining the patriotic, the thrilling, the humorous, the pathetic, and the poetic, in such a masterly way that not a single selection will admit of adverse criticism.

Dr. B. J. Fernie

"Select Readings and Recitations" contains 320 pages. It is beautifully bound, and is sent Free on receipt of 3 coupon subscriptions and 5 cents for postage.

The Pilgrim's Progress

BY JOHN BUNYAN

This is the most beautiful allegory of human life ever written. It is a triumphant work, and not one of gloom and sadness. It warms the heart and cheers the soul.

John Bunyan

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, in his eloquent introduction to this superb edition says: "If this edition of Pilgrim's Progress shall go into the homes of America to be read there, it will not be possible to measure the results on the next generation."

Beautifully printed, with red line border, very handsomely bound in rich vellum

BEST THINGS FROM AMERICAN LITERATURE

BY IRVING BACHELLER (AUTHOR OF "EBEN HOLDEN")

This masterpiece of a master hand adds another laurel to the wreath of its illustrious editor, who in this book has prepared a work that will prove an unfailing source of genuine pleasure to the many whose good fortune it will be to possess this priceless treasury of the choicest gems of American literary genius. It contains 416 large pages, including several facsimile manuscripts. Its weight is about three pounds. It is sent Free for six subscribers and 25 cents extra for postage.

Irving Bacheller

Carefully Read Every Word

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is ever ready to give generous recognition to each and every effort kindly put forth by its subscribers, with a view to the enlargement of its sphere of usefulness. So to-day we again come before our subscribers with an opportunity for service in the one hand, and with generous recognition in the other.

We are planning to double our circulation, and to this end we are making a great financial sacrifice to attract new people, by offering them a six months' subscription at a great bargain, in the hope of winning them ultimately as permanent subscribers. But it requires the efforts of tens of thousands of people to accomplish what we are seeking to attain, and it is but right and proper that those who co-operate with us in this matter should be duly recognized and properly rewarded: hence, we have arranged the following list of

Unusually Liberal Rewards

No. of Subscribers	REWARD	Add For Postage
For 2 Subscribers...	The Declaration of Independence. Life Size. . .	.00
For 2 Subscribers...	The Simple Life. By Charles Wagner. 128 pp. . .	$ .05
For 3 Subscribers...	Select Readings and Recitations. 320 pp. . .	.05
For 3 Subscribers...	Capital Stories by American Authors. 344 pp. .	.05
For 4 Subscribers...	Any 2 of the Premiums offered for 2 Subscribers.
For 5 Subscribers...	Any 2 of the Premiums offered for 2 or 3 Subs.
For 6 Subscribers...	Red Letter Testament. Authorized or Revised? State which.	.05
For 6 Subscribers...	How I Worked My Way Around the World. 408 pp.	.20
For 6 Subscribers...	Heaven, Home, and Happiness. 408 pp. . .	.25
For 6 Subscribers...	Best Things from American Literature. 416 pp. .	.25
For 6 Subscribers...	Pilgrim's Progress. Red Line Edition. 428 pp. . .	.25

WHEN SELECTING PREMIUMS, You Must Send the Postage Marked Opposite the Premium of Your Choice

Red Letter Testament

With All of Our Lord's Words in Red

This superb volume is absolutely free from typographical imperfections of any kind, and is, in the highest sense of the word, a veritable gem. The type is very large and very clear, and every word recorded as having been spoken by our Lord is printed in red. For real convenience, legibility and serviceableness, it is unsurpassed.

The Red Letter New Testament is beautifully bound in American Levant, soft and flexible, with overlapping edges, Red under Gold, and is the Only Testament of its kind ever devised. It is sent Free for six coupon subscribers, and five cents extra for postage.

HOW I WORKED MY WAY AROUND THE WORLD

WITH INTRODUCTION BY RUSSELL SAGE

When but sixteen years old, Mr. Morrison undertook to encircle the globe. He engaged as a pantry-boy on one of the Transatlantic steamers, crossed sea, and traveled over 50,000 miles, literally working his way twice around the world. His dauntless pluck secured for him audiences with Mr. Gladstone, Queen Victoria, Pope Leo XIII, and others. "How I Worked My Way Around the World" contains 408 large pages. Sent Free for six coupon subscriptions and 20c. for postage.

Harry Steele Morrison

A Bunch of Capital Stories

BY MARK TWAIN AND OTHERS

There must be some diversion if there is to be health and strength, and happy the man, woman, or child who knows how to take it innocently. Such a book as this affords the purest and most elevating diversion known. It improves the mind, cultivates an excellent literary taste, and relieves the strain of too much concentration. Read this volume by all means. "Capital Stories" contains 344 pages. It is beautifully bound, and is sent Free for 3 coupon subscriptions and 5 cents extra for postage.

Mark Twain

de luxe, elaborately illustrated, and contains 428 large pages. It is sent Free on receipt of six coupon subscriptions and twenty-five cents extra for postage.

Heaven, Home, and Happiness

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON

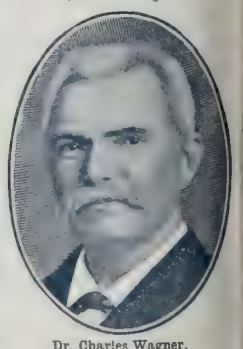
Mary Lowe Dickinson, known the world over through her many literary works, and her connection with the order of King's Daughters and Sons, has given us in this magnificent volume the choicest thoughts of all ages on the three subjects nearest and dearest to the human heart—Heaven, Home and Happiness. Probably no other author could possibly have handled these subjects more interestingly, and certainly no one could have produced a more charming volume.

Here are 416 large pages, exquisitely illustrated, beautifully printed and artistically bound in rich cloth with emblematic decoration. Sent Free for six subscribers and 25 cents extra for postage.

The Simple Life

BY PASTOR CHARLES WAGNER

No book published in the last decade has created such a sensation, such a profound impression, as "The Simple Life." People in all walks of life, from the most humble to those prominent in church, state, and the great empire of business, have read it, re-read it, and urged their friends to do likewise. It is the most discussed book in America to-day. Pres. Roosevelt wrote to the author, saying: "I am preaching your book to my countrymen." Flexible covers, 128 pages; sent for two coupon subscriptions and 5 cents extra for postage.



Dr. Charles Wagner.

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

52 TIMES A YEAR

The Christian Herald

$1.50 PER YEAR

Bible House, New York City

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash, in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1906), if mailed to the office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1905, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 1st, 1905

Given Under my Hand and Seal this Twentieth Day of May, A. D. 1905.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum

Proprietor.

52 TIMES A YEAR

The Christian Herald

$1.50 PER YEAR

Bible House, New York City

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash, in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1906), if mailed to the office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1905, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 1st, 1905

Given Under my Hand and Seal this Twentieth Day of May, A. D. 1905.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum

Proprietor.

The Brightest and Best Illustrated Weekly Family Paper the World Over

52 TIMES A YEAR

The Christian Herald

$1.50 PER YEAR

Bible House, New York City

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash, in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1906), if mailed to the office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1905, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 1st, 1905

Given Under my Hand and Seal this Twentieth Day of May, A. D. 1905.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum

Proprietor.

The Brightest and Best Illustrated Weekly Family Paper the World Over

52 TIMES A YEAR

The Christian Herald

$1.50 PER YEAR

Bible House, New York City

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash, in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1906), if mailed to the office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1905, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 1st, 1905

Given Under my Hand and Seal this Twentieth Day of May, A. D. 1905.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum

Proprietor.

The Brightest and Best Illustrated Weekly Family Paper the World Over

52 TIMES A YEAR

The Christian Herald

$1.50 PER YEAR

Bible House, New York City

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash, in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1906), if mailed to the office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1905, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 1st, 1905

Given Under my Hand and Seal this Twentieth Day of May, A. D. 1905.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum

Proprietor.

THIS SUBSCRIPTION Must Expire
NOT Later than JANUARY 1st, 1906

1,200 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED

I inclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face thereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash, for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum) and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name.....

Street Address.....

Town.....

State.....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30th, 1905

This subscription was sent in through the influence of.....

THIS SUBSCRIPTION Must Expire
NOT Later than JANUARY 1st, 1906

1,200 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED

I inclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face thereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash, for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum) and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name.....

Street Address.....

Town.....

State.....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30th, 1905

This subscription was sent in through the influence of.....

THIS SUBSCRIPTION Must Expire
NOT Later than JANUARY 1st, 1906

1,200 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED

I inclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face thereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash, for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum) and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name.....

Street Address.....

Town.....

State.....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30th, 1905

This subscription was sent in through the influence of.....

THIS SUBSCRIPTION Must Expire
NOT Later than JANUARY 1st, 1906

1,200 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED

I inclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face thereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash, for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum) and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name.....

Street Address.....

Town.....

State.....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30th, 1905

This subscription was sent in through the influence of.....

JIM'S WIFE

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

"SUCH a common little thing! She's vulgar, and she doesn't know it. And Jim, so fastidious, so cultured, a fellow who has seen only the best society all his life; how can he marry a girl lie that?"

Jim's mother folded her hands, leaned back in her chair and sighed. Her eyes followed the tall figure of her son, as he disappeared down the avenue of poplars that led to the gate. Their house was the great house of the neighborhood, large, imposing, white-pillared, a "city set on a hill." The village houses below were small by contrast. Effie lived in one of them, pretty Effie Lawless, who had captivated Jim MacIntyre, and whom he was to marry a month from now. Jim's mother and the whole MacIntyre connection were furious. They did not want Jim to marry out of his station; they saw nothing in Effie to make her fit to enter their set.

Meanwhile, Jim held his head high, and paid no attention. After the first hot protest from his mother, the topic had not been reopened. He had simply said, with that straightening of the jaw and firm fastening of the lips, that she knew as a MacIntyre hall-mark, "Mother, I'm sorry, but I shall marry Effie just the same. I claim the right to choose my wife for myself."

"But, Jim, Effie has no education, no people, no traditions. She has worked for her living."

"More honor to her for that, plucky little girl that she is. Yes, she has had hard times with her nursing. Please God, she'll have easier ones henceforth."

So there was no more to be said. No more was said—to Jim; but in family conclave, when Jim was absent, plenty was said. Then, within three weeks of the wedding-day, Jim's mother was taken down with a sudden, desperate, mysterious malady, cerebro-spinal meningitis! It is no respecter of persons, or of places. It dared to creep over the aristocratic threshold of the MacIntyres; to invade the lofty room of Mrs. MacIntyre, to lay her prostrate. A battle began between life and death. Racking pains, raging fever, devastating delirium, fearful weakness, the lady of the mansion knew all these, and was very, very ill.

Effie Lawless folded up her white wedding-gown, and laid aside her bravery of soft linen and lace. "We will wait, Jim," she said with gentle positiveness.

She put on her uniform, and came to Mrs. MacIntyre's bedside to nurse her. Common little thing, as she had been called, she knew how to fight death; she was full of resource; she had learned how to obey a doctor, how to carry out an order. She was not to be daunted. She did not blanch when the patient raved. She came out victorious, for Mrs. MacIntyre, Jim's mother, lived.

"Under God, madam," said the minister, weeks after, "you owe your life to your devoted nurse, little Effie Lawless." Mrs. MacIntyre did not call her "a common little thing" now. She was still extremely weak. She could scarcely lift her hand. But she smiled a wan and shadowy smile.

"She is to be my daughter, Dr. Shaw," she said with a smile, "my Jim's wife, and I am glad."

Children and the Sale of Tickets

I DO wish," said a much exasperated lady, "that people would not allow their children to go about selling tickets for charity or anything else. One hates to say no to a neighbor's child, yet there is a limit to one's pocketbook, and when Sara and Fanny, Johnny and Dick, have brought you tickets to fairs, strawberry festivals, concerts, and teas, at prices ranging from ten cents to fifty, from Monday till Saturday, patience ceases to be a virtue."

The continual sale of tickets seems to be a necessary adjunct of church and village life, but we wish that our children need not be the venders, is extremely natural. As to purchasing tickets, use independence. You have your margin, or your limit for benevolence; keep within it. When you can kill two birds with one stone, by enjoying a pleasant evening and helping a charity, by all means do so.

THE EVENING BELLS

Across the fells the evening bells,
Are sounding out in silvery swells.

At set of sun of labor done,
Of rest and peace by toilers won.

The sweet bells chime, the evening time
Is linked with heaven's long years sublime.

We fold the hands, across the lands,
The music floats o'er fields and sands.

We bow in prayer and drop our care,
For God the Lord is everywhere.

One day the bells in silvery swells,
Shall hush earth's rough discordant spells.

And we shall meet at Jesus' feet,
Where evermore is rest complete. M. E. S.

Brilliant Afterthoughts

THERE are few of us who do not have the experience of the brilliant afterthought. At the moment when we are called on for the speech, or the response to a toast at the banquet or other pleasant function, our thoughts are slow and our tongues falter. We stumble on saying something after a fashion, but not saying at all what we intend, and we sit down with a sense of failure. How indifferent was our attempt! But, in the night or the next day, the brilliant anecdote, the gay quip, the swift repartee, flashes on the brain, and we know that it has come too late.

Afterthoughts of this kind are tantalizing enough, but as only our own vanity has suffered, there is nothing to be done. But sometime it is the opportunity to do a kindness that has passed us by. We might have helped a brother, and we did not extend a helping hand. We might have sent a letter that would have carried joy to an anxious heart, but we delayed, and death has taken away the loved one. Then our afterthoughts are full of pain and useless regret.

To cultivate the mood of present-thought, is a worth while thing for us in this world, for we pass this way but once.

The Guest Room

Among the minor conveniences of the guest room one should not forget a receptacle for loose combings, bits of paper, and the odds and ends which embarrass one if she has no place where she may drop them. An otherwise perfectly appointed guest chamber often lacks this little comfort. Indeed, a waste basket should form part of the furnishing of every living room, as well as of every bedroom. In some homes there is no lavatory except the common one in the bath room, which belongs to the family. It is far from agreeable to a guest staying in the house to take her turn in this way, and she should have washing facilities, with soap, towels and of course plenty of water in her own room. A fastidious woman once told me that when a visitor in a home where she had no opportunity for bathing except in the family bath-room, she rose at five in the morning, so that she might not interfere with the toilets of her host and his family later on. By breakfast time she was wearied for the day.

Another guest room convenience that should not be forgotten is an extra comfortable at the foot of the bed, to be drawn up in the hour of chill that often precedes the dawn. A drawer in the dressing bureau should be at the disposal of the temporary occupant of the room, and there should also be several hooks in the wardrobe or closet, where she may hang her dresses and wraps. In these days a maid or a daughter of the house should always offer her services to the guest who comes alone, as no woman living now can fasten for herself gowns that hook in out-of-the-way places, and are a Chinese puzzle to put on and take off.

The Birds Our Friends

Some of us are slow to acknowledge our debt to our friends, the birds. They take toll of our grain and our fruit, but they save the fruit and the grain by their destruction of insect pests. If we had no birds we should gather no fruit. The farmer who would be rid of potato bugs, should encourage quail to live on his acres. The quail destroys the potato bug. The robin eats a few cherries, but he is the best guardian the cherry trees have.

Let not cat, or boy with gun, or prowling foe of any sort, destroy our friends the birds. Their songs alone make them good company, but they do far more than sing for us. They serve us, too.

The Family Doctor

In medical practice, the family physician is just now somewhat in eclipse, so many patients preferring to carry their maladies to a specialist, and so many young doctors taking up a specialty, rather than engaging in general healing.

Yet the family doctor cannot be dispensed with. The little ailments of children and the ordinary ups and downs of people in fairly good health must have treatment. Besides, the family doctor is the family friend, and no one can take his place. The quality of sympathy, the personal interest, and the knowledge he has and can bring to bear on the emergencies that often arise, are not to be paid for in current coin. They are beyond price. One has a dream of days when the family physician shall usually be a woman, clear-eyed, positive, deft-handed and full of resource. She will come in the elemental crises of birth, and watch mother and infant through the early years. She will minister to the young girl and the aged woman. She will carry the heft of the average load of anxiety in the family, the man physician devoting himself to the niceties of surgery, to the critical cases that need the knife, to the battle with noxious germs, and to the specialties of eye, ear; should not this be an ideal division of labor?

Bible Students in Convention

EVERY lover of the Bible has reason to be grateful to the American Bible League for bringing together the many stalwart defenders of the Old Book, who assembled in the Marble Collegiate Church in New York, on May 16. One after another, men rose to take up and demolish the arguments against its integrity which have been brought against it by opponents within and without the church. The vigorous defense made in the Convention not only against atheists, but against the scholars who have impugned its authenticity, will strengthen the faith of many who were unable to answer the sophistries of its foes. In addition to professors from our own institutions of learning, the League had secured the presence of Professor Urquhart of Scotland, who is known the world over as a valiant and eloquent champion of the orthodox view of Bible inspiration. From all these there came the most unequivocal avowal of unwavering confidence in the integrity and authenticity of the Bible from beginning to end.

The President of the Convention was Mr. William Phelps Hall, who, in a brief, but vigorous address, explained the purpose of the Convention. He declared that "the American Bible League is not an enemy to truth in any form, but stands ready to fully accept the proved results of all reverent Bible criticism."

Professor Luther T. Townsend, formerly of Boston University, after an explanation of the theory of inspiration, said:

> As an outcome of this inspiration, the Christian world has a Book that needs no apology, a Book that contains the earliest history of mankind, whose records are confirmed by every archæological excavation; a Book that in the whole field of literature is unique in this, that its characters from first to last are neither distorted, overdrawn nor misrepresented; whose narratives in brevity, pathos, simplicity, and universal interest, are unequalled; whose Book of Job is the noblest poem in any literature; whose Book of Ruth is the tenderest idyl yet written; whose Book of Ecclesiastes is more terrible and desperate in its despair than any tragedy of Æschylus or Shakespeare; whose stories of patriarchal life in Genesis surpass almost immeasurably anything found in Herodotus; whose Book of Psalms goes so deeply into the spiritual experiences of man's nature, his faith, his doubt, his reason, his hope, his tender trust, his ardent aspiration, that it will remain to the end of time the best manual of devotion for the human race that has ever been written; whose code of laws and of morals is the purest, and whose exhibition of divine love is the most constraining ever yet conceived by the human mind, and no one rationally can doubt that, if the truths of this inspired Book were followed, they would guide the nations of the earth to the utmost physical development, to the greatest political prosperity, to the most rapid intellectual progress, and to the highest moral and spiritual perfection possible in this world.

Professor Wright, of Oberlin College, delivered an exhaustive address on "The Geological Confirmation of Biblical History," in which he dwelt on the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and showed how closely the Biblical account corresponded with the conditions which have been found to exist, by modern explorers. The passage of the Red Sea by the Israelites, under Moses, he said was either a miracle of foreknowledge, or a miracle of direct action upon the forces of nature.

Professor Urquhart devoted his address to a disquisition on prophecy, in which he showed how exactly the prophecies uttered hundreds of years before the event had been fulfilled. The prophecies regarding Christ, his rejection by the Jews, his acceptance by the Gentiles, were alone sufficient to establish the inspiration of the Scriptures, and the time was coming when his final acceptance by the Jews would complete the record.

Prof. Albert T. Clay of the University of Pennsylvania, described the exploration of Babylon, which had corroborated the Biblical account in many important details. Dr. Kyle of Philadelphia, contended that the narrative of the sojourn of the Israelites in Egypt, was of itself sufficient to fix the date of the Pentateuch as corroborated by the story of the monuments, now being deciphered.

"MY OLD WIFE AND I"

By CHARLES NOEL DOUGLAS

I.

'TIS fifty years ago to-day, that Jane and I were wed,
Just fifty years of hopes and fears have vanished now and fled.
We've had our sorrows, had our cares, but never one regret,
We thank God that we're married, and we thank God that we met.
The same old roof has sheltered us, the same church heard our prayers,
We've never hankered after change, like some mismated pairs,
Who seek divorce to find remorse, and lifelong misery.
The old, old home, and the old, old wife, are good enough for me.

II.

Ah! what a time I've had to keep the old home standing square!
For many a one his best has done to spread grim ruin there.
Shark after shark made us their mark, with nicely baited hook,
The fraud was plain, they schemed in vain, the bait we never took.
And then awhile the tempter vile our pathway hovered o'er,
But with a blow I laid him low and drove him from the door.
I said, "Thou fool, thy purpose cruel has failed. Could'st thou not see,
There lives no man on earth who can take my wife's love from me?"

III.

Then folks would come, and talk me dumb, with strange, new-fangled creeds.
"The faith you've borne," said they, "'s outworn, unfit for modern needs."
They'd talk a streak, for half a week, on mortal mind and stuff;
I heard them through, "Thanks, thanks to you," said I, "I've heard enough;
The Bible here to me is clear, the Way my fathers trod,
It was their pride, in it they died, it took them straight to God.
In that faith, too, my mother grew, so you can plainly see,
The old, old church, and the old, old faith, are good enough for me."

IV.

Then next appeared a creature weird, a stranger from the West;
Around he hung, his oily tongue some shallow fools impressed;
His Mormon creed I did not heed, but cried "Oh God, what shame
These false apostles bring upon thy Holy Faith and Name!"
And then one day he chanced to stray, this creature, to my door,
He talked to me polygamy, and when he left, he bore
Upon his cheek a scar. I seek no strife, but by heaven's dome!
I claim the right, if needs, to fight, to shield my wife and home.

V.

What's coming o'er this land of ours, the land that gave us birth,
The noblest land, the grandest land, on all God's smiling earth,
The land on which the Father show'rs, as on no other place,
His bounteous blessings down upon this favored, prosp'rous race—
What's coming o'er this land, I say, the land of Washington,
The land the Pilgrim Fathers for Christ's Holy Gospel won;
When we permit, from Sheol's pit, o'er this fair land to roam,
This Mormon horde, who've ever warred upon the hearth and home?

VI.

So while to-night my thoughts take flight, the old wife kneeling nigh,
A prayer I'll wing, and may it bring swift answer from on high.
God keep this land within thine hand, the old faith burning bright,
And godless creeds, rank, noxious weeds, crush out with all thy might;
Eradicate from each fair State the curse of drink, and check
The Mormon clan, who subtly plan to bring our homes to wreck.
By firesides bright, oh, let the light of love shine clear and pure,
So shall our land forever stand, a nation strong and sure.

New York's Gospel Tent Campaign

THERE is no greater home mission field in the world than in New York City, with its population of nearly four million souls. In fact, home and foreign missions can be combined there owing to the large foreign element in Greater New York, where only about twenty per cent. of the population is of American descent. Exclusive of members of Catholic, Russian, Greek, Armenian, and Jewish churches, there are in New York 331,698 Protestant communicants, and 497,547 additional attendants at Protestant churches. There are, also, according to figures supplied by the Federation of Churches of New York City, 1,087,762 churchless Protestants. One in every four in Manhattan is a Hebrew.

To do this, the Evangelistic Committee of Greater New York is planning a Summer Tent and Outdoor Campaign. The plan, which many of the churches of the city have agreed to help forward, is the establishment in the neediest sections of the city, of daily outdoor services in the afternoon for children and in the evening for adults. It is proposed to erect ten or more tents where vacant lots can be secured. In the different foreign colonies, the preachers will speak in the language of the people, many of whom do not understand a word of English. The plans for each tent are comprehensive, including a preacher or speaker, a student assistant, who will give all his time to the organizing of the work by following up the people who become interested, and also distributing printed matter. An organist, cornetist and precentor will gather a volunteer chorus. There will also be a children's worker to conduct children's meetings, and visit homes in the neighborhood. The number of tents and the extent of the work will depend upon the response of Christian people. No collections will be taken in the tent meetings. The committee will depend entirely upon individual subscriptions and pledges from churches and other organizations.

Several churches have signified their willingness to co-operate in this work. The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church will support at least one tent, in case ten tents are erected. Five are already secured. The Calvary Baptist, the Brick Presbyterian, and the Marble Collegiate Churches, have all consented to extend the helping hand in this great effort. About $15,000 of the $30,000 needed has been subscribed. The Rev. J. B. Ely, for several years superintendent of the successful Philadelphia Summer Tent Work, will be at the head of the movement this season in New York.

A mass meeting was held in Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, May 16. An appeal for funds to carry on the work of the summer campaign resulted in overflowing contribution baskets. Bishop David H. Greer presided over the meeting, which was very enthusiastic in its greeting of the Bishop, who said in part:

"The churches, rising above and ignoring their differences, are going to preach the Gospel to the city. It is not a sensational movement aiming at sensational results, but a Christian movement to accomplish encouraging moral results. That there is any moral epidemic here I do not believe, but we have our own peculiar moral problems to solve, and every Christian should be interested in their solution."

Kind Words from the Pacific Slope

Why do thousands esteem THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the best Christian publication in America? Because: 1. It is a soul-winner, and a soul-saver. 2. It is not choked down with ritualism, creeds, and doctrines of men. 3. It is non-sectarian, consequently untrammeled, and unlimited in scope for great usefulness and moral reform. 4. It is a reliable vehicle for good, clean, general information. 5. It is foremost in missionary spirit and work, and timely benevolence. 6. It is a wholesome Biblical, broad-guage, masterful journal, for all the people, all the days of life and Hope. 7. It is a cheering weekly visitor and friend for all who will partake of such excellent literary food. One million subscribers, means just so many precious sermons each week. H. L. R. S.

Los Angeles, Calif.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

iss Cynthia Day had been for years under the ntrol of rigid and harsh grandparents, as well a severe mother. All the natural inclinations oirlhood had been suppressed. After the death o ier relatives, she continues the same narrow e tence, economizing from habit, and ably as- ted in this by the old servant, Abby Whiton. Tubled by a pain in her chest she visits a doc- who shocks her with the announcement that s has only a year to live. Her whole soul re- bs against the thought of death. She meets ti Puffer twins, and she joins them in her first n down hill, and also accepts an invitation to t ir picnic, much to Abby Whiton's annoyance. t twins stray off, and Cynthia, searching for t m, loses her way and is found by George ssom, a young house-painter, with decorative a itions. On the way home she engages him to nt and paper the Breyfogle house. Abby Vhiton endeavors, but in vain, to assert her old- t e power in the house, and at last Cynthia cides to dismiss her, and writes her a note of e harge, inclosing $50 extra "for long and faith- f service." She decides to make a clearance of t heterogeneous collection of old furniture and e er things in the house, burning the useless rub- h, and giving the serviceable articles to the e who needed them. A notice of the con- t plated distribution on a certain day is read church to the astonishment of the congrega- n, many of whom assure Cynthia they will t end. Meanwhile Cynthia, with the aid of the iffer twins, makes a bonfire in the Breyfogle k-yard, of many old articles she does not wish t give away. When the eventful day of the t ribution arrives, nearly all the village at- ds. A tall, dark stranger is present, too, who k es himself known to Mrs. Pettibone, and s shes to speak with Cynthia. He is the mys- t ious hero of Cynthia's "boy and girl affair." e unexpected meeting gives her both pleasure a l pain, but just as she is beginning to be frank t h the stranger, he departs as unceremoniously a l mysteriously as he came.

CHAPTER XII.

ONE warm morning in the latter part of June, Mrs. Pettibone stood tapping lightly at Miss Cynthia Day's side-door. After e had knocked, the little lady quietly rveyed the house in its trim purity d perfection: the graveled walks, e velvet lawn dappled with leaf adows were pleasant to the eye; so ere the clear windows, revealing ol glimpses of dainty curtains of lace d muslin. Mrs. Pettibone had been tensely interested in the changes hich had taken place in the old Brey- gle house. The subsequent gener- s donations of money which had paired the church and parsonage, d enabled the minister to go away r a much-needed holiday, had aroused r to a sincere gratitude mingled ith a sense of lively curiosity.

Ostensibly, she had come to thank iss Cynthia for her generosity and oughtfulness. Inwardly, she was termined to find out why a descend- nt of the Breyfogle family should us suddenly have deflected from the reditary standards of conduct.

Miss Cynthia herself presently open- l the door. She smiled wanly into e face of her pastor's wife. There ere violet shadows under her blue yes (Mrs. Pettibone observed), and r little hands trembled. She was earing a youthful gown of pink mus- n, beruffled and befrilled, and a broad hite hat laden with pink roses shad- l her colorless face.

"You were going out this morning!" xclaimed Mrs. Pettibone apologeti- ally. "No, indeed; I won't come in. just stopped for a moment to thank you. You have been so very kind and generous."

"But I was only going into the yard," Miss Cynthia protested. "I felt lonely and—and tired this morning. I waked up in the night, and I couldn't go to sleep. You know how one thinks of all sorts of things those that have happened already, and—and those that are – going to happen – not always pleasant things. I'm sure you think me very foolish."

"I guess most of us are foolish that way at one time or another," said the minister's wife, comfortably. "I made up my mind long ago that the things we are afraid of in the night are not worth remembering the next morning. In fact, we generally forget all about them as soon as the sun is up."

"SHE RAN OUT INTO THE TRANQUIL GLORIES OF THE JUNE MORNING"

"I wish you would come in and see my house," said Miss Cynthia, with the air of one who determinedly changes the subject. "It is all finished at last, even to the kitchen. It has taken a long time – longer than I thought; but I wish I had it all to do over again."

Mrs Pettibone was frankly delighted with what she saw in the renovated house. "I don't see how you could have waited so long to do it," she said. "But you" she looked thoughtfully at the girlish figure of her hostess "you have changed more than the house. I don't believe I should have known you—if, a year ago, I had suddenly come face to face with you in that pink gown."

"I suppose you think I've taken leave of my senses," murmured Miss Cynthia, with a defiant lifting of her small head. "Almost everybody does think so, I have been told. But I don't care. It doesn't make any difference what "

"I think you are a wise woman, my dear," Mrs. Pettibone made haste to interpose. "You ought to know what I would think." She lapsed into a thoughtful silence, then added in a low voice, "If you only looked happier. Sometimes, I have wondered "

"I am happier than I have ever been before in my life," Miss Cynthia told her, doggedly. "I never did anything I really wanted to do until this spring. Then I made up my mind that I might as well try—to have a good time the way the way other people do. Yesterday I played dolls all day long with the Puffer twins—because when I was a little girl I was never allowed to waste my time with dolls. I haven't thought yet what I want to do next; but when I do I shall hurry and do it right away. I—must hurry because the days go so—fast. I never knew a summer to go away so fast. It is the last of June already, and "

She gripped her small hands together in her lap. "Don't you know of some way to make the days go slow?" she asked the minister's wife, with a dreary little smile. "I used to think the time dragged so; but it doesn't now. Even a long, long night goes away so quickly. It is morning before I know it."

Mrs. Pettibone looked sweetly puzzled. "I don't see," she said, "why you should want the days to pass slowly. Every day is sure to bring something beautiful with it, and the years are bearing us on to something more beautiful still."

She stopped and looked carefully at her hostess; Miss Cynthia sat stonily quiet, her small hands still gripped in her lap. "You are thinking about heaven, I suppose," she said dryly. "I want to stay in this world—a long time. I want to!"

"Then you will," Mrs. Pettibone spoke in a tone of comfortable conviction. "Don't you remember that every one that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened?"

"That's in the Bible," said Miss Cynthia, with a spent breath of long weariness. "I've read my Bible through twenty-six times; I'm reading it for the twenty-seventh time, now. But I think it's tiresome. There isn't a bit of use in my pretending anything else."

"Why do you read it then?" asked Mrs. Pettibone unexpectedly. "I shouldn't read a word of it, if I didn't want to."

"You wouldn't!"

"No."

"But—oh, I just read it—and—and pray. I should be frightened not to pray." Miss Cynthia had grown even paler; her breath came in little, hurried gasps.

Mrs. Pettibone didn't appear to notice. She vaguely understood by this time that she was dealing with that very terrible thing – a naked soul. "God knows all about what you really want, even if you don't mention it," she said in a low, shaken voice. "When you really want something you must believe that God can give it to you, and that he wants to give it to you even more than you want it."

Miss Cynthia shivered. "I always think of—God—as—watching me, always watching—and displeased—angry. I am not resigned. I just can't say 'Thy will be done.' I don't want it to be done!"

Mrs. Pettibone leaned forward in

CONTINUED ON PAGE 484

opyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

Royal

Baking Powder

is the greatest of modern-time helps to perfect cooking.

4 per cent

The men who manage THE CLEVELAND TRUST COMPANY are among the best-known business men of Cleveland.

Put your savings in their care, and you may well

Be Sure of Your Bank

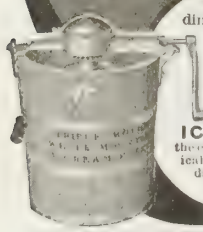
Assets $26,000,000.
49,000 individual depositors
Dollar deposits welcome
4 per cent interest

Send for booklet F which tells how you can open an account, no matter where you live.

The Cleveland Trust Company

CLEVELAND OHIO

"FROZEN DAINTIES" A Book of 50 Receipts Sent You FREE



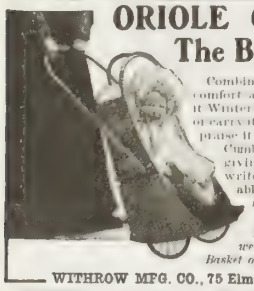
Delightful ices, custards, puddings, chilled fruits, beverages—50 new and dainty receipts are described in the new book "Frozen Dainties." It also tells of the

TRIPLE MOTION WHITE MOUNTAIN ICE CREAM FREEZER

the easiest, quickest and most economical freezer ever invented. Write today for a copy of "Frozen Dainties"

White Mountain Freezer Co., Dept. A, Nashua, N. H.

ORIOLE GO-BASKET The Baby Hansom



Combines usefulness, economy, comfort and common sense. Use it Winter and Summer. Wheel it or carry it. Babies enjoy it. Parents praise it. Physicians endorse it. Cumbersome four-wheelers are giving way to it. A patron writes: "I consider it invaluable, and think it as necessary as Baby's clothes."

Write to-day for FREE BOOKLET. Tells how we ship you an Oriole Go-Basket on approval.

WITHROW MFG. CO., 75 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.

Wheel Chairs

We make a complete line of modern Rolling Chairs for adults and infants, and sell direct at WHOLESALE PRICES. 75 styles to select from. We pay freight and sell on

30 DAYS TRIAL.

Liberal discounts allowed to all sending for FREE Catalogue NOW.

GORDON MFG. CO. 526 Madison Ave., Toledo, O

SUMMER HOMES IN GREEN HILLS OF

Vermont and Lake Champlain

Terms, $4 to $10 per week.

New trains between Boston, New York, Springfield and Vermont points. As good as any on the continent. 120-page illustrated brochure mailed free on receipt of 6c. in stamps or postage.

Address A. W. ECCLESTONE, So. Pass. Agent, 385 Broadway, New York City.

STARK FRUIT BOOK

shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.

We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 483

her chair, her eyes were radiant. "I used to think just that way," she said. "And I was ugly to look at and lonesome and forlorn, and I believed that it was God's will that I should stay just that way till I died. I thought that perhaps if I bore it all with resignation I should go to heaven—a queer sort of a place, I supposed it was, my dear; and I didn't want to go at all. But I thought God couldn't find that out if I only went to church regularly and said my prayers night and morning. I never dared to pray for anything I really wanted."

She paused to laugh aloud—a triumphant, jubilant little laugh of pure delight and happiness. "One day I heard a woman say that, whether we think so or not, God is good—all sorts of good—ready to give me anything, everything I could think of that I wanted; not that somebody else thought I ought to want, but what I wanted, down deep in my heart.

"At first, I hardly dared to believe it—I had grown such a coward—but I did a funny thing, I am sure you will say. I wrote out a list of the things I wanted. And I'm going to tell you what they were, though I've never told anybody else but my husband. I wanted two new dresses, and a silk petticoat—one of the nice rustly ones, you know, and a hat with ostrich plumes, and a long, soft, curly feather boa. I was so ashamed to think I wanted such foolish things. But I did want them; and I got every one of them! I have that feather boa yet, and I never put it on without thinking, this was a present from my Father. It's such a beautiful thought. Why, it makes everything in the whole world beautiful! I don't know all that God is, my dear; but I do know that he is all good.

"There was something else I wanted, too." Mrs. Pettibone sighed and smiled reminiscently, while a girlish color flushed her cheeks. "That was the biggest and best thing I asked for. It was so wonderful that I hesitated, at first. You don't remember me as I was then—a regular old maid—yes, that's exactly what I was, and not a man I had ever known had ever looked at me, as—as men do look at the woman they are going to love." Mrs. Pettibone glanced questioningly at Miss Cynthia, and Miss Cynthia's blue eyes answered.

"I did long to have somebody love me—like that. And so I asked God for a husband; and I believed he would send me one, and he did. How surprised I was when I found out who it was. I had never once thought of such a thing truly, I never had; he seemed so wise and grand, so much above me! But he began to love me then, and he has never stopped a minute since. Oh, my dear, God is so kind, so generous! I wish you would just try him and see if he won't give you everything you want."

"But I—I am not good like you," faltered Miss Cynthia. "I am not resigned, or willing to submit, not one bit. I'm stiff-necked and rebellious. And you know what it says in the Bible about such people."

"You're rebellious just because you think God doesn't want to give you what you want," Mrs. Pettibone said wisely. "And you're stiff-necked because you're determined to have it. It's such hard work to be stiff-necked, my dear; and didn't you know that you never want a thing very much unless God wants you to have it? I don't know what it is that you want, and I am not going to ask. But don't read your Bible and pray just because you think it's your duty. I should never read another word of the Bible till I was hungry for it."

The little woman having delivered herself of these heterodox opinions, arose and kissed Miss Cynthia on each cheek, after the fashion of women. "You've grown pretty," she said softly, "and your house is beautiful. I can see that you're all ready to be happy. Now just be happy!"

Miss Cynthia's Breyfogle conscience, trained to strenuous theological combat through successive generations of Puritan ancestors, advanced at once to the fray, as the door closed upon the retreating form of the minister's wife.

"That woman is anti-Christ. Don't you know that our God is a consuming fire?" shouted the Breyfogle conscience, quoting Scripture with disconcerting fluency. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God!"

"I am going to try wanting and expecting," said Miss Cynthia obstinately.

"You should crucify your affections and desires, not pamper them," said the Breyfogle conscience.

"I don't want to crucify them," murmured Miss Cynthia doggedly.

When pretty Nellie Ryan called her mistress to dinner, she was surprised to observe the change which had taken place in her small, wistful face since breakfast time. It was, indeed, no longer wistful, but flushed and expectant.

"Have you ever wanted things, Nellie, that you thought you couldn't have?" asked Miss Cynthia, as the girl filled her plate. She liked to have her pretty young servant linger in the dining-room while she ate, and Nellie, perceiving this, had been pleasantly flattered by it, though it was not the fashion in Innisfield.

"Have I ever wanted things that I couldn't have, ma'am?" echoed Nellie. "Why, yes'm, I suppose I have. But folks don't often get what they want in this 'ere world, I've always heard tell; an' I guess it's true enough." The girl's tone was unhappy, and she winked fast, as if to keep back the insurgent tears.

"That's what I've always supposed, too," said Miss Cynthia, meditatively. "But suppose there was a very simple reason why we don't get what we want. And suppose I—we—should find out what it was all of sudden?"

The girl looked respectfully inquiring.

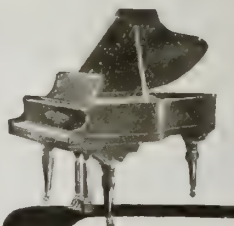
"Suppose it should be because—" pursued her mistress, with a frightened joy shining palely in her face—"first, because we won't believe that God is kind and generous and wants us to have things. Just think of that, Nellie! how different it would make everything in the whole world if we only knew it was true; if instead of being stern and harsh and often angry because we want foolish things, God was really kind, and wanted us to have what we want—everything nice and pleasant and cheerful and pretty! Oh, I wish I was sure of it! I wish I'd found out about it before! I'm afraid it's too late now."

The girl expressed extreme astonishment, not unmingled with dismay, in her round solemn eyes and uplifted hands. "Aren't you feeling well, ma'am?" she asked respectfully. "Perhaps I'd better get the camphor." In Nellie's brief experience, too much "religion" au naturel was a decidedly unhealthy symptom.

"I do feel well," declared Miss Cynthia stoutly. "I feel better than I ever did in my life. I want to be well, Nellie. Do you hear? And if God wants me to be well, too, why shouldn't I be well? And it wouldn't make a bit of difference what anybody else thought, or said; would it?"

The girl regarded her mistress' agitated little face with a suspicious interest. She had been warned by numbers of well-intentioned persons that Miss Cynthia was "growing awful queer." Heretofore, her "queerness" had been of a sort entirely intelligible to Nellie. But all this "religious business," as the girl termed it to herself, was an alarming indication of intellectual decay.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 485



The Emerson Short Grand

Declared by competent judges to be the most pronounced success of its type yet achieved in this country.

This instrument has extraordinary evenness of scale and touch, and an exquisitely musical tone-quality, hardly less in volume than that of a full grand piano. All

Emerson

pianos have the same enduring construction, thorough excellence of detail, and high-grade modern finish, which have already gained for them more than

83,000 satisfied users in 55 years

Write for booklet and catalogue, describing our Short Grand and our various Upright Pianos.

Emerson Piano Co

117 Boylston Street, Boston
167 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Alabastine—Your Walls

The Alabastine Company have prepared a complete set of 50 hand made side wall and ceiling designs—3 x 7 inches—done in two colors in Alabastine. It is the most beautiful book of tints that was ever prepared. It is done with the same material that you buy of your dealer. In order to introduce this dainty book of Alabastine into your home, we will send it, with full instructions, for 25c, with the understanding that if it is not entirely satisfactory when received we will promptly refund the money. The possession of this book of designs entitles you to the free services of our artists in working out any color scheme for any building which you may desire done with Alabastine.

The purchase of five packages or more from any dealer entitles you to a free stencil of any frieze shown in the book upon presentation to us of the dealer's sales-slip. The stencil sells from 50 cents to $1.00. We send them absolutely free to you, charges prepaid.

Alabastine is the most beautiful, the most durable, the most sanitary wall finish ever prepared. It can be applied to any room, for it restores old walls and improves new ones.

THE ALABASTINE COMPANY

905 Grandville Ave., Grand Rapids, Mich.
New York City, N. Y.

Before You Buy A GO-CART

send for our free money saving catalog and learn how much better value we can give you.

We make all kinds Baby Carriages, Folding Go-Carts, etc., at uniformly lowest prices.

It will pay you to investigate our new

"American" Reclining GO-CART

Instantly changed into a luxurious baby-carriage; and back again into a beautiful go-cart. Comfortable for baby, and for the person wheeling baby. Recommended by physicians. We also make the best FOLDING GO-CART on the market. We allow freight east of the Rocky Mountains, as equalize with other points.

Write to-day for our free catalog D, and save money.

AMERICAN BABY CARRIAGE FACTORY

16 North 4th Street, Philadelphia

LEARN TO KNIT

Wouldn't you like to knit a golf vest, or a pair of golf gloves or bedroom slippers? You can easily do it by following the clear instructions given in the new Columbia Book of Yarns (6th edition). Explains the different stitches, shows illustrations of 106 articles and tells how to make them.

A dollar book, but sold for 15 cents—at dealers' or by mail—to advertise COLUMBIA YARNS, the finest in the world.

Look for the Columbia trade-mark around the label on every skein.

Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

REDUCED PRICE SALE
Suits, Skirts and Jackets
One-Fifth Reduction From Catalogue Prices

36 Suits now $4.80
42 Suits now $9.60
48 Suits now $14.40
56 Suits now $20.00

24 Skirts now $3.20
28 Skirts now $5.60
40 Skirts now $8.00
42 Skirts now $9.60

Prices also reduced on Jackets, Shirt Waist Suits, Silk Costumes, Rain Coats, etc.

We Make Everything to Order and Guarantee to Fit You

We have a choice line of mohairs, serges, lansdownes, taffetas, cotelines, and other light weight Summer fabrics, from which we will make to your order any garment illustrated in our Summer Catalogue at a reduction of One-Fifth from the regular prices.

ALL OF OUR STYLES AND MATERIALS ARE INCLUDED IN THIS SALE. Over 150 styles and 200 materials from which to make selections.

Do Not Miss This Opportunity to Save Money on Your Summer Costume

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our new Summer Catalogue, showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of Samples of the Newest Materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. Write for them to-day.

National Cloak & Suit Co.
119 and 121 West 23rd St., New York.
Mail Orders Only. No Agts. or Branches. Est. 17 Yrs.

SEVEN SUTHERLAND SISTERS hair preparations certainly possess GREAT MERIT

They are perfect in their action on the Hair and Scalp. Dandruff and Microbes cannot exist where they are used.

They make and keep the Hair abundant, soft and lustrous.

Ask Your Dealer about it, and remember

It's the Hair—not the Hat That makes a woman attractive

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES
Dewey's Improved Acme Dress and Corset Protector

Better and cheaper than Dress Shields, being a complete garment, always ready to wear with any dress. The best Protector to be worn with the Popular Shirt Waist Suits, and Shirt Waists, as they require no sewing in. The only perfect protection from perspiration.

REDUCED PRICES. One Pair Does the Work of Six.
No. 1. Bust Measure 28-33 $ .50 No. 2. Bust Measure 34-39 $ .60
No. 3. Bust Measure 40-45 .75 No. 4. Bust Measure 46-49 1.00
Agents Wanted. Catalogue Free. Send Money by P. O. Order.
M. DEWEY, Manfr., 1395 H, W. Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 484

"I haven't seen William Cartright about the place lately," pursued Miss Cynthia, unexpectedly. "Is he out of town?"

The girl started, blushed violently; then her voice broke in an uncontrollable little sob. "He—he doesn't come to—to see me any more," she faltered.

"Why not?"

"I don't know, ma'am, exactly. Him an' me had some words one night a spell back. An' I suppose he's mad about somethin'. I guess I c'n stan' it if he can," she added defiantly. "He ain't the only pebble on the beach!"

Miss Cynthia gazed abstractedly into the depths of her tea-cup. "You'd better try wanting him, Nellie," she said gently. "It wouldn't do any harm to try. I think he will come back, if you do." Her voice grew stronger and more determined. "I believe he will come back, if you do."

CHAPTER XIII.

MISS CYNTHIA'S old, worn little Bible had lain unopened upon her bedroom table for two whole days, and for a like period Miss Cynthia had entirely omitted to mention the state of her soul, or the pressing needs of heathen nations before the Breyfogle conception of deity.

On the third morning, having pricked her fingers on the divers pins, torn her petticoat and broken a boot-lacing—she ran downstairs like a hunted thing, and out into the tranquil glories of the June morning. Great white clouds like islands of snow, floated in the intense blue of the sky; the trees, vividly green against the blue, swayed softly in the warm wind, a thousand odors of sweet, lush grass, of ripening fruits and opening blossoms breathed spirit-like in its subtle presence.

"Oh, I want to live—to live!" she prayed passionately, and knew not that she had prayed.

Someone was passing along the elm-shaded street, a tall, athletic young figure in blue jeans. Miss Cynthia darted forward with a little eager cry.

"Wait a minute!" she called, "I want to speak with you." She met William Cartright's surprised, inquiring gaze with an abashed sinking of her blue eyes. "Could you—could you spare me a few minutes—that is, if you are not in a great hurry? I haven't seen you here lately. I was wondering——"

The young workman scowled perplexedly. "If you have any fault to find with the work," he said stiffly, "you will please speak to Blossom, ma'am. I worked under him, you understand."

"Oh, no, no indeed! I've no fault to find with the work." Miss Cynthia determinedly suppressed her growing embarrassment. "It was—something quite different. It was this. Why have you quarreled with Nellie? She is very unhappy."

The coldly inquiring expression in the eyes of the man deepened into anger as she spoke. Miss Cynthia winced under his resentful stare.

"I can see," he began with bitter politeness, "that she has asked you, ma'am, to interfere. But I guess I'd best tell you first off that it won't do any good. I'll not be takin' up with the likes of her again. Maw always told me I was pickin' a wife beneath me, an' I knew well enough I was all along. But I wouldn't ha' cared, if——" His voice choked a little, but he went on with dogged determination—"if she'd ha' been all I thought she was. I've found she ain't; an' that ends it."

"Nellie didn't ask me to interfere," Miss Cynthia said, gripping her little courage with both hands. "It is I who am interfering. I want Nellie to be happy. Could you—tell me why you're—angry? Perhaps it's all a mistake. There are so many mistakes, you know, and they make people just as unhappy as—as if they were true. I—I made a mistake once, and I've always been sorry."

The young fellow's defiant eyes glistened wetly. "I'm afraid it's no mistake about Nellie," he said in a low, shaken voice. "She—she——. They say she isn't——. Good Lord! I can't talk about it! Why did you ask me? I guess you think I'm made of stone! Why, I've loved that girl since I was a kid in knee-pants, an' we was both in school together. She was just like a little pink posy in them days."

"And you heard a mean thing about her and—believed it?" Miss Cynthia's eyes flashed blighting scorn. "Oh, you make me angry—yes, angry!"

William Cartright stared in a sort of fearful admiration at the little figure breathing fine contempt and indignation in every tremulous line. "Jiminy-crickets!" he breathed sincerely.

"Who said such a thing about Nellie?" demanded his self-elected Nemesis sternly.

"Why, I—I do' know as I can say, exactly, ma'am. It was Maw, in the first place. She said Mis' Peterson told her she guessed Nellie was a pretty triflin', ornery piece. She said she got it straight from Deacon Scrimger that Nellie wasn't no better that she'd ought to be."

"I'd like to know who is?" murmured Miss Cynthia, ignoring the sinister meaning of this familiar phrase.

"What do you mean, ma'am?"

"Are you better than you ought to be? Are you even as good?"

"Well, if you put it that way, maybe not. But when a man like Deacon Scrimger——"

"Stop!" ordered Miss Cynthia, imperiously. "I know what I shall do. You may go now. But I want you to stop here and see me to-night as you go home from work. Will you?"

The young fellow shook his head obstinately. "There ain't any use in talkin' 'bout it; I've made up my mind to give her up," he said sulkily. "It wasn't easy, I c'n tell you, but I've gone an' done it, an' I ain't a-goin to——"

"That doesn't make any difference," Miss Cynthia told him disdainfully. "I'm not at all sure that Nellie would ever look at you again after the way you've treated her. Really, I don't think she would. But I shall not allow people to tell hateful lies about her."

An hour later, Deacon Scrimger, piously chanting a stanza of a well-known revival hymn to the rasping accompaniment of his plane and saw, beheld Miss Day standing in the door of his shop.

"Well, well, well!" he exclaimed briskly. "How-de-do, Cynthy! Nice mornin'! Glad to see ye! What kin I do fer ye this mornin'?"

Miss Cynthia's light-blue gingham skirts swept the yellow shavings crisply as she advanced to a position near the carpenter's bench. Her head was held at an uncompromising altitude, and she was wearing the Breyfogle expression. "I came to find out why you said Nellie Ryan was no better than she should be," she began.

The old man's jaw fell. He stared in a sort of dull amazement at the cold-eyed, determined little figure. "I—I d'clare I don't know what on airth you're a-drivin' at," he began. "I ain't never said nothin' 'bout nobody to hurt." He paused to give vent to a fit of senile coughing; then a malicious gleam twinkled in his wintry old eye.

"The gal 's a good-fer-nothin' little piece, an' the' ain't no denyin' o' that," he went on. "She ain't no better 'an she'd ought to be; I know she ain't. 'F I said anythin' like that—an', mind you, I don't remember 'at I said it—but if I did, I ain't a-goin to swaller m' words fer you ner nobody. I wonder you'll hev the critter in the house. The way she up an' sassed me—an elder in the church!"

TO BE CONTINUED

Style 222 Price $1.00

The Sign of Health

Every woman who wears a Ferris Good Sense Waist bears a sign of health. Ferris Waists support the form properly without cramping the lungs or vital organs, and always lend distinctive charm and grace to the figure.

FERRIS GOOD SENSE WAISTS are made in all shapes and all sizes for all ages. Sold by leading dealers everywhere, or will be sent by mail prepaid. Send for Ferris Living Model Book free.

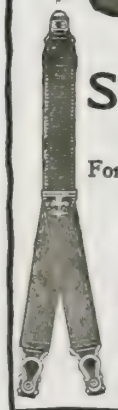
THE FERRIS BROS. COMPANY, 341 Broadway, New York.

The Velvet Grip HOSE SUPPORTER

EVERY PAIR WARRANTED

CORSET CLASP

CUSHION BUTTON



CLASP TOP STYLE

For attaching to lower edge of Corset
Quickly adjusted or removed

OF YOUR DEALER

Or Sample Pair on receipt of price. Mercerized 25c. Silk 50c.

GEORGE FROST CO., Makers
Boston, Mass., U. S. A.

THE NAME is stamped on every Loop.

The man who wrote the famous Torrey-Alexander "Glory Song," that stirred all England, has issued a book containing 48 pages of which are bound to be heard and sung all over this land. Contains both words and music, with Piano accompaniment. Price, 50 cents, postpaid.

SONGS AND LULLABIES

CHAS. H. GABRIEL, 57 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

Beautify Your Home

"YOU CAN DO IT YOURSELF"

"Then why should you allow a single piece of your furniture to remain scratched or marred when at a trifling outlay you can make it look new, elegant and stylish? Let me tell you how I do it." "With 'AD-EL-ITE' Paint and Varnish Remover I instantly remove varnish shellac, wax, stains, or paint from my furniture, woodwork and floors, without injuring my hands or the finest woods or veneers in the least. I allow the Varnish Remover to stand about three minutes until it raises the varnish and then I wipe the old varnish off clean to the wood with a rag or cotton waste. As soon as the surface is dry I apply AD-EL-ITE One-Coat Dull Finish, which dries very quickly, and in less than two hours' time I have transformed an unsightly piece of furniture into a useful article, finished in the latest approved style—The Popular Mission Finish. AD-EL-ITE One-Coat Dull Finishes are made in eight beautiful shades, of which I can take my choice; Black and Brown Flemish Oak, Colonial Oak, Light, Medium and Dark Weathered Oak, Bog Oak, and Natural Oak. These are the artistic, soft, velvety dull finishes, which are now being so extensively used for Dining Rooms, Libraries, Halls, Furniture, and all Interior Woodwork. They may be applied to either hard or soft wood, and require but one coat to make a permanent and beautiful finish."

Beautify Your Home. $5.00 worth of AD-EL-ITE preparations will beautify your home surroundings more than $50.00 spent in new furniture and painters' work.

Have You Ten Cents for a profitable investment? Send us TEN CENTS for packing and mailing sample bottle sufficient for a full trial of our

AD-EL-ITE
TRADE MARK
PAINT AND VARNISH REMOVER

and we will also send you eight sample panels, showing just how the Ad-el-ite One-Coat Dull Finish looks on wood. Booklet containing hints and suggestions on home beautifying sent free.

Adams & Elting Co.
DEPT. I.
MANUFACTURERS OF Enamels, Wood Finishes, Paints, Etc.
CHICAGO

A LITTLE A WEEK

THE secret of successful saving is persistence.

Small amounts deposited each week—or each month—soon grow to large amounts.

Especially when they are earning 4 per cent. annual interest—compounded every six months.

This bank has hundreds of depositors who do their banking entirely by mail.

Department "G" Booklet tells about it—It is free.

THE UNION SAVINGS BANK

CAPITAL $1,000,000

Frick Building, PITTSBURGH, PA.

Questions and Answers

[No attention will be given to "chain letters," and it is useless for anyone to send them to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.]

Reader. 1. What was the name and the nationality of Thomas Jefferson's grandfather? 2. What year did he come to America, and did he hold any official position in his native or adopted country?

Thomas J., President Thomas Jefferson's father, was Peter Jefferson, son of Captain Thomas Jefferson, who was himself grandson of John Jefferson. 2. This John Jefferson emigrated from Wales. He became a member of the Jamestown Assembly in 1619.

Mrs. S. Roxana Wince, Pierceton, Ind., writes, referring to the query of Reader, Salem, Mass.:

The Book of Tephi is a book published in London, England, in 1897, by Dr. John Arthur Goodchild, one of the best informed students of Irish history. It is written in poetry, and is said to be a most able work. It is founded on the old Irish records, legends, and traditions concerning Queen Tephi, wife of Eochaid, the Heremon of Ireland.

Dr. A. B. Whitney, N. Y., referring to the "christening" of the newly-built steel boat, Firefighter, at Wilmington, Del., when Miss Marion West poured out upon the vessel's deck a bottle of water from the famous George Washington well at Mount Vernon, writes:

It is with pleasure that I notice this christening of the new fire craft with water. I trust it is the beginning of changing the foolish custom of using spirits for the naming, thus giving another proof of the coming great wave of Temperance which is to wipe out crime, vice and pollution from our national seamanship.

Mrs. A. J. K., Defiance, Mo., writes deprecating the lavish expenditures for World's Fairs and similar shows, while poverty is so prevalent. She closes with this plea for the working girls:

I think there should be a law compelling stores and factories to pay living wages to their girl clerks, as well as their men.

A Subscriber writes:

You quote in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Lord Bacon's observations that "wealth is the baggage of virtue, something that cumbers and hinders, and which should be carried light toward the end of the road," find apt illustration in lives like that of Andrew Carnegie. Is that true? I think not, because a person living a virtuous and Christian life cannot possibly accumulate enough money to "cumber and hinder" him.

It is quite conceivable, however, that a man who had spent a considerable portion of his life as a mere money-maker, might discover, in time, that wealth was not everything and could not of itself confer happiness. All rightly gotten wealth is a trust, to be wisely administered for God's glory and man's benefit. It was Andrew Carnegie, we believe, who said, some years ago, that the time would yet come when it would be considered a disgrace for an American to die rich. This is recognizing the principle laid down in the parable of the talents. Our gifts and opportunities must be used in the Master's interest, otherwise we will have to face an undesirable accounting.

Stereograph, copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

THE END OF THE HUNT

President Roosevelt and Dr. Lambert, of New York, returning from the Colorado Mountains

M. G. T., Glenmont, N. Y. 1. When and by whom was the first Sunday School organized in New York? 2. Who was St. Bernard, that every day on awakening asked himself the question, 'What am I here for?'"

1. Rev. Edwin M. Rice, of the American Sunday School Union, 1122 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, replies:

The list of claimants would be somewhat lengthy. In the first report of the "New York Female Union Society for the Promotion of Sunday Schools," issued in April, 1819, the following statement is made, "In 1804, Mrs. Isabella Graham instituted two Sunday Schools. These schools were kept up for many years." Again it is stated, "Having read Dr. Pole's History of Adult Schools . . . she opened a school at Greenwich, on the second Sunday in June, 1814." This school appears to have been on the modern plan of voluntary and unpaid teachers. It is not clear that the earlier schools of 1804 were upon the voluntary plan. From my studies in preparing to write a history of the Sunday School movement in America from the Union point of view, I am satisfied that neither of these schools was the first established in the city of New York, but I have not found any satisfactory record definitely stating when, where, and by whom any earlier school was instituted.

2. St. Bernard was the abbot of the monastery of Clairvaux, in the twelfth century. He was famous for his wisdom, and many of his sayings have passed into maxims or household words.

J. B. S., Philadelphia. A Christian is not doing wrong in investing his savings in any really legitimate and honorable enterprise. It is his duty to provide for those of his own household who are dependent upon him. There is a broad distinction, however, between legitimate investment and mere speculation on the prospective rise or fall of values.

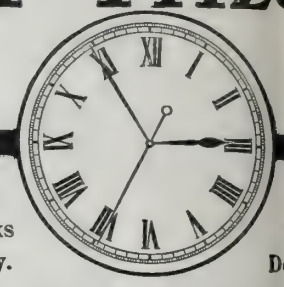
It would be a blessing if the same thing could be truthfully said of a thousand other localities, New York included.

J. T. R., Heartsease, Ga. I heard a minister remark in the pulpit that he was "not afraid of anything that had life in it, but he was afraid of God." Now, should any one who loved the Lord, and has done his best to obey and keep his commandments, to preach the Word, visit the sick and pray for them, and have the Lord on his mind first and last, be afraid of him?

"Perfect love casteth out fear." You probably misunderstood him, however, and he may have meant that the sinner's guilty fears made him dread the very thought of God. Certainly, a Christian who looks to God as to a loving Father, and whose sins are forgiven through Christ, would not use such an expression.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 487

$10500 in Prizes



It Looks Easy. Ca Y Do

How soon will the Hour, Minute and Sec Hands again appear equal distances apart?

To popularize the name of the Ingersoll Do Watch, to get it on every tongue from ocea ocean, it has been decided to offer 10,000 Inge Watches to 10,000 people who can send us the cor solution of this problem before September 1, 19

Sam Loyd's Ingersoll Watch Proble

It is the latest and cleverest problem by S Loyd, the world's greatest puzzle genius, origin of "Pigs in Clover," "How Old is Ann," and o brilliant brain-teasers.

We hope through this widespread discussio bring out the fact that the Ingersoll Watch practical timepiece, adequate to every requiren of nine-tenths of the American people, because accurate and reliable.

No entry conditions are imposed. Send y solution right in.

The full problem is stated above and no furthe formation can be given in fairness to all contesta $500.00 in cash prizes in addition is offered owners of Ingersoll Watches.

If you send 2c. stamp with solution you will ceive acknowledgment of your answer and a for entry blank and conditions; or for 10c. the ab and Sam Loyd's book of celebrated puzzles.

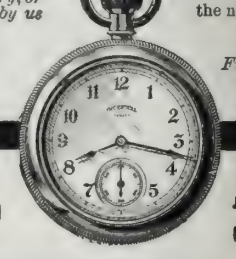
Awards will be made in accordance with correct solution furnished by Sam Loyd, whic locked in our safe, inaccessible to any one.

Ingersoll Watches are sold by 50,000 dealers throughout the country, or postpaid by us for $1.00.

Insist on INGERSOL the name is the d

Booklet Free.

Fully Gu anteed

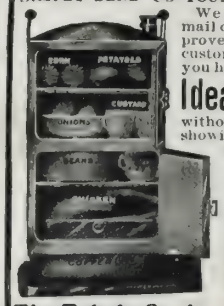


Robt. H. Ingersoll & Bro.

61 Jewele Cou New Y

We Will Give You Thi "IDEAL" STEA COOKE For an Hour or so of Your Ti

SIMPLY SEND US YOUR NAME, No Mon



We will send you by ret mail our plan No. 15, a plan t proved a great success for customers the past year. T you how to secure this super

Ideal Steam Cook Bak without cost or price; simply showing and recommendin to your friends and nei bors after acquaint yourself with its ma less merits. Cooks a c plete meal over One Bu er of any stove. Sa fuel, time, heat and wo We make both round and s shapes, both kinds have whi Hold 12 one quart jars in ea fruit. Book and Plan Fr Write now. AGENTS WANT

The Toledo Cooker Co. Desk H Toledo,

HOW TO BECOM A NURSE

WE have equipped thousands of earnest w men now in successful practice, endors by physicians and patients, and earning $12 $30 weekly. We teach this profession by c respondence.

An interesting booklet that will make clear you the aims and methods which have made t Chautauqua School pre-eminent in its field w be gladly mailed at your request.

THE CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSIN 341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Questions and Answers

CONTINUED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

S. P., Melfa, Va. What is the birth stone for August?

Sardonyx. There is a legend that it insures conjugal felicity.

F. B., West Simsbury, Conn. What good thing did Daniel Webster ever do for this country? He certainly made his name infamous by procuring the passage of the Fugitive Slave bill.

Webster did much in preaching the doctrine of union and nationality. Of the generation preceding the Civil War he did more than any one else to serve the American people. When the crisis came, he stood by the nation as one and indivisible. As a biographer says, "Here lies the debt which the American people owe to Webster, and here is his meaning and importance in his own time, and to us to-day."

Miss Nannie O. Davis, Birmingham, Ala., sends us the historical facts concerning the "One Day President," mentioned by readers in THE MAIL BAG, lately. They are, in substance, as follows:

On March 4, 1849, President Polk was supposed to leave the Presidential office, but that day fell on Sunday, and the inauguration of Gen. Zachary Taylor being put off until Monday (the Vice-President, of course, having retired with the President), Senator David Rice Atchison, of Missouri, President pro tem. of the Senate, became Acting President of the United States for one day.

This is all correctly stated, but Sunday is dies non, and no official or legislative action was to be anticipated on that day. The official vacancy in the interval was most unusual, however, although substantially the same thing had previously occurred in 1821, when the incoming President, Monroe, qualified on March 5. No man is President until he has taken the official oath and has been installed. In New York, the President of the Board of Aldermen occasionally becomes "Acting Mayor" for a few hours during the absence of the real incumbent, but he is incapable of performing the official functions of the Mayor.

J., Beloit, Wis. 1. How do the Japanese and the Chinese differ from each other, since both belong to the Mongolian race, and are Buddhist in religion? 2. Which country has the larger territory?

1. The great difference between the Chinese and the Japanese is, that the former are wedded to the past and are unprogressive; while the latter are among the most progressive nations of the world. China has five religions: Confucianism (the state religion), Buddhism, Taoism, Mohammedanism, and Christian. Confucianism is more a system of morals than religion. The religions of Japan are Buddhism, Christianity, and Shintoism. Shintoism is a worship of ancestors and heroes. 2. China has an area of 4,225,000 square miles; Japan, 162,153 square miles, about the size of Austria. China has a population of nearly 400,000,000; Japan, about 50.000,000.

Reader, Ohio. A minister stated, in a sermon, that the palm tree had no outside bark, and the sap passed up through the heart. Is this correct?

Yes; technically correct, in that the stem is endogenous (inside growing). The youngest, softest parts are in the centre of the stem, consequently the circulation is more active there. Trees that are exogenous (outside growing) have their oldest parts in the centre of the stem, and the growth is in concentric rings, so that the outside covering, with the soft new growth, is easily stripped off, and is called bark, from the meaning of the word bark, "to strip off."

Y., Yonkers, N. Y. Who was Antonio de Mendoza?

He was a Spanish statesman, born about 1485. He was appointed the first viceroy of Mexico in 1535. His administration was the best of any viceroy of Mexico under Spanish rule. In 1551 he became viceroy of Peru, and prepared for that country a code of laws that is still the basis of Peruvian law. He died in Lima, July 21, 1552.

P., Brookfield, N. Y. What is the meaning of Melanesian?

It is the name applied to the inhabitants of the Melanesian Islands. The islands stretch from the northeast of New Guinea to the tropic of Capricorn, and include those of the New Britain Archipelago, Solomon Islands, Queen Charlotte or Santa Cruz Islands, the New Hebrides, New Caledonia, Loyalty Islands, and the Fiji Islands. The word Melanesian means literally the Black Islanders.

Mrs. N. P. L., Montclair, N. J. Will you kindly give the name of the author of the following

O, what would the world be to us,
If the children were no more:
We should dread the desert behind us
Worse than the dark before.

The lines were written by Longfellow.

G. W. D., Hollins, Va. Why is the appellation "Blue Blood" applied to members of old, aristocratic families?

The old families of Spain traced their ancestry beyond the time of the Moorish conquest, and claimed that their blood was blue, while that of the common people was muddy. From Spain, the expression passed to members of the old families in other countries.

Mrs. F. A. T., Westfield, Mass. 1. If you become a patron of the Africa Child Redemption work, you would be "in touch" with your adopted protege in a very short time, probably two or three months at farthest. You are under no continuous pledge. The children are of various ages. 2. Send contributions for the Mont-Lawn Fresh-Air Work to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

M. C. W., Monpelier, Vt. Who was "Chinese Gordon?"

Charles George Gordon was born in Woolwich, Eng., Jan. 28, 1833. From 1874 to 1879 he was governor of the Soudan, under the Khedive. In 1882, he was sent to withdraw the garrisons shut up in the Soudan by the insurgent Mahdi. He was shut up in Khartoum by the rebels, and gallantly held the town for a year. A British force, under Lord Wolesley, was sent to Gordon's relief, an advance corps of which, sighting the town, found that it had been betrayed into the hands of the Mahdi only two days before, and Gordon murdered. Lord Gordon's character was marked by strong religious feeling, which became intensified to the extent of rendering him an enthusiast. He was a brave soldier and an earnest Christian.

Miscellaneous

Reader, Halmdel, N. J. Address him at Princeton University.

J. R. E., Newcastle, Pa. The terms, "kingdom of God" and "kingdom of heaven" are identical in meaning.

Mrs. E. J. S., Germantown, Pa. "He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," is a quotation from the writings of Laurence Sterne.

W. A. S., Vienna, Ill. "There is a fountain," is one of the best known of Gospel hymns, and was very popular a generation ago, although less so to-day.

Mrs. J. B. Hyzer, of Janesville, Wis., has received many replies to her request for the poem, "I have a never-failing bank," and heartily thanks the senders.

F. L. S., Eaton, N. Y. Beyond the record in Scripture, everything connected with the Queen of Sheba and her relations with Solomon is legendary and apocryphal.

T. W. Bishop, of 1117 East Tenth Street, Los Angeles, Calif., whose life was saved by Albert Snider, in 1877, would be glad to learn of Mr. Snider's present address.

Paul M. T. Write to Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers, New York, and to Rev. C. H. Yatman, Ocean Grove, N. J. The latter has published some practical ideas on the Bible keyword principle.

Reader, Camden, N. J. You can procure a full line of temperance tracts from the National Temperance Society, 3 East Fourteenth Street, New York, at 20 cents per 100, or $1.30 per 1,000, postage included. These constitute, in brief, compact form, the very best popular arguments we know of in behalf of temperance reform.

In Early Summer

NO breeze, but scarce a trace of wind now moves
The young leaves, as, responsive in their drooping,
They sway, in seeming weakness, to the air of spring.
And happy they, moved by the faintest breath
Of grace divine, who, in meekness pendant,
With growing strength cling to the tree of life
In tremulous beauty. Their's shall be the joy
To last unwithering, where leaves do not droop
And fall, the ever-vernal Paradise of God.

HENRY G. TAYLOR.

When

you get tired of a wash-day that is all slavish drudgery; needless expense, useless worry and backache—a wash-day that wears out clothes and wears out you—

When

you are sick of choking yourself with suds-steam every Monday; boiling, scalding and rubbing your clothes to pieces—

When

there's a small wash to do in the middle of the week—

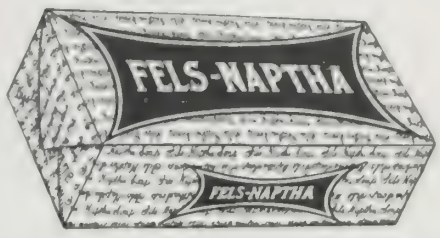
When

you are convinced that boiling water weakens and destroys the fibre of clothes—

When

you make up your mind to put the matter to a fair test—

Then



will come to the rescue saving clothes, time, comfort and money.

Then

Fels-Naptha soap with merely luke-warm water and almost no rubbing at all will make them fresh and beautiful, without harming the filmiest thread of fine silks or delicate laces.

Then

Fels-Naptha soap will put it through for you quickly and easily, without the bother and heat of a washing fire.

Then

you will understand why there is not only more comfort and cleanliness but more economy in a sensible modern wash-day with Fels-Naptha soap.

Then

if your grocer hasn't it, send a postal card for a free sample cake, to Fels-Naptha, Philadelphia.

The Triumph of Strength

What Sterling is to Silver
What Bessemer is to Steel
PRUDENTIAL is to Life Insurance

'Tis the sense of saving that lays the Rock foundation of Prudential Protection. It will be a pleasure to explain if you will write us

THE PRUDENTIAL

INSURANCE CO. OF AMERICA

INCORPORATED AS A STOCK COMPANY BY THE STATE OF NEW JERSEY

JOHN F. DRYDEN, Prest. Dept. 70 Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.

TENEMENT GRANDMOTHERS

And their Little Charges, who are Looking Toward Mont-Lawn

AMONG the poor families of New York City, one often finds a grandmother who fills a very important place—that of caretaker of the little ones, who would otherwise be left alone during the day. Many men are not able to earn enough to support their families, even in the humblest manner, although they toil long hours at exhausting labor. The mother must help, and add her mite to the fund. What to do with the children during working hours is a question answered in various ways, according to circumstances.

AN EAST-SIDE GRANDMOTHER

Passing through a narrow tenement hall not long ago, in search of a family in whom I had become interested, I knocked at a door which, after quite a delay, interspersed with childish whispers, was opened by a little girl about six years of age. Behind, and clinging to her skirts, were two smaller children. Asking for the woman I wished to find, a sweet little voice answered, "She lives across the hall," and the door was quickly closed, but not before a glimpse was caught of the room, which looked comfortably and neatly furnished. The children were clean also. On inquiry, I learned that every day they stayed there alone, while father and mother were away at work. That is one way the children are cared for. They take care of themselves, poor little mites! And grow prematurely old in the work. Some of them at twelve years look like women of twenty or more, judging by their anxious and careworn faces. Other children are locked out of their homes until the return of their parents. They play about the stoops and the streets, picking up more vileness amid such surroundings than will yield to soap and water; and yet it is remarkable how soon these children forget lessons learned in the street when something pure, sweet and good comes to take their place. To such children as these Mont-Lawn comes as a real blessing, resulting in the bending of the twig in the right direction.

Here and there among the crowds which throng steps and sidewalks in the congested districts, may be seen an old woman and her charges. Bent, wrinkled, with a parchment-like skin, and shiny, beady eyes, Grandma watches the brood, from the baby-in-arms to incorrigible boys and girls who seem bent upon every imaginable mischief, from stealing a bit of fruit from the nearest push-cart, to making faces at bigger boys and girls, from the vantage ground behind Grandmother's back. Oh, but she is a faithful watcher, and when the storm and stress of the street get too great, she bundles her charges into the house, the last place in the world they want to go; but there is no choice but to obey, when Grandma commands, in voluble Italian.

Other types of tenement grandmothers are found in different sections of the city. There is the longshoremen's old mother, whose kindly Irish face looks out from the borders of her frilled cap, which all real native Irish grandmothers wear. She looks faithfully after her numerous flock, while Jamie and Patsey, Ellen and Mary know where to go for comfort when worsted in a childish battle with Tim Doherty's "kids," who are always imposing upon Granny Doolan's "darlin's"—let Granny tell it.

Then there is the almost ubiquitous East Side Jewish grandmother. With her own soft, gray hair cut short, and hidden by a smooth, straight, dark brown or black wig. She is surrounded by a crowd of grandchildren, the number of which would certainly discourage any but the orthodox Jewess matron.

Dear, loving, patient grandmothers of the tenements. Their days of active toil are over, but they make it possible for their sons and daughters to earn a better living for the children they all love so much.

How many of these darlings of the tenement grandmothers shall we send to Mont-Lawn this season, returning them with an impetus given to good impulse which none can compute? Three dollars will give a child ten days' delight at Mont-Lawn, Nyack-on-the-Hudson, and Twenty-one dollars endows a cot for the season, thus ensuring ten days each for seven children.

Contributions may be sent to Fresh-Air Fund, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

MARY SARGENT HOPKINS.

JAP-A-LAC
"WEARS LIKE IRON"

I DID IT WITH JAP-A-LAC

Last year we said that if we could make people believe the plain facts about the economy of Jap-a-Lac, we could easily double our sales and make them half a million dollars in 1904.

Our statement was justified by the result, for we were successful, and now the problem of doubling the sales again in 1905 is exactly what it was last year—simply getting people to believe the facts—simply impressing them strongly enough to get them to TRY Jap-a-Lac.

You will never really know Jap-a-Lac—you will never really know its true worth until you are able to point with pride and satisfaction to some old floor, or old piece of furniture transformed with your own hands, and say: "I did it with Jap-a-Lac."

Floors, weather-beaten Front Doors, Furniture, old Carriages, Metal Work, Radiators, Oilcloth, Picture Frames, Porch Furniture, Willow Chairs and Andirons, represent but a few of the articles to be found in every house that need rejuvenation.

You would be astonished to see how they can be improved by twenty-five cents' worth of Jap-a-Lac and an ordinary brush wielded by your own hands.

The colors of Jap-a-Lac are twelve:

Walnut	Malachite Green	Brilliant Black
Oak	Blue	Flat White
Mahogany	Ox-Blood	Gloss White
Cherry	Dead Black	Ground

besides the Natural or Clear Jap-a-Lac.

The Jap-a-Lac is brilliant and tough. On floors it does not show heel prints, and water will not turn it white. You can scrub it with soap and water, and not injure it.

We will gladly give you a full size quarter-pint can if you will pay the cost of mailing. Send us ten cents, and the name of your dealer, and we will mail free, to any point in the United States, a sample can of any color you select.

Upon request, we will gladly send an interesting booklet about Jap-a-Lac, and a color card showing the different shades. To expedite reply, please address:

THE GLIDDEN VARNISH COMPANY
Makers of High-Grade Varnishes for All Purposes
Dept. G B 851 Williamson Building
CLEVELAND, OHIO

Bee Keeping

Without doubt the most pleasant and profitable occupation in which men or women can engage is bee culture.

THE
A. I. ROOT CO.
MEDINA, OHIO,
largest makers of beekeepers supplies in the world, will gladly supply interested persons with the most advanced ideas on this important topic.

Ask Root—he KNOWS

DIAMONDS ON CREDIT
All Transactions on Honor.
Mothers buy Diamonds on credit for sons and ghters. Husbands buy Diamonds on credit for es. Brothers and sisters buy Diamonds on credit fo ach other. Lovers buy Diamonds on credit for sweeti rts. All classes take advantage of the famous Loftis dit System. Save a Diamond. Win a heart. Write day for our Diamond Catalog—1000 illustrations. Sel the Diamond you want and we will send it. If you li the article on its arrival, pay one-fifth of the price. K it, paying the balance in eight equal monthly paym s.
LOFTIS BROS & CO. EST. 1858
DIAMOND CUTTERS WATCHMAKERS, JEWELERS
Dept. E—95, 92 to 98 State St.
CHICAGO, ILL., U. S. A.

MELLIN'S Food
For the Baby

"A babe in the house is a well-spring of pleasure" if he is properly fed and well nourished, then he is happy and "everybody is happy."

Your baby will be healthy and happy and a well-spring of pleasure, if you will give him Mellin's Food.

Sample bottle sent free of charge.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

POND'S EXTRACT
THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR
INFLAMMATION
is quickly reduced by applying cloths wet with hot Pond's Extract to the inflamed parts.
Witch Hazel is not the same thing. On analysis of seventy samples of Witch Hazel—so often offered as "just as good"—fifty two were found to contain wood alcohol or formaldehyde or both. To avoid danger of poisoning insist on having
THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR
POND'S EXTRACT

Diamonds on Credit
1/4 CARAT—QUALITY A-1 WHITE PERFECT
3/8 CARAT—QUALITY A-1 WHITE PERFECT
Let us send you, on approval, prepaid, choice of rings shown, upon terms indicated. Send first payment with order, or we will send ring C. O. D., first payment, subject to examination, balance monthly.
PRICE—$36.00
6 DOWN & 3 PER MO
Ring Catalog No. E 180 FREE. If interested in WATCHES or other JEWELRY, ask for Special Catalog.
HERBERT L. JOSEPH & CO.
Diamonds — Watches — Jewelry
218 E 180 State Street CHICAGO
Responsibility $250,000. Estab. 1882.

Patton's Sun-Proof Paints
Protect from sun and weather: keep the house sound and glossy for years. Advice on any paint problem FREE—book of paint knowledge FREE.
PATTON PAINT COMPANY
218 Lake St., Milwaukee, Wis.

FENCE Strongest Made—
See how closely it is woven. Sold direct to the farmer at factory prices, on 30 Days Free Trial. Your money back if not satisfied. Write today for free Catalogue.
COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY
Box 47, Winchester, Indiana.

FROM 3 WEEKS TO 18 MONTHS ON ESKAY'S FOOD

AND THE RESULTS

HESTHER PARKINSON, Toronto, Canada
A typical Eskay Food baby

The second summer is usually one of greatest anxiety to mothers unless the baby is on ESKAY'S FOOD. Babies fed upon it withstand teething and hot weather troubles, because of its nourishing and strengthening qualities and its ease of digestion. In the severest cases it is retained when all other foods fail.

Send postal to-day for generous sample and book, "How to Care for the Baby"—Free

SMITH, KLINE & FRENCH COMPANY
427 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Free from the care which wearies and annoys,
Where every hour brings its several joys."

"AMERICA'S SUMMER RESORTS."

This is one of the most complete publications of its kind, and will assist those who are wondering where they will go to spend their vacation this summer.

It contains a valuable map, in addition to much interesting information regarding resorts on or reached by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL LINES

A copy will be sent free, upon receipt of a two-cent stamp by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, Grand Central Station, New York.

THE "GLEN" STEEL FOLDING MAT

THE ONLY MAT THAT BOTH FOLDS AND ROLLS UP

NO dirt can exist in house where a Glen is used. Scrapes every particle of mud from the shoes. Neat and attractive, is easily cleaned and does not curl up. Its wonderful construction and flexibility will make it wear a lifetime. Unexcelled for residences and entrances to all public and private buildings. We make soda-fountain mats on same principle.

Write today for circular and price list.

Glen Manufacturing Co., Dept. A, Ellwood City, Pa.

The Seed-Time o' the Year

SEE COVER PAGE ILLUSTRATION

SOW in the morn thy seed,
At eve hold not thy hand;
To doubt and fear give thou no heed,
Broadcast it o'er the land.

Beside all waters sow,
The highway furrows stock,
Drop it where thorns and thistles grow,
Scatter it on the rock.

The good, the fruitful ground
Expect not here nor there;
O'er hill and dale alike 'tis found;
Go forth, then, everywhere.

Thou know'st not which may thrive,
The late or early sown;
Grace keeps the precious germs alive,
When and wherever strown.

Then, when the glorious end,
The day of God, shall come,
The angel-reapers shall descend,
And heaven sing, "Harvest home!"

MONTGOMERY.

The Schiller Anniversary

GERMANS in the Fatherland and in America have been commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Schiller, their great national poet. In New York City 5,000 men, all members of various German societies, marched up Fifth Avenue, bearing torches, and keeping step to "The Watch on the Rhine," and other tunes dear to the Teutonic heart. Schiller was a strong advocate of liberty. At the height of his career, Germany was being ground beneath the heel of Napoleon, French garrisons held her cities, and Germans were compelled to fight beneath the tri-color, that a foreigner might be great. Schiller never mentioned the disasters which his country suffered, but instead he held up to his countrymen the examples of soldiers and heroes, such as Wallenstein and Wilhelm Tell. We are apt to regard the age of Schiller as a coarser one than our own, but his works are pure, and filled with a lofty view of life and living that is not found in German literature of the present day.

JOHANN VON SCHILLER

No one can read his works without being intellectually uplifted. He was born in Morbach, a small town in Wurtemberg, in 1759. He did not make much of a reputation as a scholar, it is reported at the academy to which he had been sent by the king, but spent much of his time in the study of literature, his love of poetry amounting almost to a passion. His first literary efforts were dramatic—"Der Student von Nassau," and "Asmos von Medici"—which he burned. His finest work was produced after 1795—"The Song of the Bell," "Wallenstein," "Maria Stuart," "The Maid of Orleans," "The Bride of Messina," and his greatest drama, "Wilhelm Tell." As a result of over-application to his work, he died when only forty-six.

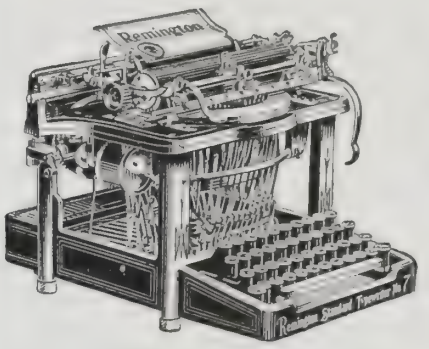
The works of Schiller have been translated into many tongues, and a foreigner when he says that he has read German poetry, usually means that he has read Schiller, and in the hearts of Germans themselves he holds a place that no other author has been able to attain. The boys in German schools have recited his inspiring verses for a century, and will probably do so for centuries to come.

"It Sells On Its Reputation"

There is only one Typewriter of which this has ever been said: the

Remington

Great and enduring is the merit on which such a reputation is built.



REMINGTON TYPEWRITER COMPANY

New York and Everywhere

Let Me Give You Health and a Beautiful Figure

PERSONAL STUDY of my pupils and Personal Treatment is the secret that has made me successful with over 15,000 cases. I study your Symptoms, your Physical Condition, your Temperament, your Habits of Living, your Diet. I prescribe whatever you need—not in medicines. I use no drugs whatever, but by rightly directed exercises. If you have indigestion, due to Stomach trouble, I not only treat the disease, but I remove the cause by stimulating the nerves which control the Stomach, so that it performs its functions easily and naturally. In a similar way I study and treat every vital organ of the body until each is nourished by good blood circulation and vitalized by active nerve centers, with the whole system in harmony, each organ doing its duty. Then your blood is sent bounding jubilantly through your veins, your body is rested, strength and spirits revived, until your eyes are laughing and cheeks glowing in the full enjoyment of health. During your course I teach you to stand, walk and breathe correctly, and give you such exercise as you need to improve your figure and poise.

Build up The Daughters

I believe in keeping Mother young; the ages of my pupils average from 40 to 80 still I am glad to treat the daughters. Growing girls need my personal prescription, that they may attain their full development of grace and may possess a sound body—the best capital with which a woman can meet the world. Especially at this time of year, after the strain of study, the young girl needs careful attention. I study a girl's tendencies, give her poise of manner, self-possession, bring out the best that is in her and lay the sure foundation for right development and healthful, strong, fearless, charming motherhood.

I Have Done This for Others

INDIGESTION—You have conquered my Indigestion and constipation have taught me how to rest, sleep, sit and walk. CIRCULATION—My neck and arms are full and my skin shows good circulation. NERVES AND FIGURE—My nerves have been benefited so much that I am nearly a glad for the best in that way as for the special trouble—Spinal Curvature. HEAD—I have gained in his value—I am delighted. HEARING—My hearing is better in one ear. EYES—Have given up wearing glasses except for very close work. Condition. MIDDLE LIFE—The hot flashes have disappeared, my head is steady and the confused feeling is gone. HEALTH—Mentally and physically I am at peace. My skin is better, my color better, my eyes stronger, walking and laughter. My hair has more life in it, and my chest is broader and stronger. OTHER CASES—I have over nine hundred letters like these. Read the above letters, printed by special permission, which I will send when you get my booklet.

Let Me Do As Much for You

These are snatches from the hundreds of voluntary expressions from my pupils. I work with comparatively few women. I give personal attention to each. I do not work with anyone I cannot help. In case I can reduce prominent abdomens and large hips, build up thin necks and chests, and bring any woman to symmetry and beauty of figure. By careful study of each case I am also able to remove the deeper ills through direction of exercise, diet, etc.

Booklet and Advice Free

Write me fully about your case. If I cannot help you, I will tell you so. My treatment requires but fifteen minutes of your time each day in your own home. I charge nothing for first advice and booklet, which describes my course and tells you How to Stand and Walk. I never publish letters without special permission, and I never violate a confidence, but I must have details in order to understand just those features that make your case different from every other. This enables me to prescribe what you need. Fill out the coupon, please.

SUSANNA COCROFT, 57 Washington Street, CHICAGO

Miss Cocroft, as President of the Physical Culture Extension Work in America has had an unusually wide experience in diagnosing cases and prescribing individual work for women.

FILL OUT, CUT OFF AND MAIL THIS BLANK NOW

Name .....
Address .....
City and State .....

DEPT. 18

Please mark with the letter (X) on the attached blank the points which interest you and if there are any particulars in regard to your case which you feel I need, write me about them also, and I will tell you frankly whether I can help you.

I [illegible]
Have shattered
Superfluous flesh
Pronounced chin
Protruding abdomen
Double
Weight
Do not stand correctly
Flat chest
Undeveloped
Dyspepsia
Constipation
Do not walk gracefully
Weak eyes
Lame back
Deafness
Poor sight
Neuralgia
Headaches
Catarrh
Insomnia
Kidney Liver
Heart
Lungs Consumption
Pimples
Eczema
Blood
Bronchitis
Rheumatism
Are you single or married?
Married or single?

NEW-SKIN
TRADE MARK REGISTERED
WATERPROOF

LIQUID Court Plaster

Heals Cuts, Abrasions, Hang-Nails, Chapped and Split Lips or Fingers, Burns, Blisters, etc. Instantly Relieves Chilblains, Frosted Ears, Stings of Insects, Chafed or Blistered Feet, Callous Spots, etc., etc.

A coating on the sensitive parts will protect the feet from being chafed or blistered by new or heavy shoes.

Applied with a brush and immediately dries, forming a tough, transparent, colorless, waterproof coating.

Mechanics, Sportsmen, Bicyclists, Golfers, Etc.

are all liable to bruise, scratch or scrape their skin. "NEW SKIN" will heal these injuries, WILL NOT WASH OFF, and after it is applied the injury is forgotten, as "NEW SKIN" makes a temporary new skin until the broken skin is healed under it.

	EACH
Pocket Size size of illustration	10c
Family Size	25c
2 oz. Bottles for Surgeons and Hospitals	50c

At the Druggists, or we will mail a package anywhere in the United States on receipt of price.

DOUGLAS MFG. CO.,
Dept. 33
96-102 Church St., N.Y.

INCOME OF

6% per annum on sums of $100 or more, withdrawable after one year . . . . . .

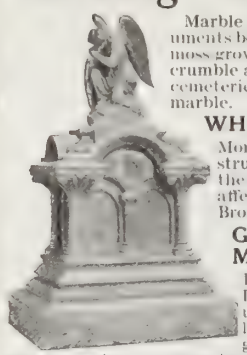
5% per annum on any amount deposited, withdrawable at any time . . . . . .

SECURED by first mortgage on New York City improved real estate, and a guarantee fund of 10% of the face value of all mortgages in force.

This corporation is subject to examination by the Superintendent of Banks of the State of New York.

KNICKERBOCKER SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY
(Established 1883)
38 Park Row New York City

Enduring Memorials



Marble and granite monuments become discolored, moss grown, and in time crumble and decay. Some cemeteries now prohibit marble.

WHITE BRONZE

Monuments are indestructible. Time and the elements do not affect them. White Bronze won both the Gold and Silver Medals at the St. Louis Exposition. If in need of monuments, markers, head stones, posts, grave covers or statuary, give us approximate sum you can spend, and we will send a variety of Beautiful Designs, prices, etc. No obligation to buy. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

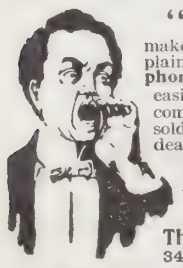
AGENTS WANTED

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

DON'T SHOUT!



"The Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

BOMOSA BEST BLEND COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

for getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New York

Ashamed of the Gospel*

WHAT was the Gospel of which Paul made his boast? At the time he went about preaching it, the whole world was sunk in sin. Historians of that day describe the lives of rulers and subjects alike as absolutely bestial. The religion they professed was itself vicious. It was a time of moral debasement, hypocrisy, and degradation. Paul believed that in the Gospel he had a remedy for this wholesale corruption, and so convinced was he of its efficacy, that he devoted his life to proclaiming it. He was opposed, he was persecuted, and at last was martyred; yet he was well content. He declared near the close of his life that he had fought a good fight. He had spent his years in telling men that they might overcome their propensity to evil, and teaching them how they might succeed. That so many had listened to him, and had tested his remedy, he counted a sufficient reward for all his travel and labor.

It was one step to know that God was righteous, and hated sin, but that fact would drive the sinner to despair. It was the next step that brought hope, and it was this that was the essence of Paul's preaching. He declared that the righteous God loved the sinner, grieved that he had given himself to sin, and was ready to forgive him when he renounced his sin, and enabled him to become righteous. This was the Gospel of hope. It brought peace and joy to every living soul that desired to become better; it gave courage for conflict with evil, and emancipated every victim of evil from the chains that bound him to his sin. It was not mere escape from punishment that the Gospel promised, it was the promise of power. To every man who would turn his back on sin, and seek for purity and holiness, it promised the help he needed to resist temptation from without and within. No wonder that Paul was not ashamed of it.

There is no better proof of the divine origin of Christianity than its adaptation to men of every race and degree of civilization. Paul preached it at Athens to the philosophers and he preached it to the rude tribes of Galatia. The effect was the same in both cases. In our own day it wins the ignorant savage of Central Africa, the conservative Chinaman, the prejudiced Hindoo, as well as the cultivated graduates of our own universities. Every man who wants to rise out of the slavery of his own passions and lusts, finds in the Gospel the help he needs. It saves, and it is the only scheme that does save. How it is possible for faith to transform a man, we know not; but that it does that work, is proved by the experience of every man who exercises it. There is no reason to be ashamed of a power that will accomplish such a transformation.

The only requisite demanded of the worst sinner is the desire to be other than he is. Christ accepts the vilest, and if the man will only place himself in his hands, and submit to him he will be delivered. The drunkard, who is pitifully helpless, and, in spite of good resolutions, returns to his vice, needs only to believe in Christ and place his case in his hands and he receives strength which enables him to resist. The vicious man who is conscious of his degradation, yet who longs for deliverance, is enabled to overcome his temptation. No case is too difficult for Christ. He came to save sinners and he is saving them all the time. That is the Gospel that is given to us to proclaim, and it is one of which we have no reason to be ashamed.

Yet how many there are who show by their lives that they are ashamed of it. Though they know of men whose lives are evil, they never recommend the remedy that would save them. If they saw them the victim of some disease, the remedy for which they knew, how readily they would speak of it; yet of this remedy, that would save them from the worst of all diseases, they are silent. They are ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for June 11. Rom. 1: 13-17.

Portland AND THE Yellowstone

Low round-trip rates account the Lewis and Clark Centennial from all points via the CHICAGO & NORTH-WESTERN RY.

daily during the summer months. A fine opportunity to visit Colorado, the Black Hills, Utah, The Yellowstone Park, California, Oregon and Washington en route,

$56.50 Round-trip rate Chicago to Portland, direct routes. Correspondingly low rates from other points

The Best of Everything

Send two cents for Lewis and Clark folder, giving full information.

W. B. KNISKERN
P. T. M., C. & N-W. RY.
CHICAGO, ILL.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

N.-W. 527

$21.00 PRICE EXPLAINE

FOR $21.00 TO $23.00 TOP BUGGIES, similar to one illustrated, HAVE BEEN WIDELY ADVERTISED.

also ROAD WAGONS $14.00 to $17.0
SURREYS at $34.00 to $38.0

HOW BUGGIES can be offered at these prices and why we c sell buggies and all other vehicles at much lower prices than a other house is all fully explained in our Four Big Free Vehi Catalogues. Cut this ad. out and send to us a youwill receive by return mail, Free, Postpa Four Big Vehicle Catalogues showing the m complete line of everything in Buggies, Ro Wagons, Carts, Surreys, Phaetons, Carriag Light and Heavy Wagons, Vehicles of all kin also everything in Harness, Saddles and S dlery, all shown in large handsome halfto illustrations, full descriptions and all priced at pri much lower than any other house can possibly ma

WITH THE FOUR FREE CATALOGUES you will receive the most aste ishing Buggy Offer ever heard a new and astonishing proposition. How othe can offer top buggies at $21.00 to $23.00 and why we can sell at much lower prices than all others will fully explained. We will explain why we ship so as to make freight charges amount to next to nothir We will explain why we are the only makers or dealers in the world that can ship buggies the day we recei your order. OUR FREE TRIAL OFFER, OUR PAY AFTER RECEIVED TERMS, OUR BINDING GUA ANTEE ARE ALL EXPLAINED WHEN WE SEND YOU THE FOUR FREE CATALOGUE

HAVE YOU ANY USE FOR A BUGGY? If you have, don't fail to cut this ad. out today and m to us. If you can't use A TOP BUGGY AT ANY PRIC call your neighbor's attention to this announcement. Don't buy any kind of a buggy until after y cut this ad. out and send to us and get THE FOUR BIG FREE CATALOGUES, THE MOST LIBER OFFER, The Very Latest Proposition, everything explained, all free for the asking. Write Today. SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO, ILL

The "Ocularscope" Free

Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest invention of the 20th century. Sent Free, with our beautiful Illustrated Catalogue of spectacles and eye glasses. Mail order only. Send to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS
402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

SEND US 25 CENTS

To pay express charges, and we will send you, prepaid, a good brush and a sample can of Rogers' Stainfloor Finish, the best Floor Finish made, and the best general finish for Furniture and all Interior Woodwork. Contents of can will cover 20 square feet, two coats. Mention color wanted: Light Oak, Dark Oak, Mahogany, Walnut, Cherry, Malachite Green or Transparent. Stamps accepted.

Our Booklet, "Care of Floors," mailed FREE.

DETROIT WHITE LEAD WORKS, Dept. J, DETROIT, MICH.

$5.80 A DAY is the average salary made by agents selling our COOKER and line of KITCHEN SPECIALTIES. Free samples. Write at once.

H. S. ROBINSON, 899 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, Ohio

$75 MONTH & EXPENSES POSITION PERMANENT: NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED. PEASE MFG. CO. STA. K CIN. O. SELF SELLER.

A $1.00 PAI FREE TO TR

If you hav

RHEUMATISM

Send your name to-day and get th Remarkable Remedy by Return Ma

To those who answer this advertisem at once will be sent free to try a pair of Celebrated Magic Foot Drafts, the gr Michigan discovery which is relieving kinds of Rheumatism, including even some the worst chronic cases in the State. Th Drafts are worn on the feet (without the le inconvenience), but they relieve Rheumat in every part of the body, by absorbing poisonous uric acid and other impurities fr the blood through the great foot pores. Do think that because this remedy is simple a cheap it won't relieve. It will, and alre thousands have written us that it has relie them. It will relieve you. Send us your na to-day and give the Drafts a trial. If you satisfied with the benefit received from th then send us one dollar. If not, keep y money. You decide. A splendid new bo let on Rheumatism, illustrated with colo plates, comes free with the Drafts. Write day to Magic Foot Draft Co., R A 3 Ol Bldg., Jackson, Mich. Send no money, c your name.

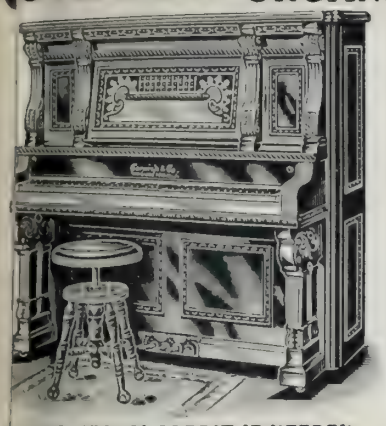
CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN

FREE TO AGEN

Flat thin knife cuts loose a perfect cake Outfit free Exp. prepaid. De

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo

CORNISH PIANOS AND ORGANS



TWO YEARS' CREDIT IF NEEDED

Simple as A B C to furnish your home with a beautiful High-Grade Cornish Piano or Organ, on a plan of payment arranged to suit your convenience. Special terms. We can satisfy any honest person and save one-half what agents and dealers charge. Everybody has the benefit of our Factory prices and can buy on any terms in reason. We will ship any Piano or Organ on 30 days' trial. Freight paid —no money in advance. Goods shipped at our risk and safe delivery guaranteed. Payment commences after one month's use in your own home. We do not make or sell cheap, trashy goods, but only the old reliable Cornish Pianos and Organs—High Grade, First Class. Warranted for twenty-five years.

$25 FIRST PAYMENT
Balance at your own convenience

Distance is no objection. We ship promptly everywhere. We have 21,000 satisfied patrons.

If you want to own a first-class Piano or Organ at factory cost we invite you to write to us to-day for our remarkable collection of aids to purchasers.

FREE

1. The Beautiful Cornish Album, a marvel of printing, color and design.
2. A set of colored and embossed Miniature Pianos and Organs.
3. Our unique registered reference book—5,000 recent purchasers' names and addresses — some that you know.
4. Our plan to give every purchaser 96 FREE music lessons—the most successful tuition in the world.

All these FREE if you write AT ONCE and mention this magazine.

REMEMBER!!! We make here in our own large and complete Factories in beautiful Northern New Jersey, the World Renowned Cornish American Pianos and Organs. We employ hundreds of skilled mechanics and we build and sell direct to the general public the finest Pianos and Organs in America. You can't get a Cornish if you don't write to us direct, and if you do we insure your satisfaction by our iron-clad bond backed up by a Million Dollars of Plant and Property. Don't think of buying elsewhere—Get the Cornish Plan First.

$10 FIRST PAYMENT
Balance $5 a month or at your convenience

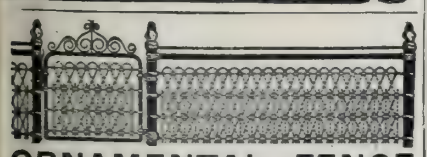
CORNISH CO. Washington, New Jersey
Established 50 Years

Aches of the teeth Stop Instantly on application of Dent's Toothache Gum—a remedy that goes to the bottom of the trouble by cleansing the cavity and arresting decay. It removes the offensive odors of decay, and prevents future aches. Quickly applied, and will not fall out, or melt in the mouth. Will keep for years—no waste by spilling or drying up.

DENT'S Toothache Gum

will stop the ache whether there's a cavity or not. Get a bottle at once and keep it for emergencies. Used by leading dentists. Sold by responsible druggists, 15c; or by mail on receipt of price. When you buy, be sure it is DENT'S. Dent's Corn Gum removes corns, bunions and warts. 15c at druggists, or we mail it. "The Arch of Pearls" sent free to any address, tells how to take care of the teeth.

C. S. DENT & CO., 47 Larned St., Detroit, Mich.



ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free. Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

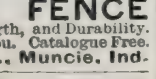
Reduced Rates on Household Goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St., Chicago



WORK OF THE SPIRIT

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THE "same Jesus," who had no comforter, promises a Comforter to those who deserted him in his time of deepest suffering and trial. "Reproach hath broken my heart; and I am full of heaviness; and I looked for some to take pity" —"Could ye not watch with me one hour?" —"but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none." Such was the utter loneliness of him who came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many!" But "this same Jesus" provides against his disciples, in all ages, being left thus alone. "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of Truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." What a contrast!

The Holy Spirit is the especial gift of God in this dispensation. The Father gave the Son, the Father and the Son give the Holy Spirit; the one Person of the blessed Trinity whose name as well as attribute is "Holy." His name, "Comforter," means in the Greek, "One called alongside of, for help," and the same word is translated "Advocate" in I. John 2: 1. Thus the blessed Holy Spirit is called of God the Father, and God the Son, to come alongside of us in our helplessness; and not only so: "He shall be in you," was our Lord's express word to the disciples, fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. In us, indeed, when we receive him truly; but never at our disposal: on the contrary, we are at his disposal; his instruments to do the will of our heavenly Father. He is the great Power of God which worketh in us both to will and to do "the good pleasure of the Father."

In the Acts of the Apostles we see him working in the hundred and twenty who were filled with the Holy Ghost, in giving them to speak with other tongues as he gave them utterance (Acts 2: 4; 1: 15), in the knowledge and wisdom given to the "unlearned and ignorant" Peter, to perceive and announce a fulfilment of Joel 6: 28–30, and to speak of it with such supernatural power that the multitudes which heard him were "pricked to the heart" (Acts 1: 7). It was God the Holy Ghost who spoke through the heart and lips of Peter and of the other disciples. It was God the Holy Ghost who put into the heart of Peter to say to the lame man at the gate of the temple, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk" (Acts 3: 16), and it was he who gave to the feet and ankle bones of the impotent man the strength to leap up, stand, and walk, and to praise God who had wrought such a work on him.

It is he whom we can trace all through this wonderful book of the Acts. But there is no trace of God the Holy Ghost which can justify the way in which some men speak of him, as though he were a kind of gift or power given to help man. He is always the teacher, the director; and man the scholar, the one directed. We see him directing Philip to join himself to the chariot of the Ethiopian eunuch, while it was the Lord Jesus who appeared to Saul of Tarsus, and who spoke to Ananias about him. It was God the Holy Spirit who said to Peter at Joppa, "Behold, three men seek thee," and who bade him go with them to Cesarea, nothing doubting (Acts 10: 19). It was he who chose the first missionaries (Acts 13: 2), and who sent them forth (ver. 4). In fact, a close study of the Acts shows the Holy Ghost to have been as really working, although unseen, in those days, as God the Son was in the days of his flesh. Shall we, then, dishonor the Holy Ghost by thinking and speaking of him as though he were to be our servant? God forbid! A Comforter indeed, an Exhorter indeed, an Advocate indeed, but always God, to be worshiped, as we worship the Father and the Son. It was because he was going away that our blessed Lord promised the Comforter should come to take his place, but in a more permanent way.

But as the Comforter he comes to teach us. Nothing makes the heart of a true disciple so uncomfortable as to be uncertain about the will of God. He declares it.

Don't experiment-Just buy a FORD

Experience

is the key to Automobile Construction and we have the key

Henry Ford has made a life work of the development of the Automobile and presented to the world a car so perfected that the success of the Ford Motor Co. is without a parallel in the Automobile Industry.

The fundamental features of the first Ford Car were light weight (resulting in economy of maintenance), ample power (not too much and not too little BUT ALWAYS POWER) and absolute simplicity, with the elimination of every unnecessary complication. These features still further developed are distinctive in Ford Cars to-day. There have been no freaks, no failures, no experiments in Ford cars.

Send for detailed description of Model "C" Tonneau Car, 1250 lbs., 2 cylinder opposed, price, $950.00.

Model "F" Side Entrance Tonneau, weight 1400 lbs., 2 cylinder opposed, price $1200.00.
Model "B" 4 cylinder, vertical, weight 1700 lbs., side entrance tonneau, price $2000.00.
Delivery Car, weight 1350 lbs., 2 cylinder opposed, price, $950.00.

Ford Motor Co., Detroit, Mich.

Member American Motor Car Manufacturers Association, Chicago

CANADIAN TRADE SUPPLIED BY THE FORD MOTOR CO. OF CANADA, LTD., WALKERVILLE, ONT.

THE GREATEST REAL ESTATE PROFITS IN AMERICA TO-DAY CAN BE MADE IN San Diego, California

San Diego is the last important natural sea port in the United States to be developed, and offers the only remaining chance for investors to share in the profits derived from the rapid growth of Harbor cities

San Diego is destined to become the most important port on the Pacific Coast because it is the nearest Port of Call for all steamers from the South Pacific Islands, South America, Europe and the Atlantic Coast by way of the Panama Canal.

San Diego is the southern terminus of one great transcontinental railway system. Another road is now building and still another is surveyed. Ocean freight and passenger traffic will then be diverted to San Diego, because the distance is shorter to all inland points in the great Southwest.

Good harbors on the Pacific Coast are few, and the nearest is San Francisco, over 500 miles north.

San Diego has the finest and most even climate in the world, and is a great winter resort for eastern people, a popular summer resort for southwesterners, and a delightful all the year residence city for those who seek genial climate. Eastern capital has been pouring into San Diego for some time. The city has 50,000 inhabitants. Building permits were $1,014,067 last year. 400 residences and several business blocks were built.

The residence portion of the city can grow in only one direction because of the peculiar layout of the land, so homes cluster around a $150,000 Normal School building and adjoining this beautiful residence district are the lots in the

$5.00 Down "City Heights" Tract at $50 $5.00 a Month

From this tract there is a magnificent view of Coronado, the Harbor and Bay, mountains and valleys. It is the cream of the cream. Level, rich soil, and within easy access of the business center. The lots are 25 x 140 feet to a 20-foot alley, and are usually sold in pairs, triplets, or blocks of four. While street improvements are being put in we are selling the lots at $50 each—$5 down and $5 a month, no interest, title guaranteed, and taxes until 1906 fully paid. They are worth more right now, and as soon as work is completed they will advance. Lots on the adjoining University district are now selling as high as $1000. The City Heights lots will some day be worth more than $500 each. It will pay you to buy them to hold. There is no other opportunity like this in the United States to-day. We will guarantee satisfaction.

Our Plan of Selling Protects You

Write us how many lots you think of buying and send $5.00 deposit on each to secure them. We will pick out the best unsold lots for you and mail you full particulars regarding them and plenty of booklets about San Diego. If you then decide not to take the lots, we will refund all your deposit money and release you from all obligations. We are the largest dealers in city property and ranch lands in San Diego and know every foot of property here as well as you know your own door yard. You cannot make a mistake in buying City Heights lots at $50. Mail your deposit to-day.

RALSTON REALTY CO., Dept. K, City Heights, Title Bldg., San Diego, California

LE PAGE'S GLUE STRONGER IN THE WORLD

Does not set quickly like the old style glue, and has four times the strength (official test, 1 in. sq. hard pine butted, registered 1620 lbs. before parting). Used by the best mechanics and in the world over. Invaluable in household use, for Furniture, China, Ivory, Books, Leather, and wherever a strong adhesive is desired. 1 oz. bottle or collapsible self sealing tube (retails 10c) mailed for 12c. if your dealer hasn't our line.

None genuine without This Label

LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE, 2 oz. size retails 50c., by mail, 10c.
LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE, 2 oz. size retails 50c., by mail, 10c.

RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Ave., Gloucester, Mass.

BICYCLES ON TRIAL for 10 days. We ship on approval to anyone without a cent deposit. Finest guaranteed 1905 Models $10 to $24
1903 & 1904 Models with Coaster Brakes & Pedal Improvements, $7 to $12
500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8
RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at good pay. Write at once for Special Offer on sample wheel.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H-71 CHICAGO

A Word to the Wives is Sufficient

In the grinding process GOLD MEDAL FLOUR passes through more than twenty sets of steel rolls, each one of which grinds it very gently and evenly, so that all of the small flour particles are exactly the same size. Therefore when the liquid mixture used in making dough, comes in contact with GOLD MEDAL FLOUR it strikes to the center of each particle uniformly, thus causing an even and complete absorption which is very essential to a perfect rising.

WASHBURN-CROSBY'S
GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

COPYRIGHT — 1905. WASHBURN — CROSBY CO. MINNEAPOLIS MINN.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1905 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

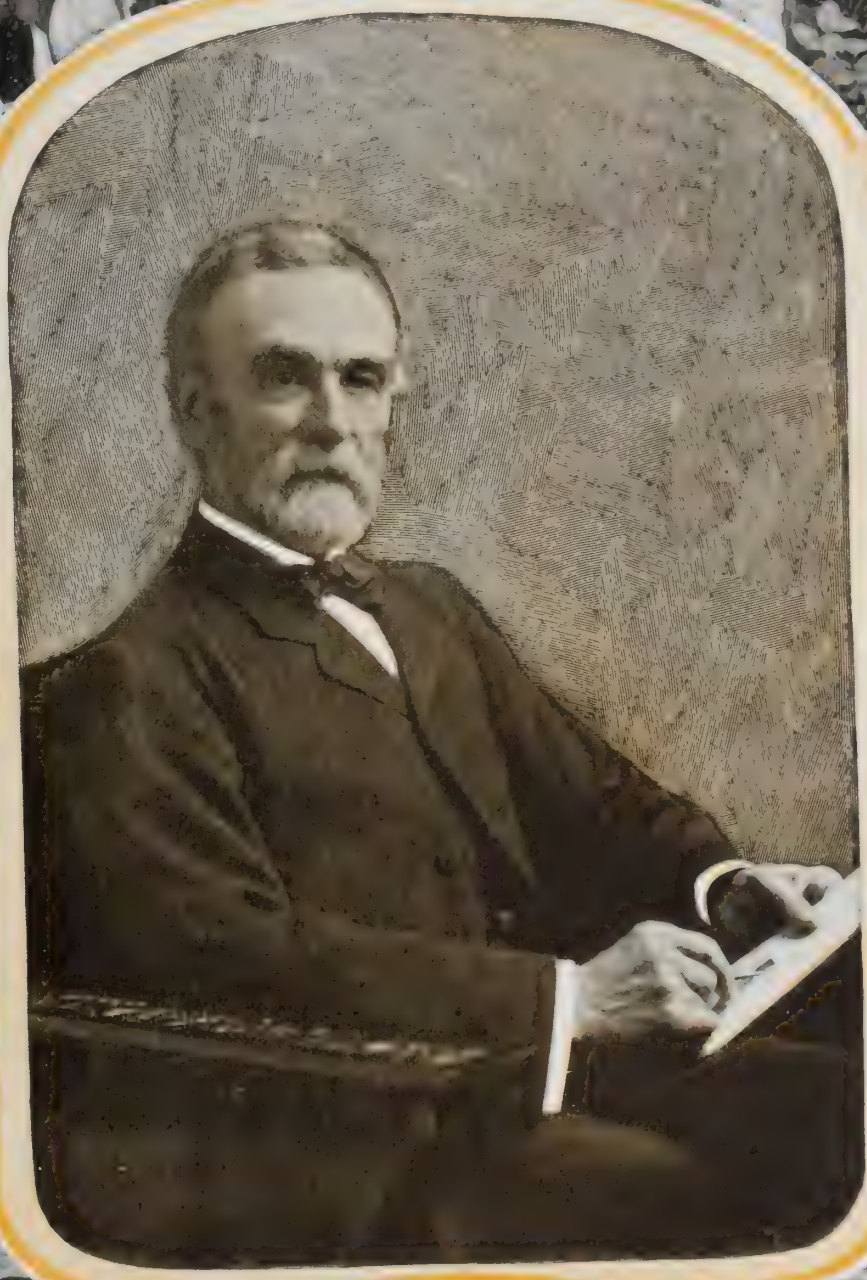
NEW YORK, JUNE 7, 1905

VOL. 28—NO. 23. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

1

2

3



4

5

6

7

SEE PAGE 446

THE FATHER OF INDUSTRIAL MISSIONS IN INDIA

The Late Rev. Richard Winsor. 1. Fibre Spinning Class. 2. Orphans at Industrial School. 3. Ready for the Workshop. 4. Basket-makers. 5. Expert Fibre-weavers. 6. Tailoring Class. 7. Young Carvers at Work.

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

L. V. S., Middlefield. What is the meaning of the word Xystus, used in Ben Hur?

It was a long court for athletic contests. In later Roman times it was also used as a name for a garden walk. The more common word is xyst.

W. K. Q., North Carolina. If a person wrongs another, obtains money under false pretenses, and is unable to restore the money, but truly repents of the act, will God forgive him whether he returns the same or not?

We can place no limitations upon God's mercy. If a sinner truly repents and asks forgiveness in Jesus' name, it will surely be granted. even though he may be unable to make reparation for the wrong he has done. It is his duty, however, to make reparation, if possible, and also to let the wronged one know that he has repented of his wickedness. Neither of these may be practicable, but we must do our share, and thus give evidence of the genuineness of our repentance.

W. M., Highgate, Vt. Do deer shed their horns?

Yes; they are shed annually. The new antlers are always larger than those of the preceding year.

Reader, Massachusetts. Would a deacon of a church be justified in withholding his share of the expenses in supporting the parish, because he does not like the minister as a man, and is trying to influence people against him?

If an officer of any church is dissatisfied, and can find no proper, honorable, Christian way of redress, he should either transfer his membership to some other church or bear his trouble in silence. To take up an active campaign against the minister (as your letter suggests), or to try to cripple the church's finances, is disloyal and dishonorable. Every member and every official should be loyal to his church organization.

Miss ——, Kokomo, Ind. I was reading lately to a lady who is blind. It was a magazine article, and I paused two or three times, as I read, to express my delight or to ask the sentiment of my lady friend. My friend disliked comment so much that she caused that magazine to be taken away. Is it impolite to comment while one is reading to others?

Ordinarily, when one is reading aloud for the benefit of others, it is not necessary to give personal comment or explanation, as such a course would imply ignorance on the part of the auditors. It would only be pardonable in a case where the reader possessed special knowledge or information concerning the subject in hand.

Annie S., Council Grove, Kan. Who wrote the Apostle's Creed?

Early Christian writers relate that the Creed was composed by the Apostles under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, during their stay at Jerusalem, shortly after our Lord's ascension. Each contributed a part, and the whole was left as a "rule of faith" for the guidance of believers. These, according to tradition, were the contributions of each:

I believe in God the Father Almighty...Peter
Maker of heaven and earth.....John
And in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord
.....James
Who was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary.....Andrew Suffered under Pontius Pilate; was crucified, dead and buried.....Philip
He descended into hell: the third day he rose again from the dead.....Thomas
He ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty.....Bartholomew
From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.....Matthew
I believe in the Holy Ghost, the holy Catholic church.....James, son of Alpheus
The communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins.....Simon Zelotes
The resurrection of the body.....
.....Jude, the brother of James
The life everlasting.....Matthias

There are many writers who hold that the Creed in its present form is not of Apostolic authorship, but had its origin probably toward the end of the fourth century. Its antiquity is doubtless very great, but its authorship cannot be determined beyond a doubt.

Apropos of a recent paragraph in THE MAIL-BAG, Mr. Edwin Ives, of Montclair, N. J., sends this quaint contribution:

In a quiet country churchyard, not many miles from London, England there lies a stone slab, containing these words:
Beneath this stone, four infants' ashes lie. Say, are they lost or saved?
If death's by sin, they're lost, because they're here;
If heaven's by works, in heaven they can't appear.
Revere the Sacred Word, the knot's untied;
They died for Adam's sin; they live, for Jesus died.

C. H., Sebeka, Minn. 1. Who is the greatest author and poet, in the three Scandinavian countries – Norway, Sweden and Denmark? 2. Which country, Sweden or Denmark, has right on its side in the present consular dispute between the two countries?

1. Henrik Ibsen. 2. Sweden and Norway are united under one crown. Norway demands separate consular representation.

SINGING UNDER THE SPHINX'S SHADOW

TWO hundred singers from the Vienna Men's Singing Society took a trip to the "Land of the Pharaohs," in March last, which will not soon be forgotten by those who took part. The steamer Galicia brought the singers to Alexandria, where an international committee had prepared a royal welcome. Their reception in Cairo was equally cordial, the German Society, the Austro-Hungarian colony, and various committees doing all in their power to make the stay of the singers agreeable, while the Khedive with his court, the diplomatic corps, Lord Cromer and the leading Europeans, with their wives, attended the public functions in their honor. Concerts were arranged at which the visiting singers delighted brilliant audiences by their vocal skill. At the Khedive's special request, a quartette of the society sang, in real Vienna fashion, some humorous selections. The most picturesque incident of the tour is represented in the photograph. At the foot of the pyramids, a large tent was erected, illuminated with thousands of lights. Here the Austro-Hungarian Minister, Count Kodziebrodzki, greeted the singers from his native land. Then, under the shadow of the silent sphinx, the singers awoke the desert echoes with selections from Beethoven, Engelsberg, and other composers. An Arabic fantasia and the lighting up of the great Cheops Pyramid with many colored lights, was the last event of the unique celebration.

Ben S., Camden, N. J. What is a "Ghost dance," and where and when did it originate? What purpose does it serve? Is it for recreation, or a ceremonial with religious significance?

The Ghost Dance originated among the Piute Indians, and was so called from the fact that the dancers wore white garments over their other clothing. The Indians believed that a Messiah would soon appear, who would rid the land of the white man and restore to the red man his rights. The dance was held at night, men and women joining hands, dancing in a circle, singing weird chants, which were supposed to be messages from their spirit friends. At times, a dancer would fall into a sort of trance, during which he was supposed to commune with the other world. The United States Government has sought to suppress this dance, as the Sioux outbreak in 1890-91 was indirectly due to the dance and other accompanying ceremonies.

J. D. M., Cowan, Tenn., writes:

Your editorial on "A Personal Revival" expresses my feelings and sentiments exactly. While reading about the splendid revivals everywhere, my heart has rejoiced and been lifted up, and I have used almost the very expression you make about being there. But realizing this was impossible, I have said, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and lifted up my heart in prayer to God for a blessing upon my own heart and life, that I might be "filled with all the fullness of God" continually; and might imbibe more and more of the Spirit of Christ. I believe with you, that if all Christians would do as you say, make a personal matter of this, there would be remarkable good accomplished, and there would spring up a wonderful, general revival all over the land, and it would be constant. God help us all to get and keep closc to the Master.

C. S., Massachusetts. Can you give the names and height of some of the famous giants of the world?

The Roman Emperor Maximin, a Thracian, was nearly 9 feet high. A Flemish porter of Queen Elizabeth was 7 feet 6 inches tall. A yeoman of the guard in Hanover, named Munster, who di... 1676, was a giant measuring 8 feet 6 i... in height. In 1742 there was exhibit... London a Swedish giant 9 feet high... another Swede, in the grenadier gua... Frederic William of Prussia, stood 8½... In 1844 there died at the age of eight... young girl who measured 8 feet 2 i... in height. More recently Anna Sw... Nova Scotia, and her husband, Ca... Bates, a Kentuckian, have been exhib... This couple are of the same height, 8... A Chinese giant traveled in this co... not many years ago; he was 7 feet 9 i... in height.

Student, Birmingham, Ala. What was th... tion's total drink bill for 1904?

It was $1,498,622,715 estimated, ... average per capita expenditure for ... of $18.33 for each inhabitant, or $91.6... each family of five persons.

J. H. P., New Kingston, Pa. 1. When, wher... by whom was the first gun (shotgun) inve... 2. How many of the French were kill... Waterloo? 3. When was Carthage a na...? 4. Where is Lake Trasimene?

1. The date of the introduction of p... ble firearms is involved in obscurity. ... the reign of Edward III., in 1375, ... recorded that men armed with "gon..." made an attack on a manor house in Y...shire. The arquebuse a meche was use... Germany in 1378. The earlier pieces ... undoubtedly loaded with slugs, and c... be called shotguns. Later, it became ... custom to load with one heavy bullet ... fitted the bore and several smaller s... In the Revolution, it is said the Ameri... used buckshot in addition to the reg... bullet. The modern breech-loading shot... was invented by M. Lefaucheux a... 1836. 2. The French lost 18,500 killed ... wounded, and 7,800 prisoners. 3. The ... of Carthage is said to have been foun... about nine centuries before Christ. Li... is known of its growth. It reached ... height of its power in the fifth cent... B.C. In 149 B.C., Carthage was taken ... Publius Cornelius Scipio Æmilianus. ... city was burned and its territory becam... Roman province. 4. It is in Italy, in ... province of Umbria, and immediately so... of the boundary line of Tuscany.

A. C., Brooklyn. In what country is the shadd... tree found?

It is a native of the East Indies, but ... been cultivated in many European co... tries.

Miscellaneous

M. L. Casey, Norwood, N. Y., desires to th... E. G. Rice and Mrs. Alfred H. Dighton for co... of The Reb'rend Quako Strong.

Miss Julie B. Hill, 212 B Street, Washingt... D. C., who is endeavoring to establish a libr... for the use of convalescents at the Freedm... Home, will appreciate any good, bright, cheer... books that may be forwarded for that purpose... CHRISTIAN HERALD readers.

G. R. G, Seattle, Wash. The ability of men ... fast for a protracted period has been satisfacto... demonstrated. There are modern reports of ca... in which fasts where kept up for twenty days a... even longer. Write to Medical Record, N... York, for accurate data concerning fasts.

C. M. D. B., Washington, D. C., apropos of ... recent paragraph in THE MAIL BAG, writes to st... that members of his own family have positive... proved by personal experience that chewing g... is a preventive of sea sickness, and nux vomi... of car sickness. This suggestion, at the openi... of the outing season, may prove serviceable ... some of our readers.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Please send in Coupon Subscriptio... as soon as received. We will cred... you with all you send in. Subscri... tions run from the date of recei... until January 1, 1906. Hence, ever... day's delay means a loss to the ne... subscriber.

Send for as many Coupons a... you may need. They will be sent t... you free of charge. Address TH... CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House... New York City.

If that were granted, it would act as another wedge in splitting up the unified administration of the two countries. The king has shown that he has the interest of both countries equally at heart, and the present system, as directed by him, seems to the world at large as the best. If the two countries become separated they are likely in turn to follow the fate of Finland, and become Russian provinces. Russian agents have for some time been at work in both countries.

C. N. B., Montpelier, Vt. What is the significance of the word "Ghetto," and what is its origin?

The quarter in Rome to which the Jews were formerly restricted was called the Ghetto. The term now signifies such a locality in any city. The Ghetto in New York is one of the largest in the world.

Schoolgirl, Salem, N. H. Will you give, in THE MAIL BAG, a short description of the Lorelei? What does the name signify?

There is a perpendicular rock rising to a height of 427 feet from the River Rhine, near St. Goar. This is called the Lorelei. A legend says that a siren sat on this rock, combing her long and beautiful hair, and singing so wonderfully that boatmen, charmed by the music of her voice, and forgetful of all else, were drawn on the rock, there to perish. The theme has been a favorite with poets and artists.

NEW YORK, JUNE 7, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

INVALIDS OFF FOR A MORNING RIDE

A BIT OF TENT LIFE

AN IDEAL OUTDOOR SLEEPING CAMP

PILGRIMS OF THE GREAT WHITE PLAGUE

IN the open air in God's sunshine, we sat as a congregation at a Sunday morning church service conducted by a lay preacher. While listening to the Word, I looked upon that group of worshipers in that Temple of Outdoors, reflecting that of all those present, only my wife and I were "well" persons. All the others were sufferers—mild sufferers to be sure—of "The Great White Plague."

That congregation, representing thirteen different States of the Union, was a contingent of the nation's tuberculosis patients. The service was typical of the manner of life at nature's vast sanitarium in New Mexico, where pilgrims from every State and territory in our country come to live outdoors, to sleep and to eat and to work and play outdoors.

The place was the Alameda Ranch Resort, for tuberculosis patients and their friends, near the town of Las Cruces, in the beautiful Mesilla Valley, a part of the valley of the Rio Grande, two hours' ride by rail from El Paso, Texas, and an all-night railroad journey from Santa Fe. The bell had been tolled to summon us to this service—merely the cheerful sound of the huge iron triangle that served otherwise to call us to meals. The lay preacher had arrived on his horse; had tied his steed to a palm tree right at the altar steps, as it were; had taken his place behind an ordinary table that stood on the stone porch; and we had taken our seats facing him. It was the most primitive church service I had ever attended, yet I never listened to a sermon more sympathetic. Without hymn-books, we sang a hymn or two; then the congregation dispersed, to pass the remainder of the day resting on cots or easy chairs, out-of-doors.

Those in the mild first stage of tuberculosis occupied rooms in the long 'dobe house or dormitory of the Resort. The majority of the patients, however, slept outdoors in tents. By day, they lay on their cots under the trees, or sat on the ground—a perfectly safe thing in this land of perpetual sunshine and no rain. Of a morning, Manager Favrot provided the patients with ponies, and off they cantered in a body for a visit to the town, a mile away, or for a ride over the broad mesa to the Organ Mountains. Even the children of the Ranch—the children of afflicted mothers or fathers—had their play-tent, where they enjoyed their toys and their romps with the dogs to their hearts' content. All these phases of life at the Alameda Ranch Resort are shown in the photographs taken specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—and the life thus portrayed is typical of life at other resorts in New Mexico, to which pilgrims are now flocking from all parts of the United States, fleeing to that natural refuge where the greatest curse of the human race becomes impotent.

AN OUTDOOR CHURCH SERVICE AMONG THE CONSUMPTIVES

Deaths from the White Plague last year outnumbered all the Federal soldiers killed in battle during any of the great engagements in the war of the Rebellion—over 111,000. But with the increasing pilgrimage to New Mexico, authorities assert that the ravages of tuberculosis will be checked, and the number of victims immensely decreased. For experts from all over the world, after visiting many likely climes and countries, unanimously agree that of all the places visited, New Mexico, the playground of the Southwest, is nature's best sanitarium for those who would check in themselves the deadliest of all diseases. They declare that New Mexico is the one place on earth where tuberculosis must not only give pause and go no farther, but where it may be cured; hence, New Mexico has become Nature's hospital. A committee of the most eminent European medical men was appointed, a few years ago, to study the climates of the world, with regard to their beneficial effects upon sufferers from pulmonary diseases, especially tuberculosis. This body of experts, after months of travel and investigation, unanimously reported to the Medical Congress of France, that the peculiar climate of New Mexico made that region the most favorable of any on the globe for the cure of these diseases. After visiting Asia, Africa, North and South America, they reported that certain valleys in New Mexico and Arizona, and certain parts of Southern California, were the localities wherein the necessary conditions were found in the highest degree. It was also found that but one small locality—a little area in North Africa—compared favorably with these parts of the Southwest.

PILGRIMS ARRIVING AT LAS CRUCES, N. M.

No wonder, then, that it is now announced that a committee, made up of members from religious and fraternal organizations representing ten million American citizens of all classes, creeds and parties, chose a certain spot in New Mexico as that most favorable to the cure of pulmonary troubles. The committee chose that spot after visiting all other places in this country where the climate is suitable for consumptives. The result was that on the tenth of May, the whole religious and philanthropic world received with gladness the news that in New Mexico is to be established a great national hospital—the greatest sanitarium for consumptives on the globe. "Fraternal City" is the name of the place that is to spring up on the plains near the city of Las Vegas, New Mexico. Las Vegas itself has given 11,000 acres for the purpose, while the Santa Fe Railroad has given hotels and other properties valued at a million dollars. In the fall, accommodations—mostly tents—will

CONTINUED ON PAGE 507

VITAL TRUTHS AT A DISCOUNT

A Sermon by Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.*

WE are accustomed to speak of Jeremiah as "the weeping prophet." The people of his time regarded him as "a bird of ill-omen." He foresaw the calamities which were to befall the nation, and wished that "his head were waters, and his eyes a fountain of tears" that he might adequately weep for them. He lived under five kings, and suffered under them all. It was in the time of the great reformation in the reign of Josiah that he first struck the minor note, perceiving that the revival of righteousness which then occurred was but as a summer cloud. He saw the next king, Jehoahaz, after a brief reign of three months, led away into captivity in Egypt. To his successor, Jehoiakim, he sent an earnest remonstrance, which was treated with contempt; the prophet lived to see him murdered and "buried with the burial of an ass." The next king, Jehoiachin, was taken to Babylon in chains after a reign of only three months and ten days. He was followed by Zedekiah, the last of the kings, who reigned merely as a tributary viceroy of Nebuchadnezzar, and was finally driven into exile with his eyes put out.

It was under Zedekiah that the city was finally besieged by the Babylonish army. Its fall was inevitable, and Jeremiah, foreseeing it, wrote from the court of his prison an earnest call to repentance in view of the impending calamity. It was the nation's funeral dirge.

A Prophet of Faith

Let it not be supposed, however, that Jeremiah was wholly a prophet of evil. While he was profoundly sensitive to the woes of his people, he was, nevertheless, above all his associates, the prophet of faith. He foresaw the Restoration, and beyond that the coming of Messiah, "the Sun of Righteousness with healing in his beams." The true optimist is not one who blinds himself to present evil or portents of approaching woe, but who, facing all, believes in the ultimate triumph of goodness, because he believes in God.

> O, blest is he to whom is given
> The instinct that can tell
> That God is on the field, when he > Is most invisible!

The point to which we address ourselves just now is the singular test which was applied to the faith of Jeremiah in the matter of the field at Anathoth. This field belonged to his cousin Hanameel, who, by reason of the fact that the Babylonish army was encamped upon it, was prepared to sell it for a song. The Lord bade Jeremiah buy it, and he did so. It was investing on a declining market, and against all probabilities, save as he believed in the Lord's assurance, "Houses, and fields, and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land."

We find here a suggestion as to the proving of faith in evil times. The field of Anathoth stands for certain discredited truths in which the followers of Christ are expected to believe; and to find the ultimate ground of their assurance in the Word of God.

The truth of the Divine Word itself is largely discounted by some people in these days. You will find many a Hanameel who, "taken up in the lips of talkers" and seeing the waving banners of Babylon just beyond the walls, is ready to dispose of his interest in the authority of the Scriptures for next to nothing.

Obedience, the Test of Faith

To sound thinkers, however, who are prepared to follow their reasoning to its logical ends, it is perfectly clear that this abandonment means the giving up of all ultimate authority as to the truths of the spiritual life.

The Bible contains two things: Law and Gospel. The foundation of the Law is the Ten Commandments, which have been universally understood to be the ultimate symbol of Christian ethics. The sanctions of morality are loosened by the mere suggestion that the Decalogue is a human fabrication, and not a manifesto from the divine throne. The right conception as to ethics is not what I think, but what the Lord says about it. In a letter addressed by Evan Roberts, the young evangelist of Wales, to his American friends, he closes an appeal to Christian loyalty with the words, "Obedience! Obedience! Obedience!" This is indeed the final test of faith.

The Gospel is briefly comprehended in three statements: 1. Men are by nature lost in sin; 2. The only begotten Son of God came into the world to atone for sin; and 3. The sole condition of salvation is faith in him. All these truths are called in question by men who profess to believe in the truth of Scripture. The old, life-giving verities go under the hammer at a sacrifice; and no man invests in them unless he has a firm confidence in God. It is written: "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became an heir of the righteousness which is by faith." There is room for the heroism of Noah in our time. To stand true to the trustworthiness of Holy Writ means that a man must "subscribe the evidence and take witnesses and weigh out the money in the balances." And the ground of this proceeding is in the title deed of his possession, which reads on this wise: "Thus saith the Lord!"

Another of the discredited verities is the doctrine of God in mundane things. This has no place whatever in much of so-called scientific thought. The only God who is worthy of credence and adoration is a living, personal, present God. The conditions of the case are not answered by the supposition of either a pantheistic or an absentee God. He manifests his intervention in the affairs of this world in two ways; namely, in Creation and in Providence. The two theories of origins, theism and evolution, are diametrically opposed to each other. The former affirms that God created the world and all things therein, "each after its kind;" that is, all genera were created subject to indefinite improvement within the prescribed lines. The latter affirms that all things are evolved from the primordial germ by the calm operation of law. By "all things" is meant everything in the organic as well as in the inorganic world; and this includes rational man and Christ himself. To speak of evolution interrupted by creative fiats, miracles or interpositions, is to use a phrase which no scientific evolutionist will allow for a moment. To speak of "theistic evolution" is like speaking of a white black man.

DR. DAVID JAMES BURRELL

The other touch of God upon our world is in his never-ceasing miracle of Providence; that is, in his "upholding all things by the word of his power." This also is at odds with evolution, as pure evolutionists hold it. The question is solved for the followers of Christ by his own statement as to the lilies of the field. "Consider them," he says, "how they grow." Well, how do they grow? The evolutionist says that they develop automatically by the operation of certain laws. Christ says "God clothes them." His language is perfectly clear: "They toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these;" from which he concludes that God is all the while "much more" interposing in behalf of his people. "If he so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Hence the possibility of perfect rest in God. "Therefore, take no thought, saying, What we shall eat, or What we shall drink, or Wherewithal shall we be clothed; for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." If there is any significance in these words of Jesus, they mean that God, so far from leaving things to look after themselves, is ever consciously upholding and sustaining them, and that he is perpetually interposing by his wisdom and power in the behalf of those who love him.

But this is directly contrary to the drift of current thought, which rules out the supernatural and declines to allow God to have any part in the inevitable flow of events. It takes more courage to-day to believe in God as he has thus revealed himself, than ever before in the history of the world. It is not uncommon to hear preachers speak of God in such phrases that it would require a protracted argument, with the aid of professional counsel, to determine whether they are talking about a person or a vague impersonal nonentity. Is it not clear that, under such circumstances, it behooves those who care for the maintenance of their devout loyalty, to be on their guard lest they be wholly swept away from the moorings of faith? At such a time the believer must be ready to invest in the discredited truth and to write out his title deed in this wise, "In the beginning, God."

The Divine Christ

The same is true with reference to the doctrine of Christ. This is not to say that the air is not vibrant with fulsome adulations of Christ. But what Christ? Are we to be satisfied with a Christ whose power is as nominal as that of the Czar, who, while called an autocrat, is a mere lay figure in the hands of his Grand Dukes? The only Christ who is of any consequence to mortal men is the Christ whose name is historically associated with three stupendous miracles.

One of these is the Incarnation, of which we are wont to say, "I believe in God's Only begotten Son; who was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary." There are those who dissipate this doctrine in the very breath in which they assert it; as witness the recent statement made by a prominent clergyman, "What differencs does it make in the practical application of Christianity whether Christ was the son of Joseph or not?"

The second of his great miracles is the Atonement. And this, also, is denied by all, and several of such as declare that he died not vicariously but simply as all martyrs die. "He came into the world," they say, "to rectify a wrong condition of affairs and suffered the fate of all reformers. He gathered into his devoted bosom the shafts of the adversary and fell." How far this is from his own view of his atoning death is witnessed by his words, "I have power to lay down my life and I have power to take it again. No man taketh it from me." And again, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save the lost, and to give his life a ransom for many." This is the consistent view of the Scriptures in such oft-repeated statements as this, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

The third miracle of Christ is his Resurrection from the Dead, in which life and immortality are brought to light. This, also, is treated in some quasi-evangelical quarters as a mere legend, concocted by the disappointed followers of Christ to cover their discomfiture after his shameful death. In this manner the very ground on which the citadel of our religion was intended to rest is thrown into the market as a valueless possession. And the true Christian must ever show his loyalty by making the purchase. Let him buy the field of Anathoth in full confidence that God's purposes cannot be thwarted; and let him unhesitatingly record his title deed as to Christianity in the familiar words, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

The Outpoured Spirit

The doctrine of the Holy Ghost is also discredited by many in these days. A recent writer in endeavoring to account for the Welsh revival, advances this hypothesis: "It appears to be due to a subtle aura which, striking the gastric plexus, creates an epidemic." This is like what the onlookers said at Pentecost: "These men are filled with new wine." The words of Peter on that occasion are worthy of note: "Ye men of Judea, these are not drunken as ye suppose; but this is that which was spoken of by the prophet Joel: It shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

* Preached in the Marble Collegiate Church, New York. Text: Jer. 32: 6-9, "And I bought the field of Hanameel, my uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver."

The functions of the Holy Spirit are three in particular First, to reveal truth. If spiritual things are to be arrived at by the scientific method and not "spiritually discerned," then this prerogative of the Holy Spirit is ruled out.

Its second function is exercised in regeneration. This is more than reformation or "turning over a new leaf." It is a revolutionary change in the soul, brought about by coming into touch with the divine life, as Jesus said, "Verily, verily I say unto you, except a man be born again (or from above) he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

The third function of the Spirit is manifest in sanctification. This is more than the process called "ethical culture." The difference is that between the putting up of a building and the growing of a tree. To lay one good resolution on another in the making of character is simply the putting together of an inorganic thing; but to yield to the influence of the Spirit is to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ," as a living thing develops by virtue of the life within it.

Assure confidence in these things is involved in loyalty to Christ. To surrender them in deference to public opinion is the part of Hanameel; to hold them fast is to imitate the faith of Jeremiah, to whom minatory shouts of the Babylonish host were as naught in comparison with the surety of the divine word. And here again is the phrasing of our title deed: "The Spirit of truth shall abide with you, whom the world cannot receive because it seeth him not neither knoweth him; but ye know him and he dwelleth in you."

It remains to speak of the ultimate triumph of Christ. To deny the truth of progress would be to set ourselves against the hearing of our ears and the sight of our eyes. All believe that the world rolls round in its orbit, and that men and nations are being brought within the charmed circle of civilization. But this does not mean that there is a general agreement as to the coming of Christ. The Christian's view of progress is that all things are moving forward to one great event, namely, the universal sovereignty of Jesus in the Golden Age.

We believe that there are two manifest tokens of this approaching reign. The first is in revivals; which are intermittent signs of the present power of God. Pentecost repeats itself. There is no "new evangelism." The power that wrought in the great revival at the water-gate in the time of Nehemiah, is the same power that was apparent at Pentecost, and in every revival since that day. The words of Peter at Pentecost, "This is that," are applicable to the wonderful things that are occurring in Wales and elsewhere. This is no new thing, it is "that which was spoken of by the prophet Joel." These are the great catastrophic movements of history; they are like tidal waves which roll over the people and sweep hundreds into the kingdom of God.

The other manifestation of Christian progress is in Missions. This is a constant cumulative movement, destined to eventuate in the coming of the kingdom of Christ. Its objective point is always the conversion of souls. The building of schools and hospitals is a mere incident along the way. The true missionary spirit is that of the itinerant evangelist, going about like Paul among the villages of Asia Minor, and Macedonia, or like Jacob Chamberlain among the villages of India, preaching "This Jesus is the Christ; and he has power on earth to forgive sin."

Now both these manifestations of religious progress are at a discount among many. They lift their eyebrows at revivals, and shrug their shoulders at missions. But a true follower of Christ who has caught his spirit and takes him at his word, is ever ready to devote himself to the advancement of his cause, believing with all his heart, that his glory is destined to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

The question comes home to us in this wise: Are we prepared to demonstrate our faith in our religion by investing our time, substance and energy in these discredited things? The opportunity for faith's purchase is on a falling market. When the confidence of Hanameel is at its lowest, the confidence of Jeremiah rests more securely than ever in the divine promise. The title deed of the kingdom is ours if we will; and our interest in the Lord's business is measured by what we put into it, "Prove me herewith, saith the Lord, if I will not open unto you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Opening New York's Tent Campaign

THE evangelistic movement planned for this summer and fall in New York City, for the success of which so many prayers are being offered by Christians of all denominations, had an auspicious beginning on Monday, May 22. The combined effort of all the churches being designed to reach citizens of all classes, it was felt that no place would be so appropriate for its inaugural meeting as municipal headquarters. Permission was accordingly obtained from the Board of Aldermen, to hold the first service on the steps in front of the City Hall. The noon hour was fixed, because at that time the City Hall Park has more occupants than at any other time of the day. It was soon apparent that the time and place had been well chosen. The unusual spectacle of a group of ministers and well-known Christian workers assembled on the steps of the big marble building, arrested the passers-by. In a few minutes a representative audience of nearly a thousand persons was present, and to them the programme of the movement, and the purpose for which the effort was being made, was explained, and earnest prayers were offered that the Holy Spirit might bless the work there begun.

INAUGURAL EVANGELISTIC MEETING ON THE STEPS OF THE CITY HALL, NEW YORK

The meeting was opened by Rev. F. H. Jacobs, who stated that the movement had the cordial support of all the evangelical churches, and that ministers of all the denominations had promised to participate in the services. A cornet solo, "Nearer, my God to Thee," was then rendered by a member of the Salvation Army, and was followed by the singing of "Coronation" by the Lyric Hall Quartette, the crowd joining in the closing lines, and prayer was offered by the Rev. J. Ross Stevenson, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church.

By this time, every available niche of standing room on the wide steps was occupied, and from the very first intense interest was manifested. It was a strangely mixed assemblage. Vice-chairman Sullivan and a number of members of the Board of Aldermen were there; politicians and city officials rubbed elbows with ministers; roughly clad laborers stood side by side with clerks from nearby counting-rooms, salesmen and messenger boys, helmetted policemen, reporters, photographers, and other employees from the great dailies, not a stone's-throw away, all listened quietly and respectfully to the proceedings.

Rev. Dr. Goodell, of Calvary Methodist Church of Harlem, made the principal address, in which he described the plan of Outdoor and Tent Campaign which was there being inaugurated. Dr. Goodell said in part:

This movement is designed to bring the churches and the people together. We are working to reach the seething, surging masses of the city. We thought it appropriate to hold the first of our meetings here, and we thank the Mayor and the city officials for making this meeting possible. Out from this building comes the life current of the city, and if we can touch it we will thank God. We begin this series of meetings in the city for the comfort of men's hearts. Nearly all of the Protestant churches are interested, and nothing in late years has brought the churches so closely together. Yet we have not lost our characteristic faith. We stand shoulder to shoulder in a great cause. Looking out at the needs of this surging city and looking again into each other's faces we say, "If what is in thy heart is what is in my heart give me thy hand."

We meet on historic ground. Here Washington gathered his forces and read the Declaration of Independence. He thought he was founding a Christian country, and I venture to say for the manly man now in the White House that nothing gives us more confidence in him than the knowledge that he is a godly man, ever ready to speak out for God. Up these steps have come many to honor, or to shame, but we are never so safe as when the Mayor and the Board of Aldermen are acting on Christian principles. Especially in this place we should realize the honor that lies in God's service and the shame in turning away from him. Some say the clergy are not interested in the masses. God help us if this is true, help us to change. Those behind me are profoundly interested in the saving of human souls. We don't ask you to join any particular church, but to give your hearts to God.

Very few in the audience—which by this time packed the great plaza, so that a passage through the park was almost impossible—knew that this meeting was to be held, or what the outcome was intended to be; they just saw a crowd gathering, and hurried to become part of it. They stayed because they were interested, and if this was any indication by which to judge the attendance upon similar meetings to be held during the campaign, they will be as successful as the most earnest Christian could hope.

There were many women in the crowd, although the majority were men and boys. During prayer almost every hat in the throng came off, and it was a sight to thrill the heart of the most cynical, because this was not an ordinary religious gathering, it was just a typical New York crowd, made up mainly of employees from the surrounding "skyscrapers." Others, who were merely attracted by the strange sight of a man praying on the steps of the City Hall, may have intended to stop and scoff a bit, but something in the simple, honest earnestness of the speakers, appealed to them, stopped their ridicule and elicited nods of approval. "Park-benchers"—those poor derelicts wrecked on life's sea, who daily doze in the sunshine—woke up and listened to the voice of invitation. Newsboys forgot their shrill cries, and their proneness to disturbance, and listened open mouthed.

A striking incident of the services came, when the crowd was asked to show its belief in the Saviour, nearly every man lifted his hat, and the women their hands.

Miss Blanche Hollingshead and Rev. F. H. Jacobs sang a duet, and were greeted enthusiastically by the audience, who were now thoroughly aroused. It seemed an encouraging beginning to a movement which may result in a greater religious revival than New York City has known for years. Certainly the time is ripe.

The tent campaign, as it is called, is under the general superintendence of the Rev. J. B. Ely, who has been very successful in carrying on a similar work in Philadelphia, resulting in the conversion of thousands. It is the intention of the committee in charge to erect ten or more large tents in different parts of New York, where services will be held daily during the summer.

Among the speakers who followed Dr. Goodell was the Rev. Dr. John F. Carson, of Brooklyn. Other clergymen present were the Rev. Drs. A. F. Schauffler, D. Asa Blackburn, W. C. Bitting, J. B. Ely, Frank Mason North, W. W. White, J. Ross Stevenson, and A. J. Pitkin, Chairman of the committee in charge of the Tent Mission.

The "Father of Industrial Missions in India"

FEW workers in the Christian field, who have passed away in recent years, have been so signally and so deservedly honored as Richard Winsor, whose death at Poona, India, was briefly chronicled in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 12. Many eloquent tributes to his memory have been published by the press, both secular and religious, in India, England and this country. As for many years past he was intimately associated with the benevolent work conducted by this journal and its readers in India, a more detailed account of his remarkable life will be of general interest. There was in his eventful history much that was chivalrous, romantic and self-denying. A gallant soldier, a brave missionary, and an ardent and zealous soul-winner, he was also a great industrial pioneer, and his genius and energetic example have given to Christian missions in India a new and valuable field for their activities, which marks a new era in the missionary development of that great and populous country.

Richard Winsor was born in England in 1838, at Gosport. At the age of twelve he accompanied his parents to America. They resided for a time in Boston, Mass., and afterwards went West to Ohio. Mr. Winsor's first Christian service was that of a Sunday School teacher, at the age of seventeen. During his collegiate course at Oberlin, O., he taught in the preparatory department, and thus was able to meet the expenses of his college course. About this time a colored lad in the Sunday School at Oberlin was kidnapped, and, owing largely to Mr. Winsor's heroic efforts, the negro was enabled to make good his escape, and young Winsor became the hero of the hour in the celebrated "Wellington Rescue" case. Mr. Winsor and some of his associates suffered an imprisonment of eighty days in the Cleveland jail for this exploit. They were, however, afterwards fully vindicated.

When the Civil War broke out, Winsor enlisted with other students in the armies of the Union. He received a bullet wound in the gallant charge of his company at Winchester, Va., the effects of which he carried through life. For faithful service he was appointed Assistant Provost Marshal of that State. After serving in that capacity for a year, he finished his collegiate and theological course.

From boyhood he had wished to be a missionary, and it was with great joy that he and his young wife went as missionaries to India, where they arrived in February, 1871. Mr. Winsor was then thirty-three. His missionary life has extended over a period of thirty-four years. These years have been marked by great activity. With the true missionary spirit he combined the mechanical instinct, and by means of industries, aimed at making the Indian Christians self-supporting and independent. In the early months of his missionary life one of the questions most frequently occurring to him was, "What can be done to make the native Christians more thrifty?" All were not fit to be trained as teachers and preachers, and there was always scope for trained mechanics and artisans. Being somewhat of a mechanical genius, Mr. Winsor planned a School of Industry, and became the pioneer of industrial missions in Western India. The first industrial school was opened at Satara, and Mr. Winsor was greatly helped by the encouragement given by government officials and others. The school was afterwards removed to Sirur, where, for twenty-six years, Mr. Winsor trained Christian boys and young men to handle the carpenter's tools and to earn an independent livelihood as artisans. The Sirur school, now known as the Sir Dinshaw Petit Industrial School, has been carried to a high degree of perfection, and has always stood as the model industrial school among the many that have sprung up since it was first started.

Mr. Winsor early saw the industrial possibilities of the aloe fibre, and believing that the sisal plant of Mexico would prove richer in fibre than the Indian aloe, he introduced the sisal hemp from Florida. Gradually the Sirur plantation has grown to 180 acres; this gives employment to scores of the poor, and the sisal plant has been sent to many other parts of India for cultivation. Seeing the need of a machine to extract the fibre without the usual soaking process, one of Mr. Winsor's last efforts was the invention of a fibre-extracting machine. This machine, as well as carpets made from the sisal plant, attracted much attention at the recent Industrial Exhibition in Bombay, and gained a silver medal. A medal was also awarded for the carving from the Sirur school. Since the Exhibition, a call for the machine has been coming from all parts of India.

In the life-saving work of famine relief conducted by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mr. Winsor took a notable part. In 1900, when Mr. and Mrs. Winsor were on the point of returning to India, leaving all their four children in the United States, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invited him to be the one to take the ship-load of grain given by the American people to the famine-stricken in India, the steamer having been chartered by the American Government. He entered heart and soul into the work, and with his wife sailed for India with the precious freight. The reception of the cargo in Bombay fully justified the efforts made by the American people, and rejoiced the heart of him who was thus connected with what has become famous as "the biggest errand of mercy ever afloat." The value of this f of relief was fully demonstrated by the applications corn, and Mr. Winsor had the privilege of distribu the grain to thousands in his own district.

Not only the people of India, but also the In government, lost in Mr. Winsor one whose assistance been of great value. For many years he has given l to government officers, both in the Municipality an the taluka. In recognition of Mr. Winsor's distinguis and sustained efforts in industrial developments, as as in the work of famine relief, his name was inclu in the list of the New Year's honors, and he recei the Kaiser-i-Hind medal as a mark of special honor f the King.

During his last illness, which lasted for two mon he bore the pain without a murmur, often saying: want to do much more for India—much more." the Heavenly Father had ordained otherwise, although his mind was active to the last and he was, usual, making plans for the good of all, suddenly " was not, for God took him." loved the native Christians, and very happy with the young peo Knowing that several of these w ready for baptism, and while he very sick and unable to bear the dr to the village church, Mr. Winsor cal these candidates and many with th to the mission bungalow, and there, the veranda, with faithful words, l to be remembered, he administered ordinance to those for whom he prayed and labored. "Why do you tain me?—I have no doubt of the ture—It is sweet to die" were am his last words.

Besides his widow, Mr. Win leaves a daughter (married to a p tor in America) and three grown sons, all of whom hope to become n sionaries in India, where their mot wishes to remain to carry on work in which she and her belov husband have been so happily engaged, during a uni of exceptional felicity, for thirty-four years. M Winsor has been a true helpmeet and companion all life. She will continue the work at Sirur, which s helped to found, and in which she and her husband w so long and successfully associated.

IDOL WORSHIP IN INDIA—THE TEMPLE OF TULNEY KAVALI

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Please send in Coupon Subscriptions as soon as received. We will credit you with all you send in. Subscriptions run from the date of receipt until January 1, 1906. Hence, every day's delay means a loss to the new subscriber.

Send for as many Coupons as you may need. They will be sent to you free of charge. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

PROMINENT MEN and WOMEN of the HOUR

Copyright, 1898, R. Wilhelm

JOSEPH H. CHOATE

JOSEPH H. CHOATE, who has just retired as Ambassador to Great Britain, has been the recipient of several unique honors, one being his election as a Bencher of the Middle Temple, in London. Such an election is almost unprecedented. Mr. Choate has made himself very popular with all classes of the British people, and has been in constant demand as a speaker on public occasions. He has done much to strengthen the ties that bind together the two great divisions of the English speaking race. His last public act was to unveil a memorial window, given in honor of John Harvard, the founder of Harvard University, of which Mr. Choate is a graduate.

Copyright, 1902, J. E. Purdy

WILLIAM H. MOODY

WILLIAM HENRY MOODY, Attorney-General of the United States, has recently declared that, in his opinion, the government has a right to fix railway rates. This cannot fail to exert a strong influence in the present contest between the President and the big interstate lines. Mr. Moody is making a distinguished record in his new office, as he did in his former one of Secretary of the Navy. He was born in Newbury, Mass., in 1853. He was educated at Phillips' Academy and Harvard. He was District Attorney for the Eastern District of Massachusetts in 1890-95. He was a member of the 54th, 55th, 56th and 57th Congresses.

MARY A. LIVERMORE

JAMES A. HEMENWAY

JAMES A. HEMENWAY, of Boonville, Ind., has been elected United States Senator, to take the place made vacant by the election of Senator Fairbanks to the Vice-Presidency. Senator Hemenway was born in Boonville, in 1860, and was educated in the common schools. In 1885 he was admitted to the bar, and a short time after became prosecuting attorney for the second judicial circuit of his State. He was elected a member of Congress in 1895, and has held the office for the past ten years. Although a Republican, he has represented a district that is strongly Democratic, a good proof of the confidence reposed in him, and also of his great personal popularity.

SIR WILLIAM VAN HORNE

SIR WILLIAM CORNELIUS VAN HORNE has been doing much for the industrial developme of Cuba, and has recent constructed several lin of railway, to conne important points in t island. It is reported th he has plans for what practically a new city the coast of Cuba. S William is famous as "t man who made the Can dian Pacific." Althoug much of his life has be spent in Canada, he is a American, having bee born in Illinois, in 184 He began his busine career as a telegraph ope ator on the Illinois Ce tral Railroad. He becan President of the Canad an Pacific, in 1888. H was knighted in 1894

MRS. MARY A. LIVERMORE, whose recent death has caused suc general regret, held a unique place in the hearts of America women. She was born in Boston, in 1820, and was the daught of Timothy Rice. After teaching school for a number of years sh married, in 1845, Rev. D. P. Livermore. Both she and her hus band became active in the anti-slavery movement, and also i temperance work. When the Civil War broke out she became member of the Sanitary Commission. She became editor of th Agitator, a woman's suffrage paper, and in 1870 moved to Boston and edited the Woman's Journal. For ten years she was pres dent of Massachusetts W. C. T. U. She found time in addition, t write many books, and to deliver lectures in England, Scotland and the United States.

THE HEART OF THE EARTHQUAKE

The First Authentic Description, by an Eye-witness, of India's Great Disaster, in which Over Sixteen Thousand Perished

By the REV. DAVID R. GORDON,
Missionary at Gurdaspur, Punjab

TTLE BAZAR, DHARMSALA, WHERE SIXTY PERISHED

WRECK OF THE ASSEMBLY HALL, FILLED WITH CURIOS

BELIEVING that you and your readers would be interested in an account of the terrible earthquake which took place in this neighborhood recently, I am taking the liberty of sending you a few illustrations and a short account of the event.

On the 4th of April, at about six o'clock in the morning we were all startled by the rattling of the doors and windows, the creaking of the heavy beams of the roof, and the falling of the plaster of the walls of our house. Though still scarcely out of bed, we rushed out of doors as soon as possible; and even after we got out, the earth continued to rock, the trees to sway back and forth, and a most peculiar and uncertain feeling to possess us, as though the end of all things had come. The native city, about a mile away, with its population of about 40,000 souls, was shaken out of the even tenor of its way, and a distinct hum, as of a disturbed bee-hive, was heard. This was the state of things at Lialkote, where the American United Presbyterian Mission was holding the Fiftieth Anniversary Jubilee Celebration of the founding of our mission.

The centre of the earthquake disturbance, however, was at or near a place called Dharmsala, about 150 miles away. Dharmsala is a summer resort, situated in the Himalaya Mountains, about 7,000 feet above sea level. In this hill station, our mission owned six houses, and when the news came that the earthquake had destroyed Dharmsala, our mission appointed a committee to go and look after the condition of our property in the place.

Being a member of that committee, I got to see the terrible effects of the earthquake. As we approached the station, and when we were still about fifteen miles away, we began to see what had taken place. All along the road on both sides, as far into the country as we could see, there was nothing visible but desolation and ruin. Every house had been leveled to the ground. People who had not been buried beneath the ruins, were homeless and helpless and apparently stunned by the disaster. Here and there, they seemed to have recovered sufficiently from the shock to collect a few broken beams and slates (for all the houses in that region are roofed with rough slate), to form a shelter from the rain and sun.

As we proceeded on our way, we were met at one place by a man holding in his arms an infant, whose mother, he said, had been killed, and he begged for help to enable him to get some milk for the babe.

ONE OF THE SIX MISSION HOUSES DESTROYED BY THE EARTHQUAKE

RUINS OF SUNNYSIDE, A. U. P. MISSION, DHARMSALA

KOTWALI BAZAR, WHERE NEARLY ALL PERISHED

they had all been killed and were lying in a heap in the bottom of the ravine, while vultures and other birds of prey were already feasting greedily on their carcases.

As we drew near to Dharmsala, the sights we saw were more and more awful. In one place, from underneath the ruins of a house, two dead bodies had been taken; wood had been piled up around them, and men were just setting fire to the wood as we passed.

It is estimated that, in and around Dharmsala, at least 16,000 people have been killed. The loss of property is enormous. At Kangra, a town about ten miles from Dharmsala, situated in the far-famed Kangra Valley, where tea is raised and shipped all over the world, there was an old fort, built by the native kings who reigned before this country was occupied by the British. This old fort was built of very solid masonry. The lime and mortar used in its construction were of such a quality that, though the elements in many places had eaten away, to some extent, the surface of the stones used in constructing the walls, the mortar stood out prominently against their destructive forces. Even this building, which had stood for centuries, and seemed like the solid rock itself, was laid flat. Also a famous Hindu temple, in this same place, which had stood for hundreds of years, was utterly destroyed.

RUINS OF THE ENGLISH CHURCH AT DHARMSALA

Of the six houses belonging to our mission, five were utterly wrecked. God mercifully preserved the lives of all our missionaries. Had the earthquake taken place a few weeks, or even days later than it did, or had the season not been so abnormally cool as it was, in all probability the six houses would have been filled to their utmost capacity by the wives and children of our missionaries, who go up to Dharmsala every year to escape the terrible withering heat of the plains. But, providentially, none had gone up yet.

No doubt you will have received more or less full accounts of this terrible visitation by cablegram long before this; but if you think it worth while, you are at liberty to publish this account in your valuable paper.

Any money sent to me will be used in affording relief to the distressed of Dharmsala and neighborhood.

A mass meeting was held to-day in our little town of Gurdaspur (from where I am writing), and a collection amounting to about $1,200 was raised for this purpose. The Government is acting nobly in the matter and doing all in its power to relieve present distress. The plough cattle of the poor peasants are, in very many instances, killed. (REV.) DAVID R. GORDON.

Gurdaspur, Punjab, North India. April 24, 1905.

. . .

Dr. Gordon's letter is the first authentic communication received from the section of India devastated by the earthquake of April 3 and 4. His estimate of sixteen thousand victims in and around Dharmsala alone makes it probable that the total loss of life, including those who perished at Mussoorie (where the Ghoorka regiments were stationed), has been much greater than was first supposed; 470 Ghoorka troops were crushed to death in the ruins of the barracks, and several hundred injured. Nine Europeans, including four ladies, were also killed. There was also loss of life at Multon, Rawalpindi, Dalhousie, Lahore, and in many smaller towns and villages.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly, Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Influences of an Evil Life

HOW much mischief may be done to the morals of the community by the circumstances attending a recent mistrial in New York, is shown by an anonymous letter since received by the District Attorney. It purports to come from a girl who works from seven in the morning till seven at night, for the small sum of four dollars a week, which she gives to her widowed mother. She has been reading the reports of the trial of a woman who was charged with murdering a man, with whom, as she admitted, she had lived a sinful life. The daily papers published long reports describing her appearance, the details of her daily life in prison, and stating that since the jury that tried her, disagreed, she had received numerous offers of employment at an enormous salary. It is not astonishing that the poor working girl who read these reports, drew the inference from them that the way to success was to be wayward and wild. "It seems," she wrote, "it does not pay to be good."

Thus we see how widespread and disastrous is the evil that one sinner may do. Here is a girl whom the accused woman has never seen, yet she may have done her a deadly and irreparable injury. Truly "no man liveth to himself." There goes from every life an influence to help, or blight lives remote from us. Perhaps if that woman could speak to her, she would tell her of the agony of remorse, of the misery of a blighted life, of the terror of punishment, and warn her that neither notoriety nor money can compensate for the purity lost, the innocence sacrificed. Her words, however, could count for little; it is the hard facts that impress the poor girl. Henceforth, the bulwarks of virtue in her soul are weakened, and in the struggle with the temptation that assails her in a great city, the influence of that notorious example is cast on the wrong side. The vicious woman who has prospered, has made it easier for others to fall. No one knows how many she may have thus influenced.

Of course, it is easy to see how false is the reasoning that the poor girl is blindly following. That woman's a successful life? No, it is a lamentable and despicable failure. Not all the plaudits of a sensational press, not all the tinsel and glamor of a gay life, can hide the rottenness and corruption and misery that lurk below the surface. No one ever went that way of sin, that did not deplore it and curse the day when she renounced the covenant of her God. "It does not pay to be good," says this unsophisticated girl. Perhaps not in money, though even that is doubtful. The end of the wanderer is more frequently poverty and suicide than anything else. But is money the only test of success? Does purity, or a clear conscience, or an honest life count for nothing? What money can compensate for the loss of the highest privileges of humanity? What money can pay a woman for descending to the level of the brutes? Leaving out of the question all consideration of the eternal life, the course that that notorious woman took is a failure for this life, a course of shame and degradation. But we cannot ignore the life beyond the grave. There comes a time for everyone, when it becomes the most momentous question. What then will be the estimate of the failure or success of a life? Then it is not a question of poverty or riches that will determine the eternal destiny. This girl may be deceived now by worldly appearances in seeking to know whether it pays to be good, but she will be in no doubt if she comes into that happy company of whom our Lord said: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

A Notable Woman

IN an age of busy women, one of the most notable personalities was Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, by whose death her sex the world over loses a faithful friend. Womanly above all things, and possessing the keenest interest in all other women, she devoted her life and her great talents to causes she advocated, long and indefatigably. Even at an age when most women would have rested upon their laurels, Mrs. Livermore was up and doing, with tongue or pen, or both. She did not spare herself, and, as a result, the work she accomplished was beneficent and world-wide. This brave woman fought against years and physical weakness, that she might miss no opportunity to help the cause of womanhood. Her many acts of helpfulness are remembered gratefully by numberless women, whom she comforted in hours of darkest trouble. Many a struggling sister has been helped over a crisis by the kindness and golden-hearted generosity of Mary Livermore.

She was more, however, than a " woman's woman "; she was a woman's champion. Fearless, strong in heart and brain, she never flinched at the burdens she encountered. Little did the world know of those burdens, how heavily they bore at times, but the brave woman kept on. In many-sided Christian benevolences, in the suffrage arena, in the temperance cause, and in a thousand womanly ways of helpfulness, she plodded on until she had accomplished her rounded, symmetrical life-work. Such women are a nation's glory and a blessing to the world.

Industrial Missions

IN the life of Richard Winsor, rightly called the "Father of Industrial Missions in India," who died in that country lately, there is a grand lesson of encouragement for Christian missionary workers everywhere. It is a lesson that emphasizes the dignity, the nobility, the true service of honorable industry. God loves the man who can work with his hands as well as with his brain. The world, too, places a very high estimate on intelligent and well-directed effort.

In a former issue, we had already announced the news of Mr. Winsor's death, but there was so much in his life that is of value to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that we feel justified in returning to the subject. Almost from the very beginning of his missionary ministry, some thirty-five years ago, Mr. Winsor was impressed with the importance, not only of converting the natives of India from heathenism, but of teaching them some industrial occupation. He saw the abject misery and poverty of a land, bare and infertile, and subject to frequent famines, yet whose chief industry was a primitive agriculture. Some other vocations must be found for the multitude, whose lack of industrial resources made them easy victims whenever there was a prolonged drought or a crop failure. He decided to attempt the experiment with the young boys. In his mission school at Satara, some thirty years ago or more, he introduced, side by side with the Bible, the tools of the carpenter and the artisan. Later, in the Sirur Mission, he taught various industries to all castes of children of both sexes. In all those years, his work has been gradually coming into prominence, and is now widely acknowledged as one of the most valuable that has ever been done in India.

Through his persistent efforts, thousands of native converts have been fitted in youth for the struggle of life. Many of his graduates are now doing splendid service in technical positions in India, Africa and elsewhere. His work is now everywhere regarded as a blessing to India, and it is probably no exaggeration to assert that his example, more than that of any other man in half a century, has been the means of revolutionizing missionary methods, and of lightening the burden of the worker abroad, as well as that of the supporter of missions at home. The entire field of missionary effort is placed upon a new and advantageous footing. Soul and body are helped simultaneously, and the double process goes on harmoniously, until a point is reached where the convert becomes skilled and efficient, and capable of doing a man's work and of earning a man's wages. In this way, a large number of young converts in India are now being gradually brought up to the standard of self-support. Under former missionary methods, they would have remained more or less of a burden upon the benevolence of God's generous people for the greater part of their lives. It is safe to say that among the many thousands of children now being trained at the missions where industrial methods have been adopted, there is not one who in future years will bear the stigma of "rice Christian"—a term which was applied to those who were formerly supported by the missionaries without labor. Every convert will become independent, self-supporting, and a producer, able in his turn to help others to gradually rise to his own standard.

Thus Richard Winsor's life and experience have exerted a twofold influence upon missionary work in distant India and throughout the whole world. He was faithful from the beginning, in small as well as in gr things. He was faithful to his spiritual trust in dire ing men and women to Christ; he was faithful in care over the cargo of food in THE CHRISTIAN HERALI famine relief ship, Quito, with which he was sent over t sea from New York to Bombay, and in his supervisi of the distribution of that cargo. He was a social a industrial reformer, as well as a missionary. His wo has become the model for all India, and his exam furnishes inspiration for missionaries everywhere.

Drop Sugar Into the Cup

YOU may fill a cup with water until it seems to full to the very brim, and yet between the rou surfaces of the drops there will be little spaces, invi ble to you, but there they are. Now sift a few grai of powdery sugar in, and the cup will not overflow.

So into our cup of daily work and daily play let sift a little sweetness of love; let us take time f love's caress, for love's kiss, for love's fond look. Th shall the cup of life be full to the brim of honest joy.

Among the Workers

—THE NEW YORK FOREIGNERS' MISSION intends greatly increase its street preaching work, and expec to reach 500,000 this season.

—MR. ALEXANDER, the "Singing Evangelist," wl accompanied Dr. Torrey in his Gospel tours, is reporte to have overstrained his voice, and has stopped singing consequence.

—IN OUR ARTICLE in last week's issue, on the Interna tional Jubilee of the Y. M. C. A. in Paris, the date of th opening of the Congress should have read "April 27, instead of May.

—A YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION for coa miners will be organized at Petros, Tenn., about July James D. Burton has been called as General Secretary Over four hundred miners live and work at Petros, in th mountains of East Tennessee. The State convicts als work in the mines near this place.

—EVANGELISTS REV. MARTIN ARMSTRONG of Baldwi Kan., and Prof. Clarence E. Krinbill of Dixon, Ill., wh have been conducting meetings throughout Colorad Wyoming, Texas and Arizona since last October, have jus closed a successful series of services in the First Methodis Church, Williams, Ariz. The meetings have resulted i many conversions and accessions to the local church.

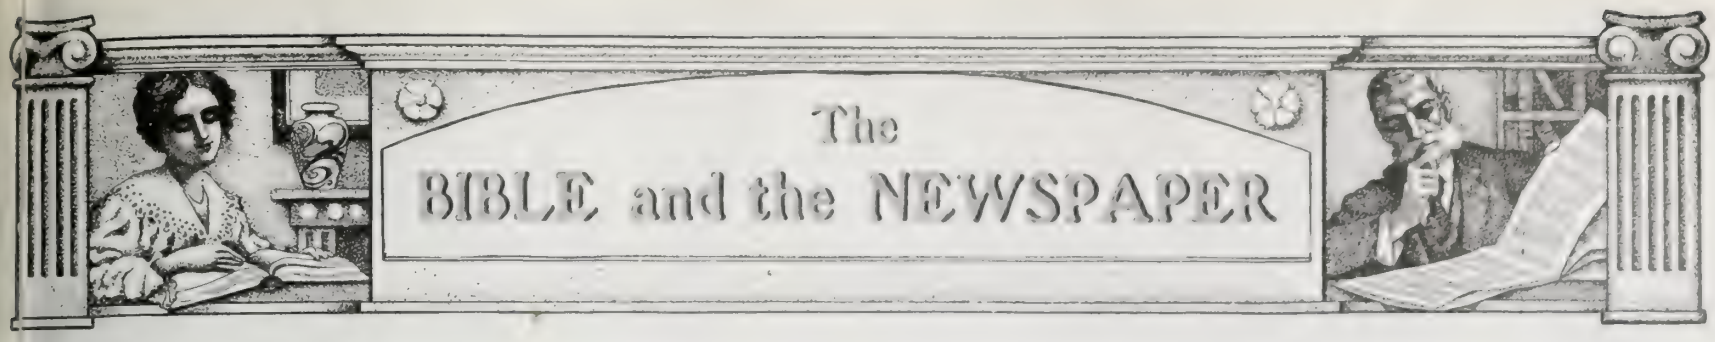
—THE CONFERENCE for Christian students at Zeist Holland, just closed, was attended by delegates fro thirty countries, some men coming from as far as Japan China and Australia. They represented Associations an Unions in 1,800 colleges and universities, and a member ship of 103,000 college students and professors, unite together as the World's Student Christian Federation with more than half of this membership from the colleg Young Men's Christian Associations.

—BISHOP DAVID H. GREER, speaking of the presen Gospel Tent campaign in New York, said lately: "Th churches are doing perhaps all that they can do in th course of their ordinary ministrations and services, an yet the feeling is beginning to prevail among the Chris tian people of this city that they are not doing all tha ought to be done; that they are not reaching all th people in this city. Now the churches are forgetting their differences and divisions, and going forth to preac to the people of this city. It is not a hastily conceive or sensational movement, aiming at sensational result but a sane, sober, earnest, Christian movement, aiming to accomplish substantial moral results. To criticise it o to condemn it, or to withhold encouraging support is, a Phillips Brooks once said, like criticising or condemning a tempestuous wind that has cleared your section of th cholera, because it has also shaken some of your win dows, or stripped the leaves off your trees."

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Please send in Coupon Subscriptions as soon as received. We will credit you with all you send in. Subscriptions run from the date of receipt until January 1, 1906. Hence, every day's delay means a loss to the new subscriber.

Send for as many Coupons as you may need. They will be sent to you free of charge. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.



Abyssinia's Progressive King

DELAY in diplomacy is exercising the autocratic ruler of Abyssinia. King Menelik, though surrounded with the barbarous splendor of an African court, is one of the shrewdest of royal rurs, and is bent on bringing his country into the rank ofprogressive nations. He granted the concession to cstruct a railroad through his dominions to a French fir. He has waited patiently for three years for the wk to be begun. Tired at last with the long delay, di to the prolonged discussion between France and ote European Powers, he summoned a council, at which hedeclared, that if the Powers did not come to an undetanding speedily, he would end thdeadlock by constructing the railrol himself. The British minister poted out to King Menelik that a raway built with capital provided by a ingle nation and controlled by a sile foreign government, would ple Abyssinia in a position incompble with independence and the inteity of her territory. The question oht to be treated wholly as a commcial one, and in nowise as a politicsone. The best solution would be for ahations to be allowed to share in proving the capital, although the French copany might manage the line. T King recognized the danger that mht ensue, and as he is tenacious of th independence of his country, he acpted the suggestion made to him. A agreement was therefore concluded wch concedes the French managemt of the line, but allows other natis to provide the capital. This aeement now awaits the consent of Gmany to become operative. The Kg is also making arrangements for eablishing a national bank, and in oer ways introducing the methods ol civilization. It is his intention wen these matters are brought definely under way, to pay an extended vt to Europe, to see with his own es the effect of civilization on other cntries. It is his proud boast that his descended from King Solomon. Imay be hoped that whatever other lsons he may learn from his trip, he ry return convinced of the truth of h ancestor's words:

ighteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is aproach to any people (Prov. 14:34).

Doctor's Self-Sacrifice

The Marshall Hall prize, awarded ery five years by the Royal Medical Society of England, has been given this year to Henry ead, M.A., M.D., physician at the London Hospital, f an important discovery in connection with the nervs system. Dr. Head had the sensory nerves of one his arms divided, and studied the sensations. Then had the nerves united by stitching, and studied the ocess of recovery. The result was that he discovered o distinct sets of sensory nerves, one that conveys e sensations of pain, heat and cold, and the other e sensations of touch. The discovery also makes ssible the accurate localization of the sensations. he healing power of the skin is found to depend tirely upon the set of nerves that convey impressions pain, heat and cold. Probably the discovery would ver have been made had the experiment been made a patient. It needed that the sufferer should be he who had expert knowledge, who could analyze e pain and account for its peculiarities. In addition the value of the discovery, there will be in that octor a sympathy with sufferers that never could have been acquired in any other way. It is the fact that Christ suffered and died, that makes him so precious to the believer:

Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest (Hebrews 2:17).

Te Deum for a Dog

From the famous St. Bernard Hospice in the Alps, comes the news that Barry II, the finest dog belonging to the hospice, which was reported to have been stolen, was not taken by a thief, but was accidentally killed while fulfilling his duty. Three travelers, who were climbing the Pass from the Italian side, probably would have perished but for the appearance of Barry. He conducted them safely to within two hundred yards of the hospice, when he slipped, and fell sixty feet into a newly opened crevasse. His skull was crushed. Barry had the record of having saved thirty-four lives. Once he brought a baby in his mouth to the hospice and then returned to aid its parents, who were saved by his agency. He was twice swept away by avalanches. The monks sang a special Te Deum in his memory. It was fitting that the memory of such an animal should be honored. Everyone would join in paying a tribute to so successful a life-saver; yet how few comparatively there are who ever think of Him, who gave his life that the world might be saved from eternal death.

Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness (I Pet. 2:24).

MENELIK, KING OF ABYSSINIA, LEAVING HIS COUNCIL CHAMBER

A Combination Flag

An Ohio clergyman tells an interesting story of the ingenuity with which Mr. Carnegie solved the difficulty of a national emblem. He says that when the American philanthropist first took possession of his magnificent residence, Skibo Castle, Scotland, he was rather uncertain what flag he should use when, in accordance with national custom, his presence in his castle was indicated by running up a flag on its chief tower. He was in doubt whether a British flag would be appropriate for an American citizen, and yet the Stars and Stripes might be regarded as an offence by his Scottish neighbors. He finally decided to have a flag made which would show the Union Jack on one side and the Stars and Stripes on the other. In the present friendly relations between the two countries, he will have no difficulty in adjusting his conduct to the composite flag, and we may hope that no difficulty will ever arise. There are, however, some people who adopt the same principle in religious matters, in which there can never be a compromise. Between the kingdom of Christ and that of Satan there must ever be perpetual war, and no man can belong to both at the same time.

Choose ye this day whom ye will serve, whether the God that your fathers served or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell (Joshua 24:15).

Life Lost for a Nickel

A sad incident occurred in Upper New York last week. An ambitious little boy, only seven years old, had often teased his mother to let him go alone on an errand. She had never acceded to his request until the other day, when she wanted a loaf of bread and could not conveniently leave home. This was the little fellow's opportunity, and again he pleaded to graduate into big-boyhood, by going alone on a commission. He was crossing the roadway, with a due sense of his importance, when he dropped the nickel he had to pay for the bread. It rolled out of sight, but the little boy could not bear to be disgraced by losing it. He searched around, and, at last, saw it in the dust in the middle of the road. He rushed to grasp it, not seeing a heavy truck that was approaching. The driver was astonished to see the child run towards him and tried vainly to stop his horses. The boy was knocked down, and one of the wheels passed over his little body. He was picked up and carried to a hospital, but the surgeons say there is no hope of saving his life. His mother is almost frantic over the loss of her child. That the poor little fellow should have thought so much of the nickel, as to imperil his life to recover it, is very sad. If he had had more experience he would not have done it; but perhaps he might have lived to become one of that still more foolish class who are imperilling their souls to make a fortune:

They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare and into many foolish and hurtful lusts that drown men in destruction (I Timothy 6:9).

BRIEF NOTES

The Woman's National Sabbath Alliance is offering prizes to students in China for the best essays on the Christian Sabbath. A committee of Chinese scholars will award the prizes.

Gratitude to the late Dr. Cyrus Hamlin for his services to Armenia has been manifested by Armenians in this country. They have subscribed for a monument to be erected over his grave at Lexington, Mass.

The Bible Institute of Chicago is making preparations for its summer schools. Its report shows continued prosperity. This year the number of enrollments for regular courses of study have been 812 men and 241 women.

A leading publisher, who was recently asked what book in the year has had the largest sale, named a popular novel but added, "No book sells like the Bible. Not less than two millions of the sacred volume were sold last year."

The new moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly elected at Winona Lake, Ind., on May 18, is Dr. James D. Moffat, President of Washington and Jefferson College at Washington, Pa. He was elected by acclamation. He was dubbed on the floor "The great pacificator."

JAPAN'S GREAT NAVAL VICTORY

Admiral Rojestvensky's Fleet Destroyed by Admiral Togo at Korean Strait—The Greatest of Sea Battles

ADMIRAL ROJESTVENSKY
Commander of Russian Fleet

ADMIRAL TOGO
Japanese Naval Commander

THE long-expected naval battle between the Russian united squadrons under command of Admiral Rojestvensky, and the main Japanese fleet under Admiral Togo, took place in the Korean Strait on Saturday, May 27, resulting in a decisive victory for Japan. It was, in reality, a series of battles lasting over two days or more, and covering a very wide sea area. At the conclusion of the fighting, the Russian fleet was practically annihilated, while that of Togo was intact and undamaged. Of the Czar's great armada, seventeen warships had been sunk and five captured. One solitary cruiser escaped to Vladivostok, to tell the tale of the overwhelming disaster. Rojestvensky's powerful battleships and swift cruisers lay at the bottom of the Korean Strait; the admiral himself, wounded and just barely escaping drowning in his flagship, was a prisoner in Togo's hands, with over 3,000 other Russians, including many officers of high rank, and upwards of 7,000 men of the invading fleet had been killed or wounded. It was a battle whose results have astonished the whole world, for Togo won his great victory with a loss of less than a thousand men, killed and wounded, and without having a single ship put out of action.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET DESTROYED BY ADMIRAL TOGO, MAY 27-29, 1905

In the official reports received from Tokio, the engagement is described as "the battle of May 27 to May 29." Admiral Togo's series of bulletins in substance are as follows: The fight raged for thirty-six hours over 145 miles of sea. Upon the report that the Russian squadron was in sight on the morning of May 27, the combined Japanese squadron started for the attack. The weather was fine, but the sea was rough. The attack was made near Okino Shima, southeast of Tsu Shima. The first attack resulted in the sinking of four Russian ships and serious damage to a number of others, a defeat for the Russian fleet. In this attack, the Japanese Admiral Misu was slightly wounded.

At nightfall, the torpedo boats and destroyers continued the attack on the enemy. They approached within half a mile of the battleships and cruisers of the Russians, and hurled their projectiles while the Japanese battleships and cruisers kept up a heavy bombardment from their great guns.

The Russian ships were scattered and driven to the northeast. Admiral Rojestvensky's flagship, "Kniaz Souvaroff," was terribly battered by the Japanese fire, and late Sunday afternoon was seen to be sinking. Rojestvensky was wounded, but with the surviving officers and men, he soon abandoned the flagship and went on board the destroyer "Biedovy." At 5.29 Saturday afternoon the Russian flagship went down. The "Biedovy" headed south in an effort to escape, but the Japanese destroyer "Sazanami" pursued. South of the Island of Urleung the Japanese vessel overhauled the "Biedovy" and caused her to surrender. Rojestvensky and another Admiral, supposed to be Rear Admiral Voelkersam, both severely wounded, together with eighty other Russians, including the staff officers from the flagships, were taken prisoners.

In the first day's fighting, the Russian ships sunk, in addition to the flagship, were the battleships "Borodino" and "Alexander III," protected cruiser "Zhemchug" and three others. Two thousand prisoners were taken, including Admiral Nebogatoff, besides those captured with Rojestvensky.

Next morning (Sunday), the Japanese continued the attack. The fighting was near the Liancourt Rocks. The Russian ships "Nicholai I," "Orel," "Seniavin," "Apraxine" and "Izumrud" were drawn up in a line of battle. A terrible fire was poured into them and they reeled under the hail of shells.

The Japanese cruisers and torpedo craft practically surrounded the Russians. Three Japanese battleships were to the west of them, five armored cruisers on the east and torpedo boat destroyer flotillas engaging them on every side. Two other Russian ships tried to make their way north, both badly damaged. They were pursued by four ships and three flotillas of destroyers, while the remainder of the Japanese fleet continued to fire upon the other Russian vessels.

A demand was flashed to the battleship "Orel" for surrender, and soon the signal went up from the "Orel" asking for an armistice. At the end of ten minutes the Russians gave notice they would surrender the battleships "Orel" and "Nicholai I," the two coast defense ironclads and the cruiser "Izumrud." The commander of the "Izumrud" refused, and made his way north, pursued by two Japanese cruisers.

The "Orel" and "Nicholai I" were not severely damaged. Nine hundred prisoners were taken from the four ironclads. The dead numbered over 600, wounded 400.

When the Japanese had ceased firing and arrangements were being made for a disposition of the captured vessels, the "Admiral Oushakoff," coast defense ship, was sighted, trying to escape in a southwestern direction. The "Iwate" and "Yakuma" were sent in pursuit and soon overhauled and sank her. The crew of 300 was rescued. The cruiser "Dmitri Donskoi" was the last to be destroyed at the hands of the Japanese.

Rear-Admiral Nebogatoff was among the prisoners captured in the Sunday battle.

The Japanese did not lose a single ship. Their losses in killed and wounded are estimated at 600, of which 400 were on the battleships and cruisers, and 200 on the torpedo boat division.

To add to the Russian disaster, it is reported from Vladivostok that the cruiser "Gromoboi," with Admiral Skrydloff on board, struck a Japanese mine while setting out to join Rojestvensky, and went down with all on board. She had a crew of 800 men.

Result of the Two-Days' Battle

RUSSIAN WARSHIPS DESTROYED

Class	Name	Displacement Tons	Crew
Battleship	Kniaz Souvaroff	13,516	740
Battleship	Imperator Alex. III	13,516	740
Battleship	Borodino	13,516	740
Battleship	Oslyabya	12,674	732
Battleship	Sissoi Veliki	10,400	550
Battleship	Navarin	10,206	630
Armored cruiser	Gromoboi	9,200	800
Armored cruiser	Admiral Nakhimoff	8,524	567
Armored cruiser	Dmitri Donskoi	6,200	510
Armored cruiser	Vladimir Monomach	5,593	550
Coast defense ship	Admiral Oushakoff	4,648	318
Protected cruiser	Zhemchug	3,106	340
Protected cruiser	Shvietlana	3,862	360

Destroyers—Three.
One repair ship and two special service ships.

RUSSIAN WARSHIPS CAPTURED

Battleship	Orel	13,516	740
Battleship	Imperator Nikolai I	9,672	604
Coast defense ship	Gen.-Ad. Apraxine	4,126	318
Coast defense ship	Admiral Seniavin	4,792	318
Destroyer	Biedovy	350	100

One special service ship.

RUSSIAN VESSELS ESCAPED

Protected cruiser	Almaz	3,285	340
Destroyer	Grozni	350	100

Russian loss of life (estimated) 8,000
Russian prisoners captured 3,000
Japanese loss of life (estimated) 600

An Inquiry Answered

Joseph K., of Philadelphia, inquires as follows:

I have been a subscriber to your most excellent journal for several years, and, after having read it, have always sent it to my aunt in Minnesota, paying one or two cents postage, according to the weight of the paper. Would it be quite right for me to enter my aunt as a Coupon Subscriber at 25 cents for six months, under your very liberal proposition of May 31? If so, is it necessary to have her sign the Coupon, or may I sign it for her?

If your aunt's name is not now on our books, and is not intended to take the place of one on our books, there is no objection to your taking, in her name, advantage of our offer. Of course you may sign her name, in her behalf, and we trust you will be so much pleased with the arrangement which relieves you of the necessity of, each week, mailing your own paper to her, that next year you will send us two individual subscriptions.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

CHAPTER XIII.—Continued

"NELLIE told me what she said to you the day I gave my furniture away," said Miss Cynthia. "I think I should have said something of the sort myself, if——. But I didn't come to talk to you about that. I only wanted to say that you must go to every person that you've talked to about Nellie, and take back what you have said. Especially to Mrs. Cartright."

Deacon Scrimger whirled about and picked up his saw. "This is my busy day," he quoted suggestively. "I ain't got no time to fool away."

"You'd better listen to what I say," said Miss Cynthia distinctly. "At noon today, if you haven't done it, I shall put the matter into the hands of Jabez Tillman. I think he'll find there's damages to collect. I shall tell him to collect them—all, every cent."

The old man bristled like a dangerous animal. "Who air you to come here a-threatnin' me—right here on m' own premises?" he snarled. "I'll hev ye to know 'at I'll git the law on ye fer—. Oh, I'll git the law on ye fer somethin', see 'f I don't!"

"You'd much better do as I say," advised Miss Cynthia, inexorably. "You can tell them you were joking. You won't mind putting it that way, I dare say."

"Well, I wa'n't, so to say, reel serious. But I kin tell ye one thing, I ain't a mite o' use fer sassy females; never did hev, an' ain't now." The deacon paused to glare malevolently at Miss Cynthia. "Females sh'd be kep' under subjection—under rule, an' if they ain't got no male pertecter to bile 'em, they ain't no airthly use to nobody! Th' 'Postle Paul says' 'let my women-folks keep shet'; an' they'd ought to—all the endurin' while. Well, I s'pose I'll hev to let on 'at I was funnin' 'bout that blamed——"

"You'll have to make it perfectly clear and plain that you didn't mean a word you said about Nellie Ryan," Miss Cynthia told him positively. "I shall call on Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Cartright this afternoon. They will tell me what you said."

With this, Miss Cynthia, still wearing the uncompromising expression of countenance peculiar to her revolutionary ancestors, turned and marched out of the shop.

The deacon wagged his head threateningly after her retreating figure. "She'll git the law on me, will she?" he cackled, rubbing his dry old hands. "A female woman 'll git the law on me! Huh!" He snatched up his plane and pounced agilely upon his interrupted work, the while his cracked voice was again uplifted in pious song:

"Re-vive us a-gin!
Fill each heart with thy love!
May each soul be re-kin-dulled
With fire from a—bove!"

Miss Cynthia, half way down the street, paused to listen. "Sometimes," she murmured, with a deepening of the Breyfogle expression, "I feel almost—like being an—infidel!"

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

While Miss Cynthia was thus triumphantly following the trail of the small but spiteful lie which had wrecked Nellie Ryan's peace, that unfortunate young person was undergoing divers peculiar trials of her own. Miss Cynthia had conscientiously endeavored to induct Nellie into various frugal practices, calculated to increase the material comfort of a humble home, among which was the "trying out" of "drippings."

Quite naturally and inevitably Nellie turned up her pretty nose at Miss Cynthia's housewifely customs. But she docilely endured them, while resolving to do as she wastefully pleased in her own small kitchen.

CYNTHIA PUT HER ARMS AROUND THE UNRESPONSIVE FIGURE. "I'M GLAD TO SEE YOU, ABBY," SHE SAID SOFTLY

The memory of this futile resolution lent peculiar poignancy to the operation of "trying out" on this particular morning, and her eyes, blurred with unshed tears, caused her to splash the smoking fat on her round, white arms, as she poured it into a small brown jar, of ancient Breyfogle date. The girl gave an angry little shriek and dropped the fat-kettle, which, in its turn, smashed the brown jar. Where-upon the "drippings," in simple obedience to the law of gravitation, proceeded to drip all over the well-scoured table, and down in deliberate, oily little streams to the floor.

Miss Cynthia had earnestly assured Nellie that "drippings" would go a great way in a house. The girl, observing this practical demonstration, was now sure of it.

"I don't care!" she cried, the vexed tears following the example of the drippings. "I don't care one bit, so there!"

She sank down in a chair and apathetically watched the slow meanderings of the cooling fat. She had reached the point where misery becomes an absolute luxury. "I suppose I sh'll always be drudgin' about in somebody else's kitchen, just like this," she moaned, and rocked herself back and forth, nursing her burned arms. "Oh, dear! Oh, dear! What shall I do!"

This piteous plaint was answered in unexpected fashion from the back door, which stood open on to the sunny porch.

"Well! I want-ta-know!" exclaimed a voice. The tentative inquiry was completed by a cogent, comprehensive sniff, which appeared to arrest the attention of even the wandering drippings.

Nellie Ryan looked up, her blue eyes still smarting from half-shed tears. "No. We don't want to buy anythin' this mornin'," she said tartly. "Miss Day ain't to home."

The tall figure in the rusty black alpaca dress and beaded cape bore a large green pasteboard box, firmly tied with brown string, a circumstance which had suggested the girl's words of dismissal.

"I sh'd hope so!" commented the visitor, with dynamic emphasis. "I sh'd cert'nly hope she ain't r'sponsible fer what I'm lookin' at in this here kitchen!"

The purple roses above the rim of the dusty black hat vibrated with unspeakable emotion, as their wearer surveyed in turn the disordered cupboard; the sink, brimming with half-washed dishes; the grease-bespattered table; the floor, with its wandering rivulets of hardening grease.

"I didn't ask you to come in here as I know of!" snapped Nellie Ryan, gathering up the fragments of the brown jar and tossing them into the coal-hod with a careless crash. "I've got to clean up this nasty grease bad luck to it! I've burnt me arm somethin' fierce! I guess I'll have to ask you to tell your business an' go on. The' ain't no room in this kitchen fer two."

"You ain't never spoke a truer word 'an that, an' you never will ef you live to be a hundred," the lady with the purple roses enunciated deliberately. She had set her green pasteboard box down on the floor with a decisive thump, and unfastened the beaded cape at her gaunt throat. "I s'pose you know who I be," she continued, her eyes completing another searching tour of the kitchen. "My! It'll take me a week of stiddy work to git things to rights agin."

Nellie Ryan was down on her knees scraping up the floor. Her pretty face was flushed, the tendrils of her reddish hair curled about her white forehead like little flames. "I don't know who you be, an' 'that's more I don't care!" she said tartly. "I wouldn't put up with Queen Victory a-loiterin' 'round my kitchen to-day, let alone a trampin' pedler!"

"Imperdunce!" intoned the lady in black, with an upward glance of almost religious fervor. "My kitchen! Did you ever! My kitchen! I'm Abby Whiton!" she finished majestically.

"I suspicioned as much," said Nellie coolly.

"An' I'll let you know 'at I've come back to my place to stay!" Miss Whiton continued, with a fine disregard of the girl's scornful blue eyes. "If ever I turned my back on my plain dooty, I done it the day I left this ere kitchen. You've prob'ly done yer best I c'n see with half an eye 'at ye'r young an' foolish. But you might as well pick up yer traps an' go now. I'll

CONTINUED ON PAGE 508

HEAVEN—FOR WHOM?

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

"WHERE is Heaven?" Some have tried to locate it in the region about the North Star! We instinctively feel that it is over us, above us, for when Christ returned to his Father, "he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of sight." But in the vision given to the Apostle John on the Island of Patmos, he saw the city "four square," with its wall of Jasper. He saw the foundations of precious stones: yellow jasper, blue sapphire, transparent chalcedony, green emerald, red sardonyx, golden chrysolyte, blue beryl, brown topaz, green chrysoprase, dazzling white jacinth, and purple amethyst.

He saw the twelve gates of pearl, and the streets of pure gold. He saw the glorious light which flooded the city, and which never was dim, for no night was there. He saw the river of water, clear as crystal, flowing through the midst of the city, and the tree of life on its banks, laden with twelve manner of fruits. He saw the streets filled with boys and girls playing, and happy people on every side who had no tears in their eyes. One who looked like an angel showed him all of these things. So divine in appearance was the messenger that John fell down at his feet to worship him. But the angel messenger forbade him, saying: "See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this Book, worship God."

In his vision, John seemed to see the Heavenly City coming down from God among men. What we do here clearly determines our fellowship over there. Indeed, heaven lies about us here. We must be and do what becomes the citizens of heaven while we live upon the earth. We must all day long keep the heavenly hills in sight by doing the will of our God. We must do our part in bringing about that condition of affairs described in the prayer, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

"I, JOHN, SAW THE HOLY CITY NEW JERUSALEM, COMING DOWN FROM GOD"

Illustration and Application

The questions we ask about heaven, from least to greatest, are: 1. Where located? 2. When entered? 3. Consists of what? 4. Is prepared for whom? 5. Is entered how?

1. Where is heaven? In a British hospital was a young man mortally wounded and not able to speak. It was near midnight. The surgeons had been their round of duty, and for a moment all was quiet. Suddenly this young man, before speechless, called, in a clear, distinct voice, "Here!" The surgeon hastened to his side and asked what he wished. "Nothing," said he. "They were calling the roll in heaven, and I was answering to my name." Such incidents in Bible times and in our own often remind us that heaven is not "far, far away," as we used to sing, but close at hand. "Heaven lies about us in our infancy," wrote Wordsworth. It lies about every soul of childlike faith all his life. How neighborly the angels seemed as they stepped in and out of the life of Abraham and Moses! Elisha's young assistant, when his eyes were opened, found angelic guards all about him. "Are they not ministering spirits," guardian angels about us all?

One fine sunny morning, in 1904, all was bustle and excitement at a pretty Japanese railway station, a regiment being just about to step into the waiting train, en route for Port Arthur. While standing "at attention," an English lady appeared upon the platform, and begged permission of the officers to distribute New Testaments among the men. "Certainly, madam," was the cordial response. So, instantly, aided by courteous officials, the work began. "I do thank you, my lady," said a specially grateful recipient; "I am bound for the war, and I may be killed, but I am not afraid, for I am going to be with my Saviour—I am going to heaven!" Comrades within ear-shot raised a derisive laugh. Immediately the good soldier of Jesus Christ repeated with double emphasis, in tones so loud and clear that he could be heard by the whole regiment: "I know where I am going, and death shall be to me only the commencement of life everlasting!" The truth is even better than that, for the New Testament says, "He that believeth hath everlasting life" (John 5: 24). "There is joy in the presence of the angels over one sinner that repenteth"—that does not sound as if the angels lived in the far off stars.

2. When is Heaven Entered? To the dying thief Jesus said, "To-day, shalt thou be with me in paradise" (Luke 23:43). To Paul, to "depart" was "to be with Christ" (Philip 1:23). These Scripture texts and many death-bed scenes where dying saints, like John, have stood "quite on the verge of heaven," assure us there is no long "sleep of the dead," no waiting in purgatory by those who have received the kingdom of heaven in advance, and sent their "treasure" ahead to prepare for the homecoming of the "heart."

3. Of What Does Heaven Consist? Rest is a part of heaven, not the rest of idleness but of service without selfishness or discord. But to be "with Christ," that is again presented as the supreme joy of heaven. Emerson said profoundly, "It does not matter so much what you study, as with whom you study." We may add, It does not matter so much where you spend the summer, as with whom you spend it; not so much what you eat as with whom you eat. And so heaven's supreme charm is not its palaces, but its fellowship with Christ. We may well repeat the story of the young preacher who read to the dying saint, John 14, "In my father's house are many mansions." "Read on," said the dying man. The preacher read the words of Jesus, "And I will receive you unto myself." "That's it," said the dying man; "it's himself I want." With this supreme joy go other lesser ones, one of them, the joys of memory.

When dear friends, long by distance parted,
Meet once again to count the vanished years,
What joy is theirs, what eager, happy greeting,
What tender laughter, trembling close to tears!
How, stilled at last
The joyous tumult, fondly to the past
Their thoughts are turned: and, deep in converse, they Sit quiet, while with beaming looks they say,
"Do you remember?"

I think 'twill be so when the morning,
The new world sunrise, melts the mists of this,
And loved, familiar faces throng about us
While we stand rapt and lost in purest bliss,
"What! you are here?
And you, old friend? And you, long lost and dear!"
And turning, radiant as a child at play,
To one and to another we shall say,
"Do you remember?" MARY HOWE IOTTES

God will also help us to "remember no more" sins that he himself has forgiven and forgotten. But our noblest victories in battles within and without, we shall joyfully recollect as a part of our "new song." The victorious Prussian army came back from France, to Berlin in 1866, for a celebration of their triumph. As each regiment approached the city gate from the Thiergarten it was halted by a choir demanding by what right it should enter the city. The regiment replied in a song, recounting the battles it had fought, the victories it had won; then came a voice from the choir, "Enter the city." Thus shall every remembered victory sweeten our joys at the gates of heaven.

4. For Whom is Heaven Prepared? Heaven is more plainly revealed than hell; angels than devils. No one could not believe there is a God in the world if the arch-murderer of Armenians, who escapes through the jealousies of rival governments, is to get no more punishment than he gets in this world; and the rich seducer of girlhood, who escapes imprisonment by bribing judges and juries, is to have no punishment in the next world. Certainly Jesus believed there were some who would not go to heaven, or he would not have said it was better for any man he had not been born. With John's solemn picture of the opened books of judgment, let us put the story: A wealthy old bachelor was poisoned, and the police were without any clue to the murderer. The librarian of the public library remembered, however, that a stranger had come in on a wet, dismal night a month before, and asked for a certain treatise on poisons which was seldom read. Turning to the book, he was astonished to find between two pages devoted to the poison which had caused the old man's death a smirched and thumb-marked piece of paper. On it was written referring to the chapter and page on which the poison was described. The librarian gave this paper to the police, with the name which the man had given when he procured the book. The information resulted in the arrest and conviction of the murderer. "And the dead were judged out of those things that were written in the books, according to their works" (Rev. 20: 12). In the Bible pictures of judgment it is not the criminal who is shown to be in danger of hell—everybody knows he is—but it is the selfish man. The selfish Dives, who struts about on earth in selfish pride, we see by the above passage "won't amount to much when he gets to the other world, where character alone counts.

5. How Shall We Get Heaven? This is the supreme question, that must not be crowded aside by all less important. The story is told that on a certain occasion, when a company of persons were discussing in a crowded room sacred subjects and certain prominent men, one suddenly exclaimed: "I should like to meet that Bishop of Winchester; I'd put a question to him that would puzzle him." "Very well, now is your time, for I am the Bishop." The man was somewhat startled, but presently recovered himself and said, "Well, my lord, can you tell me the way to heaven?" "Nothing easier," answered the Bishop; "you have only to turn to the right and go straight ahead."

A missionary reports that in one of his meetings a Moslem said: "I know that the Protestants are the best of all the sects." "How do you know that?" said a bystander. "You are a Moslem. What do you know of the teachings of the Protestants?" The Moslem replied, "I know by one sign. If I go to a priest, he says to me, Give; if I go to a Moolah, he says to me, Give; if I go to an official or a friend, they say to me, Give. All say, Give. The Protestants alone say, Take. Their schools say, take; their teachings say, Take; their charities say, Take. By this I know that they are the best." "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." He who "takes" that offered draught to slake his soul thirst has even in this world begun to drink of heaven's "river of water of life, clear as crystal." "Whosoever will." That key opens the gate of heaven, and to every one of us God has given the key.

* International Sunday School Lesson for June 18. The Heavenly Home, Rev. 22: 1-11. Golden text: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne" Rev. 3: 21. HOME READINGS: Sunday, June 18, Heaven not far away. II Kings 6: 15-17; Acts 7: 54-60; Monday, Heaven when? Luke 23: 39-43; Philip 1: 21-26; Tuesday, Heaven what, and for whom? John 5: 24-29; 14: 1-6; Wednesday, the Day of Wrath, Rev. 6: 14-17; Thursday, the New Song, Rev. 14: 1-3; 15: 1-4; Friday, the Great White Throne, Rom. 20: 11-15; 21: 1-8; Saturday, the Holy City, Rev. 21: 10-27.

IN THE SHADE OF THE VINE

BY MARGARET E SANGSTER

Law of a Past Age

SOME of our readers, as is their privilege, and if they have convictions, perhaps their duty, have taken exceptions to a recent utterance in this paper about thdeath penalty. They are in favor of the old Mosaic entment, literally, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a toh, a life for a life. Even in those old old days there wlan asylum provided for the man who had committed mrder unwittingly; a city of refuge whither he might flyrom the avenger of blood. Moses himself, in his hot yoh, moved by a patriotic impulse, killed an Egyptian wh was smiting a Hebrew, first looking about that there wno eye-witness, and hid his body in the sand. That whomicide, no doubt in Moses' view, justifiable.

mes were primitive then, and punishment followed fa on the heels of crime. The Bible tolerated certain cries, and laws were made to fit them. In our-day of exeme enlightenment and Christian civilization, with ou complex legal machinery, we do not require the object lens which may have been needful when men were emging from a condition of savagery. Jehovah himse did not inflict the death penalty on thirst murderer, Cain. On the contrary, hesent him forth to a freedom that was atonce untrammelled and terrible, for the was on Cain some sort of mark that mle men avoid him, so that he cried ou "My punishment is greater than I canbear." Yet the progeny of Cain, born afr he killed Abel, became mighty and inential. They were builders of cities, inentors, explorers, the most magnificent mi of the early world.

Irs. Ballington Booth tells a touching sty of a man who was under sentence of dth for murder in a Southern State. Hwas a foreigner, ignorant, morose, a hdened criminal; the sort of man supped to be best out of the way. A kind wman went to visit him daily in his cell. Ther alone he revealed glimpses of sde lingering humanity. The day before h execution she said to him. "The ward tells me you may have anything you wit to-day." She did not at once make hi understand, but when he did, the dull fe lighted, the sombre eyes shone, the li quivered.

"I should like," he said, "once more tout my baby to sleep."

So they brought him his motherless boy, by another sunset to be fatherless t. And he tenderly held the little thing in his arms, sung to it, walked to and fro in the cell with it, hushed it to sleep, ksed and gave it back. The law hanged hn next morning, and it hanged a man wo might have been redeemed, for in h soul there was a father's love.

Not many years ago, a brilliant prosecuing attorney who failed to score a triuph in a well-known case of accusation cmurder by poison, broke down when t jury acquitted the man whom he had ltterly pursued, wept actual tears, and ws comforted by his pitying wife. He vnted more than he wanted justice, to sure a personal success. This is a peril that besets a curt-room when a trial for murder is in progress. The psoner at the bar becomes a football tossed about ltween opposing counsel, learned men who forget everything but their goal.

The people who fancy that the dread of the death nalty acts as a deterrent from crime, strangely forget te weakness and the strength of human nature. In the sw, stealthy plotting of malicious murder, the death nalty is deliberately scorned. In the fury of fierce ssion, it is altogether forgotten.

Capital punishment will pass away in the greater enlhtenment of another age.

mes in the Family

Don't adopt eccentricities of spelling in your Christian mes. Confine pet names strictly to the family; Kathin is not so pretty and stately as Katharine, Lisbeth is s beautiful than Elizabeth, Edythe is not to be comfred with Edith, and Carolyn is not so graceful as Caroline; Ada, Eva, Nora, Frances, Charlotte, Pauline, Bertha, Winifred and Agnes are lovely names for girls; so are Florence, Constance, Marion, Josephine, Rebekah, Rachel, Mildred, Alice, Emily and Janet; Isabel is a beautiful name; Dorothy carries a sweet meaning; Margaret, Anne and Penelope are favorites; Pamela is quaint; Violet is charming; so is Ruth; so is Rose; but Mary is the very gem of names, the name most loved in the whole list of appellations, and every home should have its Mary.

WHEN THINGS GO WRONG

When things go wrong, the baby cries,
And little sister softly sighs,
But finds a pleasant word, no doubt,
To send the naughty spirit out.

Mr. Carnegie and the Smaller Colleges

That the eminent philanthropist, Andrew Carnegie, is giving his attention and his money to assist the smaller colleges in our country, is a matter for felicitation. Colleges, whether larger or smaller, are continually in need of money. One of the first requisites of a college president is his ability to interest well-to-do people who are liberal givers, and assist in procuring funds for his institution. Sometimes, though he lack other equipment for a college head, if he possess this one particular, his fame is great in the land. Money is wanted for buildings, for dormitories, for the endowment of chairs, for laboratories, for apparatus, for scholarships, for deserving and needy students, for libraries, for everything, in fact.

The salaries of college professors and tutors are never munificent. In the smaller colleges they do not go beyond a "living wage," and leave the most brilliant and efficient man little margin for bringing up a large family, if he happen to have one, or for laying up for a rainy day. A certain gifted professor in a Western institution reared a group of bright sons and daughters on a stipend so small that it seemed hardly enough to furnish them with food and clothes. In his old age, somebody left him a little fortune. "If I had had it twenty years ago," he said, "I would have been saved the constant humiliation of borrowing from Peter to pay Paul, which was the occupation of my spare time, during a good part of my life."

It is to be hoped that Mr. Carnegie will not limit his munificence to the furnishing of libraries, though these are greatly prized. And it is a good and pleasant thing that his free-handed liberality is doing much for the struggling smaller colleges from which emerge so many competent men to engage in the world's work.

A Beautiful Charity

ONE of the most beautiful forms of charity this season is what is known as the Driving League. There are in New York hundreds of little crippled children who cannot exercise freely even in the narrow streets, where the sunlight seldom lingers. There are mothers with sick babies and convalescents snatching a breath of air from windows past which elevated trains rush from morning till night. To the doors of these invalids and these crippled children on certain days drives a large omnibus, and as many as it will comfortably hold are taken for an airing through the bright up-town avenues, across the bridges to Brooklyn or up to Central Park. Great pleasure is thus given to some who are more familiar with pain and sorrow than with joy and comfort. It might be possible for this idea to be farther extended. Those who have conveyances might often give more pleasure than they do, if only they would remember a shut-in friend or a little child, to whom an hour's outing would mean health and gladness.

I remember an instance in which, day by day, during the weeks of a slow convalescence, an invalid was taken for an airing in the luxurious carriage of a friend. The pretense was made that the horses needed exercise, and the drive was put in the light of a favor, by the thoughtful owner of the equipage. In this world it is just as well to be always looking out for little chances to do good to others.

The Saturday Half-Holiday

No one who cares for the well-being and happiness of the great and worthy mass of people who toil (here in America inclusive of most of us), can fail to be glad that the Saturday half-holiday has become almost universal. At the stroke of noon, the doors of the big department stores close, the factory wheels cease their revolutions, the hammers drop, and the offices bar their doors. Out pour a vast crowd of men, women, boys and girls, who have before them an afternoon in the sunshine, time to rest from labor, and time to be with their families. Until the good custom of this weekly half-holiday has been so firmly established that public sentiment in its behalf shall be peremptory and insistent, it will be vain to champion the cause of the quiet Lord's day among the poor and the operatives, who plead that they must have some opportunity for diversion and open air during the week.

There are those to whom the half-holiday does not come, let them try for it as they may. The journalist does not ask for or expect it; the compositor, the proofreader, the conductor, the motorman, and others who serve society, rather than work for business houses, get very few holidays of any sort. Yet they are only part of the whole. The vast throng who do enjoy the Saturday half-holiday is immensely in the majority.

Head-Gear for Church

As we have recently had a symposium on this subject, with varying views, let me add to it a single word. As everybody who reads this page knows, I have long advocated greater simplicity in the dress worn at church, and particularly in the style of hats in use there. Many women would feel that they were irreverent if they took off their hats or bonnets in church, but why not wear such a close-fitting little bonnet as our sisters of the Friends find convenient? Not one of the scoop bonnets framing the peaceful countenance so daintily, but a simple frame covered with silk, fitting closely over the head and taking up no superfluous room. To sweet young faces this would be becoming, and it would not prove very trying to old faces. The Friends, those who linger among us, have no lack of beauty, though their garb never attracts notice, and would not divert attention from worship in the house of God.

Our CHILDREN'S TEMPLE READY

The Beautiful Building Completed, and now Only Needs to be Furnished Will be Dedicated July 4

OUR Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn is now complete, except as to the interior furnishings. It is a beautiful building, and, in its setting of living green, makes a striking picture. Situated upon an elevation, with smooth, grassy lawns sloping downward, and with a driveway winding up from the highway, the Temple stands, a monument to the kind hearts which have reared it, and to the glory of Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

We are sure our readers will be interested in a brief description of the Temple. It is an interesting fact that the chapel is built of materials abounding in the vicinity. The trap-rock comes from the surrounding hills, much of it from the grounds of Mont-Lawn, while the brownstone is quarried about a mile below, at Grand View, overlooking the Hudson.

There is plenty of room in this Sabbath home for the little ones. The building is eighty feet in length, forty feet in width, and in height is over thirty feet to the main ridge line, the bell-tower extending some fifteen feet higher. The principal entrance is about in the centre, directly below the tower. Three doorways open on a long vestibule, extending the full length of the auditorium, which will comfortably seat 300 persons. Back of the pulpit platform is a door leading to a room to be used for official purposes, access to which can also be had through a separate outside entrance. Between these two rooms—the auditorium and office—is a stairway leading to the second story, which can be utilized as an emergency or overflow dormitory for the children. On the main floor, back of the office, are two rooms, one of which is to be fitted up for the use of guests, and the other for a teachers' room. Under the staircase is a lavatory, with all modern appliances.

Quaint and picturesque as the Temple is in exterior design, and beautiful as it is in the interior, the all-important feature of furnishings must not be overlooked. These will soon be in place, and when the finishing touches are put to the various indoor features, the Temple will stand complete in its beauty and significance.

Nature seems more than ever bountiful this spring, and her generous gifts form a beautiful setting for all the buildings composing the Children's Home. There is no work in which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is more interested than that at Mont-Lawn, and none to which its readers have responded more generously.

Three dollars pays for a ten days' vacation for a child, and $21 endows a cot for the season, thus ensuring the same number of days' delight to seven little ones. Contributions should be sent to Fresh-Air Fund, care THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Our Place in Prophecy*

By H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

ON inquiring the nature of the leading event which is to mark the termination of the present age, we are directed by the sure word of prophecy to expect that "the stone cut out without hands" during the existence of the quadripartite image, is to fall upon the clay-iron feet of the image with destructive force, to crush the entire image to dust which the winds of heaven will sweep awav, and then to grow to a great mountain, and fill the earth; in other words, as the prophecy explains, that in the closing days of the divided and weakened Roman Empire, the last of the four Gentile kingdoms, a destructive revolution shall take place, a manifestation of divine judgment in which the antagonistic kingdoms of this world shall be overthrown and swept away; and that on the accomplishment of this event, the kingdom of God shall pass from its present initial stage to its further millennial stage, and become a universal kingdom, filling the whole earth with its presence.

Exactly how this great change shall be accomplished is not clearly revealed in these earlier prophecies. The coming of "the Ancient of Days" is spoken of, and the "giving of judgment to the Saints of the Most High" (Dan. 7: 22), at the close of the "three and a half times," or 1,260 years of the dominion of the persecuting self-exalting "little horn," or papal power; when "the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end;" a judgment in which because of "the great words which the horn spake, the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." Apparently this event takes place when "the Ancient of Days" sits on the fiery throne of final judgment, while "thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him," for then "the judgment was set, and the books opened;" but a comparison of this earlier and briefer prophecy with the more detailed predictions in the Apocalypse reveals the fact that the fourth empire, that of Rome, with its persecuting papal head, is overthrown under the judgments of the seven vials; and that the advent of Christ in judgment, accompanied by his saints, has more than one stage, for a period of a thousand years is to separate between his revelation "to tread the wine-press of the wrath of God" as described in Rev. 19, and his coming on his great white throne to judge "the dead small and great," out of the things "written in the books," described in Rev. 20.

In considering the events of the seventh trumpet era as including those which are now transpiring around us, we should take into account the important fact that the seventh trumpet has a double character, as being both a "woe" trumpet and a "jubilee" trumpet.

Now it is a matter of the profoundest interest that we can plainly trace in the events which have taken place since the middle of the eighteenth century these two features of the predicted seventh trumpet era. On the one hand, we behold the accomplishment of the foretold judgments of the vials, as outpoured on western and eastern Christendom; and on the other hand, we can as plainly see the rising up of a new and better order of things, preparing the way for the promised "gathering together in one of all things" in "the fullness of times," under the headship of Christ.

On considering these two contrasted world movements several broad facts as to their nature, causes, and tendencies become apparent.

First, considering their history in the past, and the forces from which they spring, the inveterate tendency in fallen man to depart from the living God, and the law of progress, both natural and spiritual, under which we are placed, it became evident that both these movements, the downward and the upward, will continue to operate in the future.

Secondly, that the two movements differ profoundly in this respect, that whereas the downward world movement has its fixed limits, the upward movement belongs to a divine order of things which is in its nature enduring and eternal.

Thirdly, that according to the sure word of prophecy, including the witness of the prophetic times, the limit of the downward movement lies in the proximate future.

Fourthly, that the arrest of the great apostasy will be effected by the manifestation of Christ in the judgment described in Rev. 19, under the figure of his coming forth to "tread the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God."

*From his new work, History Unveiling Prophecy. Pp. 494. Price $2. Published by the Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Toronto and London.

For Convenience
always have a supply of Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk on hand. Suitable for all household purposes. For puddings, cake and all kinds of desserts. Send for Recipe Book, 108 Hudson Street, New York.

A Practical Wedding Present.

Cut glass, jewelry and silverware are all very well in their way, but the wedding present that usually attracts the most attention is something that is intensely practical—a box of Ivory Soap, for example. Best, because purest, of bath, toilet and fine laundry soaps.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
It Floats

$56.50
Portland
AND RETURN

From Chicago, via the Chicago & North-Western Ry., daily, May 23 to September 30. Choice of routes via Omaha, Cheyenne and Granger, via St. Paul and Minneapolis, through the mountain scenery of Colorado and Utah, through the Lake McDonald Country or the Canadian Rockies, with tickets via California or via Yellowstone Park at slight advance in rates.

Correspondingly low rates from other points, account

LEWIS AND CLARK CENTENNIAL

A great opportunity to visit one of the greatest grain and fruit raising countries, the largest fishing and lumbering industries, and some of the most aggressive, rich and growing cities in the world.

The Best of Everything.

Full particulars in regard to the exposition and descriptive of the Pacific Northwest sent to any address on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

All agents sell tickets via this line.

W. B. KNISKERN,
Passenger Traffic Manager,
CHICAGO.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

OL157

Do you know that there is science in neatness? Be wise and use SAPOLIO

Pilgrims of the Great White Plague

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 495

beady for the reception of 5,000 patients, a it is expected that within a few years, fu 50,000 patients will be living in this va natural sanitarium. In every State in he Union the afflicted are even now pparing for the pilgrimage to New Mexi o all in the supreme hope of returning hole some day entirely cured.

o this giant humanitarian scheme, c rches and other religious societies and fr ernal orders have contributed so liberally hat the sanitarium already has a work- in endowment of half a million dollars. T cost per month of supporting a patient w be about $50. Hence, any church or s ety, any club or union, any city, state, or individual may send to the sanitarium o patient for each $50 contributed. The n who will conduct this great health p serving project, include W. R. Eidson, P sident of the Associated Fraternities of A erica, Judge Noah M. Givan, Archb hop Glennon, and Surgeon-General W man of the United States Army. Augit Schlafly, President of the Missouri-Lncoln Trust Company, is the Treasurer o he Sanitarium corporation.

The only dividend to be declared in this nmmoth life-saving undertaking is to be inuman lives. There is to be no gain or p fit for anyone. All surplus, as well as a contributions, is to be constantly invest- e in improvements. Strictly on the mu nipal ownership plan the new community wl be governed. There are no bonds to b unloaded on the public, no glittering i estment to be exploited. Trade will be c ntenanced only to the extent of supp ing patients with the necessities, all g ds to be sold at cost. The sale of whisky or cigarettes will not be permitted. O the other hand, every possible outdoor a usement conductive to health, will be p vided free of charge. Those who dese to work, or who must support themsves in the community, will be given p sitions on farms, or provided with some l ying occupation incidental to the run- ng of the sanitarium. From three nths to a year will be sufficient to cure ordinary cases of tuberculosis, and after hat the patient may go to other places in he Southwest.

The Secretary of the Religious Depart- nt of the Sanitarium is Mr. M. P. oody of St. Louis, manager of the Amer- n Baptist Publication Society. Mr. oody informs us that calls for contribu- ns from religious bodies have been is- ed, and assurances of cordial support ve been received from a number of nominations. Churches and individuals shing to be identified with the movement ould address Mr. Moody. It is hoped hat some will be disposed to endow cot- ges and chapels.

President Eidson states that the doors the Sanitarium will be thrown open to e consumptives of the country about Oc- ber 1. All will be accepted upon equal rms, whether they belong to fraternal cieties, churches, or religious organiza- ons. Individuals who do not belong to ny of the above, will be admitted at the tual cost of keeping.

While I was in the Mesilla Valley— me three weeks —over a thousand pa- ents arrived from north, south, east, and est, at Las Cruces, Mesilla Park, Socorro, nd other nearby places. The arrival of ese pilgrims, with hope written in every eature, was a pathetic sight. Yet it had s bright side, later. Many of those who rrived at the Alameda Ranch Resort, at as Cruces, improved perceptibly while I as still among them. So it was not all ragedy. There was a young college man, football player and all-round athlete. On his arrival, he was a mere shadow. In wo weeks he was helping Manager Favrot lig an irrigation ditch. There was a oung girl, a stenographer from Chicago. On arrival she had to be carried to her tent. After four weeks spent entirely out of-doors, she played croquet with us. Then came a young artist from New York. He was too weak to walk from his cot in his tent to his bureau. Before I left, he rode with me on a horse all the way to Las Cruces and back, over two miles.

The medical head of the Resort is Dr. R. E. McBride, to whose charge an endless stream of pilgrims are surrendering themselves. In telling me why conditions in the Mesilla Valley are suited to the largest number of tubercular cases, Dr. McBride said:

"The climate here does the greatest good to the greatest number of patients. The records show a greater amount of sunshine than in any other place in the country. The year round, there are not more than twenty days on which it is impossible to live outdoors. We have here, too, freedom from violent changes of temperature. Hence, we have the nearest approach to an equable temperature. We have a dry air, which, by chemical demonstration, is as pure as the air of midocean. We have an elevation of 3,700 feet, just enough to stimulate the heart, gently, to a more healthy action. Our patients, as you see, live entirely outdoors. Besides that, they are fed to the limit of their digestive ability. They are practically over-nourished, so as not only to make daily repair balance daily waste, but to store up a certain amount to go to healing the lungs. The fact should be emphasized that what is known as consumption cannot be cured. The most we hope to do, in the great majority of cases of consumption, is to stop the progress of the disease and prolong life a certain number of years. Tuberculosis, however, is curable. It is a disease that responds benignly to treatment. In New Mexico, we do not teach the patient how to die. We teach him the foundation principles of how to live; and we graduate him as a teacher in the prevention of the disease of which we have cured him."

A sanitarium, as such, is not always necessary for those who make the pilgrimage to New Mexico. In my long horseback rides up and down the Mesilla Valley, I found here a tent, there a camp, where pilgrims, young men and women both, were living the outdoor life independently of doctors, but following the same discipline of daily existence that is characteristic of a sanitarium. So, if you, too, wish to go to New Mexico for your health, and do not wish to enter a sanitarium with its restrictions, you can go to the Mesilla Valley, hire a tent, find a stream of water, and there pitch your abode and have your being until you are well again, and your family can accompany you. "Love thy neighbor as thyself," read the lay preacher at the outdoor service at the Alameda described at the beginning of this article. And he added, "That's what the myriad members of the religious and fraternal bodies of this country are doing, in contributing of their means for the sending of the afflicted to this Valley of Health —loving their neighbors as themselves— by helping the pilgrims of the great White Plague."

GILSON WILLETS.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Please send in Coupon Subscriptions as soon as received. We will credit you with all you send in. Subscriptions run from the date of receipt until January 1st, 1906. Hence, every day's delay means a loss to the New Subscriber.

Send for as many Coupons as you may need. They will be sent to you free of charge. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

Don't experiment-Just buy a FORD

Get a Ford demonstration of horse power in comparison with other cars and see the difference between actual power and rated power.

FORD Model F
Price $1200.00

FIRST PREMIUM Awarded by American Automobile Users

Canadian trade supplied by the Ford Motor Co. of Can., Ltd. Walkerville, Ont.

A Chapter on Maintenance

There is a proper relation between weight and its distribution; power and its application and the quality of material and workmanship, which together determine the cost of maintenance of an Automobile.

Let us send you a booklet giving valuable data and information on the important subject of "Maintenance" with letters from Ford users. Write for it today.

The Ford Motor Co., Detroit, Mich.
Member American Motor Car Manufacturers Asso., Chicago.

No Dealer Can Duplicate Our Factory Price

SAVE 1/3

Our high grade carriages are made in our own factory, and sold exclusively by mail order at a saving of from $15 to $30 to the buyer. We warrant every vehicle to be just as represented or refund money and pay freight both ways. Send for free catalogue. It tells the advantage of buying from factory.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE AND HARNESS CO., Columbus, Ohio.

Patton's Sun-Proof Paints

Last twice as long as white lead paints, cover much more surface, never disappoint. Advice on painting and choice of colors FREE—Book FREE

PATTON PAINT CO.,
218 Lake St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Four Little Bee Books FREE

All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.

A. I. ROOT COMPANY. Medina, Ohio

FREE

LAWNS AND THEIR CARE

EVERY lover of beautiful lawns should send for this interesting and instructive little book called "Lawns Their Making and Their Care." Valuable information compiled from Government and expert gardening sources; also interesting facts about the New Seamless Tube, "Bull Frog" Brand Lawn Hose.

THE TOLEDO RUBBER CO.,
450 Summit Street, . Toledo, Ohio.

ARE YOU DEAF?

We have 25 kinds of Instruments to Assist Hearing. Send on approval. Write for Catalogue.
WM. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia

The Failure of Merrill & Baker, Publishers

Finds us with a few sets on hand of their greatest publication.

Ridpath's History of the World which we must sell to pay our advertising bills. The sets are their latest edition, down to the fall of Port Arthur, new, just from the bindery, beautifully bound in half morocco. We shall sell them at Less Than Even Damaged Sets have ever been sold.

Hundreds who read this have decided to buy Ridpath some day; now is the time.

No need for us to tell you about Ridpath. The English-speaking world has pronounced this the only history of the world worth having.

It is endorsed by Ex-Presidents Harrison, Cleveland and McKinley, Jefferson Davis, Lew Wallace, John L. Stodard, Henry W. French, Bishop Vincent, Dr. Cuyler, Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch, Presidents of Ann Arbor, Amherst, Brown, Boston University, Dartmouth, Tufts, Trinity, Bates, Colby, Smith, Vassar, Yale, and other Colleges, and by the Great American People, 200,000 of whom own and love it.

The reason for Dr. Ridpath's enviable position as a historian is his wonderfully beautiful style.—a style no other historian in any generation has ever equaled. He tells the world's history as none other could ever tell it: he makes the heroes of history real, living men and women, and about them he weaves the rise and fall of empires in such a fascinating style that history becomes as absorbingly interesting as the greatest of novels.

Why You Ought to Buy Ridpath Now

Because it is the only general history recognized as the standard of authority.

Because every one should have a Universal History for immediate reference—you can judge of present events only through a correct knowledge of past events and their causes and effects.

Because it will attract your children. It is so beautifully written that they will learn to love history-reading instead of the doubtful sort of books that young people are so apt to waste time over.

Because Ridpath's History is absolutely accurate and thoroughly reliable. Dr. Ridpath spent the span of an ordinary lifetime in writing it, and exercised the utmost pains in verifying every doubtful question by reference to all existing authorities.

Because this is your chance to buy it at a nominal price much less than ever before—and you may pay in small sums monthly if you prefer.

CUT THIS COUPON

WESTERN NEWSPAPER ASSOCIATION
204 Dearborn St.
Chicago

Please send me Ridpath's Sample Pages and full particulars, as offered in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

50 Frozen Desserts

Delightful ices, custards, puddings, chilled fruits—dainties that everyone enjoys, can be made easily, quickly and at little expense in a

TRIPLE MOTION

White Mountain

Ice Cream Freezer

These desserts are all described in our new beautifully illustrated book "Frozen Dainties" (sent you free if you ask). Write to-day.

WHITE MOUNTAIN FREEZER CO.
Dept. A
Nashua, N. H.

JUNKET

A Delicious Dessert

Junket is a healthful dessert food which delights everybody. It is pure and wholesome; easily and quickly prepared. No baking, no boiling, no eggs, no corn-starch required. It agrees with and will be retained by the most delicate of stomachs; the dessert can be bountifully eaten by children, by invalids and well people, with none but beneficial results. Fresh, ripe fruit frozen in Junket makes a dessert fit for a king.

If you have not tried Junket, send us 10c to-day and we will send enough to make 10 quarts of this delicious dessert and a booklet of dainty Junket recipes.

CHR. HANSEN'S LABORATORY
Box 3045. Little Falls, N.Y.

$1 AN HOUR FOR SPARE TIME OR

For entire time $20 to $50 a week selling this NEW INVENTION, the STANDARD SELF-Filling Fountain PEN

-Cleaning

No ink dropper. No smeared fingers No "blow." No taking apart to clean No twisted rubber. No valve or piston No awkward bump. No complication

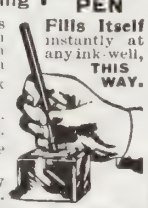
Fills Itself instantly at any ink-well, THIS WAY.



$160.40 profit for 20 days' work by Geo. F. Smith, of Cal.

$178.00 earned in 32 days by retired business man in Ala.

$35.80 for a month's spare time by G. Jos. Lovett, of Mass.

$5.40 made first two hours by Mrs. Mary M. Lennon, of Mich.

Our Free Lessons in Successful Salesmanship make experience unnecessary. We send all particulars and figures to prove above records; write to-day. Energetic AGENTS and DISTRICT MANAGERS Wanted.

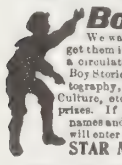
Standard Pen Co., 1556 Spitzer, Toledo, O.

The Wonderful new self-heating

Thermalite Bag

Looks like the ordinary hot water bag, but is far superior in every way. The "Thermalite" Bag No. 3 will give heat at a uniform temperature (about 135° F.) for 8 hours. It stores heat for future use—turn the heat on any time you wish, day or night. Lasts a lifetime. No refilling or renewal of contents. No danger. Imparts a refreshing fragrance. Guaranteed. Price $2.50. Money back if not satisfactory. We send prepaid on receipt of price if druggist cannot supply you. Descriptive book free.

THE THERMALITE CO., 164 Elm Street, New York, U. S. A



Boys' Names Wanted

We want names of bright boys between 12 and 20. We want to get them interested in our illustrated magazine for boys, which has a circulation of over 150,000. Every issue contains Fascinating Boy Stories, handsome illustrations, departments of Amateur Photography, Stamps, Coins, Curios, Puzzles, Games, Jokes, Physical Culture, etc., and each month awards a large number of valuable prizes. If you are not a subscriber and will send us five boys' names and addresses and five 2-cent stamps, or 10 cents in silver, we will enter you as a subscriber fully paid for 6 months in advance.

STAR MONTHLY, 440 Hunter St., Oak Park, Ills.

MUSIC LESSONS Send for our booklet, it is FREE

It tells how to learn to play any instrument. Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, etc. Write American School of Music, 319 Manhattan Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS

Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

WANTED A few live, energetic persons to become associated with us. A rare chance. Write for particulars. Address,

THE NEW JERSEY MFG. CO. Jersey City, N J. (Inc. 1890).

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 503

take a-holt here right off; the'e ain't a minute to lose, I sh'd say."

"Well, I never!" exclaimed Nellie Ryan. She had hastily prepared a mixture of soda and boiling water and was about to pour it upon the greasy floor, when Abby Whiton's compelling hand gripped her arm.

"Don't ye know no better 'an to pour hot water on that fat, ye little idjit? It'll drive it in t' the grain o' the wood so 't you'll never git it out t' yer dyin' day! Where's the starch-box? You want to put starch on it first off to draw the grease. An' my goodness! I see you ain't put yer bread in yit.' 'Tain't fit to eat, anyhow; I c'n see that! I guess Miss Cynthy 'll be mighty glad to git some o' my good victuals ag'in after your messy ways of doin' things!"

Nellie's Irish temper flamed out of bounds at this last insult. "I want you should clear out of this kitchen, right now!" she cried. "This is my place, an' I'm hired to stay till fall, an' what's more I'm a-goin' to do it fer all of you or anybody! So there! I know all 'bout your wonderful cookin'. Miss Day like to ha' died eatin' it. She likes my bread an' my cake an' my pies an' the way I broil my meats an' everythin' I do. She's said so more'n a hundred times. She said she'd never eat a real tasty, relishin' meal of victuals till I come here. So there!"

Abby Whiton sank down in her chair, a curious dusky pallor stealing over her gaunt old face. "Did—did Miss Cynthy say—that?" she faltered. "I thought—I thought mebbe she was a-missin' me like I'd missed her. I—I got so I reelly couldn't stan' it. Night an' day I was a-frettin' an' a-worryin' 'bout her. An' now you say she didn't relish my victuals."

"Of course she didn't," asseverated Nellie, with cruel satisfaction in her enemy's manifest distress. "Why, anybodybody could tell that by just lookin' at her. She's been growin' fat sence I come."

"Fat!—Miss Cynthy—growin' fat!"

"Yes, an' she's took off her black clo'es, an' she's got heaps an' heaps of lovely dresses up in her closet, an' the house is all fixed up as han'some as a picture—an' every bit happened since I come!"

"She didn't know where I was goin'!" continued Abby Whiton in a dreary monotone. "I didn't git a chanct to see her when we come to part. An' thinks I, she'd prob'ly like to git me back fer I don't see——" her eyes wandered dully about the disordered kitchen——"I don't see how she c'n git along without me—after thirty years, an' me a-lovin her—a-lovin' her like——"

The dry old voice broke into unmistakable sobs. The gaunt shoulders heaved dreadfully under the rusty cape with its arabesques of glittering black beads.

Nellie Ryan's scornful eyes melted into surprised alarm, then into quick, girlish compassion. "Why, don't cry!" she begged; "I guess Miss Day——"

She stopped short, with a little embarrassed laugh, for her mistress had opened the door, and stood quietly looking at the scene.

Abby Whiton shook herself vigorously free from the girl's light, pitying touch. "I expect you'll think I'm a reg'lar old fool!" she exclaimed, with an effort, after one of her decisive sniffs which ended disastrously in a choking sob. "But I've walked more'n fifteen miles this mornin' to git here, an' when it come over me all of a suddent 'at Miss Cynthy didn't—want—me—no more, w'y, I kind of——"

"Abby!" It was Miss Cynthia's voice, and it was a curious blend of tears and laughter.

The woman sprang to her feet, stared for one brief, bewildered minute at the slender little figure in its dainty summer gown. "Oh, Miss Cynthy!" she cried. All the faithful love of thirty toilsome years, the home-sick longing of thirty lonely days vibrated in the harsh old voice. Then Abby Whiton stiffened herself inexorably. "She says you didn't relish my cookin'."

Miss Cynthia put her arms about the unresponsive figure. "I'm so glad to see you, Abby!" she said softly. Then she kissed Abby Whiton full on her wrinkled cheek. "I never knew before that you—loved me," she whispered.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE Puffer twins stood in their mother's presence with a serious, almost solemn expression on their round, freckled faces.

"I shan't be gone a minute longer than I'm 'bliged to be," Mrs. Puffer was saying, as she hastily tied her bonnet-strings and smoothed out the somewhat wrinkled skirt of her best summer dress. She was a sufficiently comely figure of a woman, and despite the fact that most of her gowns bore unmistakable evidence of her chief occupation, in the shape of dampish spots in the front of the skirt, and a generally relaxed appearance of the bodice, her children enthusiastically regarded her as not only the wisest but the most beautiful person in the world.

"I've fed him up good," continued Mrs. Puffer briskly, "and he won't be hungry for at least two hours. Now, if you'll just roll him slowly up and down the sidewalk in his carriage, an' don't get him all waked up an' fidgety playin' with him, he'll prob'ly drop right off to sleep an' stay asleep till I come home. He's the best baby that ever lived—so he was!"

Mrs. Puffer bestowed a parting cuddle and pat on her youngest as she tucked him, all milky and complacent, into the nest of pillows in his perambulator.

"I'm goin' to wheel him, 'cause I'm the oldest," announced Edwina importantly.

"You're only five minutes older 'an me, Ed Puffer, an' I'm a lot taller," retorted Harriet indignantly. "I shall wheel him. Mayn't I, ma?"

"You may wheel him up the street as far as the corner; then Edwina can wheel him back," said Mrs. Puffer, hunting absent-mindedly for her gloves, which she seldom had use for.

"I shall turn the carriage 'round, anyway; it's awful hard to turn the carriage 'round; but I know how," said Harriet firmly.

"We'll both of us turn it 'round," amended Edwina, with an equal firmness. "I'll take hold of the front when you're wheeling, an' you c'n take hold of the back; then I'll take hold of the back when I'm wheeling, an' you c'n——"

Mrs. Puffer, looking worried and anxious, interrupted this careful plan of the coming campaign to warn the children of the danger of tipping the carriage over into the gutter. "I shan't be easy a single minute while I'm gone," she said plaintively. "If it wasn't that my teeth are keeping me awake nights with aching I shouldn't think of going. Dear me! if you should get to quarreling over the carriage——"

"We'll be careful, ma!" repeated the twins in dutiful chorus. "We won't quarrel. We'll take awful good care of the baby. We'll both of us wheel him, an' both of us turn him 'round."

Mrs. Puffer hurried away down the street, after seeing the twins started at a snail's pace for the corner, their four moist, pink hands firmly grasping the handle of the perambulator.

The baby was apparently sound asleep by the time the corner was reached. Edwina peeped under the canopy and announced the fact with maternal pride. They turned the carriage around without accident and paced solemnly back to their starting point.

"It's lots of fun, don't you think so,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 509

A SURPRISE PART

How the Authoress Turned the Ta[bles] on Her Friends.

A distinguished authoress with her hus[band] moved to a California fruit ranch to get [relief] from stomach and nervous troubles. She tells her food story as follows:

"The change to outdoor life, abundan[ce] of fresh fruit, etc., did help us some, but a[fter the] necessity of cutting out all indigestible f[ood] and thus striking at the root of the tro[uble] had not sufficiently impressed itself on [our] minds, we continued to indulge our appe[tites,] till at last I was prostrated for a long [time] with a serious illness, during which I [was] simply starved on 'gruel and things.' One [day,] while in this condition I demanded Gr[ape-] Nuts, merely because I wanted somethi[ng] I could chew. My wish was complied w[ith,] under protest at first, however, and then a[ston]ishing bad results followed, the crisp, nutty gr[ains] were allowed me in the way of humori[ng] a harmless whim.

"To the surprise of everyone, the ston[ach] which had persistently refused to retain [the] sloppy messes usually fed to sick folks, r[eadi]ly assimilated the Grape-Nuts, and I [was] soon able to take two spoonfuls three tim[es a] day, and when I got to that point my he[alth] and strength came back to me rapidly. [My] recovery, and taking up my work agai[n] I adhered to Grape-Nuts food for break[fast] and supper, eating a good, plain dinne[r at] noon. In four weeks I gained 10 pound[s in] weight. I have constantly used Grape-N[uts] food ever since and greatly to my advanta[ge].

"My faith in Grape-Nuts was a matte[r of] much jesting to my family, and once w[hen] my birthday came around, I was told tha[t a] special dinner would be prepared to honor [the] anniversary. When I entered the din[ing] room, I was surprised to find it decorated w[ith] Grape-Nuts boxes, some empty, some f[ull] and some filled with flowers, etc., etc., [and] the joke was hilariously enjoyed. My ti[me] came, however, when I returned the surp[rise] by producing a delicious Grape-Nuts p[ud]ding, and dates stuffed with rolled Grape-N[uts] and cream. Then 'those who came to sc[off] remained to gorge themselves,' if I may [be] pardoned the expression. It has not b[een] difficult since that day to win converts [to] Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co[m]pany, Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days' trial is proof.

Does 5% Interest You

If so, it will be to your advantage to write at once for particulars of the non-speculative investment offered by the

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.

Let us show you the testimony of our patrons, prominent clergymen, professional and business men all over the country, some doubtless in your locality, to whom we are privileged to refer to you.

WE PAY 5% Per Year On Your Savings

which bear earnings for every day in our care. Your money is always subject to your control if required for other purposes. START NOW. Earnings begin as soon as your money is received, and are mailed you by check semi-annually, or compounded, if desired.

Our Patrons are Protected

by assets amounting to almost two million dollars. Our loans are made upon the best class of New York and Suburban Real Estate—to home-buyers who pay us interest and part of the principle each month, which is in turn re-invested. Our business, established 12 years, is conducted under New York Banking Department Supervision, by whom it is regularly examined. Write for full particulars and letters of endorsement.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

Assets $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, $150,000

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N.Y.City

Rustic Hickory Furniture

Prices from $1.50 upward.

One of our 100 Designs

THE ACME OF ART

Designed for Beauty, Comfort and Durability. The most popular Furniture for Porches and Lawns. Indestructible indoors and out. Not affected by rain or sunshine. Made of second growth hickory, natural wood, which takes on a beautiful polish with usage. Write for our Prize Offer and beautiful illustrated Free Catalogue showing our full line of Rustic Hickory Chairs, Rockers, Settees, Swings, Tables and Odd Pieces for Summer Homes, Club Houses, etc. Send us the name of your dealer. If he cannot supply you, we will.

RUSTIC HICKORY FURNITURE CO., LA PORTE, INDIANA

Vermont and Lake Champlain SUMMER HOMES IN GREEN HILLS OF

Terms, $4 to $10 per week.

New trains between Boston, New York, Springfield and Vermont points. As good as any on the continent. 150-page illustrated brochure mailed free on receipt of 6c. in stamps or postage.

Address A. W. ECCLESTONE, So. Pass. Agent 385 Broadway, New York City.

ROYALTY PAID and Musical Compositions We arrange and popularize ON PIONEER MUSIC PUB. CO. (Inc.) SONG - POEMS C 321 Manhattan Building CHICAGO, ILL.

Special Summer Sale

SUITS, SKIRTS AND JACKETS

Made to Order at ONE-FIFTH REDUCTION from Catalogue Prices.

To close out our stock of Summer materials, we will make any garment illustrated in our Summer catalogue from any of our reliable fabrics, at a reduction of ONE-FIFTH from the Catalogue prices.

$6 Suits now $4.80
12 Suits now 9.60
18 Suits now 14.40
25 Suits now 20.00

$4 Skirts now $3.20
7 Skirts now 5.60
10 Skirts now 8.00
12 Skirts now 9.60

Prices also reduced on Silk Costumes, Shirt-waist Suits, Silk Coats, Rain Coats, etc.

Every garment is made to order with the same care and attention as though the full catalogue prices were charged.

We guarantee to fit you or refund your money

If you contemplate the purchase of a garment this season, write at once for our Catalogue and Samples, so that you may make your selections while our stock of the more desirable materials is complete.

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our new Summer Catalogue, showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of Samples of the newest materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. WRITE FOR THEM TO-DAY.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
19 and 121 West 23d St., New York
Mail Orders Only. No Agts. or Branches. Est. 17 Yrs.

REVERSIBLE Linene Collars and Cuffs

Have You Worn Them?

Not "celluloid," not "paper collars"; but made of fine cloth, exactly resemble fashionable linen goods and cost of dealers, for box of ten. 25c. (2½c. each)

No Washing or Ironing

When soiled, discard. By mail, 10 collars or 5 pairs of cuffs, 30c. Sample Collar or Pair Cuffs for 6c. in U. S. stamps. Give size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. P, BOSTON, MASS.

Mason & Hamlin
ORGANS

The selection of the church organ involves unusual care and responsibility. Fifty-one years of organ building assures correct construction, and the pre-eminent reputation of Mason & Hamlin guarantees reliability.

Send for catalogue of new styles.

MASON & HAMLIN CO., BOSTON, MASS.

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

By GEO. C. STEBBINS.

30c. a copy, postpaid. $25 per 100

Returnable Sample free to Pastors, etc.

The Biglow & Main Co., Chicago-New York

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 508

Ed?" asked Harriet at the end of the third round.

"Uh-huh," assented Edwina doubtfully. "It feels kind of funny to walk so slow, though. I wonder if it would wake him up if we played fire-engine, real careful."

The baby made no sign when the carriage began to move more rapidly. The twins were now trotting at a good rate of speed, their stout little shoes clattering briskly on the stone sidewalk.

"Sometimes, fire horses gallop," suggested Harriet. "I'll gallop the carriage, an' you be the fire chief an' run awful fast in front."

This suggestion was adopted with exhilarating results. The baby slept soundly, despite the jerky motion imparted to his vehicle by the galloping steed behind.

"Once a fire engine ran into a fence," said Edwina solemnly, as they drew up panting and breathless after ten minutes of this strenuous exercise. "You pretty near did, too."

"Oh, well, 's long 's I didn't, what's the use in talkin' about it," rejoined Harriet carelessly. "Anyway, I guess we'd better change to a fun'ral till we get rested. I'll run the hearse an' you be the mourners comin' along behind."

This proved restful, but not exciting. "Now let's play we're a milk-wagon," suggested Edwina, "I'll be the milkman, an' you be the milkman's horse. We'll stop at every house an' you c'n stamp your feet as if the flies was bitin', an' I'll yell 'whoa' like Mr. Potts does, while I p'tend to carry in the milk."

This proceeding was made strikingly realistic by Harriet's later idea, which involved a removal of the baby's socks to use for pint measures.

"I'm 'fraid he'll take cold, with his blessed little pink tootsy-wootsies all bare," objected Edwina, with a fine imitation of her mother's tone and manner.

"No, he won't either," contradicted Harriet, as she pulled off the socks. "I'll cuddle 'em up—so—in his pinning-blanket. He's all hot an' sticky, anyway. If he was my baby I'd let him cool off."

"He isn't your baby."

"Yes, he is, too. He's my brother, an' he's a baby, so 'course he's my baby. S'm goin' to take off this hot old blanket this minute an' make him comf'table."

"He's my brother jus' 's much as he is yours, an' I say he's got to have that blanket on. I guess ma knows how to fix him."

"Lots an' lots of times she takes off his blanket, she says 'b'ess his little heart, he's too warm, so him was!' You know she does, Ed Puffer. Now I'll tell what we'll do, I'll p'tend I'm the mother, and you c'n p'tend you're the father—all the rest of the afternoon, an' then you'll have to do jus' 's I say."

"I don't want to be the father, 'tisn't any fun," said Edwina, sulkily kicking the wheel of the carriage. "I'll tell you what I'll p'tend, I'll p'tend I'm the gran'ma, an' I sh'll say 'I'm s'prised at you, daughter, for takin' off that blanket in this wind. I sh'll put it right back,' an' don't you say a word till I'm gone home—ma never does, when Gran'ma Puffer says things like that."

"All right; but when you goin' home?"

"I ain't goin' at all. I'm goin' to make my home with you, same 's Susie Winter's gran'ma does," said Edwina sweetly.

"I shan't play mother an' gran'ma 'nother single minute," declared Harriet crossly, after Edwina had rigorously enforced her old-fashioned ideas of baby-tending to the extent of putting on the socks again. "You've gone an' waked him up now, an' you'll just see 'at he'll cry in about five minutes."

"No, he won't, b'ess him!" giggled Edwina. "Just look at him laugh, Harry; ain't he too cunnin'?"

The Puffer baby's blue eyes were very wide open by this time, his pink fists struggled powerfully with his blankets, while his small, indeterminate features writhed and reddened ominously.

"Let's wheel him fast!" ordered Harriet, with an apprehension born of experience. "There! what did I tell you?"

The baby was growing suspicious and indignant as his wrathful roars plainly indicated. "Jounce him, Ed—jounce him hard in front, an' pound his rattle-box on the edge of the carriage! I'll run awful fast"

A slight cessation of the infantile disapproval evidenced the infantile surprise, but the slow process of turning around intervened with disastrous results. Harriet's red lips set themselves in firm lines. "Are your hands clean, Ed?" she demanded resourcefully.

"Pretty clean, I guess."

"Put your finger in his mouth, then; 'may be that'll stop him."

But it didn't. The situation was growing serious. "If I could lift him out," murmured Harriet doubtfully, "may be he'd stop."

"Don't you das'!" cried Edwina.

"Do you das' me, Ed Puffer?"

"No, I don't das' you; I shouldn't das' to das' you, 'cause you'd do it right off. But you mustn't!"

"Who said so? Ma didn't say I mustn't take him out."

"She meant it; you know she did."

"She thought he wouldn't cry, an' he's cryin'."

There was no denying this poignant fact. The two little girls sang, jounced, coaxed, patted and pleaded in vain. The Puffer baby had mistaken the period of his nap for a much longer one. He had apparently quite forgotten his late milky and complacent condition.

"Poor little sing, he finks he's hungry," said Edwina pityingly.

"An' it's just exactly as bad for us as if he really was," agreed Harriet gloomily. "He's getting purple in the face, now."

Edwina burst into discouraged tears. "I wish ma would come," she wailed. "I'm awful scared when he yells like that."

"I'm not scared," said Harriet stoutly; "but he's makin' such a ter'ble noise that we've gotta do somethin'." They had reached the corner of maternal designation once more, and instead of turning around she pushed the carriage determinedly into the next street

"Where you goin'?" demanded Edwina, with wide eyes; "Ma said——"

"I'm goin' to take him to Miss Cynthy's house," said Harriet doggedly. "She likes dolls most as much as we do, an' I guess she'll like babies, too. Anyway, I'm goin'."

* * *

Miss Cynthia was sitting in the shade of the roses on her front piazza. She was dressed in a crisp, lace-trimmed muslin gown, and one of the newest magazines lay open in her lap. She was experiencing the exhilarating satisfaction peculiar to one who has ventured herself on a perilous enterprise and won out. Nellie Ryan was again her smiling self, and the repentant William, after a suitable period devoted to the consumption of humble-pie, was frequenting the back porch of the Breyfogle mansion as before.

Abby Whiton watched them there of an evening with grim amusement. "No wonder her victuals air tasty," she had commented; "they'd ought to be: 'f you could see the butter she dashes in. But if you c'n stan' it I s'pose I kin. I'll bet I'll beat her at her own game before fall. She ain't willin' to whirl in an' work the way I be. My las' sponge-cake beat hers all holler."

TO BE CONTINUED

THE WORSTED FLEISHER'S BEST YARNS

The time spent in knitting and crocheting is both pleasant and profitable. Machine-made garments do not equal those knitted or crocheted by hand, in softness, beauty, and distinctive elegance—when the best yarns are employed.

The "Fleisher" Yarns combine all the excellent qualities that are required—evenness, elasticity and loftiness. The colors are bright and lasting.

If you use The "Fleisher" Yarns you can be sure that the working will be a pleasure and the finished result satisfactory.

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

Your dealer should carry them.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL" mailed for four tickets from The "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B," PHILADELPHIA

HOW TO BECOME A NURSE

WE have equipped thousands of earnest women now in successful practice, endorsed by physicians and patients, and earning $12 to $30 weekly. We teach this profession by correspondence.

An interesting booklet that will make clear to you the aims and methods which have made the Chautauqua School pre-eminent in its field will be gladly mailed at your request.

THE CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING,
341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

WOODBURY'S SOAP CREAM POWDER FACIAL FOR FACE

THE

A dry crackly skin is an abomination; and so unnecessary. Woodbury's Facial Soap acts as a balm while cleansing. You'll remark the difference instantly.

Send 10 cts. for samples of all four preparations.

The Andrew Jergens Co., Sole Licensees, Cin. O.

OUR FREE BOOKLET ON MUSIC LEARNING AT HOME FOR PIANO OR GAN VIOLIN, GUITAR, BANJO, CORNET & MANDOLIN.

U. S SCHOOL OF MUSIC Box 7-D, 19 Union Square, New York

Jesus, Shepherd, Lord and King

Psalm 23 and John 10: 1-14.

MY Shepherd, Lord, hath bought a fold,
And makes me in green fields recline;
He leads me by sweet waters, cold,
For I am his, and know him mine.

My weary soul from sin restored,
He leads in paths of righteousness;
Thy voice I hear and follow, Lord,
For thy name's sake, good Shepherd, bless!

Yea though I walk death's shadow land,
No evil, Master, shall I fear,
Thy staff is grasped within my hand,
And thy protecting rod is near.

Though earthly foes my peace assail,
A table there dost thou prepare;
Nor Satan's hosts shall e'er prevail,
My cruse to fail, my cup to snare.

Thy goodness and thy mercy sure
Shall follow me through all my days,
And when I dwell in mansions pure,
I'll sing thy love, resound thy praise.

BEVERLY KINNEAR.

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

The quantity of the food taken is not the measure of its nourishment. The quality is what counts. Many babies take large quantities of food and get a small amount of nourishment. Mellin's Food babies take a small quantity of food and get a large amount of nourishment. Send for our book "Mellin's Food Babies."

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Stewart's Iron fence

The best kind of fence for lawns, churches, cemeteries, etc., because of its strength and permanency—not affected by wind, storm nor cold. No repairs. Many artistic, substantial, appropriate designs. Cost less than wood. New designs in Lawn Furniture. Catalogues of both. Write us. We are the largest manufacturers of iron fence and lawn furniture in the world.

Agents wanted in every town.
The Stewart Iron Works Co.
Dept. W, Cincinnati, O.

Highest Awards World's Fair 1904.

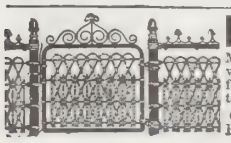
"Hello Polly"

Parrots are the most jolly, sociable and interesting of all home pets. We import great numbers of choice, young, hand raised birds which are unsurpassed, and we guarantee every bird to learn to talk.

Price $3.90 Each

and upwards, if ordered before Aug. 1st, including shipping case and food for journey. Good cage $1.40. Illustrated catalogue free if you mention this paper. Imported German Canaries $2.40 each. Complete bird book 25c.

IOWA BIRD CO., Des Moines, Ia.



LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address

COILED SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D Winchester, Ind.

NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A veterinary specific for wind, throat and stomach troubles. STRONG RECOMMENDS. $1 per can. Dealers or by Express prepaid.
The Newton Horse Remedy Co.
Toledo, Ohio.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-97 Washington St. Chicago

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Recent Romance

SEVERAL of the most popular issues of recent fiction have had for their motive, the fidelity of man and woman respectively, to the marriage vow. In one, a beautiful, brilliant, erratic girl, child of genius and feeling, badly brought up, and utterly undisciplined, is married to a man of heroic mold, foremost in the government of a great land, and supremely devoted to his will o' the whisp of a wife. Few more interesting characters than these two have ever been shown on a page of romance. Eventually and almost incredibly, for she adores her husband, the wife yields to temptation and becomes unfaithful. Yet in the end, the man pardons her, and her dying hours are soothed by his matchless tenderness and magnanimous love. And every reader is glad, and no one would have forgiven William Ashe, had he not at last relented to poor, suffering, half-maddened Lady Kitty.

In Double Harness, by Anthony Hope, similar problems are presented, and in each instance, the husband pardons the offense of the wife. But in The Master Word, as in The Mettle of the Pasture, the wife, against whom an offense is committed, remains implacable.

In The Secret Woman, a strong and terrible work, having for its setting a quiet English landscape, a husband's fault leads to his murder at the hands of his wife, and a train of tragic sequences follow fast on the heels of this fearful scene.

The question arises—Which is the more forgiving sex, man's or woman's? Sin is sin, by whomsoever committed. Broken law inevitably is followed by penalty. Somebody shall suffer if people break their vows. But which is the more generous, which has the less adamantine heart! The novelists do not answer this question, though they raise it.

Books Received

The Heart of the World, a Story of Christian Socialism, by Charles M. Sheldon, author of In His Steps," etc. This is the beautiful story which lately appeared as a serial in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is now presented in attractive book form: 265 pages, cloth covers. Price $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago, and Toronto, publishers.

Captains of the World, by Gwendolin Overton. It was Carlyle who said, "The leaders of industry are virtually the captains of the world." In this tale of industry, corporations, strikes, labor and capital, the author has woven a story interesting in detail, opening with a very realistic description of work and workmen in the rolling-mills. Price $1.50. Published by The Macmillan Co., New York.

JOHN'S VISION

By MRS. M. BAXTER

THE glimpses given us into the future of the blessed are not many, and no word is spoken which would lead us to look forward to personal gratification. It is those who no longer live unto themselves on earth who can appreciate the blessedness of a heaven, the centre of which is Him who pleased not Himself (Rom. 15:3). Joy in God makes heaven, and the place and the surroundings are of comparatively little account. The people of Israel who have been true to God in times of trouble, and who are true to God in the beginning of the Millennium, with all who shall be set on the right hand of Christ when he shall sit on the throne of his glory, will inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world (Matt. 25: 34), and have the joy of seeing and living under the righteous rule of Christ.

But they that wait for Christ, to whom he will appear a second time without sin unto salvation, will have been caught up to meet him (I Thess. 4: 17) before the time of the tribulation. They have no portion on the earth but tribulation (John 16: 33); the Lord is their portion. They have learned to take his place on earth, of shame and reproach; "despised and rejected of men," and having suffered with him, they will also reign with him (Rom. 8: 17; II Tim. 2: 12). Having on earth taken by faith the place to which the death and resurrection of Christ has raised them—to sit with him in heavenly places in Christ Jesus (Eph. 2: 6), they have passed their examination. "Heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may also be glorified together." There is little doubt that while the fact that we are saved at all is only of pure grace, and that we stand only and wholly in Christ, and not in ourselves, before God, yet that the faithfulness of our response and our obedience in suffering with him will determine in great measure our position hereafter.

We read of the Bride, and of the virgins, her companions, of them which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb, and of his servants which serve him. These are distinctions which show how different the future of some of God's children will be from that of others, and yet the joy of each will be full, up to their measure of appreciation of Christ. "He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom," said John the Baptist, "but the friend of the Bridegroom which standeth and heareth him rejoiceth greatly because of the Bridegroom's voice: this is my joy, therefore, is fulfilled" (John 3: 29). The friend of the Bridegroom is not the Bride, and the virgins are not the Bride, nor the guests, nor the servants, and yet all have their part at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

"Having the glory of God." The marriage garments were the righteousness of the saints (Rev. 19: 8), but now she has royal garments—"the glory of God." The Bride has understood; she has left her own glory, in leaving her own people and her father's house; her glory upon earth has been to deny herself and take up her cross and follow him who received not glory from men (John 5: 4). She has accepted the withering of the glory of the flesh, as the breath of God has come upon it; she has submitted to the pruning of the great Husbandman (John 15: 2); she has not shrunk from the Refiner's fire (Mal. 3: 2, 3; I Peter 1: 6, 7); she has chosen as her portion to be with Christ, "despised and rejected of men" (Isa. 53: 3)—to be not of the world as Christ was not of the world (John 17: 14-16); and now she has thus confessed Christ before men, she is confessed by him before the angels of God: She has the "glory of God." Light emanates from her; her "light was like unto a stone most precious, as it were a jasper stone, clear as crystal." The sun and the moon were no longer needed: "the glory of God did lighten it [the city], and the lamp thereof is the Lamb" (Rev. 21: 23).

God's spiritual house is composed of living stones (I Peter 2: 5); stones—the most material, immovable things we can think of and yet "living stones." Every stone is a living worshiper; the very atmosphere is worship—"the Lord God, the Almighty, and the Lamb, are the temple thereof." The foundations of the walls of the city were adorned with all manner of precious stones—the very stones which formed the breastplate of the High Priest (Ex. 28:17-20).

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Please send in Coupon Subscriptions as soon as received. We will credit you with all you send in. Subscriptions run from the date of receipt until January 1, 1906. Hence, every day's delay means a loss to the new subscriber.

Send for as many Coupons as you may need. They will be sent to you free of charge. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

TO MAKE ICE CREAM

In ten minutes simply stir the contents of one package of

Jell-O Ice Cream Powder

into a quart of milk and freeze. No cooking; nothing else to add. Perfectly pure and wholesome. Approved by the Pure Food Commissioners. Highest award at St. Louis Exposition. The best families in the land are using it. Costs next to nothing.

Four Kinds: Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry and Unflavored

At all grocers or by mail, two packages for 25c., enough for a gallon of ice cream.

Write for recipe book with colored illustrations, free. Issued April 15, 1905.

The Genesee Pure Food Co., LeRoy, N. Y.

Nothing equals Jell-O for making Jelly desserts. 6 flavors.

Invest your money

where it is absolutely safe and brings good returns.

Money placed with us isn't merely deposited—it's invested at 5% interest and still remains your money. You can w draw it at any time without advance no and the interest continues up to the very it is withdrawn.

Get our free booklet and read about t safe and profitable form of investment.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
Dept. E, Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

5% 5% 5% 5

$1 00 FOR A SAF

You are mighty poor if you have nothing in home or office that is worth protection from and thieves. An investment in a safe is pr cheap insurance. Lasts a lifetime.

MEILINK'S IMPROVED VAULT

is made in many sizes for valuable papers, for jewelry, for the home, and for professional or business use. We will place in your home or office, for $1.00, at our risk, the only practical small safe made. Meilink's Improved Vault is backed up with the most rigid guarantee ever offered by any company, not only for fire, but for water, against swelling of the walls, rusting, dampness and other troubles common to small safes. Write at once for catalogue and full particulars.

MEILINK MFG. COMPANY
Desk 1020, Toledo, Ohio

BOMOSA COFFEE
BEST CROWN

BIG INCOME

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WE for getting orders for our Celebrated Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and tracts. For full particulars and S Terms address at once Mr. P. B., c

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA C
P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New

GINSENG THE GREAT MONEY MA

A quarter acre to-day is w $10,000, and the demand creasing. My method of culture insures succes started five years ago, sales now exceed $10,0 tell you how to do as well for 5c. Write to T. H. SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Ave., Louisville,

STARK FRUIT BOO

shows in NATURAL COLORS accurately describes 216 varieties fruit. Send for our terms of distributi

We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana.

$5.80 A DAY is the average made by agents se our COOKER and line of KITC SPECIALTIES. Free samples. Write at once.
H. S. ROBINSON, 899 Jefferson Ave., Toledo,

Agent's Outfit Free.—Rim Strai fits any pan. Agents make 3 to 5 dol per day. Large catalogue new goods f RICHARDSON MFG. CO. Dept. 6, BATH,

The Moralities of Life

CRITICS of Christianity frequently bring the charge against it, that it is concerned with beliefs rather than with conduct. They allege that a man may lead an evil and corrupt life and yet be eligible for membership in a Christian church, if he holds orthodox doctrines. The charge is based on a superficial conception of Christianity and is utterly false. The mistake arises from the fact that Christ's principles are radical and go to the root of the evil. The sinner does not need so urgently a reform of his outward life, a restraint of his vicious propensities, as he does to have those propensities eradicated, to have the desires eliminated which produce the sins that mar his outward life. A patient who has an eruption on his skin might be surprised at his physician giving him no lotion to apply to it, but giving him, instead, medicine to purify the blood. The eruption, the physician tells him, is merely a symptom, a sign of the disease. He will cure the disease and the eruption will soon disappear.

Out of the heart," Christ says, proceed the crop of sins and crimes which are the curse of life. Get a new heart and the life will be cleansed. A favorite illustration of Mr. Moody's was that of a pump that gave out bad water. The owner is told that a family having drunk that water fell ill with fever and some members of it died. "Well," he says,

I will paint the pump, I will put a new handle, and make it look well." But the adviser says: "No, that will do no good. You must purify the water, or put the pump in some other place." Reformation of life is not enough. A man may stop swearing, stop drinking, stop cheating, and yet not be a Christian. If he has the desire for these things, the remedy has not gone far enough, and he is liable to return to them. Christianity does concern itself with conduct, and takes the surest means of making it good by purifying the spring of conduct. Christ told his disciples that their righteousness must exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees, and that there were sins that were not visible to men, but were culpable because they were committed in the heart.

It would seem, from the list which Paul gives in his letter to the Ephesians, that the same sins were prevalent in Ephesus at that time, as exist among us to-day. He warns his readers against lying, stealing, corrupt talking, malice, bitterness and selfishness. He remembered that they were surrounded by people who were given to these things and that they were but recently converted. It would be hard to lead a new life in their old associations; but he urges them to put on "the new man which is created in righteousness." If they allowed the spirit that was in them to control their lives, there would soon be an end of such evils. It is so still. The Spirit quickens the conscience, and one who is under its guidance perceives how sinful are habits that formerly were regarded as venial. It is not repression that is needed; it is a more eager pursuit of holiness.

Every one of the sins Paul mentions is an evil in itself. The man who indulges in any of them injures himself. They are hindrances in the upward path, which is the true course of every converted man.

The true remedy for these evils, some of which cleave to the Christian by force of habit, is a more intense spiritual life. It is the desire to be like Christ which tells. Every man who sincerely sets himself to grow more and more into his image becomes transformed. To get his spirit, to be like his life, to strive to become such as he was—this is the remedy for the sins that cling to us and debase us. The two natures that are within us are perpetually at war. But to every man who strives to develop the higher nature there comes power. Christ sympathizes with him and holds out the helping hand. The contrast between the sins that Paul enumerates and the characteristics of Christ's life is radical. In seeking to follow him, to imitate him, these sins are sloughed off. As in the struggle for success, in art, or in business, every habit or indulgence which retards a man is easily abandoned; so in the effort to become like Christ, the sins that hinder us are given up, until at last, as in a mirror, we reflect the character of the Lord, and become transformed into the same image.

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for June 18. Eph. 4: 25-32.

Y. M. C. A. Work in Japan

Many people have been interested in the article (which appeared in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD) regarding the work of the Young Men's Christian Association in the Japanese Army. The efforts of the Association in the United States Army and Navy, have been productive of so much lasting good, that it is hoped that this attempt to carry the same benefits to the Mikado's troops may not be hampered by lack of funds. Fully $30,000 are needed to carry forward this work for the present year, and as obviously it would be impossible to secure the entire amount in Japan, the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations is endeavoring to raise $20,000 of it in this country. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are invited to contribute.

(Signed) Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D.D., Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., Rev. Amory H. Bradford, D. D., Robert E. Speer, John Willis Baer.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Please send in Coupon Subscriptions as soon as received. We will credit you with all you send in. Subscriptions run from the date of receipt until January 1, 1906. Hence every day's delay means a loss to the New Subscriber.

Send for as many Coupons as you may need. They will be sent to you Free of Charge. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

How Quickly Sound Travels

The steam whistle is heard when the weather is foggy or clear, hot or cold, windy or calm. It is sometimes louder than at other times, but it always takes three seconds to travel the 3,000 feet from the factory to my house. We often hear also an echo of the whistle, which comes two seconds later than the first sound. This is the same sound coming by a roundabout journey 5,000 feet long. It travels first 1,000 feet to a hill beyond, and then is sent back 1,000 feet to our house. During a recent thunderstorm, I noticed a flash of lightning, and counted ten seconds before the sound of the thunder was heard. This showed me that the storm was about 10,000 feet, or about two miles away. - From June St. Nicholas.

BOOK OF BOOKS

Over 30,000,000 Published.

An Oakland lady who has a taste for good literature, tells what a happy time she had on "The Road to Wellville." She says:

"I drank coffee freely for eight years before I began to perceive any evil effects from it. Then I noticed that I was becoming very nervous, and that my stomach was gradually losing the power to properly assimilate my food. In time I got so weak that I dreaded to leave the house—for no reason whatever but because of the miserable condition of my nerves and stomach. I attributed the trouble to anything in the world but coffee, of course. I dosed myself with medicines, which in the end would leave me in a worse condition than at first. I was most wretched and discouraged—not 30 years old and feeling that life was a failure!

"I had given up all hope of ever enjoying myself like other people, till one day I read the little book, "The Road to Wellville." It opened my eyes, and taught me a lesson I shall never forget and cannot value too highly. I immediately quit the use of the old kind of coffee and began to drink Postum Food Coffee. I noticed the beginning of an improvement in the whole tone of my system, after only two days' use of the new drink, and in a very short time realized that I could go about like other people without the least return of the nervous dread that formerly gave me so much trouble. In fact my nervousness disappeared entirely and has never returned, although it is now a year that I have been drinking Postum Food Coffee. And my stomach is now like iron—nothing can upset it!

"Last week, during the big Conclave in San Francisco, I was on the go day and night without the slightest fatigue; and as I stood in the immense crowd watching the great parade that lasted for hours, I thought to myself, 'This strength is what Postum Food Coffee has given me!'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

The little book, "The Road to Wellville," may be found in every pkg.

IGNORANCE—Prejudice, Lack of Common Sense
WOMEN WITH BRAINS know that Pearline
SOAK and RINSE (boil if you prefer). Avoids the washboard's wear and tear.
THE DIRECTIONS ON THE PACKAGE ARE ALWAYS FOLLOWED BY Intelligent Women

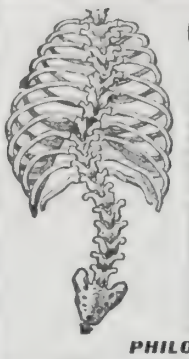
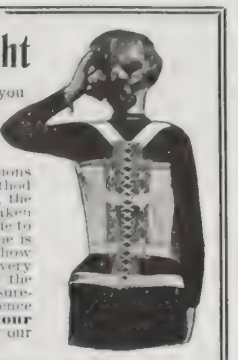
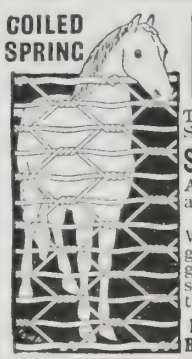
Crooked Spines Made Straight


If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected. Noted physicians in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheldon Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebrae is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction, or refund your money at the end of thirty days' trial. Write for our new book giving full information and references.


PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 207 Sixth St., Jamestown, N. Y.

COILED SPRING FENCE


That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.
SOLD DIRECT TO YOU
At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.
Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.
KITSELMAN BROTHERS, Box 297, Muncie Indiana.

NATURO
Ten Centuries of Physic
Mankind endured the mistaken suffering of physic for over 1,000 years before Twentieth Century science discovered the true inwardness of this vital matter and produced NATURO the closet with the slant, the only sort of construction that is actually comfortable, cleanly, healthful.
Prominent physicians are pronounced in their praise of Naturo. Progressive architects are unanimous in specifying it.
You owe it to yourself to understand this subject. Booklet I., fully illustrated, free on request.

The Naturo Co., Salem, N J .U S.A

City of Matchless, All-Year Climate
SAN JOSE CALIFORNIA
In the heart of the lovely Santa Clara Valley 50 miles south of San Francisco—unexcelled in its scenery, its fruit, its flowers, its mineral springs, excursion drives, universities and observatory. Send 4c. for book to Dept. 222. Chamber of Commerce, San Jose, Cal.

$50.00 Split Hickory
SPECIAL TOP BUGGY TO ORDER
2-year guarantee, sold on 30 days free trial is THE WORLD'S STANDARD 100 points of superiority. Send for 192-page free catalog of vehicles and harness
The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co., (H C Phelps, Pres.) Station 236 Cincinnati, Ohio

$50

No Money Required

until you receive and approve of your bicycle. We ship to anyone on
TEN DAYS FREE TRIAL
Finest guaranteed 1905 Models $10 to $24
with Coaster-Brakes & Puncturelss Tires. 1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes ... $7 to $12
500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8
GREAT FACTORY CLEARING SALE.
RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at good pay. Write at once for catalog and Special Offer.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAGO

WONDERFUL STOVE—BIG MONEY MAKER!
BURNS 90% AIR—ONLY 10% OIL-GAS.
7200 sold one month. Customers delighted with Harrison Valveless Oil-gas Stove. Splendid for cooking; also heating rooms, stores, offices, etc., with Radiator Attch. No wick, dirt, or ashes—no coal bills or drudgery—cheap, safe fuel, 15c to 30c a week should furnish fuel-gas for cooking for small family. Easily operated — absolutely safe—all sizes, $3 up. Write—Catalog FREE and Special Prices. AGENTS WANTED—$40 Weekly. Address World Mfg. Co., 5790 World B'ld'g, Cincinnati, O.

The 'BEST' Light

Portable 100-Candle Power light. Every lamp warranted The most brilliant, economical light made. No grease, dirt, odor or smoke.
AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.
THE BEST LIGHT COMPANY, 3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable.—Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemetery. Catalogue free
KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 445 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

GINSENG
Detailed advice and special instructions regarding its culture. It will pay you to investigate our practical and common sense methods. We supply choicest American Roots and Seeds, at most reasonable prices, help you towards successful cultivation, and pay you highest market price for your Dry Roots. Send stamp for illustrated booklet "E."
NORTH-AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Station C, Louisville, Ky.

Corns

A-CORN SALVE saves cutting risking blood poisoning and growing. Takes corns out by the roots. Safe, sure, quick. 15c at your druggist's or by mail.
Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

"Just eat common sense for breakfast"

Pillsbury's
VITOS
MEAT OF THE WHEAT

A Breakfast Food, with Science Common Sense and Cleanliness behind it.

Only the nutritive, easily digested parts of the very best NORTHWESTERN HARD WHEAT are used. No human hand touches it from field to table. Nothing but spotless, germless machinery throughout every process. No "pre-digesting" or treating with chemicals. Just the wholesome "Meat of the Wheat," ready to cook in a hundred different ways, each one deliciously appetizing. Worthy from every point of view to bear the name of "Pillsbury."

If there is a grocer who cannot supply you, send us his name and we will mail you a FREE SAMPLE

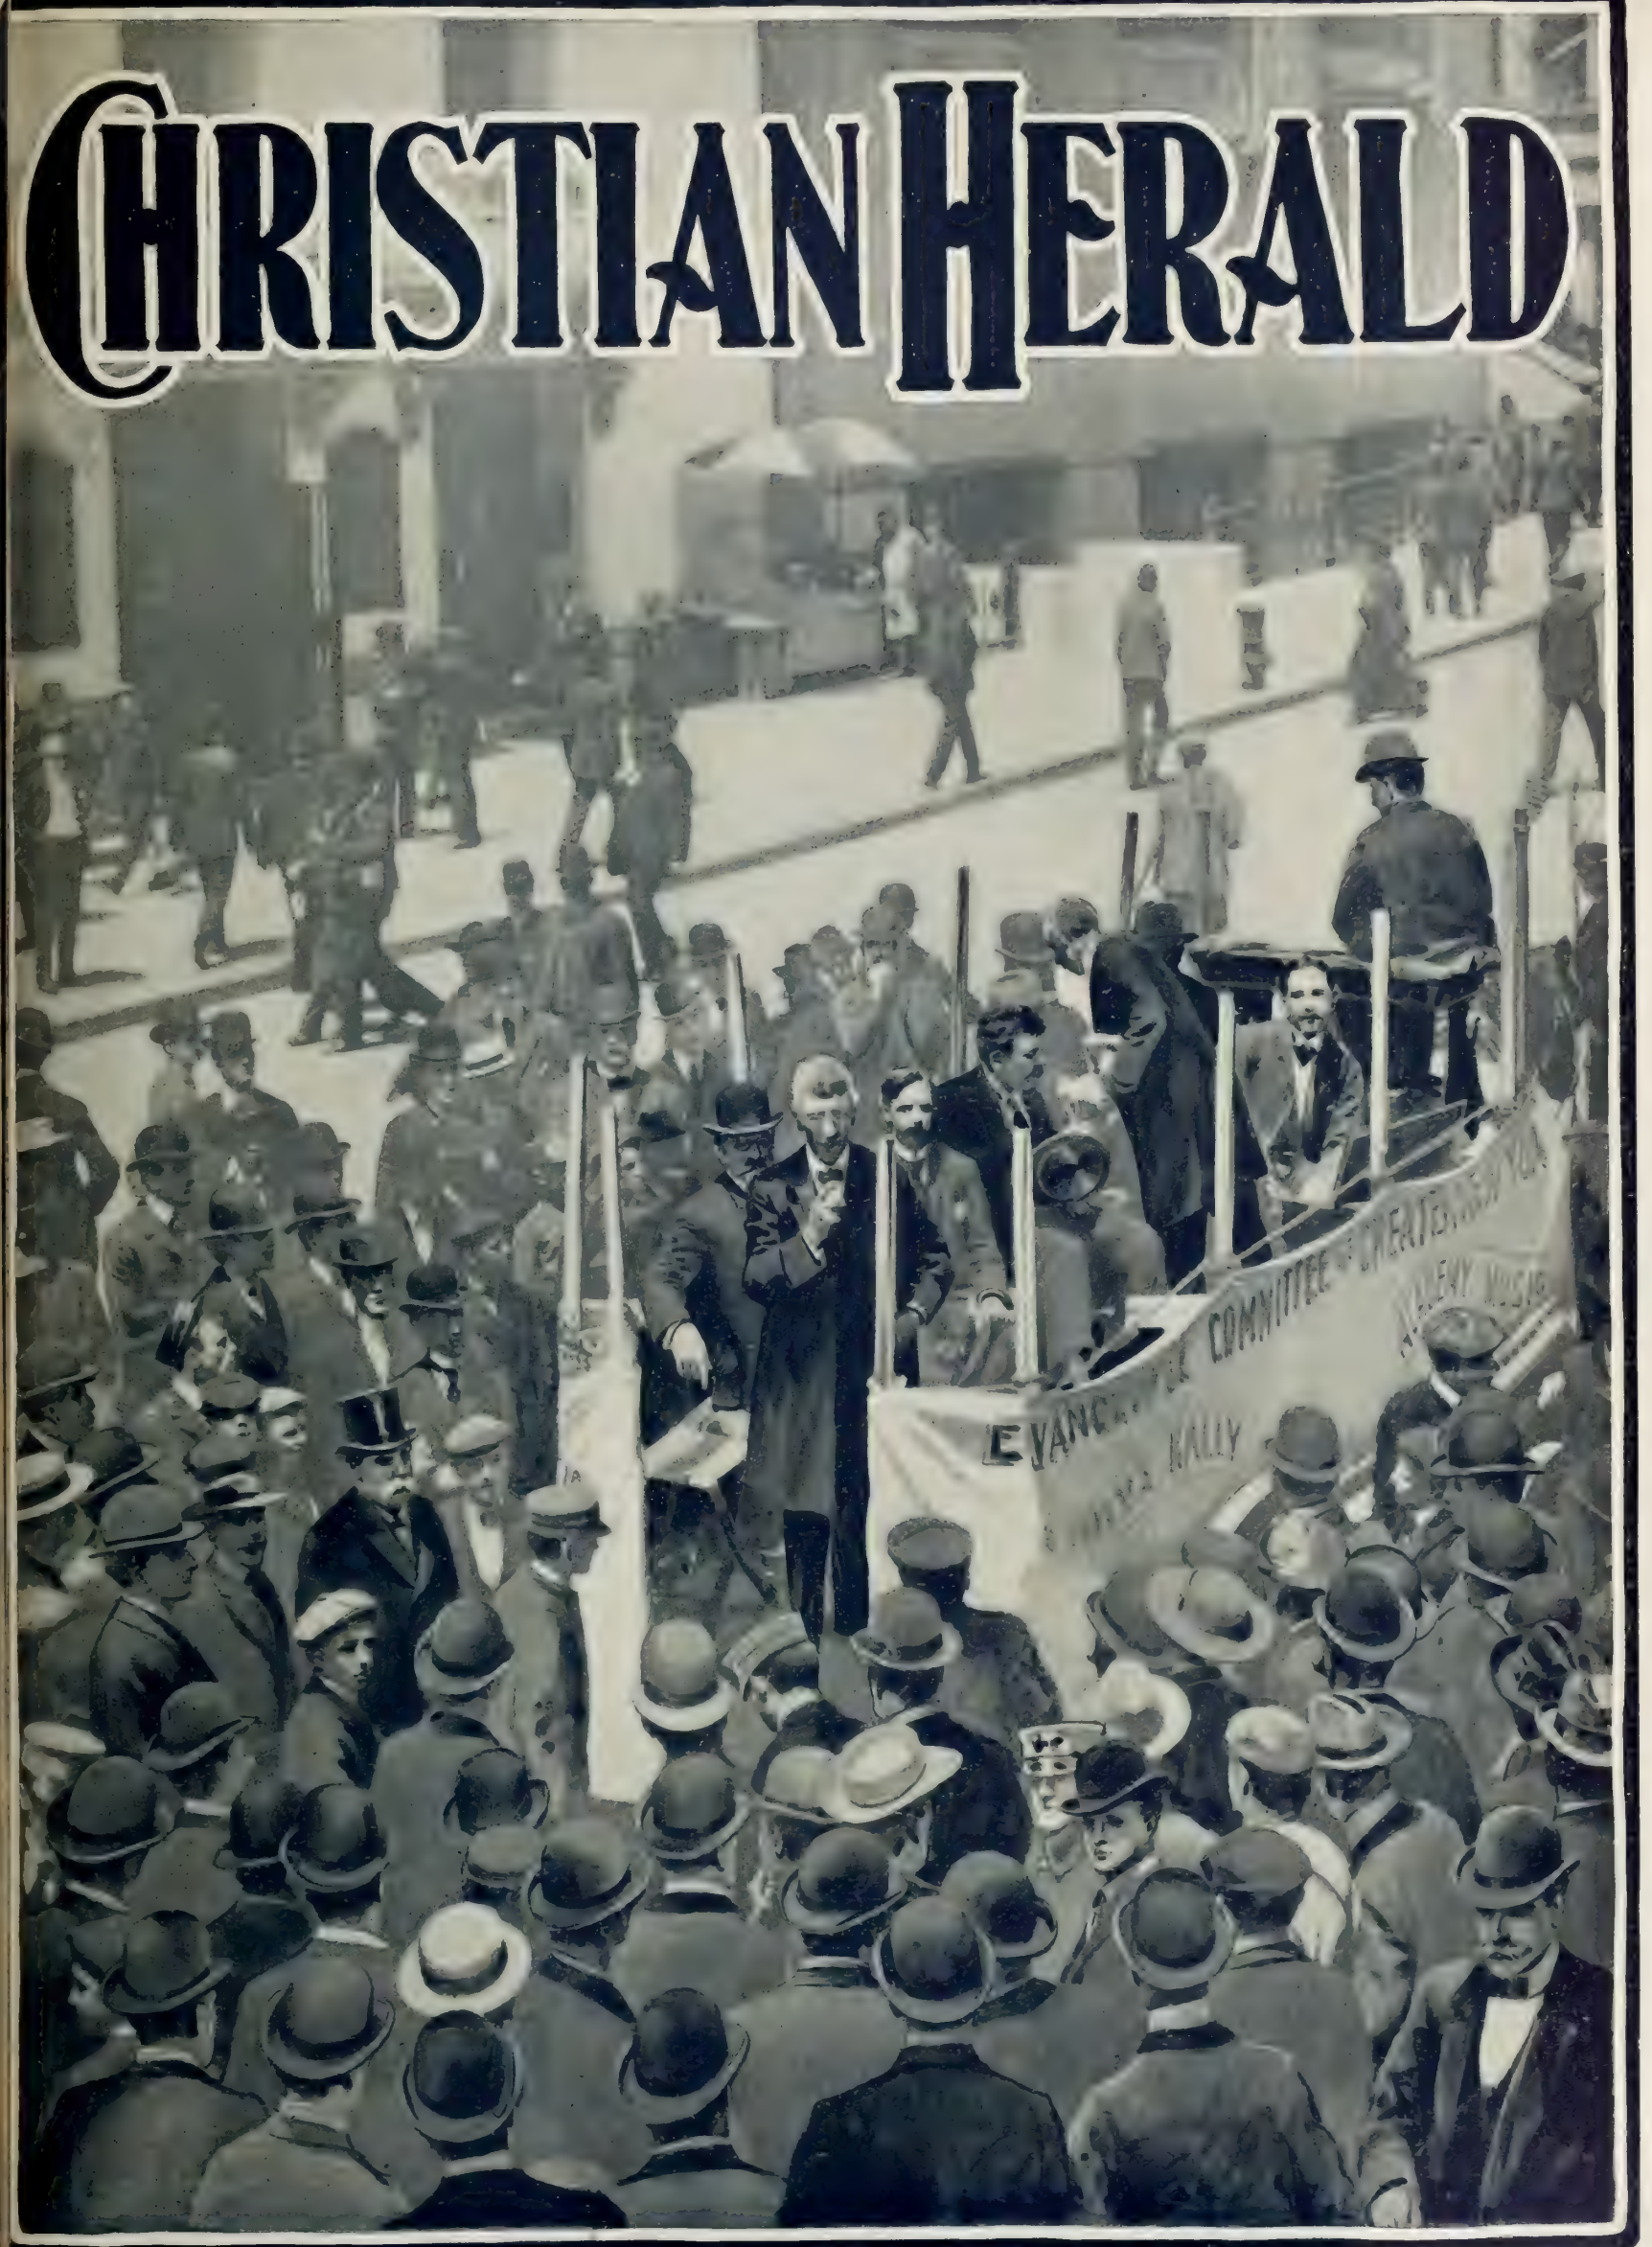
Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co., Ltd.
Dept. G, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

SEAMAN

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JUNE 14, 1905
Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch
VOL. 28—NO. 24. PRICE FIVE CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

CHRISTIAN HERALD



SEE PAGE 522

The Gospel Invades Wall Street—A Service in Front of the Stock Exchange

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

L. K., Springfield, Vt. Suppose I am sailing eastward over the Pacific Ocean and come to the line where a day is dropped, and suppose it is on Friday evening, the next day would be Sunday. Now, if I observe Saturday as the Sabbath, would I have no Sabbath that week?

You would do well in such a case to observe Sunday as the Sabbath. Or if it happened on a Saturday evening, and Sunday was dropped, a Christian would do well to observe Monday. The difficulty you describe would be felt only by Jews and Seventh-day observers. It arises from supposing that God identifies the days as we do. The New Testament view of his character represents him as far above such trivial questions. "The Sabbath was made for man," and he who consecrates the day observed by the Church to his service, fulfils his will. It was not intended to be observed slavishly. You remember that even Christ himself was repeatedly called to account by the Pharisees for violating the Sabbath laws. God looks at the spirit of a man, and if he sees that the man is honest and sincere in his observance, he is satisfied. As Paul said: "He that regardeth the day regardeth it unto the Lord."

S. X., Brooklyn, Has there ever been a naval battle in which more ships were lost than is the recent victory of Admiral Togo in the Korean Straits?

At the Battle of Salamis, in 480 B. C., the Greeks are said to have lost about 40 ships and the Persians 200, exclusive of those that were captured. The English destroyed 14 vessels of the Spanish Armada, in one battle in 1588. Others were captured in the pursuit, and so many were wrecked, that out of 130 ships, only 53 returned to Spain, and these were almost wrecks. At the Battle of Lepanto, in 1571, Don John of Austria, defeated the Turks, who lost 30,000 men, and 100 ships were taken by the Christians, while many others were sunk.

Reader, New York. Will the Jews who reject Christ, be lost in the hereafter, regardless of their exemplary lives?

It is not for us to limit God's mercy. He will act righteously in his judgments. As we can see no way of coming to God except through Jesus Christ, it is our duty to endeavor to bring any Jews we can reach to accept him. Their ultimate fate is in God's hands. When we have done our duty we may refrain from speculating about them. The fact of the danger of rejecting him, should make us earnest, but not to dogmatize.

Mrs. M. E. W., Bessemer, Ala., writes:

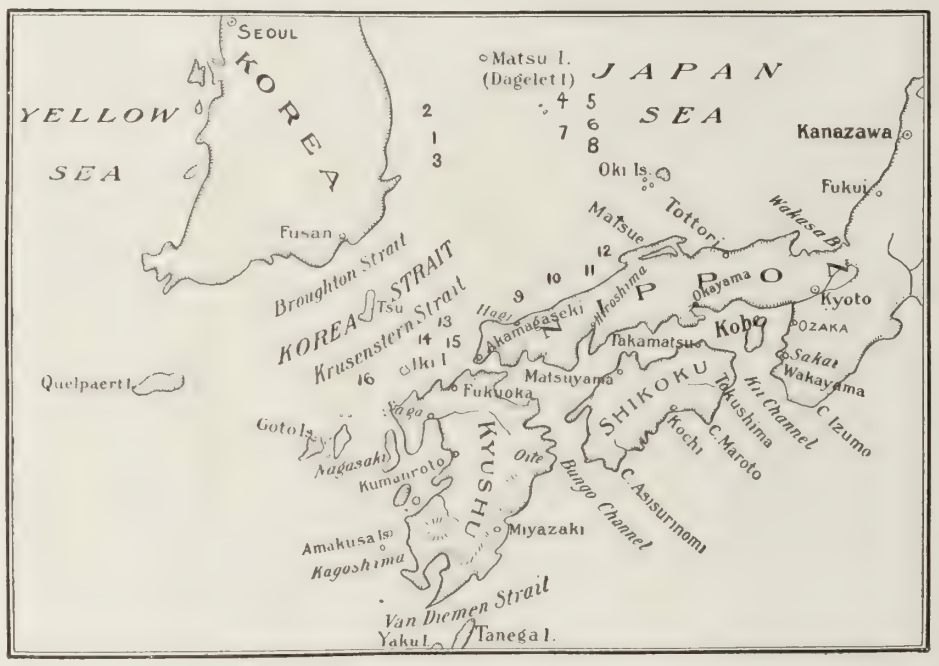
I approve of your wise editorial in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in regard to gifts to the Church. It seems to me that those Congregational ministers have not looked at the great harvest-field aright, or they could not have refused Mr. Rockefeller's gift. Dear souls are starving for the Bread of Life and fast going into Christless graves, and to the judgment, there to face us and say, "You could have told me of Jesus, but you were afraid some of the means were not gotten honorably." This refusal to accept Mr. Rockefeller's money, in my estimation, will encourage those that don't love to give, to continue to oppress the poor, in order to keep all to themselves. I believe that God in his wisdom could use the gift.

A Friend, Brooksburg, Ind. What did Jesus mean when he told his disciples to make to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness (Luke 16: 9).

Probably no passage has been so often the subject of dispute as this. The Revised Version renders it, "Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness." Luther thought it was a caution against avarice. Farrar regarded it as an injunction to care and faithfulness. Taking account of the parable that precedes the passage, it would appear that Christ was showing how a wicked man succeeded in getting friends at his employer's expense. Good men were not nearly so much in earnest. If they used their money in relieving the needs of the poor they would make friends in heaven. It would not open the door of heaven, but it would cause those who had been benefited to give a warm welcome, thus enhancing the joy of that state. Dr. William Taylor used to illustrate it thus: A man whose house has been broken into naturally condemns the burglar; but he would be justified in pointing out to a lazy or incompetent workman, that if he had half the ingenuity the burglar had displayed he would soon make a fortune.

Subscriber, Mobile, Ala. Will you kindly inform me as to the origin of the phrase, "Every tub should stand on its own bottom"? It has been argued that this is taken from the Bible.

It is not from the Bible. You will find it in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Part I, in a slightly different form, viz: "Every fat (or vat) must stand upon his bottom." In a play called "The Man of the World," by Macklin, the phrase is used, "Every tub must stand upon its own bottom."



TOGO'S GREAT NAVAL VICTORY IN THE SEA OF JAPAN

The figures show the localities where the Russian warships sunk or surrendered: viz: 1. Rojestvensky captured on torpedo boat destroyer Biedony. 2. Dmitri Donskoi, sunk. 3. Sriethana, sunk. 4. Oushakoff, sunk. 5, 6, 7, 8. Nicholai I, Orel, Seniavin, and Apraxine, captured. 9. Navarin, sunk. 10, 11, 12. Admiral Nakhimoff, Vladimir Monomach, and Oslyabya, sunk. 13. Kniaz Souvaroff, sunk. 14, 15. Borodino and Alexander III, sunk. 16. Zhemchug, sunk. The localities where the battleship Sissoi Veliki and the cruiser Izumrud were sunk are not indicated.

Reader Olathe, Kan. Can you explain the meaning of Deut. 8: 3, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord?"

As Jesus used the passage in the temptation, he intimated that bread was not sufficient to supply all human needs. His spiritual being needed sustenance, and that was more important for the soul than bread was for the body. When it became a question whether God should be displeased in order that the body should be nourished, Jesus chose to dispense with food. It was more essential to please God. God's words could give more support than could be derived from food.

H. M., Winston, N. C. Is it right for one to remain a member of a church, whose doctrine he does not believe in?

This is a peculiar question. If the man were an unbeliever, and yet attending an orthodox Christian Church, we should say it was right for him to continue, and that he should pray that his spiritual eyes might be opened. On the other hand, if the person be a sincere Christian, and the doctrine preached is unsatisfying to his spiritual nature, he would be justified in seeking some more congenial and helpful church connection.

Subscriber, Athens, N. Y. Is there any profit in the cultivation of violets? If I should raise them, who would purchase them? Where can I get information on the subject?

You should procure and read the book entitled, Violet Culture, by B. T. Galloway, published by A. T. De la Mare Printing and Publishing Co., N. Y., which will give you the information desired.

H. G., Durham. What is the meaning of the term ship-money, as used in English history?

It was a tax imposed at various times for the equipment of a fleet. In 1007, when the Danes were ravaging the English coast, a law was passed, obliging all owners of 310 hides of land to equip a ship for the protection of the country. When the Spanish Armada was about to sail for England, Queen Elizabeth commanded certain towns to fit out men-of-war at their own expense. It is chiefly mentioned in connection with the reign of Charles I. In 1626 Charles required each of the seacoast towns to fit out a given number of vessels. Later the tax was extended to the whole kingdom. It was objected to on account of its being levied by royal authority alone. It was voted illegal by the Long Parliament.

A. H., Pearceley, Ont., Can. Who instituted the custom of releasing a prisoner to the people at the Feast of the Passover?

It was a usage in Jerusalem, probably derived from the Greeks and Romans. The former had such a custom at their Thesmophoriæ, the latter at their Lectisternia. The Romans did this to conciliate the Jews.

M. R. T., Providence, R. I. To what practice does Paul refer, in Corinthians 15: 29, as being baptized for the dead?

Probably a local custom, by which a living person, concerned because a relative had died without being baptized, was baptized as a proxy for the dead person. Paul does not commend the practice, but merely refers to it as a proof that it showed a belief in a life beyond the grave. The whole chapter is devoted to an argument fo future life, and he contends that his ers must have such a belief, otherwise would not think that the dead cou benefited by the act of a living perso

Distant Friend, Kearney, Neb. How can o come a life subscriber to THE CHR HERALD?

Ten dollars is the cost of a life subs tion.

J. L. McD., Camden, N. J. Remembering good and stanch a friend Russia was to ica in a time of national peril, it is a gracious and ungrateful thing for Ame now to rejoice over Russia's downfall. people of that country—" the plain pe as Lincoln phrased it—are as good as race on earth. Have we forgotten so q our sympathy for them in the great fam 1892, when your good journal, THE CHR HERALD, sent the food-ship Leo up the saving thousands of hungry peasant awaking the gratitude of the whole R nation?

No; the events of 1892 are not fo ten, and we believe that American as a whole, have at heart a most k feeling for Russia. One episode of famine relief expedition to which our respondent refers, is very vi recalled by the recent battle i Sea of Japan. Among the sian warships sunk, with mos her officers and crew, was the cruiser Dmitri Donskoi, on b of which, just twelve years the editor and proprietor of journal were presented with stantial tokens of Emperor A ander III.'s appreciation of A ica's relief operations. The D Donskoi was then visiting in A ican waters, and lay in the h of Philadelphia when, on June 1893, Prince Cantacuzene, Russian Minister to Washing standing on her deck in pres of an American Committee, sented to Dr. Talmage and Klopsch, in the name of his perial master, some beautiful p of Oriental inlaid work in sil that given to Dr. Klopsch bei mammoth inkstand of solid sian silver on a salver of the material.

Miscellaneous

S. W. W., Grant's Mill, R. I. It social and benefit organization, and simple.

Any poor Church or Mission nee an organ, address Mrs. S. C. Roe, ville, N. Y., sending credentials some one who can testify to the wo ness and need. The organ is a good in excellent condition.

M. E. S., Dallas, Oreg. An ikon sacred image or likeness, greatly crated by followers of the Russo-G Church, and believed to be capabl performing miracles.

N. G. C., Albany, N. Y. Your quest are outside of our range of inquiry.

A Great Opportunity

WE trust that every reader of T CHRISTIAN HERALD will heartily operate with us in our efforts to grea increase our circulation, by placing to best advantage the coupons published our issue of May 31st, offering T CHRISTIAN HERALD to new subscribers u January 1, 1906, for the nominal sum twenty-five cents.

We make this great financial sacri with a view to raising the circulation THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to as near a M lion Copies Weekly as possible, in the c fident expectation that the new read thus temporarily secured, will find T CHRISTIAN HERALD so full of interest t they will be glad to enrol themselves, the expiration of the trial term, on list of permanent subscribers, at the re lar subscription price of $1.50 per annu

Help us all you can.

NEW YORK, JUNE 14, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

Togo, the Naval Hero of Japan

AS Great Britain has had her Grenville of the Revenge, her Howard, and Nelson of Trafalgar; united Europe her Don John of Austria; .merica her Farragut and Dewey, so Japan ·t now place in the World's gallery of ·al heroes, her Togo Heihachiro, con·ror of the largest fleet that has put tsea since Spain launched the "Invinci· Armada," to sail to its destruction, as Ssia sailed hers to meet its fate in the r·ky Korean Straits.

Besides the number of ships and men ·gaged, the great sea fight of the 27th ·d 28th of last month, marks an epoch in t· world's history. For the first time, ·pedo boats played an active part in a ·ht in the open sea, and demonstrated ·ir effectiveness, in regular battle; for t· first time, the deadly submarine, deadly ·, the terror it inspires in the hearts of s·men, as well as by the destruction it ·uses with its unseen torpedoes, has been ·ed. And again the effectiveness of ·reparation and striking the first blow, ·ve been proved as of the first impor·tice in warfare. The battle was half ·n for the many-rayed banner of the ·ing Sun, when, as the fog drifted up·rd and showed to the Russian captains ·e long, encircling battle line of Japan, ·epared for instant combat. The Rus·ns fought bravely, and deserve well ·e praises that the world bestows on those ·o meet their death like men.

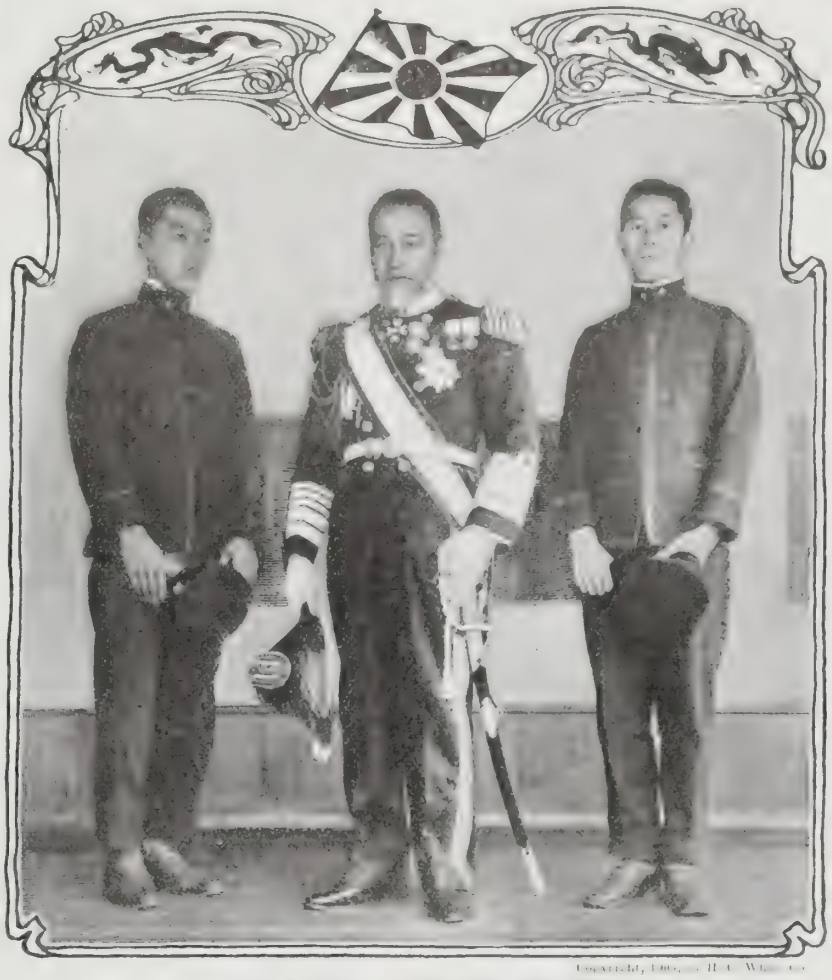
Japan's victory was not won in a mo·ent. It dates back through all the ·ars she has been making preparations ·r the supreme moment that came to her · her own coast, and when she was ·rtunate in having at the head of her per·t fleet, one of the great silent captains · history, backed by the veterans of two ·rs, his "own men" behind the guns, ·nd, many of the Russian seamen, it has ·t yet got their sea legs, and whom the ·t hors de combat. Togo Heihachiro ·longed to the great, many-branched ·tsuma clan, a clan that has been ·ted for centuries in Japan for its ·mous fighting men, among the ·eatest of the swordsmen of the ·murai, who carved their way to ·me with the long, two-handed ·apons of the type that are pre·rved in European museums as relics · the Middle Ages. Togo came to the world at a critical time in ·pan. The old feudalism and mod·n progress were then at death grips, ·d the country, torn with dissension ·nong her nobles, resounded with ·e tread of marching men. Togo's ·n family played an important ·rt in this great civil war; and one · his near relatives became one of ·ippon's most distinguished generals. · became a descendant of a war·or race, Togo was brought up with ·e one idea, to make a good fighter, · become a leader of men, and some ·y, when Nippon had her own black ·ips, a great admiral.

He received his first technical ·val instruction at the new Japan·ese Naval Academy, called the Heigakuryo, a school that later became of great importance. Togo was among the first graduates, and had as his classmates several of the admirals who have won fame for themselves in the present war, including the present Minister of Naval Affairs, who has done so much in making the Japanese fleet ready for its task. Like so many other famous men, he did nothing startling during his school course. He made a fair record, and was a good student. The Mikado was fired with the ambition of building an efficient navy that, for its size, would be second to none other afloat in its modern equipment and management. Quite a large number of the most promising naval cadets were sent to Annapolis and to England for more advanced instruction than they could receive in their own country. Togo was in the party selected to go to England. He was placed on board Her Majesty's Ship of War, Worcester, and remained for two years, studying all the details of his profession.

On his return to Japan he threw himself with dauntless enthusiasm into the task of building up the navy on modern lines. His work was such that his country regards him as one of the fathers of Japan's present efficient fleet. As a master of detail, nothing was too small, too trivial, to escape his attention. He toiled unceasingly over the dry, technical works on naval construction, and translated them into his native tongue. He was a firm believer in an instructed nation as the basis of a strong navy.

Passing through every grade on the navy list, he at last reached the grade of rear-admiral. This was before the outbreak of the war with China, that has had so much influence on the conduct of the present conflict with the Russian bear. It was Togo who precipitated the conflict. Matters had reached the breaking point, and Togo broke through. He was in command of the Naniwa, when a Chinese fleet was seen making toward the Korean coast, convoying a number of transports. Togo sank the transport Kowshing, and, when he pulled her captain out of the water, he found that it was no other than one of his former comrades on board of the Worcester, in the old days on the Thames. The captain was perfectly cool, took it as the fortune of war, and he was warmly received by Togo. When the news was received at Tokio that Togo had broken loose, so the story runs, a cabinet meeting was at once called. The Minister of Naval Affairs, who considered Togo as one of his proteges, said that Togo had got them into a bad fix, but that now the only thing before them was war, and war it was. The world knows the story too well for repetition, with its first capture of Port Arthur from the Chinese, and the bloody Battle of the Yalu. Togo bore a conspicuous part throughout, and made a firm place for himself in the hearts of his fellow-countrymen, and in the esteem and confidence of the Emperor, a confidence that has been

CONTINUED ON PAGE 519



Copyright, 1905, by H. C. Wh[illegible]

VICE-ADMIRAL TOGO AND HIS SONS
From a recent photograph

ROJESTVENSKY'S FLAGSHIP, THE KNIAZ SOUVAROFF

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D.D., LL.D.*

EXCUSES FOR PROCRASTINATION

TEXT;

"Suffer me first" Luke 9: 59

CHRIST was the absolutely accurate analyst of the character of all whom he met. He needed not that anyone should tell him anything about those with whom he came in contact, for he knew what was in man. In this respect he is the unique character in the human race. Three men, two of them on their own motion, and one of them by Christ's invitation, were seekers after him. The first was enthusiastic, impulsive, and somewhat unreflecting. In this spirit he declared his willingness to follow the Master; but Jesus would have him count the cost, affirming that, unlike the foxes and the birds, the Son of Man had not where to lay his head. The second candidate was called by the Master to be a disciple. He excused himself, saying, "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father." If his father were still living, this request meant that he desired to remain with and care for his father until he should die. If his father were actually dead, the request meant that following Jesus would be postponed until the expiration of the seven days of lamentation before burial, or to the end of the year of mourning after burial. Our Lord did not make light of the solemn duty of honoring parents. But he saw that this man put a condition on obeying the divine command; he saw that the excuse was indicative of a divided heart instead of one wholly given to the service of the Master. Duty to a father must not be put before duty to God. Nothing must be permitted, however sacred in itself, to come between us and our duty to God. This second candidate for discipleship needed this rebuke which our Lord so faithfully administered.

The third candidate for discipleship was also a volunteer, but he wished first to bid farewell to those in his home. Elisha, when called by Elijah from the plough, preferred a similar request. But Elisha was firm and determined in his purpose; his request was, therefore, granted. This candidate was fickle and wavering in his resolution; his request was, therefore, denied. No man, putting his hand to the plough, must look back; even looking back shows unfitness for the Kingdom of God. Many persons are apparently well-disposed toward Christ, but they do not recognize the supreme importance of his claims.

The Claims of Business

There are those who say: "Suffer us first to attend to some pressing matter of business." No word of mine will be spoken to depreciate the importance, in their rightful place, of the claims of business or other earthly engagements. We are exhorted to be diligent in business, while we are fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. Rightly understood, there is no conflict between the claims of legitimate business and the duties of following Christ. Both are important and solemn obligations. They ought, however, to be considered and performed in their true order. In his great sermon on the Mount our Lord distinctly commanded us to "Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness." All other things should be subordinate to this aim. No man has a right to put the claims even of the noblest business between him and his duty to his God. When he so does he degrades his business, dishonors himself, and disobeys his Lord. No legitimate business is injured by our service of God. If a man cannot take his religion into his business, he must have a very poor religion or a very bad business; probably he has both.

Many of the merchant princes in the great commercial world to-day, as well as the foremost lawyers, physicians, artists and scholars of the world, are as distinguished for the lowliness and sincerity of their religion as they are for the loftiness of their attainments and the nobility of their character. No man familiar with the facts will deny that the foremost thinkers of to-day in almost all departments of thought and activity are on the side of Jesus Christ. Indeed, it is not too much to say that except a man be religious he cannot have true nobility and complete symmetry of character and culture. The man who makes his business his God is an abominable idolater. Such a man will fare worse standing before Christ's judgment seat than the heathen who never heard of Christ and his love.

Again, there are those who say, "Suffer us first to have more of this world's pleasure and then we will seek God." The men and women who so say are the devil's dupes. They assume that religion is synonymous with gloom. No assumption could possibly be farther from the truth. There may be gloomy, melancholy, dismal and morose Christians. Their long faces, sullen looks, and gloomy words are not because of, but in spite of, such true religion as they possess. What is there in true religion to make a man gloomy? Does the knowledge that a man's sins are forgiven, that he is at peace with God, with himself and with his fellow-men, that all things will work together for good to him on earth, and that he will enjoy eternal felicity in heaven tend to make life here and now an experience of sadness and gloom? I have never known the presence of religion to give sadness, but I have known its absence to make life a foretaste of perdition. I have heard men on beds of sickness, when death stared them in the face, calling in fearful agony upon God for mercy.

Religion Misunderstood

Religion is the synonym of joy. The psalmist, who had wandered from God and was now seeking his face, earnestly prayed, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation." The Apostle Paul, who had known in his service of God perils by land and by sea, and persecutions bitter and prolonged, exhorts us to "Rejoice evermore." Religion is sunshine, hope, peace, love and joy. It is a well of water within us, springing up into everlasting life. It gives a silver lining to every cloud. It gives ability in business, a charm in social life, fitness for artistic culture, and a unique glory to all earthly experiences. It alone makes life worth living. If you would know the highest pleasure possible this side of heaven, give your heart unreservedly to God and repose trustingly on his precious promises.

Again, there are those who say, "Suffer us first to have more and better feeling and then we will follow Christ." Language of this character Christian workers constantly hear. Such language greatly tries their patience. Waiting for more and better feeling before beginning the service of Christ is one of the deadliest delusions of Satan. Our union with Christ is not dependent upon frames and feelings. The man who trusts in his feelings and not in Christ, dishonors religion and deprives himself of its richest blessings. Such a man is exalted to heaven to-day and depressed to hades to-morrow; such a man's religion is dependent upon his dinner and his digestion rather than on his faith and his Lord; such a man is building upon the running sand. We never read in Scripture, "therefore, being justified by feeling, we have peace with God;" but we do read, "being therefore justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." We should stand by faith, not by feeling; live by faith, not by feeling, and hold fast the profession of our faith, not the selfish and often nauseous confession of our feeling. One often wishes that the word feeling were stricken out of our religious vocabulary.

How to be a Christian

What is it to be a Christian? A Christian is one who believes in Jesus Christ as personal Lord and Saviour. He is a man who studies to follow the example and obey the precepts of Jesus Christ. He is one who follows Christ, no matter how he feels. He obeys Christ whether he feels like it or not. What has feeling to do with his faith? He is anchored to the Eternal Rock, Christ Jesus, and not to the shifting sands of personal feeling. I came the other day from Washington to New York on the Pennsylvania Railway. At the Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, all the seats were turned over. Until I neared Jersey City my "feeling" was that I was going toward Washington and not toward New York. But what had my feeling to do with the running of the engine? It sped grandly on, and soon rolled into the station at Jersey City. Had I been as foolish in travel as many men are in religion, I would have gotten off that train and waited until my feeling indicated that I was going toward New York. Had I so done, I probably would be waiting still at some station for this "feeling."

Obey Christ no matter how you feel. If right feeling comes from obedience, accept it and rejoice in it do not wait for it. Move right on in the line of ence, with or without feeling. Do not wait for convictions of sin. It is Christ who saves and no sense of sin. If there be conviction enough of drive you to Christ as your Saviour, you shall be saved. Wait neither for the agonizing convic of sin nor for the ecstatic joys of faith, of which have heard some persons speak. Act on your judg like calm, sensible, intelligent men and women. Christ first, last and always, and rest assured that feeling will come.

Waiting for Knowledge

There are those who refuse to follow Christ, say "Suffer us first to know more of Christ's doctrine." certainly is commendable to desire to know more teaching or doctrine of our divine Lord. But how we know more of that doctrine? Is that doctrine li to be learned by us while we are living in disobedi and even in open rebellion to Jesus Christ? He hin said with marked profundity of wisdom, "If any m willing to do his will he shall know of the teach whether it is of God or whether I speak from mys We have in this passage the formulation of a univ law. In no other way is it possible to get an exp mental knowledge of Christ's doctrine. Obedienc the divine will is necessary to knowledge of di truth. This law applies equally to the acquisition o kinds of knowledge. The student of science must sess the scientific spirit; he must submit to the law which scientific knowledge is acquired. If he will so submit he may become a sciolist, but never a sc tist. The same law applies to the study of music art, of literature, and of knowledge of every kind. you would learn Christ's doctrine you must go to Chr school. He who would walk the lofty heights of knowledge must sit long in lowly obedience at the of Jesus Christ, the world's great Teacher.

There are profound mysteries and difficult probl at present unsolved and unsolvable in the Bible. If Bible be a revelation from God, we must expect i contain truths above our present apprehension. A B which all could fully understand in all its parts we co not receive as God's final revelation. Wherever finite and the Infinite come into contact, insolva problems arise. The difficulty is not so much in divine revelation as it is in the imperfect human ap hension. We admit that many things in the Bible above our reason in its present stage of developme But our reason is not the measure of the highest reas There are probably intelligences so far above us t what is inscrutable to us may be to them thoroug understandable. The book of nature, as well as volume of revelation, is mysterious. No one can g us a satisfactory definition of electricity. No one tell us exhaustively what gravitation is in all its re tions. No one can really explain the essence of matt We can divide matter into three kinds or classes, when asked to define matter the wise man will rem silent, or speak with great caution. Many things in Bible which were once inexplicable are now thoroug understood. Many things which are inexplicable to-d will be explicable to-morrow. It is evermore true th additional light is to break forth from God's Word.

Difficulties in the Bible

But is it fair to speak as if the Bible consisted for t most part of contradictions, conundrums and difficulti Is it quite honest even to imply that the Bible is chie of this character? Are there not in it great and bless truths which are as simple as they are sublime? Augu tine long ago affirmed that if the Bible has depths which an elephant can swim, it also has shallows which a lamb can wade. It is a lamp for simple me rather than a puzzle for learned students. Could an thing be simpler than such words as these, "Come un me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I w give you rest;" "For God so loved the world that gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believe on him should not perish, but have eternal life;" "B lieve on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved. Could any man ask for plainer truths than these? Wh a man comes to me affirming that he refuses to accept Christ because there are things in the Bible which he cannot understand, I have a right to ask him, "Have you obeyed all the commands in the Bible which you do understand?" Why should a man trouble himself about the meaning of additional commands when he refuses to obey those whose meaning is thoroughly clear? Why cannot we not have common sense in religion as we do in matters of daily business? A man does not refuse to ride on trolley cars because he does not exhaustively understand electricity. He does not refuse to cross the ocean because there are a thousand things in navigation of which he is ignorant. Come just now and just as you are into Christ's school. Begin at once the Christian life. Do not wait with the fear that you may not hold out. Trust yourself fully to Christ and he will keep you by his divine grace and by his almighty power, and will give you at last the crown of victory.

*Preached in Calvary Baptist Church, New York.

Hypocrites in the Church

There are also those who say, "Suffer us first to be sure that all professing Christians are not hypocrites." There are men and women who are ready to affirm that all professing Christians are hypocrites. Is this affirmation true? This is a question of fact; it ought to be decided as other questions of fact are decided. It is interesting to know what was Christ's opinion of his immediate disciples, and it is quite safe to affirm that his opinion of Christians to-day does not differ widely from his opinion of the disciples in that early day. Of the disciples who gathered about him, Christ said, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Nothing is more certain than that this divine salt has not lost its savor; nothing is more certain than that this heavenly preservative will never lose its savor. It may be that the world has owed its preservation many times and in many places to the presence of God's people. He who knew the hearts of all men said with marked emphasis, as the original shows, "Ye are the light of the world." Elsewhere Jesus declares that he himself is the Light of the World; here he gives that honor in part to his disciples. We are, of course, to understand that the light which Christians emit is really derived from Christ himself, who is the Light. They are thus as a city set on a hill, which cannot be hid from the eyes of the world.

The church is a school for imperfect men and women who are striving to overcome their imperfections. It is not, when rightly viewed, the home of self-complacent souls who believe that they have already attained, and are already perfect. The true idea of sainthood is a struggle toward loftier attainment. Thus the Apostle Paul affirmed that he forgot the things that were behind, and pressed toward the mark of the heavenly calling. I affirm, without fear of successful contradiction, that the noblest men and the truest women beneath the stars are found in the Church of Jesus Christ; but, noble as they are, they will be vastly nobler when their Christian character has attained its complete symmetry. They are progressing toward perfection as a portrait progresses toward completion in the hands of an artist. Like such a portrait when the artist begins his work, Christians at the beginning of their Christian lives are simply outline sketches. The Divine Artist will fill up this sketch with the lines and colors of a complete character. Joys and sorrows, disappointments and achievements will soften or deepen the lines, and will heighten or subdue the colors. The light of eternity will one day fall upon the work. The Christian will see his Lord face to face, and the glorious vision will completely change the human form into the Divine image.

All sensible men know that we are not saved by the goodness of other men. How, then, can any man expect to be saved by the badness of other people? In answer to all men's criticisms of Christians, as if their faults were excusatory of their abominable and inexcusable sin of rejecting Christ, he says to each one, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." Why do you not follow him? This is your personal and eternal duty. You stand alone in his sight. Alone you must die; alone you must stand at the judgment seat of Christ. I beseech you now by all that is noble in manhood, sacred in womanhood, and solemn in duty to serve God. If the church were perfect you may rest assured that you would not be received into its membership, for you are far from perfection. But you may begin now to be an imperfect Christian, and thus following Christ through evil and good report, one day the crown of glory shall be placed upon your brow.

Waiting God's Time

Here is a man who says, "I will follow Christ, but suffer me first to bide God's time before beginning the service." It is well always and in all things to await God's time, but we must wait God's time in God's way. Lurking under the general idea of biding God's time is the objection to the doctrine of election. Little is heard of this doctrine in our day, compared with the numerous sermons once preached on various phases of this subject. The doctrine of predestination is immeasurable in compass and infinite in depth. But a soul seeking Christ has nothing whatever to do with the profound depths and lofty heights of this great doctrine. When a man says, "I would follow Christ if I knew I was one of the elect," he is taking a position in religion which he utterly repudiates in temporal affairs. And yet men talk in this way regarding the acceptance of the salvation of Jesus Christ. A man is fallen overboard; a rope is thrown him, but he refuses to grasp the rope, saying, "I do not know whether I am predestined to be saved." We can certainly say to such a man, "If you do not grasp this rope you are certainly predestined to be drowned because of your unspeakable foolishness." The Word of God says, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

Common Sense in Religion

Why can we not have common sense in religion? It is a thousand pities that we have used the word "rationalism" to describe a system of thought which teaches that religion is, in some sense, divorced from reason. Doubtless, historically the word "rationalism" has been employed by men who are opposed to the supernatural in revelation and religion; but the word ought to be rescued from this abuse. Rightly understood, reason is the handmaid of religion. The Bible distinctly appeals to our reason, God saying, "Come now, let us reason together." It is irreligion that is irrational. It is true that with our present development of reason we cannot reconcile human freedom and Divine sovereignty. I am free, and consciousness so affirms. God is a sovereign, and revelation and history so affirm. Reconcile these two truths I cannot; believe them I must. Human freedom is a column rising into the clouds, and Divine sovereignty is another such column; but beyond the clouds these columns curve toward each other until they meet in a perfect arch.

By all means let us bide God's time. But what is God's time? We are not left in doubt at this point, for the Word of God has spoken: "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." To-day alone is ours; strictly speaking, there is no to-morrow. The Spanish proverb says: "The road 'to-morrow' leads to the town 'Never.'" Young has well called "procrastination the thief of time," but it is vastly more and worse than that; it is the destroyer of immortal souls. The day will come when the Master of the house shall have risen and closed the door. But it is still the day of grace, the hour of mercy, and the accepted time. Seek the Lord now while he may be found, call upon him while he is near, and you shall be saved with an everlasting salvation, beginning on earth, and reaching its ineffable glory in Christ's immediate presence in heaven.

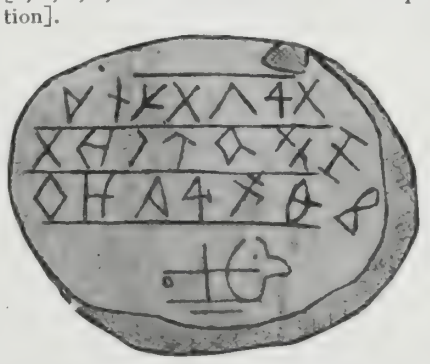
WEST VIRGINIA'S INSCRIBED STONE

IN 1838, an inscribed stone was found in the Mammoth Mound at Moundsville, in what is now the State of West Virginia. The characters in which the inscription was written could not be translated, though they had a strong resemblance to those used by Scandinavian priests before they adopted the Roman alphabet. Nothing like it has ever been found in America. It is now agreed that the characters are of European, or Indo-European origin, and this is a strong link in the chain of evidence that goes to prove that Europeans visited America before the time of Columbus. Powell, the famous antiquarian, says: "Four of the characters correspond to the ancient Greek, four to the Etruscan, five to the Norse, six to the Runic, seven to the Old Erse, and ten to the Phœnician."

The following remarkable tradition of the Shawnee Indians concerning their origin, is closely connected with the modern theory concerning the rock. It is taken from Drake's Life of Tecumseh, or, more properly, Tecumtha.

"The Shawnees[1] (variously spelled Satanos, Shawanos, Shawanoes, and Shawanou), who were called Satanas (in another paragraph Santanas), by the Iroquois, were originally divided into twelve tribes. Their ancestors once inhabited a foreign land; but having determined to leave it, they assembled their people, and marched to the seashore. Here, under the guidance of a leader of the Turtle tribe,[2] one of the original sub-divisions, they walked into the sea, the waters of which immediately parted, and they passed in safety along the bottom until they reached this island (Ex. 14 ch., v. 21, et seq).

"The names of but four of the original tribes are preserved, viz: 1. Mequachake[3]; 2. Chillicothe[4]; 3. Kishapocoke; 4. Piqua. When in council, one of these tribes is assigned to each of the four sides of the council-house, and during the continuance of the deliberations, the tribes retain their respective places (cf. camp of Israelites). [1, 2, 3, 4, refer to comments on inscription].



"Mequachake signifies 'a perfect man.' To this tribe the priesthood is confined. The members, or rather certain individuals of it, are alone permitted to perform the sacrifices and other religious ceremonies of the tribe (cf. Lev. 21: 16-24).

"Upon comparison with various alphabets, there appear to be eleven consonants, viz:  , and three vowels:  ; while seven:  , are doubtful. The number of consonants written in succession (e. g., in first line, five, ), seems to indicate a Semitic authorship, although some of the words may belong to the Algonquin or other native languages. The characters  , in Phœnician letters possibly  , (קטיר), appear to form a Semitic word, and may have some connection with Heb. קטורה, 'incenses.' The peculiar character below the inscription resembling a human head, seems to serve as a sort of signature or coat-of-arms, containing possibly a suggestion of the Phœnician (variant of ⊕; [ט, teth]).

"In reference to the Shawnee tradition, I may say that, upon examination of a few names of tribes, etc., which I have been able to obtain, I find that they bear much resemblance to the Hebrew, some of them bearing a meaning therein perfectly in accord with said tradition.

"1. Shawnee. Compare Heb. שָׁנַח (shanah): שָׂנֵא (sane): שִׁנְאָה (shnah), and שׁוּנִי (shuni). The minister of whom I wrote suggested the derivation שָׂנֵא (sane), 'hate,' but I favored שׁוּנִי (shuni), 'fortunate,' as it is the only one of these four which contains the three consonants שׁ, נ, and י appearing in the various forms of the word 'Shawnee' (e. g. שַׁוַנִי (sha-wa-ni): שָׁוְנִי (shaw-ni): שָׂוְנִי (saw-wa-ni), Suwanee, etc.) Also compare the terms 'Chosen People,' etc., by which the Hebrews designated themselves.

"2. Leader of the Turtle tribe. This may be a symbolical or hieratic expression for tribe of Levi (לוי, joined, fr. לוה lavah, join), as the turtle's shell is formed of many plates 'joined' (לוי) together.

"3. Mequachake. Compare Heb. מִקְוֵה חֲכָמִים (miqve-chakamim), from מִקְוֵה, assembly, and חכם, wise.

"4. Chillicothe. Compare Heb. חֵלֶק (cheleq), portion; חֲלַךְ (halak), go; אֹתָהּ (othah),-her.

In this connection it may be interesting to notice the following: Miami, מַיִם (miy-yammim); מִן from, and יָם sea."

In a little book, Chronicles of Border Warfare (1831), by Alex. S. Withers, I find the following:

"Emanuel de Moraez, in his history of Brazil, says that this continent was wholly peopled by the Carthaginians and Israelites. In confirmation of this opinion, he mentions the discoveries which the Carthaginians are known to have made beyond the coast of Africa. The progress of these discoveries being stopped by the Senate of Carthage, those who happened to be in the newly discovered countries, cut off from all communication with their countrymen, and . . . easily fell into a state of barbarism."

George de Huron, a Dutch writer on this subject, . . . supposes that another migration of the Phœnicians took place during a three years' voyage made by the Tyrian fleet in the service of King Solomon.

GALEN H. SWIMLEY,

Bunker Hill, W. Va.

KANSAS WOMEN AND THE BIBL

A Novel Experiment by the Ladies of Topeka and its Remarkable Resu

FIRST TUESDAY BIBLE CLASS. MRS. MENNINGER, TEACHER

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

MRS. HUGHES AND HER BIBLE CLASS

IN the Fall of 1898, thirty ladies in Topeka, Kans., who thought their knowledge of the Bible was not in proportion to their other literary knowledge, decided to read it together as they did other books, and learn more about its relation to them and its value to the human family. Encouraged by the Rev. Dr. Countermine, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, they held a meeting in the church parlors, formed a class and chose as leader Mrs. C. F. Menninger, wife of one of the leading physicians of Topeka. She selected for their use "The Bible Study Union Graded System," a four years' course of study, beginning with Outlines of the Old Testament History, occupying the first two years; From Bethlehem to Olivet, the third year, and The History of the Apostolic Church, published by the Bible Study Publishing Co., of Boston, the fourth year. Enough sets of books were ordered for the year's study, each paying for her own books.

Happily for these ladies, Mrs. Menninger was an experienced teacher, and had the rare gift of making each person feel that the value of the result of all this united effort must largely depend upon herself, thereby creating an atmosphere of individual faithfulness, energy and spirit for study seldom found in self-organized classes. She made it clear to all that in a study requiring so much research upon topics that are interesting, but cannot be called entertaining, each member must join the class with at least three clearly defined ideas. Firstly, one must possess at least a little love for the work of study. Secondly, one must be able to control at least a little leisure time. Thirdly, her family should respect her efforts and take enough pride in its results to aid in removing at least some of the obstacles sure to gather about her.

MRS. J. W. F. HUGHES | MRS. W. H. HOLMES | MRS. PLASS | MISS ANNA SWEET | MRS. W. A. SLOO

The class already mentioned that was formed in 1898, met Mondays, and was called the Monday Bible Class. Into that class new members often sought admittance, but it was soon perceived that in so profound a study, pupils could not just drop in at any time and do justice to the work, so in the fall of 1901, a new class was formed of fifty members, called the Tuesday Class. The Monday Class completed their course June, 1902, and this Tuesday Class, of which I am a member, completed its course June, 1905.

The women in these Bible-study classes are home-makers, elder-sisters, wives or mothers, many are W.C.T.U. members, or club members, and some were college, seminary or academy graduates; several have traveled quite extensively upon both continents. All of them attended regularly, and when anything interfered in preparing the lesson, regretted it and made it up later.

In the fall of 1903, 125 other ladies enrolled for membership in a new class. Owing to the difficulty of hearing answers from so large a number, this class was separated, the younger among them meeting Monday forenoons, and the elder ones Monday afternoons.

All of the members deposited a dollar a year towards buying a reference library, also money and books have been given these classes by outsiders, until this is one of the most complete Bible reference libraries this side of the Mississippi.

Mrs. Menninger has charge of all these classes. From first to last, she has given her time, and all the pupils' pay goes into the pictures or the reference library, and their own class books. This library is kept in a long upper room in the spacious residence of the leader. Book cases have been built along all the wall space; three large windows fill the room with sunshine; a long well-padded table runs through the centre. Thursdays, any pupil who feels her work unsatisfactory, can take her blanks, and go into that room for study, and always find the leader or some more advanced member ready to help her. These blanks are filled with notes they want to keep, and are strung inside self-binders, so they are tidy and easy to refer to. The number of these compiled reference books is large, and each pupil takes pride in making them. They also compile picture-books in similar though larger binders. When rightly placed, the pictures fasten facts in the mind as they occurred.

The leader frequently invites all of the classes into her large double parlors, and uses the stereopticon. Her collection of Bible pictures is large, and of the best, and she owns a large lantern which she uses with skill. Once a month, during the past year, she has put these pictures on Friday evenings, and, upon rare occasions, upon Sunday evenings, in the First Presbyterian Church, and the families and friends of these ladies crowd the building to standing room. They are a source of education appreciated by all.

The good to the individual seems to be more than that which comes from other studies, even when, as is often the case, there is in the beginning, no deep-seated belief in Christ's plan of salvation. Every denomination from Swedenborgian to Methodist is represented.

From out of this first class of thirty ladies who simply wanted to become familiar with the literature of the Bible, classes that meet from house to house, are now being taught in every precinct in Topeka. Sunday School teachers have greatly improved. Fifteen Bible study classes were organized with an enrollment of members and an average attendance of from 250 to young women in our Y. W. C. A., during 1905. North Topeka, Auburndale, Oakland, and in the peka Business College, Young Women's Bible St classes have been well attended.

One of the graduates of class 1902, who, by the way, daughter of Judge J. M. Clark, and the wife of Adjuta General, Col. J. W. F. Hughes, whom half the peo of Kansas know to love, attends the Monday foren class, where she takes notes and prepares herself teaching the lesson in the Railroad Y. M. C. A. par the following afternoon. I recently called on her cl and at the close of the lesson asked each member "W the Bible class meant to her." Answers were m unhesitatingly, clear-cut, and to the point. M Hughes said: "I am surprised at their answers, I sure none of them could have expressed themselves last fall. Coming every week has meant a great eff on my part. But I would not have this two ye Bible teaching t en out of my for anything."

A lady, of wh I am particula fond, was in a phy cal condition alar ing to those w loved her. She l guidly joined t class, gradua grew interested the study, report upon the topics investigation fairly that l pride was arous by our praises, a from month month her cheeks filled out, her eyes brightened, a she has now taught a class of married women who me at the homes of its members, for two years; she al teaches Sunday School. She says: "The Bible chang the current of my thoughts and some of my habits, a has saved my life." There are many similar cases.

Mrs. Sloo teaches, besides her Sunday School class, Monday class at Washburn College. Mrs. Plass, wi of the President of the college, teaches the acaden department Bible class. Miss Anna Sweet, senior Washburn, teaches the Y. W. C. A. class at the colleg About forty have been in the classes this year, and number not in the classes are doing the systematic dai study alone." Mrs. Holmes comes from her home "Shady Glen," near Tecumseh, five miles away, ea Tuesday afternoon, to teach a class of twenty ladi who meet in the parlors of Rev. Charles M. Sheldon church. She has also recently organized a new class Tecumseh, that numbers between 25 and 30 women. S also teaches the Normal class in her Sunday School.

She believes "a real knowledge of just what t Book says, changes the lives of those who spend ju a little time each day in its study."

We are all learning how holy, yet how practical; ho high, yet how near God is; and that the Bible is t only Book which interprets Him. EMMA T. WOOD.

THE MOTHER OF A NATION'S HERO

"BRAVE Bill Anthony!" he was called, after the blowing up of the battleship Maine in Havana Harbor.

Saluting the commander, Captain Sigsbee, Anthony uttered the memorable words: "I have to report, sir, that the ship is sinking!" Bill was only a marine in the United States service, but his coolness and bravery on that occasion won for him distinction while he lived, and honors after his tragic death.

THEO. WM. ANTHONY
(BILL ANTHONY)

Every heart knows its own bitterness, and no one knows just why Bill Anthony, after the war was ended, went one day to Central Park, New York, and sitting quietly upon a bench in a secluded part of the park, swallowed a fatal dose of poison. Many friends followed him to his last resting-place, and a great granite boulder now marks the spot where lies all that is mortal of brave Bill Anthony.

Could he have looked forward and have seen to what straits his aged mother would be reduced, he might have hesitated ere he took his life, and might have found strength to live for her sake.

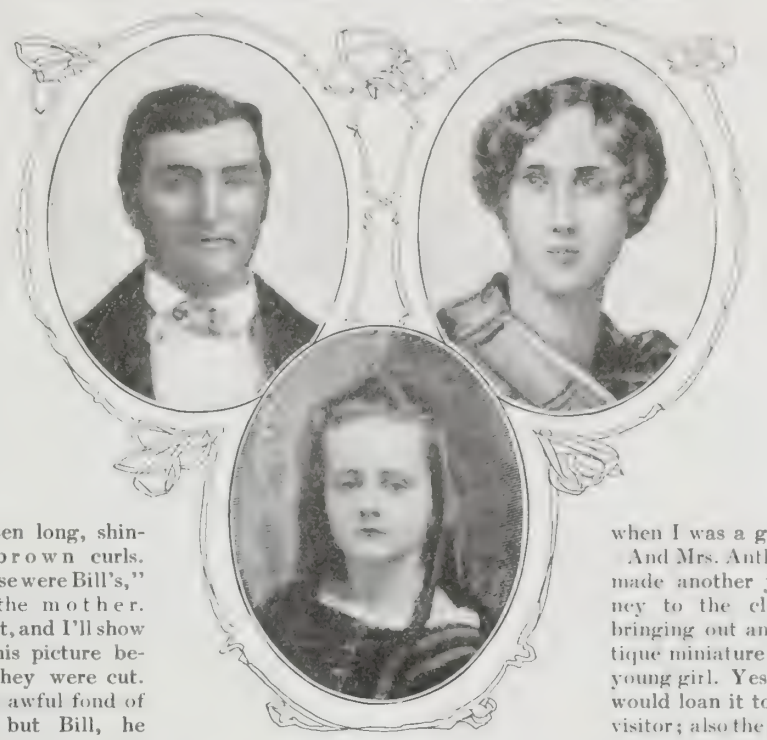
Learning that Mrs. Anthony had advertised some of her household effects for sale, a representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD visited her home in Hoboken, NJ. The condition in which she was living was pitiful in the extreme, and it scarcely seemed possible that such misery could exist in a city of plenty. But Mrs. Anthony is not one to beg, and nothing but direst necessity compelled her to let her poverty be known. She is nearly eighty years old, and up to within a short time, has been able to earn by her needle, sufficient to supply her simple wants. Piece by piece the old lady has parted with her furniture, until she has left but one article of any value—a feather bed, stuffed with feathers plucked by her own hands many years ago, from her flock of white geese.

The little old lady is bright and cheery, despite her surroundings.

"I am rich; you do not know how rich I am," said she, while her blue eyes shone with a mischievous sparkle. "Look," and drawing a Confederate one hundred dollar bill from a worn pocketbook, she held it up in triumph. Going to a closet, the old lady brought out a mysterious-looking tin box, tube shaped. In it were

ALEXANDER ANTHONY, FATHER

MARIE D'ARCY, MOTHER



"BILL" ANTHONY, AT AGE OF SEVEN

a dozen long, shining, brown curls. "Those were Bill's," said the mother. "Wait, and I'll show you his picture before they were cut. I was awful fond of 'em; but Bill, he didn't like 'em. You see, he was a born soldier, and why not? My father was a French soldier, and belonged to the Lafayette Guards. His name was William D'arcy. He was a druggist, and I wanted one of the boys to follow his profession; but no, not one of them but must be a soldier or a sailor. Theodore—that was Bill, Theodore William was his full name—said, when I tried to argue with him, 'Mother, this is a great country; but, mother, if there was no army and no navy, there wouldn't be any country.' And so they all went off, and now I'm alone, but I trust the Lord. I always did trust the Lord. I have one son left, but he is a cripple, and can hardly earn his own living. He is on a Jamaica steamer counting bananas. Poor boy! I know he would help me if he could.

"So you would like my picture? No, I would not like to have it taken now—but wait, I'll show you one I had taken when I was a girl."

And Mrs. Anthony made another journey to the closet, bringing out an antique miniature of a young girl. Yes, she would loan it to the visitor; also the photograph of Bill before his curls were shorn. There was another old-time picture, too — one of Alexander Anthony, Bill's father.

"We used to have a pretty little home, where the roses climbed clear up to the second-story window, and—oh, you ought to have seen my garden! I have one now!" and Bill's mother pointed to a couple of straggling plants trying to grow in the dingy window. "And the chickens! My, how I'd love to have chickens now! I haven't anything now but that little dog," pointing to a mongrel puppy tied in a corner, "and I daren't let him out, for the boys are awful around here." And it did seem "awful" around there. A miserable, smoke-begrimed room in a rear tenement, reached by a passage through a scarcely less wretched tenement fronting on a dirty, ill kept street. Two windows looked out upon a bare and forlorn yard, where not a blade of grass was to be seen. Heaps of ill-smelling rubbish, and noisy, half-clad children filled all the wretched space. The plastering had fallen from the ceiling of Mrs. Anthony's room, and this added to the general forlornness. There were a few old bits of furniture, a rusty stove, a shaky table and two or three rickety chairs, which made up the furnishings. The whole outfit, with the exception of the "live geese" feather bed, would have been spurned by the poorest second-hand dealer.

In such a place dwells the mother of "Brave Bill Anthony," barely existing upon the few pennies she earns by the coarsest sewing. A few hundred dollars would give her the little home she longs for in the country, where she could have her chickens, which would yield her more income than she now earns. Even if such a home were hired only, it would make the old lady's last days perfectly happy. She says that she does not worry, for she knows the Lord will not disappoint her trust; but to the visitor it seemed a pretty hard outlook for the aged woman, unless the Lord should put it into the heart of some one to help her. Her surroundings are such as would discourage and break the heart of a less intrepid spirit. There must be times when this mother of six sons grows heavy of soul, and lonely, amidst such poverty, squalor and wretchedness. Her wants are few and simple, and they should be easily supplied. If any of the kind-hearted readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD desires to help this aged mother of a nation's hero to pass her last days in peace, and assured of food and shelter at least, any contributions they may send to this journal for that purpose will be forwarded to Mrs. Anthony, and duly acknowledged. The poor, old, neglected woman, who has given her sons and the best out of her life for her country, is deserving of better treatment at the nation's hands.

TOGO, THE NAVAL HERO OF JAPAN

Continued from Page 515

invaluable to him in the present war, as he has been allowed a free rein in his preparation to meet the Russian fleet under the gallant Rojestvensky.

The sailors of the Japanese fleet regard him with a reverence that amounts almost to worship. He is an inflexible disciplinarian, but they know that there is nothing in their own part of the service that he could not do better than they, if called upon. He has their confidence, because he knows his ships as few officers know them. In some cases, they are practically of his own design. In personal appearance he has very little of the Asiatic about him. The portrait published with this article shows this. It may be that his Anglo-Saxon education, and living with modern twentieth century thoughts and ambitions, has effected the change. In everything that goes to make up modern scientific achievement, he is an adept.

Togo has destined his sons for a naval career, and they bid fair to follow in the footsteps of their illustrious father. Togo's home life is unostentatious, and very happy. It is in his home alone that he preserves the customs of old Japan, and these are so well fitted to Japanese social conditions, that it would seem a pity if they are ever lost. He is noted as a silent man, a good listener, apparently seeking for information from all possible sources, but willing that others should do the talking.

In religion he is a Christian, belonging to the Presbyterian Church. As the war is not yet ended, it may be that Togo will yet have work to do; but there is no fleet left that can be of much service to Russia for some time to come. The sea-lion of Japan will probably rest a while on the laurels already won, while Oyama, in Manchuria, again takes up the hammer to drive the enemy onward toward Siberia.

NOTES ON THE RECENT NAVAL BATTLE

Another cruiser from the Russian fleet has appeared at Vladivostok, making three that successfully ran the gauntlet. All of them had been subject to a severe fire, but can be repaired within a short time. With these recent arrivals, the Russian fleet at Vladivostok now numbers about six ships and a few torpedo boats. An early report, since denied, was that the Gromoboi, one of the battleships at Vladivostok, had struck a mine and gone down, carrying the Admiral and 800 men with her. The total Russian losses are probably about 5,000.

It is reported that 148 of the Russian wounded on the Orel, who were beyond hope of recovery, were thrown overboard, as their cries unnerved those who were able to keep up the fight. Admiral Nebogatoff, whose picture was published in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, met a tragic death at the hands of his own men. A mutiny took place on board his flagship, and Nebogatoff and his officers were thrown into the sea, after which the mutineers gave up the vessel to Japan. It shows what a woful lack of discipline prevailed when such things were possible during a modern sea-fight.

An officer of the Borodino, now at Sasebo, reports that the effect of the Japanese fire was terrific. He fired the first gun on his ship, and the shot damaged the upper works of the Shikishima. A few minutes after a shot struck his barbette, and rendered every one in it insensible. When he groped his way out, the decks were being rained with projectiles. Men were lying dead and wounded on every side. The gallant officer went back into the barbette with his crew, but had only time to fire two more rounds, when two shots struck the turret, disabled both twelve-inch guns and killed eighteen officers and men. He crawled upon deck to a six-inch gun and remained until the deck became a shambles. At four o'clock the Borodino went down by the head.

Work of the Prison-Gate Mission

Recently, a man who has spent many years behind the bars called upon the Tombs prison chaplain. He was one of the earliest converts of the Prison Gate Mission. For over two months he tramped the city in search of employment, but as he was an ex-prisoner, nobody would employ him. The Prison-Gate Mission found him work, where he could earn an honest dollar by the sweat of his brow. He has been living an honest and industrious life ever since. Keepers of the prison, who have known him many years, marvel at the change that has come over him. Another man, named T., who resides in Harlem, was led, while in prison, to see himself a lost sinner. After he gained his liberty he was invited to a Mission meeting. The first night he came alone and gave a good testimony for the Master. Next time he brought with him his wife, and his brother and sister-in-law. Since then all of these three have been converted, as the result of the ex-prisoner's transformation. The entire family have since joined the church.

John H. had been in prison twelve years, five of which were spent in solitary confinement. On his release, he came to the Prison Gate Mission seeking employment. As usual in the case of every ex-prisoner, the way of salvation, through Jesus Christ, was presented to him. He became truly repentant and accepted through faith, and to all appearances he was a changed man. Shelter and food were provided for him and the following day work was secured. For a time he labored faithfully, but temptation came and he fell again and again. With God's help he has at last conquered and is now a reformed and sober man, employed, and doing well.

These are only a few of many similar recent experiences in the Prison-Gate Mission work. Contributions of money, which are greatly needed to carry on the work, may be sent to Andrew A. Knowles, Treasurer, 33 Wall Street, New York City. Gifts of clothing, shoes, etc., may be sent to the Mission headquarters, 192 Elm Street, New York City.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Edito

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matte

The Time for Mediation

WITH the stupendous Japanese success at the Korean Strait, the war in the East may be regarded as virtually ended. While there may be a continuation of hostilities in Manchuria for a time, Russia's impotence by sea and land has been so effectually demonstrated, that no one is surprised to learn that the heart has dropped out of her campaign. Everywhere in the Czar's realm there is a loud and insistent demand for peace. Sick of war, the nation must have time to forget its losses, to solace its sorrows, and to recuperate.

It is, no doubt, an easy thing for the critics of Russia to point out, in this hour of her humiliation, how she invited disaster by her selfish and arrogant policy, which made enemies where she might have had friends and by military boastfulness, which went hand in hand with reckless unpreparation. But while we hear on all sides little else than condemnation of Russia, it should not be forgotten that it is official Russia only, and not the Russian people, that is responsible for the war and for all the suffering it has imposed upon the nation. Even Russia's soldiers and sailors were indifferent to the success or failure of a campaign which they could not approve. The Japanese were inspired by patriotism; they were fighting to preserve their national existence. No such sentiment could have urged on the raw land troops, or the untrained seamen of the Czar's navy, who were sent forward, like cargoes of cattle, to be food for powder, as long as the military bureaucracy chose to keep up its futile attempt at Asiatic conquest. To the soldiers and sailors and the plain Russian people, therefore, who are bearing the heavy burden of others' sins, the sympathies of the civilized world will go out, accompanied by the hope that there are better and happier, because more peaceful, times near at hand.

Already the chancelleries of Europe are discussing peace; but so they did after Port Arthur and after Moukden. However earnestly those statesmen may desire to see the war ended, they are so hampered by limitations on every side, that it is doubtful whether any government on the Continent will take the mediatorial initiative. It is probably hopeless to expect that the Czar will take the necessary step, even though the fate of his empire depended upon it. He mistakes ill-timed obstinacy for courage, and persistence in a perilous course for high principle. Few rulers in modern times have made so many capital blunders or squandered so many golden opportunities. It will not be surprising to find him led on by evil advisers to still further follies, in the vain hope of retrieving by land what he has lost by sea, instead of adopting the Biblical counsel to agree with his adversary quickly, lest worse befall.

We would wish to see our own government voluntarily assume, as a sacred duty, the task of mediation. We occupy a commanding position, being uninvolved in Old World quarrels. In other countries, the entanglements of international politics frequently impede free action, but we have no such limitations. We indulge in no will-o'-the-wisp spectre of a "yellow peril," nor have we any interests that clash with those of Russia. Our State Department, several months ago, made a tender of mediation, when the time for such action should arrive. It is most opportune now, and it would be a master-stroke of diplomacy, as well as an act entirely appropriate to a civilized and Christian nation, were our government to take the initiative in bringing about peace, and thus averting further useless bloodshed.

Literary Success

AMONG the letters that float to our editorial den, none are more touching, and, it may be added, none come more frequently than those which are sent by literary aspirants. Often they are written by young girls who long to write, who fancy that fame is the most delightful thing in the world, and who imagine that the life of an author is very pleasant. Often they are from middle-aged women, who are ground down by poverty, and who see in writing fictitious stories or sketches of real life, a chance to earn money without leaving home.

It cannot be denied that young women sometimes win laurels and money by their pen. Charlotte Bronte did forty years ago or more; Jane Austen did, and all through the nineteenth century other girls have been successful. Mary Wilkins was a mere girl when her first stories took the world by storm. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps was young when she wrote Gates Ajar. Marion Harland was hardly out of the schoolroom when she published Alone. On the other hand, Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe was a wife and mother when she threw the burning torch of Uncle Tom's Cabin into an already seething world. The mother of Anthony Trollope was fifty before she wrote her first book, and she wrote many successful books.

The truth is, if you have real talent, will work tremendously, and take genuine pains, you may reap a moderate degree of literary success. But don't forget the "Ifs," particularly the first. It is an era of immense competition. Everybody is educated. Most people write, after a fashion. The great majority among amateur writers do not succeed, grow disheartened, and at last realize that they have wasted their time and efforts in vain. Do not join that number. Do not try writing for a livelihood, with the idea that it is easy.

Familiarize yourself with the current work that succeeds. Read the best living authors. Saturate your mind with those writers in the past whose style is immortally charming. And take ceaseless pains with what you do.

Church Union

CHRISTIANS of all denominations will hail with pleasure the result of the Baptist Convention, reported by Dr. Partridge on another page of this issue. The separation between Northern and Southern Baptists, which has continued for sixty years, is to be maintained no longer. A general convention of the Baptists of North America is to be held next year and so the long estrangement is to end. The movement has long been in the air. The Northern and the Southern Baptists for some years past had ceased to regard one another as enemies, and had come to look upon one another as comrades. It needed only one step further to recognize brotherhood and that step has now been taken.

Another sign of the better times on which we have fallen, is the unanimity with which the Northern Presbyterian Assembly has held out the hand of fellowship to the Southern brethren. There was no reason for the separation to continue till this late day. The politicians, and the army and navy had agreed to forget their quarrels, and it was a reproach to the name of religion that the denominations, which should have been first in the movement to reconciliation, should have continued the alienation through so many years. But this is not the time for criticism. We would hail the long deferred duty done at last, and say with the Psalmist: "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

What a delightful thing it would be if the example of these two Churches, divided on sectional lines, could be followed by Churches divided on questions of doctrine or church government. Some of them are so near together, that it would be difficult for a stranger to tell from the preaching, to which of the denominations the Church belonged. In all the essentials of the faith they are in accord. If a man were to ask a preacher of the Presbyterian Church the question of the Philippian jailer, "What must I do to be saved?" he would receive the same answer as would be given by a clergyman of the Methodist, Congregational, Disciples, or Reformed Church. Those Churches have the same faith in Christ, the same remedy for sin, the same confidence in the Gospel as the hope of the world. Perhaps life-long association, or tenacity to doctrine, might prevent the members of such Churches dropping their denominational differences, and forming an organic union; but they might at least unite in aggressive work. In foreign missions, in home missions, in humanitarian work, a great deal of money might be saved, and a great deal of duplication prevented, by a union of their forces. To the hostile world the Christian Church presents a divided front. The house is divided against itself, and we have divine authority for apprehending its fate. It is hindered in its work, its power is depleted, and its energies neutralized by its divisions. It might be that a union for outside work might lead to organic u but it will be a great gain if the first step be t even if it leads no further. It will be a step in th rection of the fulfilment of our Lord's desire in pathetic prayer: "That they all may be one."

Guard the Children

ONE of our readers, who expresses an opinion w is no doubt shared by very many others, sen this letter:

I wish to protest against the publication in many of our and even some of our weekly papers, of the details of crim every description. Some days, columns are given up to a w catalogue of villainy. And as if it were not enough to deal facts, nauseating though they are, the writers of fiction have b of late to harrow us with the minutest details of the lives of inals and detectives, their object being, apparently, to glorify cleverness of the successful culprit who eludes justice, or to r us marvel at the skill of the detective whom no criminal can to escape. Certain papers are making money out of this so literature; but it is the price of innocence, for the reading of ruinous to childhood. If this sort of thing be not stopped, we have in the next generation such a criminal development as startle the nation. D.

Pittsburg, Pa.

Recognizing the justice of our correspondent's c plaint—although it is somewhat too strong and sweep —the only practical course to be adopted is for par to keep a close watch on their children, and see t that objectionable literature does not reach their ha Detective and criminal experiences are the very w food for any mind, especially the young. There enough good, clean honest papers and books to cho from—papers and books that are helpful and stimu ing. Literature that deals with crime and its meth will inevitably break down in the youthful mind ev true and honorable standard of conduct and characte

> Vice is a monster of such frightful mien
> That, to be hated, needs but to be seen:
> But seen too oft, familiar with its face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

If parents kept this steadily in view, and gave p sonal attention to the selection of reading for th home circles, their children would never suffer from evil referred to.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST FRANK M. WELLS of Memphis, Ten who has lately been conducting meetings in Cana Michigan and Minnesota, has just closed a success meeting at Drakesboro, Ky.

—A REVIVAL closed recently at the Christian Chur Paris, Ill., conducted by evangelist Charles R. Scovil Pastor of the Metropolitan Church of Chicago, and co-worker, DeLoss Smith, soloist. The meetings last fifty-two days, and resulted in seven hundred and fort one additions to the church. One day forty-one we added.

The "Observer's" Anniversary

The New York Observer recently celebrated its eight second anniversary. It was founded in 1823 by Sidn E. and Richard C. Morse and from the very first iss has been noted for its literary ability, its evangelic breadth, its loyal orthodoxy and its conservatism in that relates to social and public life. In all that goes make a bright, strong, progressive religious pape abreast of the times, the Observer has well maintain its position in the front rank. Three years ago t ownership of the paper was transferred to Rev. Dr. Jol Bancroft Devins as Managing Editor, and Mr. John Offord as Business Manager, and a few weeks ago D Devins purchased his partner's interest and became t sole owner of the paper. Dr. Devins is an accomplish journalist as well as a sound and able theologian, a under his skilful and enterprising management, t Observer will go forward to fresh triumphs and large increased popularity.

WHAT THE BIBLE SAYS

PERSONALITY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

Acts 13: 2 and 4
Acts 10: 19 and 20
Acts 5: 3 and 4
Acts 16: 6 and 7
Acts 20: 23 and 28
Mathew 28: 19
John 14: 26
John 15: 26
John 16: 13 and 14
Luke 2: 26
Luke 12: 12
Romans 8: 26 and 27
Romans 15: 30
I. Timothy 4: 1
II. Corinthians 13: 14

D. F. E.

The BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Canada's New Citizens

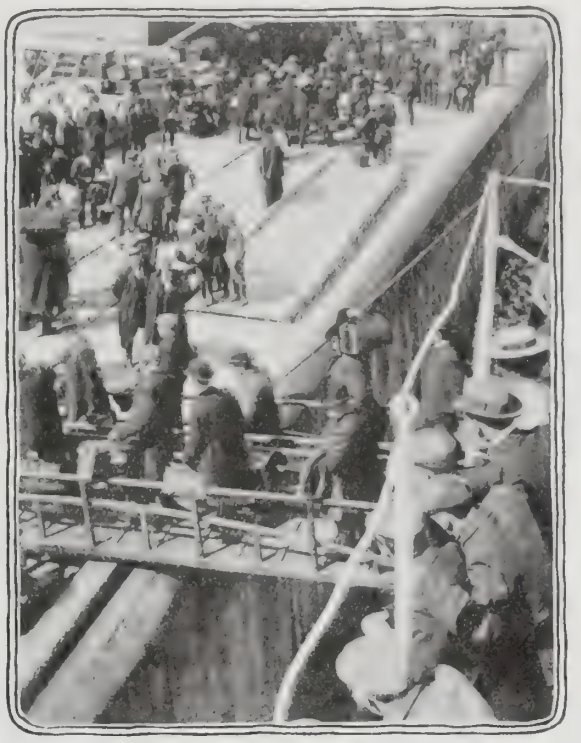
THIS year has witnessed a large increase in the number of immigrants who have come from Great Britain to Canada. As with our own land, this year has broken the record. This ce in part to the energy with which Canada has rked on its immigration campaign on the other side ie Atlantic. Government agents are now to be found l the important English towns. They conduct in- ration bureaus, give lectures, distribute pictures of adian farms, and, in many cases, make a personal miss. To the farm laborer, who in England seldom ves more than three dollars a week, with which he support his family, which is usually large, the ject of owning his own farm, while not giving up s allegiance, is very attractive. The agent takes r that diseased persons, criminals, and lazy persons t go out, and a close inspection is again made at entry port in Canada. Churches, too, have sup- mented the Government agents in securing new im- grants. Mennonites, Doukhobors, French Catholics, nother churches have urged their brethren over the o come out, promising them assistance and encour- gement in making a settlement.

The largest single enterprise under religious auspices, ever, is that of the Salvation Army. Gathered of the English slums, and carefully examined and ed before sailing, a full thousand recently came in one ship. Parties of ten and twenty families previously been sent, but this was the first shipload. t is unique, in the fact that every man on the ship w exactly where he was going and what his work to be, and was sure that the Army officers would eem safely to his destination and take care that he supplied with the means of beginning his new life. t is in many cases a remarkable voyage. Probably er before had an Atlantic liner crossed the ocean as mperance boat; but the Army had stipulated in ase that not a drop of intoxicating liquor was to be during the entire trip. Before the ship left port a racteristic message from General Booth was read to he emigrants:

"od carry you safe to your new home. Fearlessly calculate e hard work. Bravely meet difficulties. Do your duty by your mies. Help your comrades. Make Canada a home that will be redit to the Old Land. Put God first. Stand by the Army. e your souls. Meet me in heaven. WILLIAM BOOTH."

uring the voyage Gospel services were held daily, n an officer of the Army gave short lectures on the ntry the emigrants were going to, and the best way beginning life under the new conditions. A Bible given to every adult. A more hopeful or cheerful ed is seldom seen. In their new home, relieved from hard conditions of their life he London slums, they will e happier and more prosperous, n have a better prospect of en- ng at last into that infinitely eer kingdom promised to the ple of God.

w they desire a better country, that s, heavenly: wherefore God is not amed to be called their God: for he a prepared for them a city (Heb. 11:16).



EMIGRANTS LANDING AT QUEBEC

A Northwest Passage Found

xtraordinary news comes from aska. It is to the effect that h old geographical problem of h Northwest Passage has been ed at last. It was believed r centuries ago that it was ible to reach the shores of a from Europe, by steering hwest through the archipelago ch lies between the North erican Continent and the North e. Many lives and enormous unts of money were sacrificed he attempt to find such a pas- e, but the explorers came back led, or left their bones on that bleak land of ice and snow. It is now announced that Captain Ronald Amundsen, the famous Norwegian explorer, has discovered the passage. He sailed from Christiania in the fall of 1903, on the little sloop Gjoa. Nothing more was heard from him, and his friends and countrymen thought that the usual results of seeking the wonderful passage had happened in his case. But to the surprise of all, and to the intense astonishment of scientists, a message from him has been received at San Francisco, asking that supplies be sent to him on the first whaler leaving that port for the north. There can be no inference from such a message but that he has passed from Norway to the western shores of America by the long-sought passage. His arrival, therefore, is anticipated with deep interest by geographers of all nationalities. It has long ago been realized that the wealth once expected from the discovery could never be gained in that way. The discovery is not commercially valuable, but it has immense scientific interest. To the seekers who have searched for it so many years at the cost of their lives, it could never bring the blessing so much more valuable to the whole human race that the prophet described, for which there is no need of perilous search.

They shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord (Amos 8: 12).

A Strange Meeting

The recognition of a father by his son in the streets of Denver, Colo., ends a search which has been carried on for many years. The father had been a prominent business man in Chicago, before the great fire. That calamity left him penniless and distracted. He wandered away, in a fit of abstraction, and in the confusion of the time, all trace of him was lost. His wife and sons feared he must have died. After a time his sons went into business in New York, and prospered. Their mother lived with them until her death, a few months ago. At the last she craved to be buried near her husband, and enjoined her eldest son to find out where he was buried, and to let their graves be together. He succeeded in getting a clue, at last, which led him to Kansas City, Mo. There he searched the cemetery records without avail. He accidentally heard that his father had been to Denver. He went there, and was beginning a search of the cemeteries, when he met his father alive on the street. He recognized him at once, though he had become feeble and was very poor. It will be his delight to minister to his declining years. It was strange that in seeking a grave he should find his father. Something like this happens to men who think of God as a Being far off and indifferent to his creatures, when they realize him as a living God who loves them.

Surely the Lord is in this place and I knew it not (Gen. 28: 16).

Wants to Die for His Father

A remarkable instance of filial affection is reported from Alabama. A farmer has been on trial at Cullman for murder. He had been incensed against a deputy sheriff, who attempted to levy on his property, and in the dispute which ensued had drawn his pistol and shot him. A strong defence was made, in which the lawyer showed that the crime had been committed in a fit of ungovernable anger, and that there was no malice or premeditation. It did not, however, avail with the jury. They brought in a verdict of "guilty," and the judge sentenced the prisoner to be hanged. Then occurred a scene unprecedented in a court of justice. The prisoner's son, a youth of twenty years, rose, and in an eloquent speech pleaded to be allowed to die in place of his father. There were few dry eyes in court as the young man made his appeal, but, of course, it had to be rejected. Human law has no place in it for the substitution which is the glory of the divine government.

Peradventure for a good man some would even die, but God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us (Rom. 5: 7, 8).

EMIGRANTS TO CANADA ON A LIVERPOOL DOCK WAITING TO EMBARK

BRIEF NOTES

The American Tract Society celebrated its eightieth anniversary on May 14. Gen. O. O. Howard presided, and made an earnest and impressive appeal for funds to extend the excellent work the Society is doing.

Evangelist E. Tennyson Smith has conducted most successful campaigns in Newcastle, Pa., Bridgeport, Conn., and Rochester, N. Y. He has accepted engagements for summer gatherings in various places. His address is P. O. Box 3151, Boston, Mass.

The Board of Managers of the American Bible Society announces that the number of Bibles and portions issued last year was 1,831,096, of which 873,075 were in Oriental languages. The receipts for the year were $641,283, and the disbursements $610,018.

Courses of Bible study have been arranged in connection with Yale University for the benefit of ministers on vacation, or of students of other colleges who are desirous of studying the latest phases of theological literature. They continue from July 29 to August 17. Applications to be made to Prof. E. Hershey Sneath, 145 Elm Street, New Haven, Conn.

Gospel Service at the Stock Exchange

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON FRONT COVER

PEOPLE passing down Broad Street, in New York City, on the 29th of last month, were greeted with the strains of a hymn rising from the vicinity of the Stock Exchange. In a large dray, decorated with the national colors and drawn by four black horses, were several of the most prominent clergymen of the city. A small organ furnished the music for the hymns. The unique scheme of holding a Gospel service in the very heart of the greatest financial district of the country, was the idea of the committee that is carrying on the Tent Campaign, which began so auspiciously, several weeks ago, with a great meeting on the steps of the City Hall. The meeting on Broad Street began shortly after noon, when business is temporarily suspended and the brokers and clerks connected with the great banking houses on Wall and Broad Streets have a short time off for lunch.

At first the small group of earnest men in the "Gospel Wagon" attracted little attention, for the average New Yorker, if one can put it that way, is used to the unusual; but after one or two of the old familiar hymns that stirred the memories of a far distant boyhood in the minds of many a gray-haired and hard-headed business man, the crowd quickly increased. Rev. Dr. Bradford Williams was in charge, and his earnest, breezy manner caught people's attention at once, and most of them remained until the conclusion of this unique service.

The speakers brought no new message. It was the same old Gospel story told in a new place. Every one of the five speakers applied the life of Christ to the commercial life of to-day, and showed how the successful man of business could be at the same time a successful Christian follower of the Master. Mr. Williams asked the audience to join in the hymns. The first strains of "Nearer, My God, to Thee" were softly played on the small organ, and then the singers in the wagon sang the first verse. One voice and then another joined in, until half a hundred were singing with a melody that would have done credit to many a chorus choir. The hymns that followed went even better, and the crowd needed no urging to sing. It was surprising to see how many of these busy brokers were acquainted with the words and music, yet, without doubt, a great number of the singers sang that noon for the first time in years. It may also be true that it was the first religious church service they had attended for almost as long a time. If the people will not come to the churches, the evangelists of the "Tent campaign" are going to bring the Gospel to the people at their work, and to the passer-by in the street.

Almost without exception those who stopped to listen were reverent in their attitude. The leader asked all who would assist in some way in the summer Gospel campaign to join in the Lord's Prayer and take off their hats. This was evidently a test question. A large number of hats came off at once; others compromised by putting their hands up and pushing their hats over on one side; encouraged by the numbers who had got theirs clear off, these finally separated their head from their reluctant headgear. Some just touched the brims in a sort of military salute. A few, manifestly uncomfortable and look somewhat abashed, kept theirs on. It indeed a touching sight to see several h dred men bowed in prayer in the v centre of financial America, where live for to-day, and self seems to be only interest that sways men's souls. only unpleasant incident was the conte of a glass of water which was sprinkled the assemblage from one of offices in a neighboring skyscra The speakers were several ti applauded.

Rev. Mr. Bitting, pastor of Mt. Morris Baptist Church, cau the crowd with his address. may seem odd to some of yo he said, "that we come d here in front of the Stock change, to hold a Gospel servi It is a sin not to prosper i man can do so honestly. is not a crime to be rich. If a m has the ability to become so, throws away the God-given portunities to acquire that wh next to godliness and culture the most powerful thing on ear it is a waste. There are two m dying in New York to-day. is a master of millions, and name will be put in the pap with "scare heads" a foot hi When he dies and leaves this wo he cannot take a cent with hi The other man has not enough pay for his funeral notice. He spent his life for others, doing t Master's work. When he lea this world he will take everythi he has had. When they sta before God, which will be richer man?

"There are men in Wall Street to wh you can entrust your millions, go arou the world, and find them safe in trust your return. I say thank God for su men. Have you managed your spiritu trust well? The man who mismana his financial trust is whiter before G than he who mismanages his spiritu trust. God is nearer to you than your o father and mother; nearer to you than yo own yesterday. I want you to remem that the Christian life is not suppression b expression. The greatest opportunity f true happiness is found in that life."

After one or two more songs, the cro dispersed, hurrying to their offices to beg again the same ceaseless grind to the mu of the stock-ticker; but surely the memo of that half hour lingered with them, a urged them to keep the strait path business integrity, the Christian life in t commercial world.

The evangelists later held a meeting the Battery, and one on the East sid where people think in pennies and not millions, but where the dwellers in t crowded tenements and the slums con even more eagerly to "receive the wate of life freely."

A FLOWER CARNIVAL IN HOUSTON, TEX.

In many parts of the Union, flower festivals are now events of almost annual occurrence. New York and New Jersey have their occasions of this delightful character, as well as California, Texas, Florida, and New Mexico. Our photograph of a "bit" of the last flower parade in Houston, shows that our Southern friends have a keen appreciation of the picturesque, and will remind many readers of similar scenes in Saratoga and Los Angeles, and at the popular annual parade at Asbury Park, N. J.

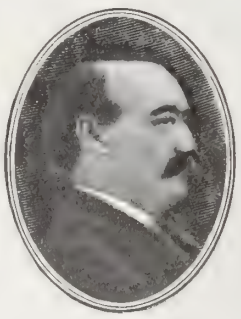
A Great Opportunity

WE trust that every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will heartily co-operate with us in our efforts to greatly increase our circulation, by placing to the best advantage the coupons published in our issue of May 31st, offering THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to new subscribers until January 1, 1906, for the nominal sum of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

We make this great financial sacrifice with a view to raising the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to as near a Million Copies Weekly as possible, in the confident expectation that the new readers thus temporarily secured, will find THE CHRISTIAN HERALD so full of interest, that they will be glad to enrol themselves, at the expiration of the trial term, on our list of permanent subscribers, at the regular subscription price of $1.50 per annum.

HELP US ALL YOU CAN

PROMINENT MEN of the HOUR



C. J. BONAPARTE

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE, of Baltimore, has been selected as the new Secretary of the Navy, to succeed Mr. Morton, who is about to retire. Mr. Bonaparte bears one of the world's great historic names, as he is the grandson of Jerome Bonaparte, King of Westphalia, brother of Napoleon, Emperor of the French. Mr. Bonaparte was born in Baltimore in 1851, and graduated from Harvard in 1871, and from the law school three years later. He has been a practising lawyer in Baltimore since his graduation. He has been noted as a reformer, writing and speaking throughout the country. His wife was Miss Ella Channing Day, of Newport, R. I.

KING ALFONSO

KING ALFONSO, of Spain, had a narrow escape from death recently, while driving in Paris with President Loubet. An anarchist threw a bomb that hit the shoulder of a cuirassier guard. It rolled off on to the ground, where it exploded, wounding several people. The young king was perfectly cool, and his only anxiety was for the injured. The anarchists are foes to republics and monarchies alike, and if the bomb had been well aimed, would have killed both king and president. The young king has made himself very popular in France, and his visit will greatly increase the cordiality between the two countries.

WHITELAW REID

WHITELAW REID has just sailed for England, where he will take up the duties of American Ambassador, recently laid down by Mr. Choate. Mr. Reid was the special representative appointed by the President to attend the coronation of Edward VII. He has a large acquaintance with English public men, and is well fitted for his distinguished position. He was born in Zenia, Ohio, in 1837. He graduated from Miami University in 1856, and has received since that time, degrees from Darmouth, Princeton, Yale, and Cambridge, England. During the Civil War he made quite a record as a correspondent at the front. He was an aide-de-camp to Gen. Rosecrans, in West Virginia. In 1863 he became librarian to the House of Representatives. He became a member of the staff of the New York Tribune, and never severed his connection with journalism until his recent appointment.

PRINCE FERDINAND

PRINCE FERDINAND of Bulgaria, is at last to have his most cherished ambition realized, and assume the title of king. Although the ruler of an independent State, he has been compelled by Europe to retain the title of Prince, borne by dozens of men who have fe acres of their own. Regarded at first as a rather vain personag Prince Ferdinand, by his great executive ability, has won th admiration of the European Powers. He, more than any one els has prevented the outbreak of war in the Balkans, and as a rewar he will be permitted to assume the kingly dignity. He was bor in 1861, and is a duke of Saxony.

MAYOR WEAVER

MAYOR WEAVER Philadelphia, has con prominently before t public for the stand h has taken against th corrupt ring that h controlled that city long. The Board Councilmen passed ordinance giving a g company sole right furnish Philadelph with gas for the ter of seventy years. great deal of indign tion was arouse among all classes citizens against bei handed over to th mercies of the con pany. Mayor Weav vetoed the measur and is putting up a de perate fight to put ou the officials of the co rupt ring, and replace them with men who will have the confi dence of the public. It is an example to other cities which hav not revolted against boss rule.

IN THE SHADE OF THE VINE

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Outdoor Living

THE time of the year has come when people may live much out-of-doors. If we could all stay less under the roof and more in the open air, our ealth rate would be higher and we should possess im-nnity from many maladies that now lurk in ambush ady to pounce on us when our blood is impoverished d our nervous strength is weakened.

Why not make a business of sitting in the veranda's easant shade? If the annoying mosquito haunts your eighborhood, let the veranda be thoroughly screened h wire netting, and though he hover outside, he will t torment you nor drive you indoors. The wire net-g is a great comfort, keeping out flies, moths, and t more disagreeable of twilight prowlers, the random-tling bat. If you have vines around your porch, the ds will flit through the leaves and sing to you, and e fragrance of blossoms drift stly through the morning shness or the evening dusk.

A good deal of woman's work y be carried on outdoors if e have a veranda; shelling as, stringing beans, paring ples, stoning cherries, prepar-g fruit for preserving can be ne there quite as well as in e kitchen; sewing goes on as ft and as comfortably on the randa as in the sewing-room. e may write letters there. A g or two, a round table, some airs, large and not too light, a mmock, a divan, and your randa is the coziest place in e world for afternoon tea. If ere is an invalid in the house-ld, have for her a swinging uch, a mattress suspended by ains from the veranda roof, d let her spend days there, d perhaps whole nights. The randa is the best choice for e baby's nap as the rosy little rling lies in her carriage.

It is our summer rendezvous, ar friends, and now that the isies are here and the roses d the myriad garden flowers every name and hue, we shall, ther here week by week for r summer chats. Try out-or living and grow stronger d cheerier every day.

omen and Peace

How many weeping women the tremendous war be-een Japan and Russia must answer for. Thousands of hting men slain, nay, hundreds of thousands dead in e flower of their youth, many more maimed and ippled; the ghastly tale of a ghastly war can never be ld in the fullness of its horror and the blackness of its oom. And everywhere in the glorious island empire, d in the vastness of the Czar's dominions, homes deso-ted, children orphaned, women, old and young, defence-ss against want and crushed by poverty, their husbands, thers and sons mowed down by the stern reaper, death. ell may women love peace and long for her. Surely ere yet shall dawn a day when saner counsels shall pre-il, when nations will accept arbitrament instead of nnon, as the better way to settle their disputes.

At the back of most wars are two insistent motives—eed and patriotism. The rapacity of modern commerce, the burning desire for gold and yet more gold, has en illustrated by Russia. The grandeur of loyalty and ve of country has been shown by Japan. Clashing in rious onset have been mediæval strength and the pas-sionate ardor of national youth. There is a promise of peace. Let every woman pray that it fade not away.

Over the Hills and Far Away

A poem of Robert Louis Stevenson sings itself to a lilting tune in these glad days of spring :

The gauger walked with willing foot,
And aye the gauger played the flute,
And what should Master Gauger play
But "Over the hills and far away."

Whene'er I buckle on my pack
And foot it gaily on the track,
O pleasant gauger, long since dead,
I hear you fluting on ahead.

You go with me the self same way
The self same air for me you play
For I do think and so do you,
It is the tune to travel to.

When the blossoms and the bees and the birds woo us, what is so fine, what so charming as the delight of going forth into the open-air world, and getting away from the beaten road of the daily environment? Not all of us are able to go very far afield. Our "Over the hills and far away," may not lead us beyond our own State, or our own county. But, when the vagrant drop in our blood asserts itself, when we long to tramp over dale and hill, when we have no appetite for home dainties, but could eat hard tack or a crust at the day's end, if we were but in a wayside inn, let us drop our luxury and take to the road. A day in the open air may save us from illness. A picnic dinner may drive away dyspepsia. There is magic in that tune, "Over the hills and far away."

NATIVES SELLING FRUIT IN JAMAICA

How good would taste these tropic fruits
If we could buy them where they grow;
When we are under Northern skies
Where only Northern breezes blow.

Still it is pleasant just to see
These children of the sun;
Who take their lives with jollity
And have no lack of fun.

Anywhere With Jesus

Anywhere with Jesus, says the Christian heart,
Anywhere with Jesus, so we do not part:
Always sitting at his feet, there's no cause for fears;
Anywhere with Jesus, in this vale of tears.

The Inhospitable Maid

"I have almost stopped inviting anybody to visit me," said a housekeeper in a confidential moment. "My maid makes such a fuss whenever I tell her to put on an extra plate, that I hesitate even to ask my father and mother to spend a night with me."

Should matrons compare notes, many of them would confess that a similar aversion on the part of the maid to the entertainment of their friends is contracting the bounds of their hospitality. The unfortunate woman who goes to an Intelligence Office to engage a cook or housemaid is often asked, "Do you have much company?" A suburban housekeeper who ventured now and then to send for her kinsfolk that they might have some of the delight which she enjoyed in her country home, was informed by her domestic staff that she must either raise their wages, or else give each of them a certain sum per day for every guest who came to the house. The inhospitality of the average maid is a marked feature of the moment. To yield to it is both weak and short-sighted. Why do we have homes if not that in them we may gather our friends, that we may have their faces at our table, and our children may gain the breadth and culture that come only from intercourse with others whom we love and who are congenial.

We need not so add to the daily work by the coming of our guests that our hired helpers are unduly burdened. No great elaboration of meals is necessary, and the ordinary family arrangements should not be very much disturbed by the coming of a chance guest, or of the visitor who is expected. The maids should understand that they cannot dictate, and that they should join in the cordial welcome which adds so much to a successful visit. We all know houses where this is so. The maid who opens the door greets the visitor with a beaming smile. She hastens to take the bag or valise; she shows by her manner that the visitor has brought a new pleasure to the house. Possibly, the loose tenure by which domestics are held, the ease with which the bond is broken, and the frequency of change, help to make the maid disloyal to the family. Whenever it can be done, the maid should feel that she has a share in upholding the good name of those she serves. When a guest or guests, arriving at inopportune seasons, or staying long, greatly add to the work of the kitchen, some remuneration, by way of an extra should be given. It ought not to be a demand on the part of the domestic, but it is a gracious and graceful concession on the part of the employer. There are hosts and hostesses who frown upon the practice of tips or fees, bestowed by their guests on their domestic staff. Opinions differ on this point. One thing is certain, however, and that is that the guest who leaves a small gratuity in his or her wake, is usually greeted with smiles on returning again.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

O. D. C. Apply to any druggist.

May. If the groom insists on wearing a frock coat at your wedding, you should not wear a veil.

Inquisitive. If your fiance thinks you are [illegible] he is a senior when you are in reality seven years [illegible] you should at once undeceive him. Do not begin [illegible] with a deception of that kind.

Jem. Women of wealth often employ a [illegible]. The duties are defined by each employer for herself. A [illegible] takes care of the clothing of her employer, keeps it in repair, sees that it is dusted, and renders any personal service that is [illegible].

A SHORT BIOGRAPHY OF CHRIST

Sunday School Review, June 25, 1905, by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*

IF I undertook to tell you the story of Washington, I should begin by stating when and where he was born. But the life of Jesus did not begin at Bethlehem. Long before that first Christmas morning when Jesus came into the world as a babe; long before the world was made, he lived in heaven with God (1, see second footnote). "He was before all things" (2).

From the time that Adam, the first man, was created, until the Son of God became a babe at Bethlehem, Jesus did not live on the earth, but he often vistited it in an angel form, as a "young man" of strength and beauty. In these visits he was sometimes called "the Angel of Jehovah;" sometimes "Jehovah" (3) which means, he who was, and is, and will be. He thus visited Adam (4), Enoch (5), Abraham (6), Jacob (7), Moses (8), Joshua (9), Gideon (10), and others, to make them brave for the right. (By thirty-four of these visits, called "theopanies," meaning God made visible to man, the Jehovah-Jesus prepared men for his thirty-four years on earth.) For David (11), and Isaiah (12), and Ezekiel (13), God pulled back the curtain of heaven that they might see the Son of God in his glory.

But God told his prophet-preachers to tell the people that his son would, after awhile, come to the earth for a long visit, coming close to them by becoming a babe and boy and man, that he might help young and old out of sin and sorrow. First, men were told of what race Jesus would be; not one of the race of angels, but the son of a woman (14). Then God told the people, by the prophets, from which Son of Noah this God-man Messiah would be descended on the human side—"He shall dwell in the tents of Shem" (15). Then, little by little, the prophets told that Jesus would be a descendant of Abraham (16), of Jacob (17), of Judah (18), of Jesse (19), of David (20), and then that his mother would be a virgin (21), and his Name one that the mouth of the Lord should name" (22). Then the prophets foretold that Jesus would be born in Bethlehem (23), at a certain time (24) with a star over his cradle (25), which wise men and kings would follow from far-off lands to bring presents and to worship him (26). They said that he would be carried into Egypt (27), that he would in his manhood heal the blind, the lame, the sick (28), and feed the multitudes (29), and finally enter Jerusalem as King (30). The prophets also said he would die on the cross in our stead (31), and rise from the grave and into heaven (32).

Jesus Christ, the Saviour-King, thus promised, came just where and when the prophets said he would. The Divine became a child, to teach us a child may through him become almost divine. The star led wise men to the holy Child, that many a holy child might lead wise men to the stars. How wise it was that One who was sent to save all men, rich and poor, began his work on earth not only as a child, but as a poor child, who had not where to lay his head. "There was no room for his mother in the inn" at Bethlehem, and she had neither money nor influence enough to induce any guest to give place. Only cattle could be crowded aside to give the Christ-child a bed. But he was the better prepared to proclaim "glad tidings to the poor" because he was cradled in the straw of a cattle trough. "He is able to save unto the uttermost," for no slave ever began his life at a lower point.

TRADITIONAL SITE OF JOSEPH'S SHOP

Eight days after that first Christmas, corresponding now to New Year's, we may call "The Lord's Name Day," for it was eight days after his birth that he was called Jesus, meaning Saviour, because he should save his people from their sins. Forty days after his birth, Jesus was presented in the Temple, as the beautiful custom of child consecration then required. In his child face the prophet Simeon and the prophetess Anna saw the promised "light to lighten the Gentiles," and sang, with renewed youth in old age, their praises for the fulfilment of God's promise. It was after this visit to the Temple, and probably more than a year after the birth of Jesus, that the learned and princely astrologers of Persia, known as "Magi," or "wise men," who had started their caravan when the star proclaimed to the world the birth of Christ, entered Jerusalem on their dusty camels, and stirred the traders within the gate with their eager question, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" No wonder Jerusalem was troubled, and especially King Herod, but the Pharisees seem to have given the question only a moment's thought. At Herod's bidding they looked up the prophecy that declared the Messiah should be born in Bethlehem, but they doubtless turned away saying, "It cannot be that the Messiah has come, and we Pharisees have not been apprised of it before these Gentiles." They would not even take the short walk to Bethlehem to see if the Christ had really come. But the Magi eagerly followed the clue from Micah. We have spoken of the poverty of Jesus, but he came not as the narrow leader of one class, for there came to his cradle not only the near-by shepherds, dressed in skins, but these silk-robed kings and wise men of far-off Persia. Here, at the beginning, we see his whole life to the present time in miniature as the centre of loyal devotion to Jew and Gentile, rich and poor, ignorant and learned. Gold is brought to him to-day from all lands, and the frankincense of worship and the myrrh of human sorrows.

Only one glimpse have we of Christ's boyhood. All the legends of miracles wrought by him in boyhood are false and foolish. He was a real boy, that he might win the boys of all ages. He played as other children play, but, like other boys of poverty, had more work than play, no doubt, and it is always better so. "He grew in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man," as all boys should grow toward a full-orbed manhood of body and mind.

With what exhilaration the boy Jesus, knowing his country's history so well by heart, must have gone from point to point of storied interest as he journeyed from Nazareth to Jerusalem. On entering, while other boys made holiday, he hastened to the Temple, and turned eagerly to the doctors of the law who gathered there daily for hair-splitting debates, to ask them the meaning of everything he saw. In religion, a child's fresh mind goes to the heart of truth, and it does not imply any premature uncovering of his hidden Godhead, that he astonished the doctors by his understanding, his questions and answers.

He is so absorbed in his Temple studies, that the time for the caravan to return passes, and he is not on hand. His mother thinks him with her relatives, but when he does not join her after a day's time, she makes search, and he is nowhere to be found. "Jesus is lost," she exclaims, as she returns with her husband to the city. Apparently the great church was the last place she expected to find him, and is the last place to-day to look for a lost boy. When he was found and gently reproached, he replied in substance, "Why did you not think at once that I must be in my Father's house?" But he whose soul had been lighted up with this glimpse of great things, obeyed his lowly mother's call, an example of obedience. We never hear of Joseph as living again, and it is probable he soon died, and that Jesus supported his mother through those eighteen years of seclusion and preparation, by hard toil with clumsy tools such as carpenters still use in Nazareth.

"HE WENT DOWN WITH THEM AND WAS SUBJECT UNTO THEM"

At thirty years of age he laid down his tools, bade his mother good by, and started out for his life work. Divinely called and guided, he made his way to the Jordan to a spot where his cousin, John the Baptist was preaching to great crowds, crying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Some of his hearers thought this meant deliverance from the Romans, but in fearless plainness he proclaimed that it meant first of all, deliverance from sin through the Messiah, who would come to emancipate men from their own wickedness. As he closes, Jesus presents himself for baptism. He had no sins to be washed away, but could adopt baptism as an open confession of his devotion to a pure life, by way of example to others. John already felt the superiority of Jesus, and baptized him only when he was commanded to do so. As he did so, he beheld another baptism of which his was but the sign, the Holy Spirit flowing upon Jesus in a blaze of light that took the shape of a white dove, to proclaim his purity and gentleness.

Alas, how quickly midnight follows noon in the life of Christ! The voice from heaven, in which God proclaimed the baptized Christ, his well-beloved Son, was quickly followed by the compelling voice that drew him, in the nervous reaction of his religious ecstasy, to the wilderness of temptation. Victorious, he returns to John, who, seeing him approaching, exclaims, "Behold, the Lamb of God that beareth away the sin of the world." It was as if he said, "Here is the One on whom all the sacrifices point, the scapegoat on whom our sins shall be laid."

John's disciples, prepared for Christ as children in Christian homes are prepared for the Church, at once became disciples of Jesus. Thus the first five disciples of Christ were gathered about that creed of two words, simple enough for a child, "Follow me." This last act and about all we know further of the first year of Christ's ministry we learn from John, who probably was his very first disciple. In that year came the first miracle at the marriage in Cana, when Jesus turned water to wine. After this Jesus made the first visit of his manhood to Jerusalem, where he drove the traders from the Temple they corrupted with commercialism, and gave his first prophecy of his own death in mystic words: "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." Then came two great discourses of Jesus, each to an audience of one, the two representing the extremes of society — Nicodemus and the woman of Samaria. It should be noted that the message of atonement, "Behold the Lamb of God," and the sermons on regeneration and worship—to Nicodemus and the woman of Samaria—all preceded the humanitarianism of the Sermon on the Mount, which did not come 'till the second year of Christ's ministry, called "The Year of Popularity."

The people were almost persuaded by his words and especially by his miracles that he is the promised Messiah. But the Pharisees still pursued him. Because he would not accept their petty creed they sought persistently to kill him. He went on condemning their pride and unmasking their hypocrisy and lashing their commercialism, knowing well that such courage would lead him to the cross. Thirty-four times he foretold it, but when it came, even his apostles had been so sure the Messiah was to be a conqueror rather than a sufferer, that they all forgot his prophecy of crucifixion and resurrection. He rose from the grave, and in due time into heaven.

But the ascension was not the end of his life any more than his birth was its beginning. "He ever liveth to make intercession for us." He also lives with us here for he said, "Lo, I am with you alway."

---

* International Sunday School Review, for June 25. Golden Text: "But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing, ye might have life through his name." John 20: 31. HOME READINGS, in preparation for lessons on Hebrew history in next quarter, being a review of God's previous dealings with Israel. Sunday, June 25, Gen. 12: 1-8; 13: 12-18. Monday, Gen. 49: 1-28. Tuesday, Exod. 3: 1-17. Wednesday, Deut. 8. Thursday, Joshua 23. Friday, I. Kings 8: 12-32. Saturday, Psa. 136: 1, 10-26.

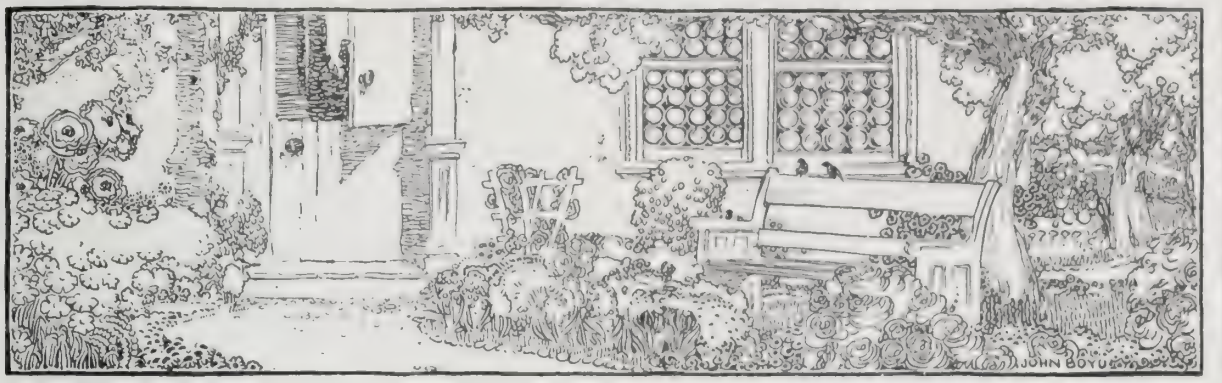
(1) Prov. 8: 22. (2) Col. 1: 17. (3) Ex. 3: 2. (4) Gen. 3: 8. (5) Gen. 5: 24. (6) Gen. 18: 1, etc. (7) Gen. 32: 30. (8) Ex. 3: 2, etc. (9) Jos. 5: 13–15. (10) Judges 6: 11. (11) Ps. 2: 7, etc. (12) Isa. 6. (13) Ex. 10. (14) Gen. 3: 15. (15) Gen. 9: 27. (16) Gen. 22: 18; Gal. 3: 16. (17) Num. 24: 17. (18) Gen. 49: 10. (19) Isa. 11: 1. (20) Ps. 133: 11, 12. (21) Isa. 7: 14. (22) Isa. 62: 2. (23) Mic. 5: 2. (24) Dan. 9: 26, 27. (25) Num. 24: 17. (26) Ps. 72: 11–15. (27) Hos. 11: 1; Matt. 2: 15. (28) Isa. 35: 5, 6. (29) Isa. 40: 2. (30) Zech. 9: 9. (31) Isa. 53. (32) Ps. 68: 18.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia



By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued

MISS CYNTHIA was dreamily comparing the facts of this humble romance of real life with the highly colored lovesory in the magazine, when the gate cked, and a baby-carriage, apparly propelled by unseen hands, mped noisily in upon the freshly ked gravel. The occupant of the riage had evidently reached the int when the feelings become unuttable, for his strident roars were freently interrupted by ominous pauses.

"You'd better take him out, quick!" vised Harriet Puffer, with a dratic gesture of despair. "He's pretty ar choked with cryin', I guess."

"Yes, do please take him out!" wiled Edwina. "He's got all mixed in his clo'es, an' I can't unmix m; the more I try the worse he gets."

"Where is your mother?" asked Miss nthia, peeping in at the wrathful innt with an air of eager curiosity.

"She's gone to the dentist's" exined Harriet. "She said he wouldn't ake up, an' I don't b'lieve he would 's 'f Ed hadn't kep' a-coverin' him up ery time I uncovered him. She was e gran'ma an' I was the mother."

Miss Cynthia timidly laid hold upon e writhing mass of flannels and extcated it from the carriage. The rs suddenly ceased.

"I guess he thinks you're Ma," observed Edwina intelligently.

"Then he'll yell again in a minute nen he finds out you ain't," opined arriet darkly. "He knows an awful l for three months old."

Miss Cynthia was untangling the all, fat body from its encircling blanlts. Her face was flushed; her blue es shone; she breathed quickly. "I ways wanted to take care of a baby nen I was a little girl," she said.

"You c'n have him all the rest of the ternoon just as well as not," said arriet generously. "We don't care; we, Ed? Let's us go an' play tag ile she takes care of him."

"Would you like to take care of m?" inquired Edwina, with anxious fliteness. "You c'n p'tend he's your fly baby, if you want to."

"Go and play tag, if you like," Miss nthia told them hastily. She was ddling the small, warm body in her in arms, and the baby was blindly ssing her soft neck with little whimring cries.

"He isn't a bit hungry!" called Harpt over her shoulder, as she ran joysly away. "I guess you c'n get him sleep bimeby."

Left to herself, Miss Cynthia stared her treasure-trove with wide blue es. "Oh, you little duck, you!" she urmured delightedly, as she felt his und arms through the thin muslin his dress. The tiny, fluttering hands ith a row of dimples across the back xt claimed her attention. Then with amefaced blushes she explored his nnel skirts in search of two active nk feet. The mottled rose of his eeks, the fuzz of downy hair in his fat neck, the queer, uncertain blue of his eyes—she examined them all with charmed incredulity. Never before had she had undisputed possession of a baby. It would probably never happen again. She drew the blankets awkwardly about the soft little body and began to sway gently back and forth in her chair, as she remembered to have seen mothers do. After awhile she even ventured to pat the little back with light, caressing strokes.

The green shaded yard was very still. The sunshine sifted down through the tall elms with an occasional drowsy

"YOU DO CARE, CHILD," SAID MISS CYNTHIA, SOFTLY

note from a nesting phoebe-bird. Miss Cynthia glanced down at the baby held close against her breast; his eyes were closed, a faint smile fluttered about his moist, pink mouth.

"Just suppose——" whispered Miss Cynthia to herself.

CHAPTER XV.

THE long, sweetly monotonous procession of summer days were all folded softly into the past, and Miss Cynthia, with a little shock of painful surprise, faced autumn. It had been the pleasantest summer she ever remembered, despite the hidden current of fear which murmured hollowly beneath the shallow crust of every-day living. There had been teas and picnics and occasional drives behind George Blossom's big brown horse, and the old house had echoed as never before to the sound of young feet and young voices. More than once, after the auspicious occasion of his first visit, did Miss Cynthia cuddle and pet the Puffer baby in motherful fashion, and the twins had established a permanent play house under the apple tree in the back yard.

Mrs. Pettibone had fallen into the pleasant habit of bringing the minister's socks over on to Miss Cynthia's piazza to mend, and the two women talked freely of things seen and unseen in a way which might have scandalized the orthodox pastor could he have heard it. Still Miss Cynthia had not told the minister's wife her terrible little secret. She had told no one. Some fine instinct of life had laid the finger of silence upon her lips.

On a certain chill morning in late September, when the rain fell against the window panes with a hint of approaching winter in its cold, slanting drizzle, she opened her Bible at the ninety-first Psalm, and found a tremulous comfort. Henceforth, she longed feverishly to find "the secret place" of safety, and knew not that it was already "nearer than breathing."

By the time the last leaf had fallen, she had gotten into the way of taking long, solitary walks, which led her out and away from the prying eyes behind the village windows. Her own confused and struggling thoughts were uneasy companions, yet it was something gained to be able to endure them in solitude. Miss Cynthia was no longer afraid of her own thinking, and out from the hidden undercurrent of fear a strong, brave hope lifted itself now and again. She was wrestling, albeit weakly, with the angel of deliverance; but as yet she had caught no glimpse of his veiled face. And the sentient body of her changed subtly with the changing life, as it must, always and inevitably.

Malvina Bennett, proud and busy with fashioning new gowns of many colors for Miss Cynthia, declared she could scarcely believe her eyes. Every one of your measures is changed f'om last spring," announced the little dressmaker importantly. "'Tain't as 'o you'd reelly fleshed up, though I guess you hev gained some; but it's a kind of a general diff'runce. I never see nothin' like it in all my 'xperience a-sewin'."

Miss Bennett had not frequently been called upon to fit garments upon a growing soul; but she dimly groped after the astonishing fact as she fashioned a gown of glowing oak-leaf red, fur-bordered against the cold, which Miss Cynthia had chosen for one of her winter gowns. "A year ago," said Miss Bennett meditatively, "I sh'd 'a thought you was actually a-takin' leave of your senses to git a dress like this; but now——" she paused to survey the faint-smiling face which was bent toward her—— "now it somehow seems to be jest the thing."

Miss Cynthia, wearing the gown of oak-leaf red, and seeming in it an integral part of the clear, frosty October day, was walking briskly on an upland road, when history repeated itself, as it is wont to do. The intermittent creak and rattle of wagon-wheels reached her from beyond the crest of the hill. Later, an inquisitive collie dashed forward to sniff at her daintily gathered skirts; then George Blossom, perched on the high seat of his wagon, drew up his clumsy-footed horse at sight of the little figure at the roadside. His gloomy face brightened as he jumped down over the muddy wheel.

"Nice day for a walk, isn't it, Miss Day?" he began. "What do you say to riding home with me, if you're tired?" Then he burst into a short laugh. "Do you remember how I met you hereabouts last spring? Gracious! it seems more like years than months to me."

"It does seem a long while," agreed

CONTINUED ON PAGE 528

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

BAPTISTS IN BROTHERLY UNION

North and South Fraternized at the National Anniversaries

THE National Baptist Anniversaries were held in St. Louis, May 15-23. The attendance was very large, and the meetings were epoch-making. The sessions began with the meetings of the Women's Baptist Home Mission Society. A very successful year was reported, and encouraging addresses were made by missionaries in Cuba and the Western States and Territories. There were also gratifying reports made in the meetings of the woman's Foreign Missionary Societies.

The outstanding event of these St. Louis meetings, however, was the general Convention of Baptists of North America. This is a new movement inaugurated in New York City last January, when a remarkable Conference was held between representative Baptists of the North and the South. A committee of nine was appointed at this Conference to draft a constitution and by-laws, looking towards some amalgamation of Baptists of North America. The Baptists of this country had one missionary organization, and worked together until 1845. This Society was called the Triennial Convention. The agitation of the slavery question divided the Baptists of the North and the South, as it divided other denominations; so for sixty years the Baptists have been divided. The Baptists of the South organized a separate organization, and for fifty years have had their Southern Baptist Convention.

There have been naturally many misunderstandings and some friction in the past; but in the last few years many leading men on both sides have been urging union. It seemed Providential that the Southern Baptist Convention was held in Kansas City and the sessions closed on May 15th. On the next day, hundreds of Southern Baptists were thronging the third Baptist Church in St. Louis, where the Northern Baptists where holding their Anniversaries. May 16th and 17th were devoted by agreement to the consideration of this great question, "Can there be any union of these two great wings of the Baptist denomination." A ringing address of welcome was make by Governor Joseph W. Folk, of Missouri, who is a Baptist, and who was given an ovation. Governor Folk made a strong plea for a union of Baptist forces.

The General Convention reached the climax of dramatic effect and spiritual fervor on Wednesday, 17th, when the Committee of Nine read their report on permanent organization. Here some feared breakers ahead. Some expected sensational speeches, criticising the constitution and all efforts towards a permanent organization. The atmosphere was vibrant with expectancy. The adoption of the report was moved by Rev. Edward Judson, D.D., in a strong address. The adoption of the report was seconded by Rev. W. E. Hatcher, D.D., of Virginia, one of the ablest preachers in the South. The current for a permanent organization was so strong, that no one ventured to oppose it. It seemed very delightful and very strange to hear at the Baptist National Anniversaries speakers from Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, and Texas, discussing amendments with speakers from Maine, Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania. The whole discussion was characterized by courtesy, impartiality, and brotherliness. When the vote was taken on the adoption of the constitution and by-laws for a permanent organization, it was carried without a dissenting vote.

The General Convention of Baptists of North America will meet in 1906, and after that, every three years. It will not legislate, but its opinions will have great weight. It will not interfere with existing societies and organizations. The objects of this new Convention are as follows: "To promote closer fellowship between American Baptists, their increased efficiency and spirituality and the evangelistic spirit in our churches, and to consider subjects having a bearing on missionary, educational and philanthropic enterprises of the denomination, and upon the moral and spiritual welfare of society."

The American Baptist Home Mission Society opened its sessions on May 17, in the evening. The opening address was by the President, Hon. W. S. Shallenberger, Third Assistant Postmaster-General, who excited interest by his utterances on the mooted question of missionary societies receiving money from multi-millionaires. These were his words: "On the contrary, for any church or organized society to attempt the investigation and ascertainment of the manner in which moneys lawfully held were obtained, before receipt of same could be acknowledged as contributions to charitable and religious enterprises, would be wholly impracticable and only evil in effect. If some lawful owner of accumulated millions should tender to the great Baptist brotherhood of America, to be held in trust and wisely administered, a fund of $10,000,000, for the benefit of Baptist ministers and missionaries who have passed the age of usefulness and vigor, I should be tempted to give it very careful consideration, even though the donor were a member in good standing of another faith."

Stirring addresses, calling for an advance in the work of foreign missions, were made by the Foreign Secretary, Dr. Thomas S. Barbour, and by the Home Secretary, Dr. Henry C. Mabie, and by President J. P. Green of Missouri, and others. Many returned missionaries were present from foreign lands, and made strong appeals to push the work of world-wide evangelization. The introduction of missionaries was a stirring spectacle, as these men and women "on the firing-line," took the platform. The new missionaries who will soon leave for the foreign fields, also were introduced, and the sight of these young men and women made a profound impression.

A resolution was passed deploring the terrible conditions existing among the natives of the Congo, and calling upon the United States Government to investigate. The missionaries report terrible cruelty and injustice on the part of the officials and soldiers of the Belgian Government in administering the affairs of the Congo Free State.

A prominent figure in bringing about the union of Northern and Southern Baptists, is Dr. Henry L. Morehouse, of the Home Mission Society. He has done much pioneer work in his travels. So also has Dr. E. E. Chivers, of the Home Mission Society. Many leaders, North and South, in their travels have been sowing the seeds of fraternity and union for several years. The Baptists of the United States now number 5,000,000. They are the largest denomination in this country after the Methodists.

Another forward movement took place at the St. Louis meetings. The Committee reported favorably in regard to welcoming Free Will Baptist Churches into the regular Baptist denomination. Many Free Will Baptist Churches for several years have been considering this question. Now the regular Baptists will welcome all such Free Will Baptist Churches. It is expected that many such churches will unite at once with this great denomination. At the close of the great General Baptist Convention on May 17th, just as the people were shaking hands, one of the greatest missionaries dropped dead. It was Dr. Joshua N. Cushing, President of the Baptist College at Rangoon, Burma. Dr. Cushing was on the programme as one of the speakers. He had 800 students in his great college, and he was one of the ablest preachers and scholars in the denomination. It was a great shock. Very impressive funeral services were held the next day, and the afflicted wife took the body to Plymouth, Mass., for burial.

WARREN G. PARTRIDGE, D.D.

REV. THOS. S. BARROUR, D.D.

REV. H. C. MABIE, D.D.

HON. W. S. SHALLENBERGER

ME TOO

The "Tail Enders" That Follow Genuine Articles.

It is sometimes interesting to watch the curves imitators make to get the public to buy imitations of genuine goods.

Every now and then some one will think there is a splendid opening to fix up something like Postum Coffee and advertise the same way and take some of the business.

An imitator is naturally ignorant of food values and how to skilfully make a cereal coffee, on scientific lines.

Such men first think of preparing something that looks and tastes like the original, with no knowledge of how the grains should be treated to prepare them so that the starchy part is transformed properly and the valuable nourishing elements made digestible.

Such imitations may be foisted on the public for a short time, but the people are critical and soon detect the attempt, then the imitators go out of business.

Something like 400 of these little factories have been started in various parts of this country in the past 9 years, and practically all of them have gone the "long journey." Just lately a new one has come to life and evidently hopes to insert itself in public favor by copying the style of the Postum advertising in the papers.

This is a free country and every man who makes an honest product and honestly labels it, has reason for some recognition, but the public has the right to know the facts.

Postum is the one original and genuine Cereal Coffee, made skilfully and for a definite purpose. It has stood through all the wars of the imitators, has won the approval of the Physicians and the people.

People who really seek to free themselves from the coffee habit and at the same time to rebuild the soft gray matter in the nerve centres and thus reconstruct the nervous system, broken down by coffee, can rely on Postum.

There's a reason.

ROYAL
Baking Powder
Most healthful leavener in the world. Goes farther.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Another Autocrat!

But there never was a bigge brighter boy at his age,—never a ru dier, more beautiful skin than hi
SPIM SOAP
did that for him. His parents te us so. We know it will do as muc for your baby's skin. The best Soa for baby—and for you, that was ev known. Stop using powder on the baby—it clo the pores. SPIM Soap keeps them clear as natur intended. It's 25c. SPIM Ointment, the wonderf healer, is 50c. For a wrapper from either we wi send you free our Album of "400 Beautiful Babies"— SPIM Babies. "Watch the Baby" Booklet, free to an address. It tells of the $500 prize contest for babies
Spim Co., 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N.Y. (C. B. Knox, Pres

MENNEN'S BORAT TALCU TOILET POWDE

A Positive Relief for PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. lightful after Shaving. Sold everywher mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

Learn to Knit
The new Columbia Book of Yarns (6th edition) is so clear that anyone can understand it, and so good that it is valuable even to experienced knitters. Explains the different stitches and gives instructions for making many handsome articles. 160 pages, 106 illustrations. Worth $1, but sold at dealers' or by mail for 15 cents.
Also points out the importance of using good yarns and tells why COLUMBIA YARNS are the best in the world.
Look for the Columbia trade-mark on the label around every skein.
Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

A FINE COOK FOR $1.00 A YEA
By using the

O-HI-O Combined Steam Cooker & Bake
Guaranteed to save 50 per cent in fu labor, time and provisions. A who meal, from soup to dessert, cooked ov one burner on any style stove. No h termingling of odors or tastes. Insur you deliciously cooked, easily digeste never spoiled, steaming hot mea Thirty days trial. Fine for summer co tages. Grand for Canning Fruit.
Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue Free.
$1 Cook Book for 4c postage. We want Good Agent Guarantee $30 to $40 weekly and expenses.
O-HI-O COOKER CO., 737 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, O

PATTON'S SUN-PROOF PAINTS
keep the house sound and beautiful. Unnecessary to paint often. Advice on painting problems and book FREE
PATTON PAINT COMPANY,
218 LAKE STREET MILWAUKEE, WIS.

KEEP YOUR TROUSERS IN SHAPE
Boe's Indestructible Trouser Stretcher and Presser does it. Retails for 25c a set. Agent's Samples, Two Sets for 25c. Particulars with sample sets.
BOE MFG. CO., 332C Temple Court, New York City

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN
FREE TO AGENTS
Flat thin knife cuts loose a perfect cake. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T
HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

MUSIC LESSONS Send for our booklet, it is FREE
It tells how to learn to play any instrument. Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, etc. Write American School of Music, 319 Manhattan Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

SEA SHELLS 25 small shells, all different postpaid, 15c. Illustrated book describing hundreds of rare and beautiful shells Free
IOWA BIRD CO., DES MOINES IOWA.

$75 MONTH & EXPENSES POSITION PERMANENT; NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED. PEASE MFG. CO. STA. E CINCINNATI, O. SELF SELLER.

Eager to Go to Mont-Lawn

THE TENEMENT CHILDREN ANXIOUSLY LOOKING FORWARD TO THE OPENING OF THE HOME

"THEY ARE ASKING FOR TEN DAYS OF DELIGHT"

APPLICATIONS and requests for Mont-Lawn outings for the children are coming in to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by the hundreds. Some of them have a peculiarly pathetic interest, especially those sent by mothers whose children, having enjoyed the Home before, are eagerly waiting the opportunity to go again.

One mother writes of the serious illness of her little ones during the winter, and begs that they may have the benefit of a vacation at Mont-Lawn. She adds that it helped them so much last season to get through the long, hot summer. These mothers never make any plea for themselves; it is always for the children. With the children away for ten days, being well cared for, the poor, tired, overworked mothers have a chance to take a comparative rest, although the toil inseparable from tenement home must still go on from preparing the workingman's early morning breakfast, to the evening meal, when he returns tired and hungry from his day's hard labor.

These people are very grateful for the opportunity afforded by Mont-Lawn, and never forget to express their thanks. They have all they can do to pay the rent, feed and clothe their children, and there is little left for vacation or recreation of any kind. No matter how sultry may be the weather, or how unbearably hot the poor home in the great tenement, they must endure it somehow.

From Settlements and Missions, established in various congested districts of New York City, come requests in behalf of the children connected with them. Manager Payne of "Sunshine Mission," expresses in behalf of the workers and young people of the Mission, their great appreciation of the assistance which Mont-Lawn outings have given the work in their neighborhood. He says, "the splendid outings which you have given the children, have done so much to hold the young people, when we had little else to offer." The children connected with Greenwich House, are "awaiting their invitations with the greatest longing," so writes the head worker in this Neighborhood Settlement.

The Secretary of the Brooklyn Children's Aid Society writes, that the growth of the borough is extending rapidly and the needs of many poor little ones keep pace, as their number steadily increases from year to year. The "Little Italy Neighborhood Association," a recently established settlement work in South Brooklyn, is also knocking at the hospitable doors of Mont-Lawn. "Little Italy" is one of the most interesting of the foreign colonies in and about New York. While some of the older people cannot speak a word of English and cling to their foreign customs and picturesque dress, the younger generation is growing up into good Americans, thanks to the efforts of the devoted Christian people who are working to that end, and also to the desires of these bright-eyed, dark-skinned youngsters themselves. They are very anxious to learn, not only their lessons at school, but manners and customs which will stamp them as natives of this country, which indeed many of them are, as the colony was begun some twenty years ago.

And so from all quarters of the great metropolis where poverty holds sway, the children are calling. They are asking that the ten days of delight which they once experienced at Mont-Lawn, may again be theirs, and this year there are so many who have been told of the wonders, "away up in the country," by the more favored ones who have been there, that the number of guests could be doubled if there were only room. The children, many of them, would willingly sleep on the floor if they could only be among those bidden to the Home.

It is hard to say "No," to any, and Mont-Lawn's capacity will be stretched to the utmost this season. Housemother Collins is looking out for every little bed, and no corner in the whole establishment, however obscure, will elude her vigilant eye. Every room will put on its gayest, brightest aspect for the welcoming of the happy little guests. The Matron would remind those who are interested in the work at Mont-Lawn, that many of the children are almost destitute of clothing when they arrive at the Home. Should any of our readers, during their spring renovating and cleaning, come across any little outgrown garments, either for boys or girls, they would be most gratefully received at Mont-Lawn, where all garments are carefully distributed among the most needy of the children. Packages may be addressed to CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y.

All money contributions to be sent to Fresh Air Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. $21 endows a cot for the season, and $3 gives a little child a vacation of ten days at Mont-Lawn, the children's paradise.

A Fellow's Mother

"A FELLOW'S mother," said Fred, the wise,
With his rosy cheeks and his merry eyes,
Knows what to do if a fellow gets hurt
By a thump, or a bruise, or a fall in the dirt

"A fellow's mother has bags and strings,
Rags, and buttons, and lots of things
No matter how busy she is, she'll stop
To see how well you can spin your top.

"She does not care—not much, I mean—
If a fellow's face is not always clean.
And if your trousers are torn at the knee,
She can put in a patch that you'd never see.

"A fellow's mother is never mad,
But only sorry if you are bad,
And I tell you this, if you're only true,
She'll always forgive whate'er you do.

"I'm sure of this," said Fred, the wise,
With a manly look in his laughing eyes,
"I'll mind my mother, quick, every day,
A fellow's a baby that don't obey."

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A Way That Gave Much Pleasure

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a treasure in any home. Your Calendars are all beautiful, but the one for 1905 is the prettiest of all. Living in a small village, as I do, each December brings this puzzling question, "How can I get nice, cheap, appropriate Christmas presents, suitable to send through the mail to scattered loved ones?" Last December I settled this question by sending my Christmas money to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with the request that THE HERALD be sent to six different homes for the year 1905. Since receiving letters of thanks and such expressions of appreciation, I think double the amount, used in any other way, would not have given so much pleasure. My father put all these expressions of appreciation in a nutshell when he wrote, "I think it is the best all round family paper published anywhere." It pleases young and old, rich and poor, all alike.

Gardner, Tenn. MRS. F. L. PEEPLES.

REDUCED PRICES
On Suits, Skirts and Jackets
Made to Order. Nothing Ready made $4.80 to $20

We are now and always have been leaders in the manufacture of Ladies' Tailor Suits and Skirts. Our garments are the standard of fashion and excellence.

So sure are we that we can make a perfect fitting garment from measurements taken in accordance with the simple directions we send you, that in case of a misfit we

GUARANTEE TO REFUND YOUR MONEY

Our Catalogue illustrates the latest Spring and Summer New York Styles.

Our Samples show you what fabrics are now fashionable.

Over 150 Styles and 400 Materials from which to select

To close out our entire stock of Summer materials, we will make any garment illustrated in our Spring and Summer Catalogue from any of our HIGH-GRADE FABRICS at a Reduction of ONE FIFTH from Catalogue prices.

$6 Suits NOW	$4.80	$4 Skirts NOW	$3.20
12 Suits NOW	9.60	7 Skirts NOW	5.60
18 Suits NOW	14.40	10 Skirts NOW	8.00
25 Suits NOW	20.00	12 Skirts NOW	9.60

If you contemplate the purchase of a garment, write at once for our Catalogue and Samples, which will stock of the most desirable materials to complete

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our Spring and Summer Catalogue, showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of Samples of the newest materials, and simple rules for taking measurements correctly. WRITE FOR THEM TO-DAY

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York
Mail Orders Only. No Agts. or Branches. Est. 17 Yrs.

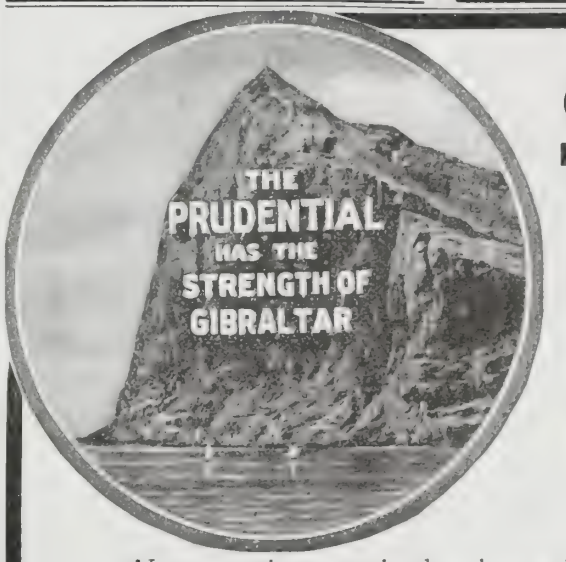
Wheel Chairs

We make a complete line of modern Rolling Chairs for adults and infants, and sell direct at WHOLESALE PRICES. 75 styles to select from. We pay freight and sell on

30 DAYS TRIAL.

Liberal discounts allowed to all sending for FREE Catalogue NOW

GORDON MFG. CO. 526 Madison Ave., Toledo, O



SAVE

for your Own and your Family's Future.

You may be surprised to know how profitably you can invest even an average of $2.00 per week in Endowment Life Insurance in

The Prudential

Cash amount payable to you (if living) in 10, 15 or 20 years with Dividends (according to plan selected).

If the insured dies before the end of the Endowment Period, the full amount of the Policy is paid to the beneficiary.

We desire to correspond with you on the subject and furnish full information as to Rates, Benefits and Privileges.

Send Coupon today.

Without committing myself to any action, I shall be glad to receive your particulars and rates of Endowment Policies.

Amount..... Age..

Name .....

Address.....

Occupation..... Dept. 70

The Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

Incorporated by Special Act of the Legislature of New Jersey

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President. Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.

FROM SAME BOX

Where the Foods Come From

"Look here, waiter, honest now, don't you dip every one of these flaked breakfast foods out of the same box?" "Well, yes, boss, we duz, all 'cept Grape-Nuts, 'cause that don't look like the others and people know 'zackly what Grape-Nuts looks like. But there's 'bout a dozen different ones named on the bill of fare and they are all thin rolled flakes, so it don't make any difference which one a man calls for, we just take out the order from one box."

This talk led to an investigation. Dozens of factories sprung up about three years ago, making various kinds of breakfast foods, seeking to take the business of the original prepared breakfast food—Grape-Nuts. These concerns, after a precarious existence, nearly all failed, leaving thousands of boxes of their foods in mills and warehouses. These were in several instances bought up for a song by speculators and sold out to grocers and hotels for little or nothing. The process of working off this old stock has been slow. One will see the names on menus of flaked foods that went out of business a year and a half or two years ago. In a few cases where the abandoned factories have been bought up, there is an effort to resuscitate the defunct, and by copying the style of advertising of Grape-Nuts, seek to influence people to purchase. But the public has been educated to the fact that all these thin flaked foods are simply soaked wheat or oats rolled thin and dried out and packed. They are not prepared like Grape-Nuts, in which the thorough baking and other operations which turn the starch part of the wheat and barley into sugar, occupy many hours, and result in a food so digestible that small infants thrive on it, while it also contains the selected elements of Phosphate of Potash and Albumen that unite in the body to produce the soft gray substance in brain and nerve centres. There's a reason for Grape-Nuts, and there have been many imitations, a few of the article itself, but many more of the kind and character of the advertising. Imitators are always counterfeiters and their printed and written statements cannot be expected to be different than their goods.

This article is published by the Postum Co. at Battle Creek. Additional evidence of the truth can be supplied in quantities.

Why?

The State of Ohio deposits its money with us. So does the County of Cuyahoga and the City of Cleveland; so do 49,000 depositors large and small - all over the United States and in many foreign countries.

There must be good reasons why so many conservative investors throughout the world take advantage of our simple, easy system of

Banking by Mail

Our booklet "F" explains these reasons most convincingly. Shall we send it?

We pay 4%

Compounded Semi-annually

Our assets are twenty-six million dollars. Small accounts are entirely welcome.

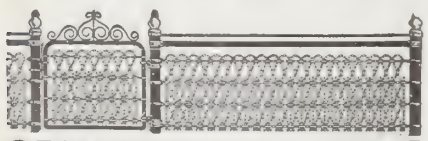
The Cleveland Trust Company

CLEVELAND OHIO

$35.00 Split Hickory

Top Buggy guaranteed 2 years Free Trial. It's a genuine Split Hickory that means 25% more value. The biggest buggy bargain of the year Free 192 page catalogue. The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co. H. C. Phelps, Pres. Station 236 Cincinnati, Ohio

Sold on 30 Days $35



ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Cleverly combining Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free. Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

or selling orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO P. O. Box 289, 31-33 Vesey St., New York

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 525

Miss Cynthia. She paled a little as she met the young man's honest gray eyes. "It really isn't very long, though only half a year."

"A lot can happen in half a year," he said scowling discontentedly. "A fellow can learn that he's a big fool for his pains, for one thing. I've just contracted to paint three barns for Mr. James Scott," he went on, with a deepening of the wrinkle between his young eyes. "I'm such a conscientious workman that folks value my services highly—when it comes to painting a barn red."

Miss Cynthia listened with entire understanding. "I wonder," she said thoughtfully, "if you would care to borrow the money from me to go away for a year of study. I have—a—a sum, which I ought to invest. It is, in fact, lying idle. I should be glad to——"

"Should you?" cried George Blossom. His face had become suddenly illuminated. "Oh, I do want to go away. I want——" He stopped short and turned roughly to the brown horse who was manifesting certain crude signs of animal impatience with the vagaries of his master.

"You'd better start at once, I should say," Miss Cynthia went on, in a matter of fact tone. "If you will decide just what course you would like to take up, and——"

"I know exactly what I want to do," said the young fellow under his breath. "But——" His face reddened slowly. "I can't give you any sort of security. I just couldn't ask father to—to mortgage the farm. They have worked so hard, and——"

"You will give me your personal note, of course," Miss Cynthia said promptly. "It is quite customary, you know, and I shall consider it ample security."

"I don't know much about that sort of business," he confessed shyly. "But I know I can pay every cent of it back. I know——. Thank you," he finished abruptly. "I will do it." He drew a deep breath. "I can turn over the contract for those barns to Bill Cartright; I guess he's going to need all he c'n make."

Miss Cynthia laughed happily. "He and Nellie are to be married next week," she said. "Abby Whiton has pieced them two quilts already. She proposes to do her full duty by Nellie."

"Bill had a fool notion at one time that he was a notch above the girl," observed George Blossom, with a faint-hearted echo of Miss Cynthia's laugh. "I told him he was an ass—just a plain ass. In a quiet country place like this it's too silly to be always going on about 'position' and—and 'culture.' I've got so I hate that word 'culture'! What's 'culture' I'd like to know, when it comes to——"

The young fellow set his white teeth strongly; his eyes glowed with love and fury. "I suppose you think I'm a regular chump," he said roughly. "She does, anyhow; she as much as told me so this afternoon. Well, may be I'll find I c'n afford to forget her."

Miss Cynthia watched him with a sigh as he rattled away down the long slope, behind the pounding feet of the clumsy brown horse. "He will forget," she murmured; "but she will remember."

She rested for a while beside the gray stone wall, her richly colored grown making a gorgeous splash of color, in deep accord with the browns and russets of the sober landscape. It was very still on the lonely hill-top; all the chirping and singing of summer had ceased; three or four silent crows wheeled sombrely athwart the cold blue of the sky; the yellow leaves dropped noiselessly one by one from the wide-branched butternuts that fringed the road.

Miss Cynthia had fallen into a revery so absorbed and engrossing that she did not hear the light footfalls of the girl who was coming down the road, a scarlet tam poised jauntily on her dark curling hair, her trim figure alert and self-conscious in its tightly-fitting jacket.

She paused to greet Miss Cynthia with a little cry of surprise and pleasure. The two had established a friendship of a tentative, unsubstantial nature, since the day when Rosalie Scott discovered the neglected Breyfogle mahogany in Miss Cynthia's attic. On her part, the girl had never ceased to derive a girlishly arrogant amusement from her contemplation of Miss Cynthia's elderly fads, as she chose to term them. This attitude, while it put the older woman slightly on the defensive, was not wholly without its reflection in Miss Cynthia's mind. She was not, as has been intimated, a very astute little person, yet she found in Rosalie Scott's disdainful attitude toward the community at large and herself in particular, matter for a kindly pity and regret which would have thoroughly amazed the young person in question could she have guessed it.

"What a lovely dress!" began the girl, with a pretty air of envy. "Do you know you looked exactly like a spirit of autumn, with your pale, spirituelle face and still eyes when I came upon you."

She blushed with pleasure at the sound of her own words. "I have been reading Keat's Ode to Autumn, this afternoon," she went on, with a little self-conscious sigh. "One ought always to read it in October, I think; it is so exquisitely beautiful! You know it, of course."

"No," said Miss Cynthia, "I never cared much for poetry."

"You don't?" exclaimed the girl. "What a pity!"

She moved her slim shoulders ever so slightly as she continued her studiedly careless examination of Miss Cynthia's red gown. "I have always loved poetry. I write it myself sometimes. I simply can't help it."

"Do you?" said Miss Cynthia absent-mindedly. "How very nice." She was thinking of the look in George Blossom's boyish eyes when he had said, "Maybe I c'n afford to forget her."

She turned to look carefully at the girl's pretty face, the Breyfogle expression, with which Abby Whiton was growing respectfully familiar, sharpening her indeterminate little mouth and childish blue eyes. "It must be very pleasant to be so different from ordinary folks," she finished deliberately.

The girl bit her lip. "I believe you're trying to snub me, too," she said sulkily. "Pa does, sometimes; and to-day that impertinent workman — I know you like him; but he is impertinent—he said horrid things to me about poetry and - and—I can't bear him anyhow. He hasn't a particle of real culture!"

"Perhaps he'll manage to acquire more than you have before you see him again," Miss Cynthia said cruelly. "He's going away this week to study."

"Oh, I guess you're mistaken; he's just been hired to paint father's barns. I'll be bored to death seeing him around with his horrid sticky brushes and things. I detest the smell of paint!" And the girl laughed a thought too shrilly.

Miss Cynthia made no comment on this speech. She was thinking that perhaps George Blossom was right about affording to forget this girl. One could afford to forget some people and some things. It was good to forget—to be able to laugh at vague, haunting memories. Her blue eyes shone suddenly keen and cold as the autumn sky, athwart which the sombre crows were flapping heavily.

"I can assure you that you will not be bothered with seeing George Blos-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 529

CORNISH PIANOS AND ORGANS

TWO YEARS' CREDIT IF NEEDED

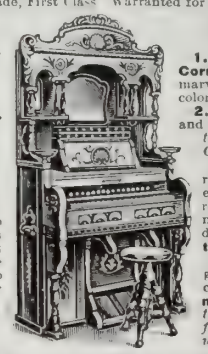
Simple as A B C to furnish your home with a beautiful Grade Cornish Piano or Organ, on a plan of payments to meet your convenience. Special terms. We can sat honest person a one-half what and dealers char erybody has the of our Factory pr can buy on any reason. We will Piano or Organ days trial. Frei —no money vance. Goods at our risk and safe delivery guaranteed. Payment after one month's use in your own home. We do not mak cheap, trashy goods, but only the old reliable Cornish Pia Organs—High Grade, First Class. Warranted for twenty-fi

$25 FIRST PAYMENT

Balance at your own convenience

Distance is no objection. We ship promptly everywhere. We have 250,000 satisfied patrons.

If you want to buy a first-class Piano or Organ at factory cost we invite you to write to us to-day for our remarkable collection of aids to purchasers.



FREE

1. The Be Cornish Alb marvel of p color and desi
2. A set of and embossed ture Pian Organs.
3. Our registered ence book recent pur names a dresses — that you k
4. Our to give every chaser 96 music les the most st ful tuition world.

All these FREE if you write AT ONCE and mention this ma

REMEMBER!!! We make here in our own large at plete Factories in beautiful N New Jersey, the World Renowned Cornish American Pian Organs. We employ hundreds of skilled mechanics, and we build and sell at First Cost direct to the general public the finest Pianos and Organs in America. You can't get a Cornish if you don't come to us direct, and if you do we insure your satisfaction by our iron-clad bond backed up by a Million Dollars of Plant and Property. Don't think of buying elsewhere—Get the Cornish Plan First.

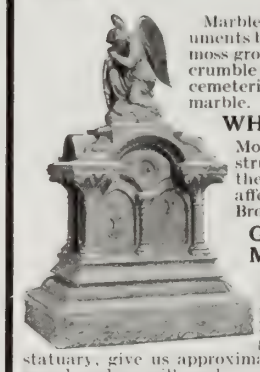
$10 FIRST PAYME

Balance $5 a month at your convenienc

CORNISH CO. Washington, New Je

Established 50 Years

IN MEMORIAM



Marble and granite mon uments become discolored moss grown, and in time crumble and decay. Some cemeteries now prohibit marble.

WHITE BRONZE

Monuments are inde structible. Time and the elements do not affect them. White Bronze won both the Gold and Silver Medals at the St. Louis Exposition. If in need of mon uments, markers, head stones, posts, grave covers or statuary, give us approximate sum you can spend, and we will send a variety of Beautiful Designs, prices, etc. No obligation to buy. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

AGENTS WANTED

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.

70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE

No gumming to clog neck of bottle—N sediment will not spoil nor discolor th finest papers. Full 2 oz. bottle retails a 5c., or sent by mail for 10c.; also hal pints, pints and quarts.

LePage's Photo Paste

2 oz. size retails 5c.; by mail, 10c.

LE PAGE'S GLUE STRONGEST IN THE WORLD

1 oz. bottle or tube, 10c.; by mail, 12c

RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Ave., Gloucester, Mas

SUMMER HOMES IN GREEN HILLS O

Vermont and Lake Champlai

Terms, $4 to $10 per week.

New trains between Boston, New York, Springfiel and Vermont points. As good as any on the continent 150-page illustrated brochure mailed free on recei of 6c. in stamps or postage.

Address A. W. ECCLESTONE, So. Pass Agent 385 Broadway, New York City.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 528

around any more," she said brisk-
v. "I talked with him myself this noon, and he has decided to go at once. He may never come here to stay. I think the chances that he will not. There are other s which will give him a better in life than Innisfield. I shall inly advise him—not to return."

stopped short to observe the sudeclipse which had fallen on Rosa-rich beauty. The girl's warm had gradually receded, leaving pallid and pinched-looking. Her s moved aimlessly at her side;
great dark eyes fixed themselves a frightened, appealing look upon Cynthia's face.

know you don't like me," she fal-at last. "You think I'm heart-es and horrid, and that's why o —" She threw up her delicate with a defiant laugh, while the bloom flashed back into lips and ks and shone in her angry eyes.
you suppose I care what he does?
you think for a minute that I
?"

ou do care, child," said Miss Cyn-softly. "Oh, my dear, my dear! lie to your own heart. Don't, I of you. Listen— "

e girl had turned her head aside, an obstinate lifting of her slim ulders.

nce I had a lover— —" Miss Cynwent on hurriedly. "No, don't ch at me, child, he loved me dearly.
was poorer than I, and lived in a by little house at the edge of the ge. It wasn't altogether my fault,
I—I told him I could never marry that he must go away. And he
That was all."

What do you mean?" The girl
ed stupidly.

mean just that. He went away.
forgot. But I didn't forget, and years have been long and empty;
now——"

And now?"

nd now—it is—growing late." Miss Cynthia's pale lips just formed the ds. Her hand stole unconsciously the breast of her crimson gown.

I'm going home," said Rosalie Scott, a long silence. She stooped imsively and kissed Miss Cynthia's cheek. "If you will come home me I'll drive you into town. You tired."

iss Cynthia shook her head. "I am t—tired," she said. "Good-bye."

e wanted to be alone. To have earthed this mute, dead thing be-the girl's curious eyes was a task she had hardly brought herself
The reburial at least must be pri-
e. It should also be final, she told herself.

t an angle of the road, where the set woods merged into cultivated fields, a solitary figure was standing, locing off over the village which ded the undulating meadows on ther side of the narrow, twisted
er. Miss Cynthia, her short-sighted es misty with pain, passed the way-r without a glance.

he man turned sharply at the apach of the little figure in its gay n, followed it with a speculative m of something like amusement in dark eyes, and finally overtook it h a few long strides.

You'll think I'm always turning up odd moments, like a Jack-in-the-
," he said easily.

iss Cynthia stared at him wordssly. "Why have you come?" she d at last. She did not smile at him before, and he was unreasonably t because she did not.

I came to Innisfield to see you," he d her directly. "It struck me that talk together was—well, it was atisfactory—to me, at least. I kept ng over what you had said after I t away—I had only a few minutes spend that day, you remember,
—"

"I had forgotten," she said vaguely. "So many things have happened since. But it was very good of you, Mr. Blake, to come and see me. I am sorry I was not at home." She was looking at him quietly and observantly, as at a stranger.

"I had almost lost sight of the old days. I believe I told you so," he went on hurriedly, "but seeing you that day somehow brought it all back. I have thought of it and of you a lot, since." His eyes, so like those of the boy she remembered, were searching her face.

"And you found it very amusing—you laughed at it all, I hope?" Miss Cynthia hardly knew her own voice.

"No, by George! I did not," he exclaimed impetuously. "For one thing, I remembered altogether too well the day I left Innisfield. It was in the morning at five o'clock—a cold, drizzly beast of a day, and I was just as cold and pinched and forlorn as the weather. You never guessed it, but I stood under your window and cried like a baby before I heard the stage-horn tooting and knew that I must go."

"I'm sorry it happened so," Miss Cynthia said drearily. "I thought I couldn't help it, then."

"After that," went on the man, with a reminiscent shrug, "I determined to forget you. And I was so busy finding enough to eat that I actually succeeded after a while. It took a long time, though."

His last words deepened the look of determination in Miss Cynthia's face. "I think," she said clearly, "that I should like to say two or three things; then, if you please, we'll not talk about it any more."

His eyes begged her to go on.

"It all happened so very long ago," Miss Cynthia said, choosing her words deliberately, "that I agree with you, it ought to be forgotten. But I've always wanted to tell you that I know I did wrong, and that I am ashamed and sorry. I didn't understand—then what I was doing. If you will forgive me—I shall be happier, I think. And —yes, that is all."

"You are not changed," he murmured wonderingly, "you are not changed."

"You are mistaken," said Miss Cynthia, with an air of gentle finality. "I am changed. You are changed. Everything is changed. It is quite impossible to go back to the old days."

Her blue eyes were calm and untroubled, they wore the curiously far-away look which he remembered to have seen in them before.

His keen, clever face had grown grave and anxious. "I never thought I should ask a woman for her friendship," he said at last. "I've never cared much for women. Perhaps I ought to say I've never been thrown with them much, except in a professional way. My mother died ten years ago. Since then I've been too busy to go into society." He paused to smile doubtfully to himself. "But I should like it if you will let me be your friend—if you will be my friend. I shan't be able to see you often; but I can write—if you will allow me. Will you?"

Miss Cynthia hesitated in silence.

"I must go back to my work to-night," he went on, his eyes upon her face. "I will write to you to-morrow. My letters may not interest you; but I will do my best."

Miss Cynthia looked up, her face touched with pathetic youth and beauty in its sudden bloom of anticipation. "I think I should like to have letters," she said, simply. "I have never had many; there has never been anybody to write to me. Sometimes I watch the postman of a morning and wish he would bring me a letter. But he scarcely ever does. Of course, there are the papers and magazines! but they're not like letters."

"And you will write to me?"

TO BE CONTINUED

WE offer you EGG-O-SEE in an inner-lined, air-tight, germ proof package, insuring absolute purity. It is the whole grain of the choicest California white wheat, flaked, crisped to a dainty brown, flavored with pure fruit juices. Far more healthful and delicious than bread, crackers, or ordinary cereal foods. Why buy the slow selling kinds, which come to you 6 months to 2 years old, stale and unfit for use.

SAFEGUARD YOUR HEALTH. BUY EGG-O-SEE. ALWAYS FRESH

If you can find a grocer who does not sell Egg-O-See send us his name and 10 cents, mentioning this publication, and we will send you a full-sized package prepaid. Address the Egg-O-See Co., Quincy, Ill.
In Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain territory, the price of EGG-O-SEE is 15c; two packages, 25c.

$21.00 PRICE EXPLAINED

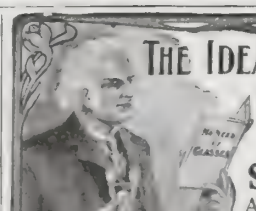
FOR $21.00 TO $23.00 TOP BUGGIES, similar to one illustrated, HAVE BEEN WIDELY ADVERTISED. also ROAD WAGONS at $14.00 to $17.00, SURREYS at $34.00 to $38.00.

HOW BUGGIES can be offered at these prices and why we can sell buggies and all other vehicles at much lower prices than any other house is all fully explained in our Four Big Free Vehicle Catalogues. Cut this ad. out and send to us and you will receive by return mail, Free, Postpaid, Four Big Vehicle Catalogues showing the most complete line of everything in Buggies, Road Wagons, Carts, Surreys, Phaetons, Carriages, Light and Heavy Wagons, Vehicles of all kinds, also everything in Harness, Saddles and Saddlery, all shown in large handsome halftone illustrations, full descriptions and all priced at prices much lower than any other house can possibly make.

WITH THE FOUR FREE CATALOGUES you will receive the most astonishing Buggy Offer ever heard of, a new and astonishing proposition. How others can offer top buggies at $21.00 to $23.00 and why we can sell at much lower prices than all others will be fully explained. We will explain why we ship so as to make freight charges amount to next to nothing. We will explain why we are the only makers or dealers in the world that can ship buggies the day we receive your order. OUR FREE TRIAL OFFER, OUR PAY AFTER RECEIVED TERMS, OUR BINDING GUARANTEE ARE ALL EXPLAINED WHEN WE SEND YOU THE FOUR FREE CATALOGUES.

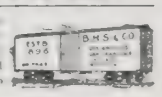
HAVE YOU ANY USE FOR A BUGGY? If you have, don't fail to cut this ad. out today and mail to us. If you can't use A TOP BUGGY AT ANY PRICE, call your neighbor's attention to this announcement. Don't buy any kind of a buggy until after you cut this ad. out and send to us and get THE FOUR BIG FREE CATALOGUES, THE MOST LIBERAL OFFER, The Very Latest Proposition, everything explained, all free for the asking. Write Today. SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

POND'S EXTRACT
THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR
Rough Red Skin
can be brought back to its normal condition by bathing with Pond's Extract.
Witch Hazel is not the same thing. On analysis of seventy samples of Witch Hazel—sold or offered as "just as good"—fifty two were found to contain wood alcohol or formaldehyde or both. To avoid danger of poisoning insist on having
THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR
POND'S EXTRACT



THE IDEAL SIGHT RESTORER
Is Your Sight Failing?
All refractive errors, muscular trouble and chronic diseases of the Eye successfully treated by scientific MASSAGE.
Illustrated treatise with affidavit testimonials free. Address
THE IDEAL COMPANY,
239 Broadway, New York.

Reduced Rates



Four Little Bee Books FREE

A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio

"WHAT A CRIME"
To Talk Against Coffee

To an ambitious student an ailment that interferes with school and study is very hard to bear.

A bright young girl in Detroit who had been poisoned by coffee, is now pursuing her studies in perfect health. Probably the coffee champions feel she should have continued to suffer and kept on with the coffee, but now and then there are self-willed creatures who insist on getting well by leaving off coffee, deserting the "topers ranks" and joining the Postum army.

"From early childhood till a year ago I was in the habit of drinking three or four cups of coffee every day.

"As I grew older, the bad effects began to show themselves, although I had no idea that it was coffee that was doing the mischief. I became very nervous, and suffered so much from severe headaches that I lost much valuable time from my school and studies. The doctor could give me no relief—he probably did not suspect the coffee any more than I did.

"One day I went to visit a friend, and the coffee they had on their table tasted so good that I asked what kind it was, and they told me it was Postum Food Coffee. My friend said that her mother had been a nervous wreck from drinking the old kind of coffee, but had been restored to health by quitting it and drinking Postum. The whole family were enthusiastic about Postum and advised me to try it.

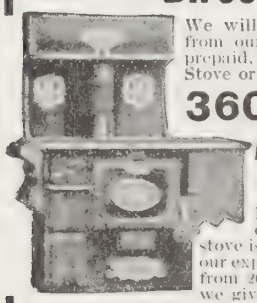
"I am glad they did; for it has given me back my health. At first we did not boil it enough and did not like it, but we soon learned how to make it, and now we all prefer it to the old kind. I have discovered that to stir a beaten egg in the warm milk we use instead of cream gives a most delicious flavor to Postum Food Coffee.

"From the first day I began to use Postum Coffee (I quit the old kind altogether) my health began to improve. My headaches ceased on the third day and have never returned, my nervousness has completely disappeared, my brain seems invigorated and strengthened, and I am now able to study from 4 to 5 hours daily, outside of school, and feel no bad effects from it.

"My aunt was sick for five years from coffee poisoning. It was hard work to get her to give up the beverage, but when she did and began to use Postum Food Coffee, she got well almost at once, and is now enjoying fine health." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days' trial proves. "There's a reason."

A KALAMAZOO
Direct to You



We will send you direct from our factory, freight prepaid, any Kalamazoo Stove or Range on a

360 DAYS APPROVAL TEST

If not as represented, the range or stove is to be returned at our expense. We save you from 20% to 40%, because we give you cutting out all dealers', jobbers', middlemen's and agents' profits. We are the only stove manufacturers in the world who sell their entire product direct to the user. We guarantee quality under a $20,000 bond.

Lowest Factory Prices

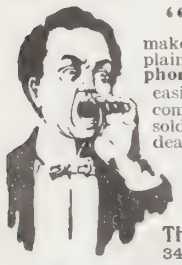
Send Postal for Catalog No. 103

describing full line of ranges, cook stoves and heaters of all kinds.

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., MFRS.,
Kalamazoo, Mich.

We fit all our ranges and cook stoves with our patent oven thermometer which makes baking easy.

DON'T SHOUT!
"The Morley"



makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

STARK FRUIT BOOK

shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.

We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's. Louisiana. Mo

Oakland's Open-air Meetings

FIRST OPEN-AIR GOSPEL MEETING IN OAKLAND, CALIF.

REPRESENTATIVES from all the evangelical churches in Oakland, Cal., met in the City Hall Park on a recent Sunday afternoon, where was held the first of a series of five o'clock open-air meetings. Musical selections, rendered by the best singers from the various churches, and joined in by the worshipers, helped to make the first service a very successful one.

The sermon was delivered by the Rev. E. R. Dille, of the First Methodist Church, who chose as his text the parable of the Prodigal Son. He said, in part:

"In meeting here to-day, we are only doing what Jesus did in the Holy Land. Jesus was an outdoor man. He spoke to the people on the hilltops, by the shores of the sea, and wherever he happened to find hsmself. In his footsteps we have decided to follow, and we address ourselves to those who are to be found in the street, and outside of the church.

"When we leave God, our Father, and stray into evil ways, we are as the prodigal in the strange land, where he was compelled to eat what the swine left. But when we return to our Father, we meet with the same forgiving, loving nature that greeted the prodigal. God is our Father, and we are his children. This is the reason why we can feel confident that we can always turn from our sin, and making our way to Him, as the prodigal did to his father, lay our burden of sin upon Him, and meet forgiveness."

J. D. HOWE.

John's Testimony

By MRS. M. BAXTER

THE Gospel of St. John goes back to the past eternity of Jesus as "the Word," which was "in the beginning," by whom all things were made, who was the only-begotten of the Father, one with him; and who, coming down from the throne of the universe, "was made flesh, and dwelt among us," and who, therefore, claims from all men that they should believe that he is the Son of God, that believing they might have, not a change of opinion, not a mere mental process, but an actual change of being—"life through his name." Not life such as they had before, but life of his life, partakership of the divine nature, eternal life, shared with him who is "that eternal Life which was with the Father, and has been manifested to us" (I. John 1: 2). The Gospel of John brings us face to face with the fact that we must personally have to do with Jesus; we must receive or reject him; we must take the offered life, laying down our own, or we must take the alternative: "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3 : 36).

The latter part of John's Gospel dwells much upon the sufferings and the resurrection of our Lord. Beginning with the Good Shepherd, we find that he "giveth his life for the sheep." And again he says distinctly, "I lay down my life for the sheep." And he states, "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again." Do we not see here how that the Father, who had loved his Son from eternity, had a new ground of love, in the self-sacrifice of his beloved Son for a lost world? But here we find the resurrection also in the words, "That I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power"—I in whom is life—"to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." And yet it was obedience. "This commandment have I received from my Father" (John 10 : 11, 15, 17, 18). That he should thus speak of his obedience shows what it must have meant for him.

In the raising of Lazarus we see the Lord Jesus as "the Resurrection and the Life" (John 11 : 25), for in this miracle he manifested his power over death, to which he himself should be obedient, even the death of the cross" (Phil. 2 : 8). We see him prove his absolute power over death in his raising from the dead the man who had lain in the grave four days! It is significant that the account of this resurrection follows so closely after these words which tell of his power to lay down his life and take it again. The Jews had no excuse for their unbelief; they had seen death conquered by him who had again and again declared that he should die, and after three days rise again from the dead. Have we any excuse for not living in constant touch with our risen Lord, and for failing to live in the power of his resurrection, which makes nothing impossible to him that believeth? Have we any excuse for being overcome by any of the snares which Satan lays for us, since Christ is risen, and ever intercedes for us?

Present at the supper at Bethany was the raised Lazarus, in company with Him who was about to die for the sin of the whole world, and to rise again to resume his glory which he had with his Father "before the world was" (John 17 : 5). But he did not leave his human body in the grave. The glory which he shared with the Father was now to be shared by redeemed man, and his presence as the God-man at the right hand of the Father is not only for our justification, an unanswerable proof that our sins were buried in his grave, but also a pledge that they whom his Father has given him, and who overcome as he overcame, shall sit with him upon his throne, as he overcame, and is set down upon the Father's throne (Rev. 3: 21). The presence of Lazarus ought to have been enough to fully convince the disciples of the certainty of his coming death and resurrection. But "as yet they knew not the scripture that he must rise again from the dead" (John 20:9).

And thus, when they came to the empty tomb, instead of regarding it as a confirmation of their faith in his resurrection, they were astonished, and failed to recognize the fulfilment of his words. John only "saw" the undisturbed clothes "and believed." Mary heard his voice and recognized him.

MELLIN'S Food
For the Baby

You may be thinking of u ing an artificial food for yo baby. Try Mellin's Food; is a proper food suited to t baby's condition. It is not medicine but a true food. L us send you a sample to tr

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infan Food, which received the Grand Pri the highest award of the Louisiana Pu chase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Hig er than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MAS

RHEUMATISM
Relieved Through the Feet

Don't Take Medicine, External Re edy Brings Quick Relief. FRE on Approval. TRY IT.

We want everyone who has rheuma to send us his or her name. We will send return mail a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, e wonderful external remedy which has brou more comfort into the United States t any internal remedy ever made. If they relief, send us One Dollar; if not, don't s us a cent.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn on the sole f the feet, and operate by absorbing the sonous acids in the blood through the l pores. They relieve rheumatism in ev part of the body. It must be evident to that we couldn't afford to send the drafts approval if they didn't relieve. Write to- to the Magic Foot Draft Co., R A 17 Ol Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair drafts on approval. We send also a valu booklet on Rheumatism.

The "Ocularscope" Free

Get Your Glasses at Wholesal

Examine your own eyes without an oculis Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest inve tion of the 20th century. Sent Free, with o beautiful Illu trated Catalogu of spectacles an eye glasses. Mail order only Send to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIAN
402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

WE WANT AGEN
in every town to ride and sell our bic Good pay. Finest guaranteed 1905 MO with Puncture-Proof tires, Coaster-Brakes $10 to $
1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes..... $7 to $
500 Second-Hand Whe All makes & Mod- els good as new $3 to $
CLEARING SALE at half c
We SHIP ON APPROVAL
TEN DAYS TRIAL to a without a cent deposit. Write at onc
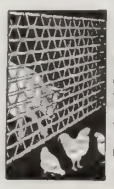
Special Offer on sample bicycle
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBIL
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHIC



FENCE Stronges Made

See how closely it is woven. Sc direct to the farmer at facto prices, on 30 Days Free Tri Your money back if not satisfie Write today for free Catalogu

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPA Box 47, Winchester, Indian

Work at Home*

OUR Lord commanded his disciples to begin the Gospel crusade at Jerusalem; if he were instructing his church now, he would give a like command he would have us begin at the place nearest to us. Not that distant lands should be neglected; but our own has the most urgent claim. The home mission, and the foreign mission work, should go on together. As a matter of fact, they do. The churches whose contributions to foreign missions are the largest in proportion to numbers are those whose home missions are most earnestly and vigorously prosecuted. The missionary spirit in a church finds its outlet in work at home and abroad.

When we turn our attention to the need of our own land, we are amazed at its enormous extent. In every city, how many there are who have no vital knowledge of Christ! We know how many are practically infidels, openly disbelieving Christianity. Besides these, how many there are who are indifferent to it! Even of those who, for respectability's sake, are connected with the churches, how many are there who have incorporated the principles of religion in their lives, who are giving Christ the position he ought to occupy in their souls? Truly the need of aggressive Christianity in our own country is enormous and urgent.

Besides the need of our own citizens, there is the stupendous problem of immigration. This is growing at an alarming rate. The people who come to us now are, for the greater part, aliens to Christianity. Both from Russia and from Italy the immigrants are in themselves a mission field of the most difficult character. From Russia come the Jews who are prejudiced by the persecution they have endured, and from Italy come Roman Catholics who have no clear idea of what Christianity really is. To reach both classes is an enormous task, requiring thought, patient toil, and abundant money. It is a work that we dare not neglect. Our national character is involved in its intelligent and energetic pursuit. The church has not realized its duty in this matter. When it does, a corps of city missionaries will be employed far outnumbering the devoted men who are now struggling with the gigantic problem.

MISSIONS IN INDIA†

ONE of the best established laws of our nature is, that we love those best for whom we have done most. Gratitude is not half so strong a law. The man for whom we have made sacrifices may not love us or be grateful to us, but we are certain to love him. For this reason, India will be always the best beloved of missionary fields to the readers of this journal. The help that they rendered that land in the time of its affliction, the money and corn sent to relieve its hunger, and since then, the support of its thousands of orphaned children, have made a bond of affection that can never be sundered.

What more can be done for that country? the time is opportune. Impressed as its people must be by the magnificent work of relief, which was distinctly the fruit of Christian principles, they are more favorably inclined to Christianity than a later generation may be. The motto, "Strike while the iron is hot," is applicable in this case. Missionaries in increased numbers should be sent through the length and breadth of that land, to reap the harvest that has come from that wealth of seed. Never in the history of missionary effort have the heralds of the Cross been so cordially received as they are now, never has the message they bear found more attentive ears. Yet how small is the number of missionaries that the societies are able to send forth, compared with the three hundred millions of its people. The societies need money that they may avail themselves of the opportunity.

The question is often asked whether the natives are benefited by Christianity? What kind of Christians do these people make? That they are weak must be admitted. That many of them become Christians for the sake of the loaves and fishes cannot be denied. But it is not so in all cases. There are many who, in becoming Christians, have to sacrifice their fortunes and their position in society without any prospect of gain. And of the others, there is this to be said, that they have been degraded and brutalized by the Caste system in which they have been reared. They are not perfect any more than our converts in America are perfect, but the missionaries assure us that they improve, and that there is hope of a higher development of character.

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society for June 25. "Our National Heritage." Isa. 55 : 1-13.

† Topic of the Epworth League for June 25. Mal. 3 : 11; Matt. 8 : 11; John 10 : 16.

The King and the Fishwomen

During his recent visit to Paris, King Alfonso of Spain went the rounds of the places of popular interest. A correspondent relates this incident: "His greatest triumph was when he visited the famous Central Markets. Four hundred porters constituted themselves a guard of honor. At the fish market the King received the so-called Queen of the Market, a buxom girl of twenty, who was surrounded by fishwomen.

"The Queen presented a bouquet to his Majesty, who took her hand and gracefully kissed it, at the same time slipping a gold bracelet on her arm. He then kissed the girl on both cheeks, the crowd laughing and cheering uproariously.

"Thereupon the fishwomen enthusiastically mobbed the King and President. One brawny woman almost lifted the King in her arms while she kissed him, exclaiming as she released him: 'He's such a little dear,' which elicited roars of laughter. The military escort was obliged to rescue the King from his too ardent admirers."

FEED YOU MONEY

Feed Your Brain, and it Will Feed You Money and Fame.

"Ever since boyhood I have been especially fond of meats, and I am convinced I ate too rapidly, and failed to masticate my food properly.

"The result was that I found myself, a few years ago, afflicted with ailments of the stomach, and kidneys, which interfered seriously with my business.

"At last I took the advice of friends and began to eat Grape-Nuts instead of the heavy meats etc., that had constituted my former diet.

"I found that I was at once benefited by the change, that I was soon relieved from the heart-burn and the indigestion that used to follow my meals, that the pains in my back from my kidney affection had ceased, showing that those organs had been healed, and that my nerves, which used to be unsteady, and my brain, which was slow and lethargic from a heavy diet of meats and greasy foods, had, not in a moment, but gradually, and none the less surely, been restored to normal efficiency. Now every nerve is steady and my brain and thinking faculties are quicker and more acute than for years past.

"After my old style breakfasts I used to suffer during the forenoon from a feeling of weakness which hindered me seriously in my work, but since I have begun to use Grape-Nuts food I can work till dinner time with all ease and comfort." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

LARKIN
PREMIUMS FREE
with LAUNDRY and TOILET SOAPS, TOILET and PHARMACAL PREPARATIONS, COFFEE, TEAS, COCOA, EXTRACTS, BAKING POWDER, STARCHES, Etc., in all, nearly a hundred daily necessities.
Larkin Products have established a standard of purity and high quality—the fruition of thirty years' manufacturing experience.
With purchases of products amounting to $10.00 and up, you receive free premiums equal in value to amount paid. Larkin Premiums are the saved profits and expenses of middlemen, and are excellent in design, workmanship and finish. They furnish homes completely.
Factory-to-Family Dealing Saves Money for over two million families annually. You get twice the value any retailer can afford to give. Thirty days' trial—satisfaction guaranteed.
WRITE FOR NEW PREMIUM LIST No. 104
Contains over 700 offers; also ask for book of Larkin Products.
LARKIN 55c BLEND COFFEE
Larkin Co.
Larkin Co.
BUFFALO, N. Y.
ESTABLISHED, 1875.

$30 Church Money

Summer, with its social gatherings, is the best time for money raising.

No Investment. No Risk. Send No Money.

If you wish to raise money quickly and easily for any church purpose, send us the photographs of your church and your pastor, and we will reproduce them, together, in carbon photography, on 200 satin finished, aluminum pin trays, and send trays to you express prepaid. Everybody wants this exquisite souvenir of church and pastor, and your members quickly sell them at 25c each. You keep $30 for your profit and send us $20 in full payment for the 200 souvenirs. Send photographs any size and names to-day. Send no money. Your workers will sell all the souvenirs in ten days, as hundreds of others have, and you can send us our money any time within a month. Write and learn success of others.

NEW METHOD CO. (Money-raising Plans for Church Workers) 5560 South Park Ave., Chicago

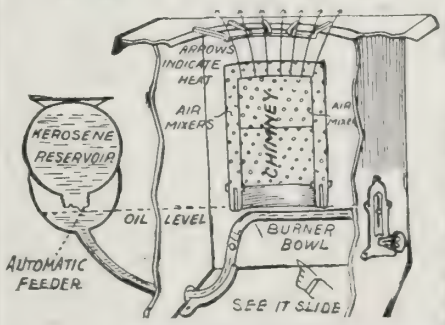
Free Sample Tray on Request.



BURNS BARRELS OF AIR NOTHING ELSE LIKE IT

THE MOST WONDERFUL STOVE EVER INVENTED!

Causing great excitement wherever exhibited. Fuel drawn principally from atmosphere. Uses 395 barrels of air, while consuming one gallon of oil. Wood, coal and oil cost money. Only free fuel is air. Supply unlimited. No trust in control. Air belongs to rich and poor alike.

HARRISON'S VALVELESS Wickless. Automatic. OIL-GAS AND AIR BURNING STOVE

Automatically generates gas from kerosene oil, mixing it with air. Burns like gas. Intense hot fire. Combustion perfect. To operate turn knob—oil runs into burner—touch a match, it generates gas, which passes through air mixer, drawing in about a barrel of air to every large spoonful of oil consumed. That's all. It is self-regulating, no more attention. Same heat all day, or all night. For more or less heat, simply turn knob. There it remains until you come again. To put fire out, turn knob, raising burner, oil runs back into can, fire's out. As near perfection as anything in this world. No dirt, soot, or ashes. No leaks—nothing to clog or close up. No wick—not even a valve, yet heat is under perfect control. Objectionable features of all other stoves wiped out.

Not like those sold in stores.

Ideal for cooking, roasting, baking, ironing, canning fruit, picnics, cottages, camping; also for heating houses, stores, rooms, etc., with radiating attachment.

No more carrying coal, kindling, ashes, soot, and dirt.

No hot, fiery kitchens.
Absolutely safe from explosion.
Not dangerous like gasoline.
Simple, durable, lasts for years.
Saves expense, drudgery and fuel bills.
All sizes, prices low, $3.00 up.
Get our 30 day Trial Offer.
Write to-day for 1905 Proposition.
CATALOGUE FREE.
Get our prices this month from the only manufacturer.

$40 Weekly

WANTED—Men and women at home, traveling, all or part of time, showing, taking orders, to appoint agents.

GREATEST SELLER OUT.
CUSTOMERS DELIGHTED
BIG MONEY THIS SUMMER.

To show in operation excites curiosity. People watch it as though a thing of life. Agents clamoring for territory. Every stove guaranteed. Sales enormous. Write to-day for 1905 Proposition. NEW PLAN.

The World Mfg. Co., 5931 World B'ld'g, Cincinnati, Ohio

ZU
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY
ZU ZU
One–Two
Three–Four!
After the first package
you always want more
ZU ZU
GINGER SNAPS
There's nothing that lures you on like the spice that's in a ZU ZU. It's simply irresistible.
5¢

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
ublished 52 Times a Year

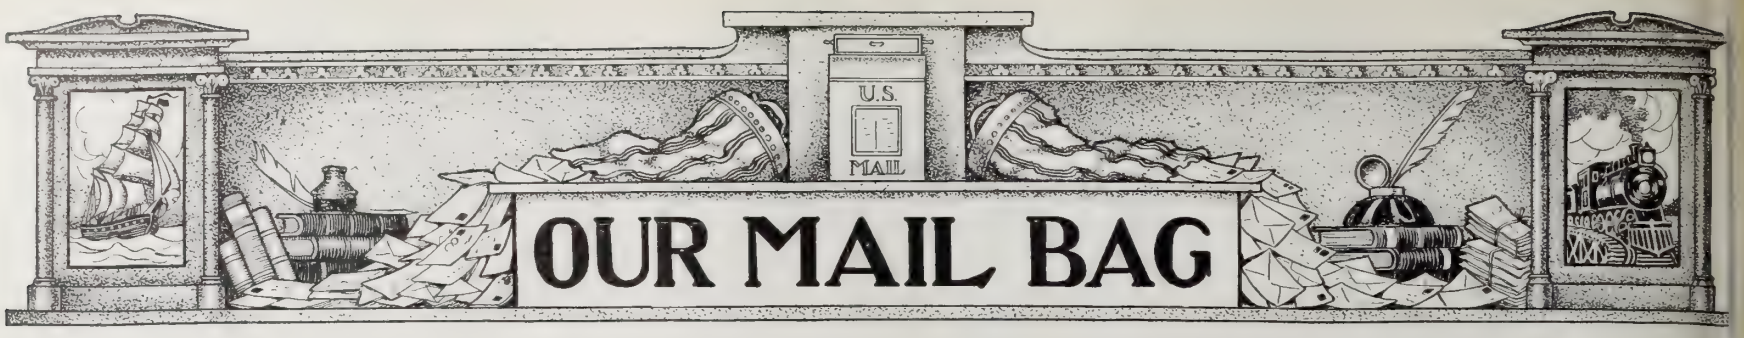
NEW YORK, JUNE 21, 1905

VOL. 28-NO. 25. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

CHRISTIAN HERALD

A YOUNG SHEPHERD OF THE JORDAN VALLEY

SEE PAGE 549



OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

Mrs. Beulah B., Charles City, Iowa. What was the name of Martin Luther's wife, and when did she die? Did she outlive her husband?

Katherina von Bora was the wife of Luther. In early life she became a nun, but being unhappy she, with eight others who had taken the veil, was released from the convent, and, in 1525, Katherina was married to Luther. When he died, in 1546, he left her with four children, in straitened circumstances. After her husband's death, she kept boarders for the support of herself and family. She died in 1552.

G. D., Plainville, Kans. Why did the revisers change the meaning of Isa. 9 : 3? The authorized version reads, "Thou hast not increased their joy." The revised, "Thou hast increased their joy."

The authorized rendering is an error of translation, or rather an error of a copyist, when printing was unknown. The Hebrew word, as indicated by a scribe, is L'o, which means "to it." There is the same word without the apostrophe, which means "not." Some careless scribe omitted the apostrophe, and his error was copied into later editions. The passage was translated "not increased their joy." The revisers examining other copies found that it should read, "Thou hast increased to it the joy," or "their joy," as they have given it. The passage so translated is more in keeping with the general tone of the chapter.

V. M., Argyle, Iowa. Under what conditions was Children's Day originated, at what place, by whom, and for what purpose?

Its origin is due to the General Conference of 1864, which prepared for the celebration of the "Centenary of Methodism" in this country. A special committee of six persons was selected, to whom belongs the honor of devising a plan to raise a "Children's Fund," and a part of the plan was to observe a "Children's Day." Dr. John McClintock, Dr. Daniel Curry, Dr. Geo. R. Crooks, Oliver Hoyt, James Bishop, and C. C. North, were the names of the founders. At General Conference in 1872, the plan was finally and fully adopted, and incorporated into the law of the church. The original ground for establishing the day, was the raising of a "Children's Fund," with which to aid meritorious young people from Sunday Schools in securing higher education.

Mrs. J. W., Pa. Is the use of drugs, cocaine, opium, etc., on the increase in this country?

Yes; druggists agree that the use of drugs has increased about five per cent. in the last ten years.

J. A. T., Watkins, Iowa. 1. Has Emperor Nicholas of Russia, any children beside his son and heir, and why is the prince called the Czarevitch?

Beside the son there are four daughters: Olga, born in 1895; Tatjana, born in 1897; Marie, born in 1899; Anastasia, born in 1901. Czarevitch means literally son of the Czar. It was formerly applied to all sons of the Russian ruler, but is now limited as a title to the eldest son as the heir to the throne.

A. S., Garner, Ia. Why did Christ pray (John 17 : 15) that his disciples might not be taken out of the world?

He did not pray that they might not be taken out of the world, but said that it was not for that he prayed. The monastic idea which contemplated retirement from the world was not Christ's idea of the Christian life. What he wished, and what he prayed for, was that they might be kept from the evil while living in the world. His comparison of his Church to light and salt, showed that his conception was of the Church being able to resist temptation and defilement, and to have a purifying refining influence on the world, which it could not do if it was taken out of it.

M. R., Covington, Ky. I read an item yesterday, stating that a piece of land recently sold on Broadway, N. Y., is the most valuable piece of real estate in the world. Can you enlighten me as to the facts in the case?

The property referred to was a small piece of land on the southeast corner of Broadway and Wall Street, which in 1780 was sold for $5,000. In 1827 it was sold again, this time for $18,725. In 1901 it was valued at $500,000; last year it was assessed at $525,000, and two weeks ago it was sold for $700,000, or about $600 a square foot, being at the rate of about $1,500,000 for a full city lot 25 by 100. As far as known, it is the highest price ever paid for any piece of land of similar area anywhere. Its appreciation in a little over a century is in line with the progress of the city in wealth and population, and is, probably, an extreme illustration of the rise in values all over Manhattan Island. Morris Patterson Ferris, 146 Broadway, New York City, asking for all information. Daughters of the Revolution is a separate organization.

H. A., New York City. How and where can I find the week-day of the birth of our country as a nation?

Histories are, as a rule, silent upon many minor points, such as the one you mention, which would doubtless interest many readers. According to McIntyre's 250-Year Calendar, the nation's first birthday was Thursday.

R. L. G., Houston, Tex. Do Christians generally believe in the miracle recorded in Joshua 10 : 12-15, of the sun standing still?

Not in the sense in which the account was understood in early times. It is obvious that as the earth goes around the sun, the standing still of the sun would not have lengthened the day, which was the object desired. Only the stopping of the earth on its own axis, could have done that. You will notice that the account in Joshua is given as a quotation, and the author—Joshua or whoever wrote the book—takes the unusual course of citing his authority. The book of Jasher, from which he quotes, was a book of heroic songs, like Homer's Iliad, in which, doubtless, poetic license was permitted. The facts appear to be that, in some miraculous way, and to a local extent, the light was prolonged. The most natural way to describe the event, in those unscientific days, was to represent the sun as standing still, which, to an observer, it would appear to do.

C. H. H., Atlantic City, N. J. Is it possible that a person who died without full assurance of salvation may have been a true Christian?

Quite possible. There are many Christians who, through an unhappy temperament, or self-distrust, never have full assurance of salvation. It affects their happiness, but not their safety. It is not that they do not believe that God will keep his word, but they doubt whether their faith is genuine, whether they have really been born again. Those who love Christ, trust him, have his spirit, follow in his steps, will be saved, though all through their lives it seems to them too good to be true.

James H., Yankton, S. D. Will you kindly inform me in regard to the organization known as the Sons and Daughters of the Revolution? I am a grandson of a veteran of that war. Am I eligible, and where shall I apply for membership?

There are thirty State Societies of Sons of the Revolution, also one in the District of Columbia. Eligibility is confined to male descendants above the age of twenty-one, from an ancestor who was either a soldier or sailor, in the service of one of the thirteen original colonies or States, during the war of the Revolution, between April 19, 1775 and April 19, 1783. Write to the secretary of the New York Society,

C. F. D., Clinton, Mass. Who was the author of the lines,

> There is a green hill far away,
> Without a city wall?

The poem was written by Mrs. C. F. Alexader.

J. E. W., Denning, Ark. 1. What did David pay for the threshing-floor of Araunah? Was it fifty shekels of silver, as stated in II. Samuel 24: 24? or six hundred shekels of gold, as stated in I. Chron. 21: 25? 2. How high were the pillars Jachin and Boaz? Were they eighteen cubits, as stated in I. Kings 7: 15, or thirty-five, as stated in II. Chron. 3: 15?

1. He probably paid the smaller sum for the actual threshing-floor, which was all he needed at the time. Afterwards, when it was decided to build the temple there, he doubtless bought the entire hill, for which the larger sum was paid. The writer of the Chronicles being mainly concerned with the temple, dwells upon all that appertains to it and does not mention the smaller transaction. 2. Eighteen cubits was doubtless the height. The writer of Chronicles probably refers to the length of the two pillars in the mould. The discrepancy of one cubit may have been due to the bases, counted in when they were standing, but not before they were set up.

J. L. A., Va. 1. Why is the northern boundary of Delaware an arc. 2. Why are the boundary lines of Overton and Warren Counties, Tenn. circular?

1. After William Penn had obtained a grant of Pennsylvania, being desirous of owning the land on the west bank of the Delaware to the sea, he procured from the Duke of York, in 1682, a rebase of all his titles and claims to New Castle and twelve miles around it, and to the land between this tract and the sea. A line that was the arc of a circle twelve miles radius, was then run from New Castle as a centre. When the three lower counties on the Delaware became a State they retained this boundary. 2. We have been unable to secure an answer to this question.

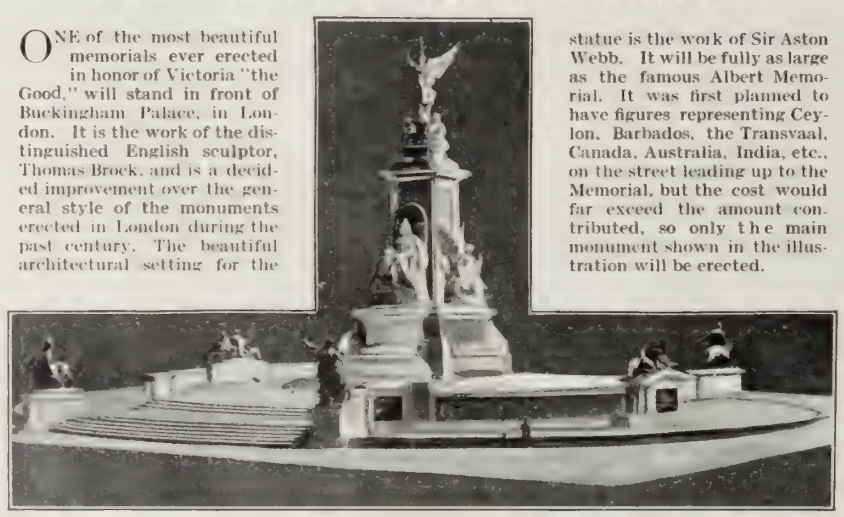
Jere. L., Passaic, N. J. Who was Ilya, the Russian hero, and where can I find his story? What great deeds did he do?

To recount the wonderful exploits of Ilya, of Murom, "the old Cossack" of Russian folk-lore, would fill many columns. He was, however, only one of many such heroes, others being Alyosha, Dobrynya, "the Drago-slayer," Ivan Godinovich, Svyatogor, Dunai Ivanovich, Vasili "the Drunkard," Mikailo "the River." In the great Epic which has been preserved in Russia through many centuries among the common people, it is related how the heroes of the cycle of Prince Vladimir and the heroes of the famous royal city of Kief performed many wonderful feats of arms, slew monsters, overcame troops of foes single-handed, captured cities and fortresses, and did other deeds to excite wonder and admiration. Their deeds are still sung by minstrels. The Epic Songs of the Russian peasants dealing with these semi-mythical characters, have been admirably translated by Miss Isabel Hapgood.

J. J. D., Brooklyn, N. Y. Is it a historical fact that, during his lifetime at least, Washington's head never appeared upon an American coin?

It is a fact. Washington objected, it is said, to having his head put on any coin. In 1791, a coin known as "the Washington cent" was struck, but it was not American having been struck at a private mint in Birmingham, England, with the idea of pleasing Americans. It was a generally accepted conviction in the United States in those days, that no man's head should appear on the coin of a republic.

The New Victoria Memorial



ONE of the most beautiful memorials ever erected in honor of Victoria "the Good," will stand in front of Buckingham Palace, in London. It is the work of the distinguished English sculptor, Thomas Brock, and is a decided improvement over the general style of the monuments erected in London during the past century. The beautiful architectural setting for the statue is the work of Sir Aston Webb. It will be fully as large as the famous Albert Memorial. It was first planned to have figures representing Ceylon, Barbados, the Transvaal, Canada, Australia, India, etc., on the street leading up to the Memorial, but the cost would far exceed the amount contributed, so only the main monument shown in the illustration will be erected.

Miscellaneous

M. S. B. M., Kingston, N. Y. Due, doubtless, to the influence of the tropical sun.

Any friend of the ex-prisoner who would like to see what has been done by the Prison-Gate Mission in the past six months, should write to Chaplain Munro, 150 Baxter Street, New York, who will send a booklet or report of the work by mail.

B. F. W. We believe education is one of the very best aids in checking the liquor traffic. If our children are taught the truth concerning the effects of alcohol on the human system, they will grow up with a distinct aversion to it as a poison. The lessons of childhood are rarely forgotten in later life.

August L., Los Angeles, Calif. Return to school by all means and do your best to keep up with the studies. A boy or girl who begins the battle of life without an education is greatly handicapped in these days. You should have at least three or four more years of public school life before you go to work.

W. D. G., San Bernardino, Calif. These are matters affecting the individual conscience. If your conscience accuses you of wrong-doing, and the opportunity for making restitution be past you can, at least, utilize the incident as a warning against similar extortion in future. A practical way of making restitution in such cases, where you cannot hope to reach the injured party, would be to devote the equivalent to the Lord's work, or give it to charity.

NEW YORK, JUNE 21, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

KING OSCAR OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY

THE ROYAL PALACE AT STOCKHOLM

THE QUEEN OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY

NORWAY'S SECESSION

THE NINETY YEARS' UNION WITH SWEDEN BROKEN BY THE CHRISTIANIA STORTHING

THE world has been so interested in the great struggle going on in the Far East, that political affairs in other countries have attracted little attention. So it was with a feeling of astonishment and regret that the announcement was read in the press despatches that the Storthing, the parliament of Norway, had, on June 6, declared the union with Sweden at an end. If Norway persists in her present attitude, or rather, if the Storthing holds to the declaration—if the people themselves are divided—it may result in a few years in changes on the map of Northern Europe as startling as those now going on in the Far East.

Threats of revolution have been made by political speakers in Norway, at intervals, for several years, with the expectation that concessions would be made to them in order to preserve the union with Sweden. By the governments of Europe it was thought that these threats would not take definite form, and the present secession is regarded as a very rash step, as the Russian Bear has long looked with a covetous eye upon the Norwegian territory and harbors, in which enormous fleets might refit and shelter. Some leading students of international law have expressed the opinion that Norway has no legal right to recede in the way in which she has done. In the Swedish-Danish War, in the early years of the last century, Denmark was defeated, and at the Peace of Kiel ceded to Sweden the territory of Norway, which had been under Danish rule for years. Norway protested against the transfer, elected a king of her own, but was unable to cope with the Swedes in the field, who were led by the great French Marshal Bernadotte. Norway agreed to a union with Sweden, both countries to have their separate parliaments. Norway has had complete control of all her local affairs, and both countries under the union have enjoyed a peace and prosperity equaled by few other states in Europe. United under one crown, there is no reason why this prosperity should not have continued for years to come.

Norway has her own parliament, her own system of coinage, her own flag, but still her desire for separate existence was unsatisfied, and a separate system of consular service was asked for. The King, to whom the Norwegians and their interests have been as dear as those of Sweden, appointed a commission of both Swedes and Norwegians to report on the matter. They reported in favor of a separate system for Norway. Norway then asked for a separate Minister of Foreign Affairs to have charge of the consuls and all foreign affairs. With this granted, there would be but a very slender thread joining the international policy of the two nations. The break has come on the consular question.

CROWN PRINCE GUSTAVE OF SWEDEN

Right here, the personality of Oscar of Sweden plays a prominent part in the whole controversy. There are few monarchs in the world to-day who are more universally beloved and respected than King Oscar. He has kept constantly before him the welfare of the two kingdoms; and he realizes that in "union there is strength," and in union only. He has worked unceasingly for the advancement of his people in the ways of peace. His life is one that, on its personal side, is very beautiful. He has the enthusiastic devotion of all patriotic Swedes; and he has inspired a lively affection among a great number of the Norwegian people. The Royal family of Sweden and Norway has always been, since the House of Bernadotte ascended the throne, a model for the courts of Europe. The Crown Prince, who is taking an active part in the affairs of State, bids fair to be a wise ruler, and is a good student and an energetic worker.

It is asserted that Russian agents have been at work in Norway, and that the Norwegians have received pledges of some kind, known only to themselves. Otherwise, it does not seem possible that they would have gone so far as to declare for separation. For over a century Russia has been anxious to push her frontier through to the North Atlantic. Gradually she has worked her line forward until only the narrow strip of Norway intervenes between her and the fine port of Narvik, a port that, despite its high latitude, is entirely free of ice the year round. Russia, it is further claimed, has waited and watched to break across this strip, the ideal time for acquiring it being when Great Britain, which would object to such aggression, had a war on her hands. But if Norway voluntarily, as reward for support, ceded to Russia a harbor or two, the hands of other nations would be tied.

It is reported that Prince Waldemar of Denmark, third son of the Danish King, has been offered the throne by the seceding Norwegians. If that is so, it would add another link, undoubtedly, to the chain of Russian influence, as the present King of Denmark is grandfather of the Czar. The present ruling family of Sweden has, on the other hand, little relation to that of Russia. The Norwegian Storthing, after having announced its secession to the King, asked him to appoint some prince of his own house as the ruler of independent Norway. Such an arrangement would hardly be considered by the King.

A recent English writer says that the fate of Finland was hastened by Russia's desire to get a waterfront on the Atlantic. The Finns had enjoyed liberty for two centuries, and their suppression, he declares, was not an act of Russian caprice, but part of a well-defined plan. When the time came to force Norway to the issue, the Finnish neighbors would not fight enthusiastically against them. Hence Russia wanted a thoroughly Russian province, from which Russian troops could be launched westward.

Mr. Axel Lille, a noted Finnish writer, says: "A leading Norwegian politician recently made the following startling remark: 'When have we, in Norway, ever let legal considerations hinder us from taking a step forward?' Nothing else shows better how young the constitutional freedom is in Norway than this neglect of strict legality, which is one of the strongest guarantees of freedom. Norway, at present, has no leader equal to the gravity of the situation. Smaller party affairs are taking the attention of the Norwegian people; and they act as if the outside world, particularly Russia, were quite blind to the existence of Norway and its ice-free ports. Yet the Norwegians are armed to the teeth against their neighbor, at whose side only can their own liberty be protected. They forget that the loss of freedom will also mean the loss of self-government. Finland, the warning, stands at the door of Norway. The great Norwegian, Bjornson, some time ago uttered words of warning that reached throughout the world. In Norway they seem to have died quite away, while the suspicion against a kindred people, willing to hold out the hand of reconciliation, has steadily increased."

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

NEARBY MACEDONIANS

TEXT: ACTS 16:9

"Come over into Macedonia, and help us"

"NEARBY Macedonians! What do you mean?" says some one. "Is there any class of people living near to me, who have not the Gospel preached to them as it ought to be preached? Why, nearly all my life I have been living in one of our large cities. I have sat under some of the greatest preachers of the world. Surely all those who live near to me have the same kind of Gospel advantages I have?" No, my friend, you are wrong. There are scores, and hundreds, and thousands, and tens of thousands who have not. Before I get through with my subject, I hope to prove to you that my premise is true, for to-day I am going to speak to those who have lived nearly all their lives in a large city.

Where did you go to church when you first came to town? "Oh," you say, "I used to worship in such and such a street. The great Dr. So-and-So preached there. But I moved away, and most of my old neighbors moved away long ago. The boarding-house element crowded us out. The region where I used to live is now filled with 'roomers.'" Indeed! I suppose very few people are now living in your old street. "Oh, no, quite the contrary," you answer. "Where there used to be one family living in a house, there are now sometimes twenty or thirty people. Light housekeeping, in many instances, has made each double-room house a whole family." Indeed! Then with the increased population swarming there, I suppose is crowded to the doors. I suppose your old Sunday School is five times larger than it used to be, and the church members have taken every pew. "No," you answer. "I only wish that were true. I love that old church now more than I have ever loved it. But the trouble is the wealthy people moved away. Then old Dr. So-and-So got a call to heaven. Then the people who remained called a fine young man; but he could not make the church go. He struggled on and on. They could not pay him a salary sufficient to live upon, and he had to leave. Now the old church has a very ordinary man in the pulpit. The seats are only a sixth full. The whole work there seems to be at a standstill. What is being done, is done in the quicksands. One month the people are there, and the next they are gone. I am afraid the old church is geographically doomed."

Your Old Church

Your old church's work geographically doomed? What! Can such a condition exist at our very doors? There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of a city's population swarming around those old churches. Shall all our best church strongholds be turned to secular uses? Such a condition must not exist. My theme to-day is a call for help for what is termed the deserted church of the boarding-house regions of a large city. I plead for the "half-way" city church, the church which is not down-town nor up-town. I plead for the church which is surrounded by rooming-houses and by the boarding-house element. The "half-way church," which is in a region congested with multitudes of people.

The Half-Way Church

The "half-way church" of the large city, to be a spiritual success, must have, in the first place, an earnest band of strong, able-bodied men and women, who for the church's sake are ready to help the minister and fill the official positions of that church. It must have tried Gospel veterans in its boards of elders, deacons and trustees. It must have able leaders in the Sunday School, who know the Bible and are ready to stay by their classes under all conditions. It must have these men and women not as visitors but as members in good and regular standing, who are identified with the church because there they know they can best serve their Lord and Master and there they will always be in their places.

Why do I put such an emphasis upon this plea for consecrated men and women in the official boards? A true church leader cannot be created in a day, or a week, or a month, or a year, any more than a lawyer, a doctor, an engineer, a prima donna, can be created in a minute. Yet the strange fact remains, that though church work is the most important of all work, the leading Christian men of a city will get up almost en masse and walk out of these "half-way churches." Thus, they will practically say to the minister, who is struggling there, "Young man, fill your session with a lot of young people who are utterly inexperienced. Grab right and left for your Sunday School Superintendent and teachers, no matter whether they know the Bible or no. We want to go and live on the aristocratic boulevards and go to a stylish church. You must get along as best you can." Thus, these leading men, seemingly without the least compunction, desert their Gospel ship when it is in danger of sinking.

A Floating Population

Is it surprising that these "half-way churches" are destroyed, when their strong church leaders desert them in this way? Let me to-day enter one of our large city churches in the residential districts, and take away fifteen of its powerful consecrated church leaders. The next year have another fifteen depart, and so on, year by year. Would not the spiritual work of that church be doomed? Yet this is just what is happening to our "half-way churches." The greatest difficulty facing such churches, is not that the multitudes are not nearby to be reached. These multitudes, by the ebb and flow of the "boarding-house element," come and go, but there is always a multitude there. The greatest trouble is that the leading positions of those churches are not filled with experienced men and women, with Gospel veterans, who stick there for the work's sake. These "half-way churches" have not the spiritual leaveners to leaven the church loaf. Oh, Christian workers, be ye men or women, you have no right to desert that "half-way church." There you are needed fifty, a hundred times more than you are needed upon the church of the boulevard. I know of what I speak. It is simply an impossibility for any clergyman to make a success of one of those important "half-way churches," unless some of the Christian men and women, who are now sitting uselessly in some of our wealthier uptown churches, are ready to go down and help them. Again and again, in these old "half-way churches," a new session of nine members has been elected, and within six months half of them would be gone. No church on earth can stand such a dispersion as that and yet grow in spiritual power as it ought. Go back, oh, Christian men and women, to those needy "half-way churches" where you belong.

Need of Faithful Officers

These "half-way churches" must have the right kind of men and women for their official boards. More than that, they must have money sufficient for their work. Some of this money should be collected from their own people. Most of this money, however, should and must come from outside sources. These churches need it, and must have it, in the same way that a little child must have help from a father. Supposing I should say to my eight-year-old boy: "Son, you must now earn your living." You would answer me: "That is absurd! Your boy in time will be able to earn his own living; but he cannot do it now." The "half-way church," in one sense, is the child. It can do a little for its own support, but not enough to be independent of help. But though our Boards of Home and Foreign Missions send their representatives to many different classes, they neglect, for the most part, these "half-way churches," where every dollar invested for Christ will bring the greatest returns ever found in Christian work.

The importance of financial aid for these "half-way churches" can best be illustrated by describing the classes of people to which these churches appeal. They are not "dead-beats," loafers and outcasts. They are, for the most part, young men and women—students, clerks, and young married people. There are many who have known what better days mean, but have been forced, on account of misfortune, to seek the cheaper lodgings of a town. Shall they not be looked after. Here is one case: I am a farmer's boy. "Good-by, mother," I say, as I climb into the village stage which takes me to the city. "Good-by! Good-by!" Brothers and sisters wave as I disappear over the last hill, which shuts out the old home and the familiar scenes of my boyhood. I am now heading for the city to make my way in the world. Where will I board? In a fashionable part of the town? Of course not. My salary is only six dollars a week. I must live within walking distance of the store. Besides that, each week I must send a little money home to help father hire another hand to take my place on the farm. I cut down my expenses by sharing my room with a fellow-clerk, and I hire a small room in the boarding region under the shadow of the "half-way church." If that church does not appeal to me, I will never go to church.

Now, I believe in saving the cannibal on the Congo. I believe in social settlements in the slums. I, however, do not believe in giving so much to the work in the slums and to converting the heathen cannibals, that we have none left to give to develop the spiritual life of the farmer's boy and the young girl clerk, living almost within a stone's throw of our homes, under the shadow of the "half-way church" of a large city. General Lawton said, in reference to the regular soldier: "They are not heroes; they are only regulars." These young men and young women are our regulars. There is nothing heroic about them. There is none of the glamour in work for them that there is in converting cannibals, but they are near to us and they have an eternal future before them.

Must Extend Help

The "half-way church" must have the best of music, the best of preaching, the best of church organization. It also must have money to alleviate such poverty and suffering as may exist among its worshipers. It must be bread to the hungry, and medicine to the sick; and clothes to the naked, and rent for the homeless, as well as administer the "Bread of Life" for all. It literally must be all things to all men. For the Bible command distinctly and emphatically says that we should "do good unto all men, especially unto the household of faith." And here the "household of faith" means the members of your own church.

"What do you mean by that?" says some one to me. "Is the 'half-way church' to become a 'Bureau of Charities?' With it, are you going to bribe men and women to come to church? If you do, you will only reach men's stomachs and develop their mercenary spirit and not their hearts." Oh, no, I would not bribe men to become Christians. But I would take care of them when they are members of the "half-way churches" and have been tripped up by misfortune. And furthermore, my brother, if you can not teach Christian men that their best friends they have on earth in time of distress are the members of their own churches, those men will, after a while, cease to revere the church, and perhaps, in time, cease to love Jesus Christ himself.

If the church of the Lord Jesus Christ will not look after its members, who will? Here, for instance, is the farmer's boy, about whom we were talking. He goes to business one stormy winter day without his rubbers. He takes cold; pneumonia sets in. What is to become of him? He has no friends. He eats in a little restaurant five blocks from his boarding-house. Shall he be hustled off to the County Hospital? Shall he have no one to write to his mother and father, miles away? Here is a poor widow struggling to be brother, father, and mother to her three little girls. Sunday comes around, and there are no decent shoes in the house and no proper clothing. Shall that widowed mother not have those shoes provided? Here is

A Young Husband Taken Sick

You call at the house, and the wife meets you at the door with a shawl about her shoulders. It is freezing cold in that room. What is the matter? Coal is ten dollars a ton. No credit. The salary of that young man is stopped. Has not the "half-way church" a mission in every one of those homes? I tell you it has. And furthermore, I tell you that where there is one case of poverty which should be alleviated in the boulevard church, there are fifty, ay, a hundred cases of distress under the shadow of the "half-way church." Christ told the Pharisee to go and be a good Samaritan to the Jew who had fallen among the thieves. Christ also tells the "half-way church" to be a practical financial helper on its Jericho road.

The "half-way church" must have consecrated leaders too. It must have outside financial aid. It must also have a church building which is open every night the week—Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursay, Friday, and Saturday as well as Sunday. It must peal to its people through their social as well as their iritual natures. Two preaching services on a Sunday, mid-week prayer meeting, and a short hour for Sunay School, will not do the work of a "half-way urch." Four weekly sessions of prayer and praise rvice cannot successfully cope with saloon, and bilard and dance halls, and low variety theatres, which mpete with the vim and the vitals of a "half-way urch's" parish.

The way a church should be conducted for the boarding-house element" is entirely different from w one should be conducted for a residential district of boulevard. Let us compare them. "How are you, r. So-and-So? Where are you going to-night?" I eet you thus in the electric car, on your way home om business. "Oh," you say, "I am going home. I n going to spend the happiest part of my daily existce with my family. I am going to spend an evening home with my wife and children. Come up and ke dinner with me." "Yes, I will," I answer. We ight from the car on a fine street. You say "How e you?" to almost every one you meet. Here all the ighbors know each other. A dear wife greets you at e door. Your children come romping through the ll at the call of dinner. When the dessert is finished e adjourn to the library or sitting room. The games e brought out, or the piano is opened, or the interting book is read. That is the way you spend your enings.

How about the evenings of that poor farmer's son, ho is boarding under the shadow of the "half-way urch?" He has one small hall-bedroom. If he stays ere too much at night, the landlady grumbles at him r wasting the gas. After he has eaten his supper, if he does not find his enjoyment in the church or some of its connections, in all probability he will find it in ways he ought not to find it. The "half-way church" must have for its young people places for debate, places for musical entertainment, places where the young people can assemble, or else those young people will drift off and drift away and be gone forever.

I am, to-day, pastor of a church of the boulevard. I would not conduct my church any differently from the old-fashioned conservative way of my forefathers, if I could. But I want to tell the pastors of the "half-way churches" in the boarding-house districts of a great city, that if I was again pastor of such a church, I would do entirely different from what I once did. I would change my policy entirely, and make my church attractive to the young men and the young women who live in those boarding-houses. My present principle of raising my children is to let them have all the games, all the fun, all the friends they want, if they will only play those games at my home. My principle of carrying on a "half-way church" would be to keep the young people at the church, or in the lecture-room, all I could. I would preach on Sunday, Jesus Christ, just as earnestly as God would give me power. Then, on week nights, I would have stereopticon lectures. I would have debating societies. I would have reading-rooms and libraries and social gatherings. In other words, as the saloons of those regions fight for my young men and women, at all times and during all the week nights, I would fight for them day in and day out also. May God, to-day, give our "half-way churches" grace enough to throw off the old, hidebound, conservative lines of church work, and fight sin along the lines upon which alone sin, in those boarding-house regions can be successfully fought. Social affiliation must go side by with spiritual upliftment.

Lastly, I remark that these "half-way churches" need the very best ministers the world affords. They need the ablest in brain power, in organizing power, in preaching ability and in consecration. Our presbyteries should select the finest young men who come out of our seminaries and say, "Here, young men, we want you for a 'half way church.' We will support you. We will not simply put you in charge of a church and then let you starve. We will stand by you after you are installed. While you work we will see that you have something to live upon." Then the strong young men of our seminaries will enter these "half-way pulpits," and consider they are on the honor list of the Gospel warriors of the ages, instead of among the unfortunates who are making a failure of life, because from an outside standpoint, their churches seem to be going down.

During the late Civil War, in a certain battle, the Union soldiers had fought all day long, and were completely exhausted. One of the Indiana regiments was almost ready to mutiny and turn and flee. But in the dark hours of the night, one of the officers called to his men as he said, "Boys, look! We are tired, but look at those nurses—those women far out to the front—caring for our sick and dying. They have been working just as hard as we. Let us continue to be as faithful as they." May you, oh Christian workers in the difficult, "half-way churches," be the spiritual means not only of saving sinners in your own churches, but of inspiring us, who are faint-hearted, to go forth with renewed energy to save souls where God has placed us.

No fearing, no doubting, thy soldiers should know,
When here stands his country and yonder his foe.
One look at the bright sun, one prayer to the sky,
One glance where our banner floats glorious as high.
Then on, as the young lion bounds on his prey,
Let the sword flash on high, fling thy scabbard away!
Roll on, like the thunderbolt over the plain,
We come back in glory, or come not again.

A SCHOOL FARM FOR CITY CHILDREN

CHILDREN AT WORK IN THE SCHOOL GARDEN

PLANTING SEEDS UNDER DIRECTION OF THE TEACHER

THE site of the first Children's School Farm in New York City, had been used as a dumping-ground for years. So caked and hardened was its surface, that no ordinary plough could reak through, and a city contractor was called upon or a heavy street-breaking plough. A motley lot of ubbish was unearthed, but this rougher element, like hat composing the neighborhood, was soon conquered, nd good ground for seed-planting was found, after uch hard and patient work.

The spot selected for school gardening purposes is nown as DeWitt Clinton Park, but as it usually takes everal years to develop a public pleasure ground, Mrs. Harry Parsons, a public-spirited woman of New York, onceived the idea of utilizing the ground as a School arm. So successful was the experiment, that now a uitable plot for the continuation of the work is included in the features which will make De Witt Clinton ark one of the most complete small parks in the orld. In speaking of the beginning of the work, Mrs. arsons says: "Here was a neighborhood where the ougher element considered that they owned everything n sight. The city seemed to have forgotten this section." rom the day that the real work began on this negected spot, interest in it was intense. A little one-oom house was built (11 by 18 feet), called the "Farm ouse;" the interior painted light and the exterior dark green, trimmed with white. Window-boxes filled with flowers added much to its attractiveness. China, glass and silver-ware, bought at three and nine, and five and ten cents stores, filled the closets. In this little house young girls of the neighborhood were taught to perform household duties, in a neat and economical manner. Around the garden a three-foot fence was erected, on which fathers and mothers could comfortably lean and watch the teachers and children at garden work. They began to realize the delights of gardening, and were led to feel a great pride in "our garden." Seed planting was taught the children in classes of twenty-five. Claims, three feet by six, were staked out. Each child was tagged with a number corresponding with one on a stake. They were lined up, given directions, marched into the farm, forming two sides of a hollow square around a small plot, where the gardener gave them full instructions, going through the whole process of making the furrows, putting in the seeds, covering them, etc. The little gardeners then went through the same process. When, a few days later, the earth began to crack and little green shoots peeped out, the children could hardly restrain their excitement. Seven varieties of vegetables were planted in each plot—corn in the centre, beans on either side, peas, radishes, turnips, lettuce, and a border of buckwheat around the whole farm.

Mrs. Parsons spent many hours upon the ground, and says that she received many helpful suggestions from the children, their parents and policemen. The children worked like beavers.

Much has been done by school gardens in the training of mind and heart, as well as eyes, hands and feet, and destructive activity has been given a turn for construction and care. Even uncontrollable, unruly children have learned that work can be made a pleasure. To the poor city child, encased amid brick, stones, concrete, trolleys and trucks, the crowds in the streets seem like giants. They have no birthright to trees, fields and flowers. These conditions tend to make children hard and unfeeling, and, impelled by the restless energy of youth, they find diversion in any mischief at hand.

This garden was not started to grow a few vegetables and flowers, but to interest the children, and to teach them economy, honesty, application, self-government, civic pride, and the dignity as well as the pleasure of labor. As a direct result of the successful experiment in New York, several other cities have taken up the work and the general interest is rapidly spreading. In one season, cultivated by about 300 children, in a plot 100 by 200 feet, divided as stated, there were grown 30,526 radishes, 1,745 beets, 350 quarts of beans, 140 pints peas, 942 turnips, 903 ears of corn, 3,000 heads of lettuce, and a good supply of spinach, cabbage, etc.

MARY SARGENT HOPKINS.

WOMEN MAKE WAR ON MORMONISM

National League of Women's Organizations, Washington, D. C.

WE earnestly urge all true women who love our Republic, and who would guard the purity of its altars and its firesides, and the happiness of its daughters, to this Memorial to Congress. Never were the prospects for the overthrow of the evil Mormon power, and the complete suppression of polygamy so bright as i It needs but a single combined effort on the part of the women of America to bring an overwhelming influence to bear on our national legislators, which will be unable to resist. This is a war which our women, if they are true to themselves and to their children, must assuredly win. Let no woman hold h from performing this sacred duty. SIGN THE MEMORIAL! And mail it at once to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

MRS. FREDERIC SCHOFF, President National Congress of Mothers.
MRS. DARWIN R. JAMES, President Interdenominational Council of Women, and President Presbyterian Home Missionary Society of United States.
MRS. ALFRED D. WARNER, First President Delaware Federation of Women's Clubs.
MRS. TEUNIS S. HAMLIN, Chaplain General Daughters American Revolution.
MRS. THEODORE W. BIRNEY, Founder National Congress of Mothers.
MRS. CHARLES N. THORPE, President New Century Club, Philadelphia; President Foreign Missionary Societies Presbyterian Church.
MRS. MARY A. BURNHAM, Hon. Vice-President New Century Club, Philadelphia.
MRS. HOWARD W. LIPPINCOTT, President Pennsylvania Congress of Mothers.
MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, Superintendent of Legislation, W. C. T. U.
MRS. ROBERT R. COLTON, Vice-President National Congress of Mothers.
MRS. JOSEPH P. MUMFORD, Hon. Vice-President National Congress of Mothe
Dr. SARAH J. ELLIOTT, Deaconess Episcopal Church.
MRS. HENRY F. BLOUNT, President Pro Re Nata Club, Washington, D. C.
MRS. JOSEPH PRICE, West Chester, Pa.
MRS. F. S. BENNETT, Englewood, N. J.
MISS C. E. MASON, Tarrytown-on-the-Hudson, N. Y.

Executive Commit

To the Women of America

THE investigation concerning the right of Reed Smoot to a seat in the Senate of the United States, and the exposure of the practices of the Mormon hierarchy consequent thereupon, have proved conclusively that every covenant by which Utah received statehood has been broken, and that with the added power given by statehood, and under its protection, the Mormon hierarchy has now openly reestablished polygamy, having practised it quietly ever since the Manifesto.

This investigation has proved that the domination of civil and political affairs by the Mormon hierarchy in Utah and other States is absolute.

That classes for teaching the Mormon faith have been held in over three hundred public schools of Utah by order of the Presidency.

That the blighting influence of this disloyal law-defying organization has become so powerful that political parties must reckon with it, as no man can be elected to any office without its consent.

That it excommunicates such members as question its right to defy the law.

That its President openly states that he committed perjury before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to save himself from "his enemies," viz., the Senate of the United States.

Reed Smoot is the chosen representative of the Mormon hierarchy, to whom he owes first allegiance. He is a party to all the acts of the Mormon hierarchy, being one of its highest apostles, and never having objected to any of its practices. He is in direct line for the Presidency of the Mormon Church, which Church now controls the politics of Utah, Idaho, Wyoming and Nevada, and has large and growing influence in Arizona, New Mexico, Montana and Oregon.

The women of the country secured the investigation which has revealed these facts. Women, belonging to no party, influenced by no party considerations, but standing for the protection of childhood, the sacredness of monogamous marriage, the separation of church and state, the enforcement of law, for loyalty to country, the protection of Christian ideals of home and marriage, must send their appeals in strongest terms to the Senate, urging the expulsion of Reed Smoot. The Senate will heed the demand of American women, if all who desire the overthrow of this evil and disloyal power will use their efforts to get signatures to the Memorial.

The National League of Women's Organizations, including many National bodies of women, earnestly asks the help of every true woman in the final effort that must be made to win the battle for protection of home and country.

Will you obtain signatures to the Memorial? Will you pass this latter Memorial on to others?

Earnest work now will protect children unborn from the stigma of illegitimacy, and will check the power which seeks to control the nation, and which has taken a long step toward that end in having an Apostle of its self-confessed disloyal and polygamous organization elected to the Senate of the United States.

NATIONAL LEAGUE OF WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS.

MRS. FREDERIC SCHOFF
Chairman of Executive Committee.

TO THE HONORABLE

The Senate of the United States

A MEMORIAL

Whereas, the evidence given before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections proves that the Mormon hierarchy has broken every covenant by which Utah received statehood; and

Whereas, President Joseph F. Smith and his Apostles have reestablished polygamy, and are again dominating the politics of Utah and adjoining States, and defying the laws of State and Nation; and

Whereas, the Mormon hierarchy admits that the United States Senate is its enemy, and its leaders admit that, in order to deceive the Senate Committee, they committed perjury in testifying before that Committee; and

Whereas, Reed Smoot, who is an Apostle and in direct line for the Mormon Presidency, has pledged first allegiance to the Mormon hierarchy, which has been proved to have broken faith with this Government, and unless he were in sympathy and accord with the disloyal and polygamous practices of the hierarchy, he could not retain his place; and

Whereas, his continuance in the Senate would more firmly establish the political control of the Mormon hierarchy in Utah and other States; and

Whereas, these conditions are steadily growing worse, violations of the articles of the Covenant being more open and flagrant, the hierarchical tyranny and oppression in the Mormon States more pronounced, and the burden of shame and disgrace imposed by Mormon immoralities upon this whole Nation more and more intolerable;

Therefore, We, the Women of the United States, representing every part of the Union, do earnestly petition your Honorable body to immediately remove from the place he now holds in the Senate of the United States, Apostle Reed Smoot, one of the highest officials in the Mormon hierarchy, which has broken every covenant by which Utah received statehood. We ask this as loyal, patriotic citizens. We ask it for the protection of the land we love, and for the protection of children unborn, whose right to legitimate parentage should be protected. We ask it in the name of American womanhood, whose voice has never yet been raised in vain, when appealing to the honor of American manhood. We ask it because the Mormon hierarchy has been proven to be perjured, disloyal, disobedient to the laws of State and Nation, and defiant even of Divine laws. We ask it because the presence of Reed Smoot in the United States Senate is an insult to every home and to every woman in our free and enlightened Republic.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Cut out this Petition, paste it on a sheet of white paper; sign it; get all the women of your acquaintance to sign it, and mail it with the signatures to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Every signature should give full name and address

It is a Woman's Campaign

THIS movement to secure the expulsion of Reed Smoot from the United St Senate is one originating with and to be conducted exclusively by women. is a woman's battle throughout, and while the mothers and daughters of America welcome the sympathetic support all men who approve of the moveme they will especially look to the t women of all the States for that pro and efficient co-operation which are dispensable to success. The first s in the campaign is for every wom who reads this issue of THE CHRIST HERALD to appoint herself a Commit of One to secure as many signatures the Memorial as possible. Not o should all the ladies of her own hou hold sign, but all her feminine quaintances. Let her remember t every additional name appended is grain more in the mighty aggregati of public influence which is to sw the United States Senate to a favoral decision. When all your signatu are in, send them to THE CHRIST HERALD on or before September 1.

Read attentively the appeal by t National League of Women's Orga zations at the head of this page. Th noble women, all of them heart a soul in this movement, earnestly inv your co-operation. They want yo influence and your prayers. It is critical campaign for the women America. All should act togeth and their united influence, like t towering waves of the sea, will swe onward, overcoming all obstacles.

Organized and concentrated publ opinion is omnipotent, and it is throug this influence, as expressed by t women of America through this Mem rial, that victory is to be won. It h been well said that "public opinion is second conscience;" and when t United States Senate awakens to t call of that conscience, uttering t pleadings of a million women, it wi fully understand the true attitude an desire of American womanhood co cerning the toleration of a sworn Mo mon Apostle among the foremost bod of lawmakers for this nation.

. . .

It is desired that the Memorial shoul reach all parts of the country, in orde that women in every State may hav an opportunity to sign it. We ask therefore, that all who wish to forwar this work should send the Memoria out as widely as possible. A reques by postal card, sent to this office, wil secure by return mail Memorials, witl room for as many as fifteen signatures without any charge.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will b pleased to hear from its readers regard ing the progress of the movement i their respective neighborhoods. Fron week to week it will publish letter from well-informed correspondents stating how the work goes on in al parts of the country. We invite cor respondence from all who are interested (including officers and members of all of the women's organizations mentioned at the top of this page). Meanwhile all should get to work without delay, and secure and forward as many signatures as possible. None but women are to sign, and each name, with the address in full, will be attached to the Memorial, when it is presented to the Senate of the United States when it assembles.

WALL STREET MEN HEAR THE GOSPEL

THE BROAD STREET CONGREGATION

OPENING THE SERVICE FROM THE GOSPEL AUTOMOBILE

INTERESTED BROKERS AND CLERKS

EFFORTS to reach every class of New York's population are being continued by the Committee in charge of the Gospel Tent Campaign. On Monday, June 5, another visit was paid to e great financial centre in Wall Street. As on the evious Monday, as described in this journal last week, ospel hymns were sung, Christ was preached, personal stimony to his power to save was given, and an earn- appeal was made to every hearer to turn to him. ere is no implication of ignorance, or heathenism, in ch a method of Christian work. To the poor the ospel was to be preached, but, as Christ taught, the h also need it. Indeed, he assured us that the rich d more difficulties in coming to Him than do the poor. therefore, the way is harder for them, there is more ed for Christian help. Every man, be he rich or or, stands as an individual in God's sight, and no one s more privileges than another in gaining eternal life. It was said by an eminent preacher that Christ's conotion of men was on vertical, not on horizontal lines. hereas the world regards society as divided horizonly, and speaks of the upper and lower classes. Christ s only one line of demarcation, that between the good d the bad. On both sides of that line are rich men d poor men. Their possessions, or the lack of them, not taken into account. It is character that decides ir position. The church's duty is to warn the rich t their money, which buys so many privileges on rth, does not avail to obtain for them entrance into Christ's kingdom; as it must warn the poor that neither ir poverty nor their hardships give them a claim on Christ's salvation. It is they who have his spirit, whethethey be rich or poor, who will be welcomed into his kgdom. This was practically the message that was taken down to the men of millions in Wall Street, by the heralds of the Gospel on that noonday mission.

It was a strangely mixed audience that assembled around the automobile in which the preachers were seated. Brokers and their clerks, and business men of all kinds stopped and listened to the singing and the preaching. The manifest earnestness of the speakers appealed to these men, who have a genuine respect for sincerity in all their relations. Perhaps, too, there were old memories of times long gone by, that were stirred by the songs and the old story. It was noticed that when the hymn "Nearer, my God, to Thee" and the time-honored "Coronation" were started, there was an immediate response from the crowd. That the hymns were familiar to many there, was obvious. A reverent spirit prevailed, and when prayer was offered, there was a general removal of hats, and the whole assemblage stood in solemn silence.

It was significant that one of the speakers whose words commanded rapt attention, was Mr. S. H. Hadley, the Superintendent of the Jerry McCauley Mission. That a man accustomed to speaking to drunkards and impoverished men should have won the ear of that wealthy crowd, is only another illustration of the fact that the Gospel meets the needs of all classes, and appeals alike to the millionaire and the pauper. Mr. Hadley declared that the Gospel which helped the poor could help the rich. He described the people that came to his Mission, and assured his hearers that the power of Christ which could raise men from the gutter, was powerful to save rich men from the temptations which beset the financial magnate. He said he could speak from experience of the mighty power of the Saviour. It had come into his heart when he was at the lowest depth of degradation, it had given him peace, and that peace had been with him ever since.

A remarkable contrast in character was the address of Rev. R. Mapleson, who said he had preached in three languages, in three different countries. He remembered talking with an educated Hindoo, to whom he put the question, "What think you of Christ?" The Hindoo replied that he had read the story of Christ and believed in his divinity and in the truth of his mission. "But," he said, "I belong to a family that would be scandalized if I made a public confession of Christ. Therefore, though I worship Jesus morning and evening, as the Giver of all good, I am not numbered among his followers, because if I were, I should be ostracized and should bring untold misery on those I love." That, Mr. Mapleson said, was a typical case. There were many in all lands, who secretly believed on Christ, but did not acknowledge him, because of the sacrifices it would involve. With some it was position, with others money, with others friends and associates, but it was acknowledgment that Christ required, for whosoever is ashamed of him in this world, of him will Christ be ashamed when he comes in his glory.

It was a tactful question for such an audience that Rev. George Avery proposed in his address: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" To men immersed from morning to night in questions of profit and loss, such a problem must have appealed with solemn force. It was pressed home with affectionate earnestness, and was evidently appreciated by the more thoughtful of the crowd.

With a second rendering of "Coronation" and a few words of prayer, the meeting came to a close, and the automobile, with its Gospel messengers departed.

THE PROGRESS OF OUR FILIPINO BRETHREN

LTHOUGH the first census of the Philippines, taken under United States auspices, was completed some te ago, the history of that remarkable task has only ly been disclosed. It will be a revelation to many, a will unquestionably go far toward effecting a change ipopular ideas concerning these islands. In the field eumeration work, 7,627 persons were employed, only 1 being Americans, so it was literally a Filipino census b Filipinos. Among the enumerators were some forty nive women, who did their work so well that they won sial commendation.

On the 3,141 islands (nearly one-half of which are named), covering an area of 115,026 square miles, re is a population of 7,635,426 souls. Of this total, 00,000 are reasonably civilized, while less than threeerths of a million are classed as "wild tribes." Nearly of the civilized Filipinos are Catholics, while twofths of the uncivilized are Mohammedans, the rest being re or less barbarian. There is a rapid and steady rease in population. Two-fifths of the adult males read and write the native tongues. There are 62 schools in the archipelago, or three for every nicipality, half of the number being public schools, e-third private schools, and the remainder Catholic. Even per cent. of the pupils already understand Engli, having acquired the language within two years.

Families average four persons, like our own. About fifty per cent. of both sexes are married, and it is interesting to note that the proportion of legal marriages is very large, being thirty-three per cent. of the entire population, as against fifteen per cent. in Cuba. Most of the rural people are fishermen, or small agriculturists owning their own farms, while the women are spinners, weavers, or field-workers. Twice as many Filipino women are employed at gainful labor as American women, in proportion to population. Pauperism is practically unknown, so simple and so easily supplied are the needs of the people. The criminal population is eight in ten thousand, or little more than one-half of ours.

From a commercial and industrial standpoint, there is a great future for the Philippines. Cattle-raising, sugar, coffee, hemp and tobacco give promise of becoming sources of vast wealth. Crop rotation and the use of fertilizers are unknown; nature supplying all that is necessary. The logging industry is yet totally undeveloped, although there are millions of acres of fine virgin forests. Coal is abundant, and the mineral wealth on many of the islands will yet attract gold-hunters from many lands, even if they do not find a second Klondike. The deposits of iron will suffice to build up the most extensive manufactures. As to the labor problem, it is emphatically denied that the Filipino is lazy and shiftless, as has been asserted; on the contrary, the census authorities declare that under proper management, he will make a good and capable worker, as he has already made a good soldier, and is now making a good citizen. Great improvements are now under way for providing better commercial facilities for handling the island products. At Manila alone, some $4,000,000 are now being expended on improvements which will be finished next month, and will result in making it one of the greatest ports of the Orient.

When we view the progress already made in this work of impressing our American civilization on these islanders, there is ground for the highest hopes. American methods are now followed in the courts, the Spanish colonial judiciary system having been completely transformed. Thus, in laws, in education, in commerce, in industry, and even in language, we are proving the "adaptability of American ideas, customs and institutions to the greatest of our new Colonies."

We must be patient with the Philippines. Providence has placed these islands and their people in our care, for a time, at least. While we are giving them the benefit of our own advanced civilization, and raising them step by step to the full stature of modern citizenship, we must not fail to bring to them the greater blessing of the Gospel. On every island of the archipelago there is a work awaiting our churches and our missionary boards. This duty is to make the story of Jesus and his salvation known in every Filipino household.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

The Women's Memorial

ELSEWHERE in this issue, we give space to the presentation of the Memorial of the Women of America addressed to the United States Senate, pleading for the expulsion from that body of Reed Smoot, the Mormon Apostle. This is a woman's battle, and the leaders intend to fight it out on this line, "if it takes all summer," as General Grant once remarked on a certain memorable occasion.

They appeal to the women of the nation to make common cause in this campaign, and to secure so many signatures that, when Congress reassembles and the Memorial is presented, the omnipotent power of public opinion will be recognized and the desire of the women graciously complied with by the assembled Senators.

But it is not as a "graceful concession" to American womanhood that the Senate is asked to exercise its high prerogative. It is an act of simple justice to the mothers and daughters of this land of ours, and a recognition of their right to a clear and emphatic pronouncement by our highest legislative body in support of the two things which they hold as most precious—Monogamy and the Home. "The presence in the Senate of a Mormon Apostle," says the Memorial, "is an insult to every home and to every woman in our free and enlightened Republic."

Another very grave aspect of the question is the charge, which the women declare has been fully maintained in the Senate investigation, that Reed Smoot, as a Mormon Apostle, has pledged first allegiance to the Mormon hierarchy, which is disloyal and antagonistic to our government and institutions. If the women join forces in hearty, active co-operation, they cannot fail to win their battle. It is one well worth winning. Let them rally their strength by regiments and battalions, each organization doing its work thoroughly and all together. Then, when the hour for final action strikes, the Senators will have no other recourse but graceful capitulation.

The Revolt of the Cities

PHILADELPHIA has apparently shaken off the lethargy that has long dominated the better class of her citizens, and is making a desperate effort to clean house politically. For years, the city of William Penn, through mere inertia, has permitted political corruption to run riot in her civic administration, until many people had given up hope for a change for the better.

The City Council recently passed an ordinance that gave the right of furnishing gas, at an exorbitant rate, to a company for the term of seventy years. The city, during that time, would be bound hand and foot in any attempt it might make to regulate the cost or conduct of its lighting system. The citizens aroused themselves, mass meetings were held, and the mayor, defiant of the ring, vetoed the measure, and asked the support of all good men in carrying out reforms. Two of the worst men in power were removed, and, despite the frantic efforts of their friends, have been kept out of office.

Mayor Weaver, whose portrait was published in a recent issue of this paper, has broken many political ties to do what he considered best for the interests of the community. The Councilmen showed a strong disposition to pass the ordinance over the Mayor's veto; but a large number weakened, when self-appointed committees of their neighbors called upon them at their homes, for the purpose of exerting a little "moral suasion." The fight is still on, but the air has been cleared as after a thunder storm, and the decent citizens have been able to see that united they still can sweep public opinion toward right standards in municipal government.

Too many voters in our towns and cities have an idea that, if they turn out once in four years and vote for a President, they have done all that is necessary as freemen of a great nation. It takes three months of campaigning, with oratory, torchlight processions and free concerts to get them to do even this. City and town caucuses, fully as important as the elections, for there the candidates are selected, are attended by a few politicians; and the voters go to the polls on election day with little knowledge, besides the names, of the men for whom they are to vote. New York proved in the seventies that corruption could be suppressed, to a large extent, if it could not be wiped out entirely, by the respectable, law-abiding portion of the municipality using the legal means given them by the Constitution. Here and there we see indications, such as the Philadelphia contest, that our citizens are realizing they have a moral obligation to see that their local governments are kept clean.

No city, town, or district can point at Philadelphia and New York, under the delusion that in these great cities only, "graft" and other forms of corruption are rampant. In towns apparently respectable there can be found corners that a little dusting can improve. If any body of citizens complain that the state of their municipal government is not what it should be, they should remember that the responsibility is on their own shoulders. We believe that there are enough "good men and true" to put things to rights in almost any community, but they must get together and stay together. They can take a lesson in that from the very forces that oppose them.

A Test of Principle

A MISTAKE appears to have been made by the theatrical manager who recently engaged a notorious woman to join his company. He was reported to have offered to pay her a salary of $2,000 a week. The reason for paying her so high a remuneration was not her exceptional ability, but because she had gained unenviable fame by being suspected of having committed a murder. She was tried three times and finally gained her freedom through failure of the jury to agree as to her guilt or innocence. So much had been published in the newspapers about her appearance, her habits and her former life, that the theatrical manager thought the public would rush to his theatre to see her in the flesh. He believed she would prove what is known as "a drawing card." The experiment was made at several towns in Pennsylvania, on the approved principle in such matters, that a provincial reputation should precede a metropolitan appearance. The result of the test, according to the press, was an unmistakable failure. The people did not go to the theatre in any large numbers, and those who went left early. Broken in spirit and disheartened, the would-be actress threw up her engagement and returned to her home.

The taste of American theatre-goers appears to have been misunderstood in this instance, and it is not difficult to discover the cause. The manager, reflecting on the fact that certain well-known performers of remarkable ability always commanded a full house, in spite of the fact that they lived profligate lives, probably drew the conclusion that vice and immorality attracted the public, and that talent was unnecessary. But it appears that the public is not so demoralized as he supposed. Theatre-goers may condone the immorality for the sake of ability, but they will not accept immorality in place of ability. A few there doubtless are to whom the coarse exhibition of triumphant wickedness is attractive, but evidently their number is too small to make the experiment profitable.

Foreign newspapers have twitted us with the fact that a woman who had nothing to recommend her but her escapade as the heroine of a murder trial, could command a fabulous salary in the land founded by the Puritans. They drew the inference that America had abandoned the principles of righteousness, and had lost its respect for virtue. We are not sure that it was quite fair to judge of the attitude of the American public by the conduct of theatre-goers, but it appears that even on that assumption the unkind thrusts were undeserved. We are not so bad as they supposed. Theatre-goers are not strait-laced, but evidently there is a line that they are not disposed to cross. The great mass of the public, we are sure, has a regard for decency and a respect for morality which have not been undermined.

For the woman herself, and for such as she, this failure should be a useful lesson. Society is tolerant; it is not hypercritical nor severe, but it has not changed its moral standards. The woman who sets its principles at defiance, who thinks that her beauty and charm will atone for her disregard of morality, will inevitably find she has made a disastrous mistake. We could wish that men who sin in the same way were held in similar contempt, as they deserve; but it is certain that the woman has to suffer. The social ostracism, that she dreads more t anything else, will surely fall upon her. Not e repentance and reformation can restore her to the p tion she has lost. God, whose mercy is infinite, forgive the penitent, but the penalty society metes to her proves the truth of the warning: "The way the transgressor is hard."

America as Peacemaker

EUROPE is facing a question which involves v delicate diplomacy. Her statesmen hesitate intervene between Japan and Russia, and turn w unanimous agreement to the Washington Government the only agency through which they can hope to s mount the difficulties that stand in the way of arra ing peace preliminaries.

It would be a novel, but not by any means an unw come duty for Uncle Sam to act as mediator in the C World's quarrels. There are many things that poi encouragingly to successful accomplishment. The b ligerents are apparently willing to give respectful atte tion to a Power whose attitude is equally just a friendly to both. Having no selfish ulterior interests our own, we could reasonably depend upon the enti confidence of the St. Petersburg and Tokio Gover ments, and of their acceptance in good faith of our m diatorial efforts as those of a friend. Even the Czar now represented as viewing favorably a prospecti tender of our good offices. If he does not again gi way, at a critical moment, to that fatal vacillati which has been a painful characteristic of his who career as a sovereign, a basis of peace may soon b reached. It would almost seem, in the present instan at least, that more courage is needed to make pea than to keep on fighting.

As to the peace terms, it is needless to speculate ju now concerning details—what territory Japan will hol and how much indemnity she will demand of Russi As we said last week, the essential point at the preser stage is that our Government should rise to its oppo tunity, assume the duty of peacemaker, and emplo every legitimate and honorable means to bring thi horrible conflict to an end as speedily as possible.

We believe that Christian people everywhere woul approve the course of the Washington Governmen should it take the initiative. All the nations are sick o this prolonged war, with its gigantic butcheries by lan and sea; its wholesale slaughter of multitudes of huma beings and its endless round of unprecedented horrors All the Powers, big and little, will be found on the sid of peace when the negotiations reach the proper point

The Oriental Shepherd

SEE ILLUSTRATION ON COVER PAGE

IN the East, so many regions are adapted to pastora pursuits, that shepherds and flocks abound, and the nomad life, which prevailed in Bible times, still exists in many places. All the patriarchs were rich in flocks and herds, and it was not considered beneath the dignity of the son, or even the daughter, of a wealthy cattle-owner, to tend the flocks. As society became more settled, and men dwelt in more fixed abodes in towns and cities, the post of shepherd became a subordinate one. Farms and gardens gradually encroached on the old pastures. Yet, long after the people had practically abandoned the nomad life, large flocks were still maintained around Carmel, near Bethlehem, and to the south near Gedor. Smaller flocks browse here and there near Carmel, and in the Jordan Valley to-day.

There is probably no calling that is more frequently referred to in the Bible than that of the shepherd. His was a hard and often a dangerous life, precarious as to food, and often in peril from wild beasts. He was the guide and the defender of his flock, and his staff served the double purpose of a crook and a sturdy weapon.

Very beautifully does Isaiah describe the prophesied Gentle Shepherd. "He shall feed his flock . . . . he shall gather the lambs in his arms, and carry them in his bosom. . . ." "The Lord is my shepherd," sings David (who was a tender of flocks before becoming a warrior and king), recalling his early pastoral experiences, in the incomparable 23rd Psalm. Jesus himself says, "I am the Good Shepherd," and in one of his most beautiful parables, tells how he guards and protects the fold, calls the sheep by name; and they know him, and he lays down his life for them, as a faithful shepherd.

The BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Germans in Africa

NEWS has been received of a serious sacrifice of life in Great Namaqualand, in Southwest Africa, where the Germans are trying to establish a colony. The exact facts have not ben reported, as no official statement had, at the time owriting, reached headquarters. Natives had come in, hvever, bringing news that Warmbad, a mission station tenty-three miles north of the Orange River, and near th frontier of Cape Colony, had been destroyed by Herreros or Hottentots, and the garrison massacred. Unhappily, there is only too much reason to fear that t report is true. During the past eighteen months, bth the Herreros in the north of the colony and the Hottentots in the south have been disaffected. They obosed the German settlement at its beginning, three yrs ago, and they were angered still more by the severity of the German rule and the indisposition to caciliate them evinced by the agents of the Governmnt. The latent disaffection was brought to a head in January, 1904, by the unprovoked shooting of a popular native by a German officer. The Herreros re, laid waste many miles of territory, and slaughted over a hundred settlers. They pursued the survivors to Windhock, and besieged that station. Happily, reinforcements arrived in time to save th town, which had bravely defended itself. It was not until August, when fresh regiments arived from Germany, that the Herreros were punished for that o break, and, it was thought, were thoroughly dispersed. Two months later there was a Hottntot rising in the south, which was suppressed with difficulty. Since that time there has been intermittent fighting sometimes in the north, sometimes in the south. As late as May of this yar there was a rising among th Hottentots, and a German force was sent to suppress it. It was ambushed and suffered heavily. This catastrophe at Warmbad is probably due to the same outbreak. The sufferers are Boers and German peasants, who have patiently tilled the land and have made it to blossom as the rose. They would probably get along well with their native neighbors, but the official class and th officers provoke the natives by their haughty ways.

A wrathful man stirreth up contention: but he that is slow to anger appeaseth strife (Prov. 15: 18).

$10,000 for a Foundling

The recently-married wife of a carpenter living near Pittsburg, Pa., has received notice that she is heiress to half a million dollars. Her story had an element of romance in it that was unknown to her friends. It appears that twenty-three years ago she was found in an open field, a child of only a few weeks old, almost dead from exposure. The boy who found her, took her to his mother, who nursed her back to life. A few days later a well-to-do couple visited the house and offered to adopt the baby. The offer was accepted, and the child grew up supposing that her foster-parents were her real parents. Only when she was about to be married a short time ago did she learn her story. The man she was about to marry was told too, and he said it made no difference to his intentions. A few days ago a representative of the German Consul at Philadelphia called the former foundling, and informed her that her father, who had abandoned her twenty-three years ago, was dead. He had been living in Germany, and had confided in the representatives of the Government. He would not disclose his name, but he had left his daughter $500,000, which the Consul had been commissioned to pay her. She is doubtless very thankful for the large fortune she thus inherits, but it cannot arouse in her love for the father who abandoned her, and at this late day sought to make atonement. It may be hoped that she has learned to love her heavenly Father, whose tenderness and providential care never fail.

When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up (Ps. 27: 10).

Saved His Friend

A boy ten years old, living at Orange, N. J., owes his life to the fidelity and energy of a companion, very little older than himself. He and his young friend were crossing the Erie tracks on a recent school holiday, when the younger boy got the heel of his shoe wedged between the rail and the edge of the planking on the crossing. His companion started to unlace the boy's shoe, and at that moment an engine rounded the curve and bore down on them. It was too late for the engineer to stop. The imprisoned boy tugged frantically to free himself, but with no avail. Then it was that his companion braced himself against the rail and, by main strength, succeeded in pulling his companion's foot out of the shoe. Together they rolled down the embankment and the next instant the engine thundered past. It will be well for that boy, if, in after years, his feet are entangled in the ways of sin, he looks to his divine Elder Brother for help, who is able to deliver him.

The Lord shall be thy confidence and shall keep thy foot from being taken (Prov. 3: 26).

GERMAN TROOPS REPELLING AN ATTACK OF HOTTENTOTS, IN SOUTHWEST AFRICA

The Kaiser's Invitation

The treacherous memory of Mme Rangabe, wife of the Greek Minister to Berlin, will probably lead to much trouble for that diplomat, as it caused embarrassment at the table of Kaiser William. A dinner was given recently by the Kaiser to the Crown Prince of Greece, and an invitation was sent to M. Rangabe, commanding his attendance at the function. This missive was received by Mme. Rangabe, and she put it away and forgot it. Ignorant of the Kaiser's command, the Minister left the city on the night of the dinner. When the party had assembled at the Imperial Palace, and the absence of M. Rangabe was noted, efforts were made to learn the reason. No information could be had at his house, however, and it was necessary to alter arrangements at the royal table so as to dispense with his presence. We may hope that the invitation of an infinitely greater King, which is sent to every man, will not be similarly forgotten, or, as too often happens, be ignored or rejected.

They all, with one consent, began to make excuse (Luke 14: 18).

A Strange Removal

The removal of a house from Cleveland, O., to Indian Territory, has aroused considerable interest among the neighbors of the owners of the house. One of the inmates had lived in it for thirty-five years, and when the family decided to remove to Indian Territory, the thought of leaving the old homestead was very painful to her. Her son-in-law therefore determined to take it with them. The house was slowly and carefully taken apart, and the pieces classified, numbered and indexed. Each bundle was bound with metal and loaded into a freight car. It then started on its long journey to Muskogee, where it will be set up again in its former shape. The family must have had a great affection for the old house, to have taken so much trouble, and been at so much expense to remove it so long a distance. Perhaps, if a new and more commodious habitation had been provided and waiting in their new location for them, they would have left the old house behind them without regret. It was such a provision for the body that Paul looked forward to, when the time should come for his departure, and the same hope, sure and certain, every Christian has.

We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (II Cor. 5: 1).

A Bankrupt's Plea

In a recent case of bankruptcy in New York, an excuse was offered which the referee firmly rejected. It came out in the course of the examination of the firm's books that a sum of money estimated at about $1,000 had been used shortly before the collapse of the business to bet on the races. The referee asked the firm why they had been so reckless when they must have known that they were insolvent. The reply was that it was that knowledge which had suggested the betting. They hoped to gain so much by their bets that they could pay their creditors in full. They had lost, and were consequently unable to pay them more than a fraction of their claims. The referee recommended that a discharge in bankruptcy be refused to the debtors. He said that the betting constituted a fraud on the creditors. The question of motive could not be considered. The debtors may have intended to use their gains on the course, if they had made any, for the payment of their debts, but the act was no less a fraud, and it was the act that the courts had to deal with. There is no doubt that he was right. Human courts take no account of motive. People recognize the justice of that course who nevertheless contend that God will not condemn them at the last if they have been sincere in their unbelief.

Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself: for thou that judgest doest the same things (Rom. 2: 1).

BRIEF NOTES

The Baptists of Washington, D. C., have protested against the movement to have distinct religious instruction introduced in the public schools.

It is announced that the late Mrs. Stanford left all her jewels to her beloved university to purchase books for the library. It is estimated that the jewels are worth a million dollars.

The States General at the Hague have voted 700,000 florins ($280,000) to purchase the land on which will stand the Palace of Peace, for the erection of which Mr. Carnegie provided the funds.

The recent census of Russia shows a population of 125,640,021. Only 83,933,567 are Russians by race. There are seven millions of Poles and over thirty millions of other nationalities. Less than one third of the males and less than one tenth of the women can read and write.

A special summer term at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, for the purpose of helping laymen and women to better serve the churches to which they belong, will be held from May to September. Among the special lecturers will be Rev. William Geoge, D.D.; Rev. Sydney F. Strong, D.D.; Rev. John Urquhart, D.D., and Rev. Myron W. Haynes, D.D. All particulars may be obtained by addressing the Superintendent, 80 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

At the recent annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, it was announced that six million Bibles and portions have been issued from the Society's presses last year. Since the Society was organized it has issued 192,000,000. The list now includes the complete Bible in 100 languages, the New Testament in 70, and at least one book of Scripture in 196 more. Some 350,000 copies of the Russian and Japanese Scriptures have been distributed among the belligerents in the Far East.

ENLISTING THE NATION FOR PEACE

THE chief emphasis at the Eleventh Mohonk Conference on International Arbitration, held recently, was put upon the proposal, introduced in a short speech by ex-President Daniel C. Gilman, on the first morning, and ably seconded on the last day by Chancellor MacCracken in the strongest paper of the Conference, that systematic efforts should be made in schools and colleges, to substitute for the war spirit a general conviction in favor of arbitration.

It was pointed out that school histories usually give such prominence to war as to create the impression that war is the most glorious form of human activity. The public squares, it was noted, intensify the same idea by giving more monuments to warriors than to inventors and philanthropists. The drilling of 827,000 school children, many of them with real rifles, strengthens the same error.

It was urged by various speakers that the beneficent victories of peace, the names and lives of men whose achievements have blessed the whole race, should be exalted in the schoolroom and in the school books. It was suggested that May 18th, the anniversary of the establishment of the Hague Court, should be in all States, as in Massachusetts and Ohio, made "Peace Day" in all schools, and celebrated by addresses and prize essays and prize debates, such as boards of trade have in some cases provided for.

Dr. MacCracken urged that in colleges, clubs should be encouraged representing the goal, far beyond mere arbitration, to which it leads, "the parliament of man and federation of the world," for which the Interparliamentary Union of thirty nations is expected to declare in its World Convention in Brussels in August.

LAKE MOHONK

In order to carry forward the arbitration movement in colleges, a committee of distinguished college presidents was appointed, including ex-Presidents Andrew D. White and D. C. Gilman; presidents Eliot and Hadley; Alderman of Virginia, Wheeler of California, and Seelye for Women's Colleges, which last, Dr. Moxom intimated, were most of all in need of such a propaganda.

John R. Mott showed how the world federation of students, by their very fellowships, might forward arbitration and peace. It was strongly urged that colleges could promote arbitration studies in secondary schools, by accepting examinations in the history of arbitration, in place of examinations on the his of ancient Greece and Rome, that more suitable for a later stage of ed tion. The Conference was informe educational plans in this line Dr. And D. White already had thought out not previously made public, contem ing a $1,000,000 fund for college lect on arbitration.

In a paper by Hon. Carroll Wright, an unoccupied field propaga was pointed out, which the Moh Conference may be expected to er next year or the year after, follow its successful effort to enlist boards trade in the past two years, and new movement among schools and leges, namely, the labor unions, not of which is known to have declared international arbitration.

Hon. C. E. Littlefield, M. C., intim ed that it was his purpose to urge the next Congress a generous appro ation to build at the north of the brary of Congress a building of simi grandeur and beauty, to be the fitti abode of our national Supreme Cou but with another international cou room, where such courts as that of t Hague may meet in the future, t whole structure to stand as a temple of justice.

Three high notes were maintained all through t Conference, hope and courage and faith—hope, prom ed especially by the recent conclusion of arbitrati treaties between all nations of Western Europe exce Germany and France; courage, despite the unjust w introduced by the "little father" of the Hague Cou and the defeat of the arbitration treaties by the Senat all of which were seen to have intensified thought ar discussion of arbitration; and faith, that believes arb tration must triumph because God lives and reigns.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

AUNT JERUSHY MARIER'S DREAM

I DON'T own much of this world's goods I'm thankful tu say, but last night I dreamed I was rich in houses and lands, and gold by the million; and if rich people all feel like I did, I'd ruther be as poor as my Master, who, "hadn't where tu lay His head."

I'd ben readin' in the evenin' some time before about the Bowery Mission, that I'd just received, and thinkin' about that great army of hungry, shiverin' creatures, comin' for their one o'clock breakfast, and wonderin' if I could manage any way tu give a nuther dollar tu help a little more. Well, I went tu bed and fell asleep. About one o'clock I 'woke tu find that the night had grown very cold and stormy, and I thought tu myself, "Sposin' I had tu git up now an' go out fur my breakfast, or else go without it, wouldn't it be turrible."

I must have dropped off tu sleep agin, fur next thing, I dreamed I received a message from heaven fur me tu come, and though I didn't want tu give up the idea of gettin' there sumetime, yet I didn't feel as if I wanted tu leave my earthly possessions just then. However, it was "now or never," so I began tu pack up, for I didn't mean tu go empty handed.

I had so much I hardly knew where tu begin; but I picked up my dearest and costliest treasures, and filled trunk after trunk and box after box. As for my elegant great house, I started tu git it raised by jackscrews, but found they couldn't git it up high enough, so, with sorrer, I made up my mind I must leave that behind.

Well, I put on one of my best dresses, and with my finest carriage and fastest horses I started. I'd sent fur Uncle Hezikiah tu come with his big hayrack and heaviest pair of horses, tu take my trunks.

Now, as we got higher and higher, the road became so narrer that at last my coachman said he couldn't get along any further. So instead of drivin' up tu the heavenly gate in style, I had tu git out an' foot it, with my arms and back loaded down with bundles, fur I couldn't think of leaving my very costliest and most precious jewels behind. Uncle Hezikiah came bumpin' along behind with my boxes full of silks, satins and laces, and many other treasures very dear tu my heart; and tho' the road was so narrer that I thought fur sure he'd git stuck, yet somehow he seemed tu keep on.

At last I arriv' at the gate. 'Twas open; but O, how narrer! I knocked, as I felt sort of strange, and didn't like tu walk right in. A ruther stern-lookin' angel came and asked what I wanted.

I sed, "I'd cum in answer tu the message I got that mornin'."

"But," sez he, "you can never get in here with all that trumpery."

"Trumpery!" sez I, amazed; "why, 'tis the very best and richest of earthly treasures—gold, and pearls, and costly array."

He seemed, at first, determined I shouldn't bring it in; but at last, after speakin' with sumone inside, that I couldn't see, he told me, since I was so sot on it, tu bring it along. So I squeezed and jammed and pushed, till at last I got inside the gate. But, Oh! what a place it was! The street of the city was "pure gold, as it were transparent glass." And such pearls, and sapphires, and emeralds, and amethysts, and many other gems fifty times more beautitul than anything I'd ever seen on earth. And such mansions—my house I'd left behind wasn't tu be compared tu the very smallest of them. And such a multitude of people. I'm sure no man could number them. And then, such clothes as they wore—"shining, exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth could white them."

I looked at my beautiful dress I'd put on that mornin' with such pride, and it looked meaner than a five-cent caliker. But I thought to myself, "I've got it sort of draggled along the road, but I've got some purty fine ones in my trunks. And I must git them trunks in anyhow." So I turned tu the angel that let me in and sed: "I spose yu can find room tu stow my baggage in this big place."

He smiled, so I got them in, and presently I had them all set around in what seemed to be my own room, but 'twas so bare and mean lookin'; and then though it was by itself, as it were, yet it seemed naked and open tu the eyes of all who passed along. Thinks I tu myself, "they du have awful bright light up here." Just then I heard a voice say, "The Lamb is the light thereof."

Well, I turned to my trunks, and when I went to open my biggest and best Saratoga, lo, and behold, the lock had grown so rusty it just tumbled off as I lifted the lid. And when I went to take out my beautiful dresses, laces and finery, as soon as I touched them they became full of holes and ready tu drop to bits like a lot of burnt paper. I heard some of the Shining Ones who stood by say: "Ah! the moths must have got into her treasures."

I took out garment after garment, only to find them worthless—completely ruined. At last I turned sorrowfully away and opened a large trunk which I had filled with gold, thinking, "I'll have tu buy a new dress, for I couldn't think of goin' out among such splendor with what I have on."

As I lifted the lid and plunged my hand in, it was nothing but rust; and when I tried to lift up a little of it, it sifted through my fingers, burning them like fire.

In distress and agony I turned to see who was watching me, and near by stood a host of the Shining Ones, but O, how sorrowfully they looked at me! They were all most beautifully dressed, but one among them, a woman, seemed to outshine the rest; and, somehow, I knew that she was the poor widow that Christ saw cast the two mites into the Lord's treasury.

But directly, before I could speak, I saw all bow in reverence and adoration before One who approached with such glory and majesty as I never can describe. He came near, and such a look of pity and love as he gave me, I felt as if I must sink right out of sight. Pointing to my faded, moth-eaten treasures, he spoke—and such music as there was in that voice I never heard!

"My child," sez he, "didn't I tell you tu lay up your treasures where moth and rust could not come?"

"Yes," sez I, a tryin' tu muster a little courage, "but I loved them so, I wanted tu keep them as long as I could, and I didn't know the moths were in them."

"Yes," was the response; "but if you want lasting treasures you must send them on ahead, not wait tu bring them with you for the air of heaven doesn't agree wit such. When sent on ahead they ar changed into incorruptible, unfadin beauty; and beside, the compound inter est increases them so fast that in a shor time they are beyond count."

"But," sez I, "how is it I haven't any thing here on interest? I did give some thing once in a while to help the poor. gave a dollar last winter to the Bowery Mission, and I gave twenty-five cents las spring for foreign missions, and jest t'other day I gave a poor woman some of my old clothes—how is it these don't count?"

"My child," He said, "how much self-denial was there in that? You gave these out of your abundance."

And then an angel, with one mighty sweep of a great broom, cleaned—yes, cleaned—the whole lot of my treasures right out, and I saw them sinking down, down, down to earth. And where do you suppose they fell? Why, on India, China, Africa, and the islands of the sea, with a big heap on South America; and of all places! if there wasn't a lot of them fell right by the door of the Bowery Mission!

Then I saw one and another of that long line of shivering, starving, sick and suffering ones come along and look at them. And one said, "What a pity this hadn't been put to a good and lasting use. It would have fed thousands." Another said, "Yes, and it might have paid the fare of that poor fellow over there coughing his life away, so he could have gone home to be cared for by loving hands while on his way to the dark valley. And how many one o'clock breakfasts could have been provided—but now, 'tis too late!" And then from India, China, Africa, South America, and the islands of the sea arose the dismal cry, "Too late! Too late! We might have heard of a Saviour, but too late! Too late!"

With a cry of agony I awoke, to find it was mornin' and that I was still on the actin' side.

But I tell you, that dream has made me search pretty close to see if I have any treasures hoarded up on earth, and also to see if I have any that I can send on ahead—put out at compound interest. A. L.

A HIGH-CLASS CHINESE GIRL

NAMES OF ORPHANS WHO HAVE BEEN ADOPTED

鄧文章	Feng Wen chang	李跟慶	Li Keng King
許素娃	Hsu su wa	張徐女	Chan Shu nu
張五娃	Chang Wuh wa	趙保漳	Chao Pao chang
張金娃	Chang Kin wa	侯拉拉	Heo Lao lao
吳祥瑞	Wu Hsiang Sui	崔師娃	Ts'ui Si wa
彭天喜	P'eng Tien hsi	崔王計	Ts'ui Wang ki
楊天喜	Yang Tien hsi	蘇愛娃	Su ai wa
張發娃	Chang Fah wa	魏凌貞	Wei Ruh fu
劉金線	Liu Kin hsien	楊玉心	Yang Wang Sin
蒲更銀	Pu Cheng yin	彭喜樂	P'eng Hsi loh
王夢生	Wang Meng seng	王富信	Wang Fuh Sin
王強兒	Wang chiang ri	李幸娃	Li Sin wa
文村來	Wen Tsuen lai	崔聰娃	Ts'ui Tsong wa
楊天時	Yang Tien shi	祁金子	Ki kin tsi
苟更五	Keo cheng wu	張壓趙	Chang Kini Chien
張妞美	Chang Jen Mei	張賤娃	Chang Tsan wa
寶根吉	Teo Keng chi	趙金旦	Chao Kin Tan
張雙駒	Chang Shuang chu	馬幸卯	Ma Sin Mao
張榮倉	Chang Jong Tsang	馬章娃	Ma Chang wa
		張秋娃	Chang Tsin wa

THE HOPE OF THE HOUSEHOLD

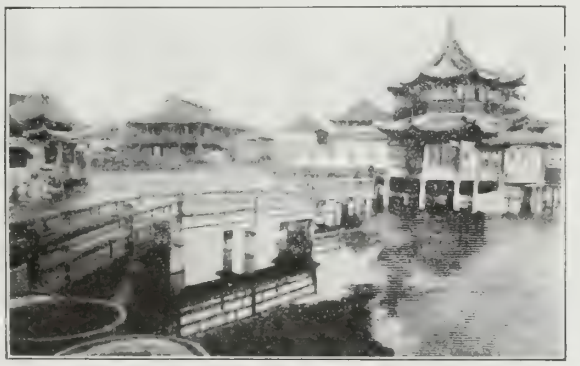
HELPING THE CHINESE FAMINE ORPHANS

FOUR years ago the provinces of Shansi, Shensi and Kuang-si China, suffered from one of the worst famines recorded in the history of the Celestial empire. For two years previous to 1901, the starving time, no rain had fallen, and the crops wilted and died on the parched fields. The rice supply became exhausted, and at last a great wail of despair rose from the stricken people. They ate grass until hardly a blade could be found near the large towns; when that was gone, they took the leaves, and finally the bark of the trees. The little children, some even choking themselves with mud to stay the pangs of hunger, died in countless numbers. Throngs of people, emaciated, mad with the glare of maniacs in their eyes, took up their march for other provinces, where they hoped to find food, but few lived to reach a more prosperous district.

The missionaries bravely took up the extra work thrown on them by the relief committees in America. Thousands of readers sent contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S relief fund. An Interdenominational Missionary Committee was organized at Tientsin, and the work of relief was vigorously pushed at many points in Shansi and Shensi, the missionaries co-operating with native helpers. In this way, thousands were saved who otherwise must have perished of starvation.

When the acute stage of the famine had passed, it was found that there were large numbers of little children left parentless and destitute in the afflicted provinces. Hundreds of these waifs were brought to the gates of the Missions, and cast upon the charity of the kind-hearted Christian missionaries.

One missionary would have the care of several hundred children; another fifty, few less than twenty-five. At last, the awful stress of the famine lifted, but the children remained on at the missions. Their parents were dead, and their relatives had gone, no one knew whither. The little folks have been tenderly cared for, and everything has been done to bring them up as Christians, and to keep them from merging again into the mass of the people with their idolatry and hideous superstition. Taken so young (some little older than babies), there is every prospect that these cheery, almond-eyed children will fulfil the hopes of the missionaries, and many may be sent out later to teach the way of the Cross to their own people.



IN THE NATIVE CITY, SHANGHAI

These children's parents were friendly to foreigners, and the Boxer troubles were as much a source of apprehension to them as to the missionaries. Many of them were killed in the great Boxer raid. The native Christians at that time held stoutly to their new faith.

The next year another famine occurred in the province of Kuangsi as the result of the great Yangtse flood, and many of the scenes of the Shensi famine were re-enacted, with crowds flocking into the missions for support.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, together with some of its readers, has adopted a number of these orphans, and hopes to repeat the success it has had in caring for the destitute children of India. Twenty dollars covers the cost of food, shelter, and Christian training for an orphan in China for one year. The hope of China is in its children. The older people are often hardened, and beyond all appeals to lead a Christian life; but the little folks listen gladly, and the importance of this work cannot be over-estimated, when we think that, as they reckon time in the East, these children will be grown up in a very few years, and playing an active part in the world. A number of the children who have been adopted, especially the boys, were given over to the protection of demons, according to an ancient Chinese rite. In order to insure the prosperity of their children, the Chinese take them to an idol, or the stone figure of some demon who presides over some part, as they believe, of the functions of nature. They think that a spirit inhabits the inanimate figure, and that it will take the child under its protection if the child be dedicated to it. A piece of red paper is pasted on the image, bearing a sentence stating that the child is given to the creature, and also bearing the child's name. Incense sticks are then lighted and offerings made. At the end of the year another offering, in some cases, is made for further protection.

We publish above the list of the Chinese orphans that are under the charge of Missionary W. Hagqvist, of Hsian, Shensi, and who are supported by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. The names are given in Chinese, and their English equivalents. We will publish from time to time the names of others sent in by missionaries at other stations, where the little ones are being cared for through the generosity of American patrons.

A Bowery Mission Musicale

In addition to the regular nightly religious meetings at the Bowery Mission, a special effort has recently been made to cultivate the social life of the thousands of men who live in the cheap hotels and lodging-houses in the immediate vicinity of the Mission. These entertainments have been conducted by Mr. Silon Trenwith, the Financial Secretary; and, inasmuch as Saturday evening is a time of special temptation to Bowery men, they have been held on that night, under the title of "Pleasant Saturday Evenings." Concerts, lectures, stereopticon entertainments, organ recitals, and temperance meetings, have been the order of events for many weeks past. The audiences have been large, orderly, and exceedingly attentive and interested.

One of the largest and most appreciative of these gatherings was entertained by Mr. John Francis Gilder, the celebrated pianist. It was not Mr. Gilder's first visit to the Mission, for he has always evinced a deep interest in Bowery men. Indeed, there are very few public entertainers who devote more of their leisure gratuitously to charitable and philanthropic work than Mr. Gilder. He is one of a very gifted family, being a brother of Mr. Richard Watson Gilder, editor of the Century, and Miss Jeannette E. Gilder, editor of the Critic. On the occasion of his visit to the Bowery Mission, he not only rendered with marvelous skill several elaborate productions of his own on the piano, but delighted the men with several reproductions, on a splendid Victor gramophone, of songs and instrumental pieces of the world's greatest artists. These included solos by Signor Caruso, Mlame Suzanne Adams, the Pope's Choir of the Sistine Chapel, Sousa's Band, etc.

He also won all hearts by his kindly and humorous remarks, and his visit will long be remembered as one of the pleasantest of "Pleasant Saturday Evenings."

MR. JOHN FRANCIS GILDER

A talented friend of the poor, who entertained the men of the Bowery Mission recently.

Reception at the Gospel Settlement

MRS. SARAH J. BIRD, founder and "Mother" of the Gospel Settlement, 211 Clinton Street, New York, assisted by the House Committee and workers, recently gave their annual reception to the clergy of New York City. The schoolrooms upon the ground floor were beautifully decorated with a wealth of rare flowers from Miss Helen Gould's conservatory at Tarrytown. That lady herself was present, she being a warm friend of Mother Bird, and sympathizing with her work among the poor and neglected people in the neighborhood of the "White Door."

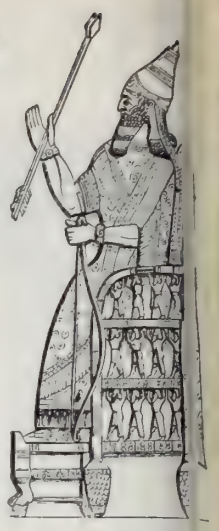
Rev. Donald Sage Mackay, D.D., of New York, in an interesting speech, called attention to the success which had attended the work. He spoke most feelingly of the "White Door," which was always an open door to the cry of distress, and of the efforts of those in charge of the Settlement, resulting in an influence reaching from this home to hundreds of others, through the little children who came there every day to be taught the gospel of love, the happiness of clean hearts, and the comforts of a well-ordered home.

Mrs. George Innis, Jr., told the guests of the work of the Settlement, and that no matter how low the treasury might be (and sometimes it was pretty low), that Mrs. Bird and her girls were never discouraged; that it was a God-appointed work, and as such he would never see it suffer. The rooms were filled with friends of the Settlement.

Refreshments were served from a daintily appointed table in the kindergarten room, the ministers proudly assuming the task of waiting upon the lady guests. The affair was most pleasantly managed and was very greatly enjoyed by all, who wished "Mother" Bird many continued years of usefulness.

Man's Extremity is God's Opportunity

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts*



SENNACHERIB, FROM BAS RELIEF

IF there had been war correspondents with the Assyrian army which set out to fight against Egypt, we can imagine that such a letter as the following might have been sent by one of them: The great King Sennacherib has been fitly called "the lion of Assyria." When he started out to devour Judah on his first invasion, I followed his army as correspondent. I witnessed his capture of forty-six cities, and scores of towns not fortified. Egypt was his goal, but Palestine lay between. Hezekiah, the King of Judah, was alarmed, and sent word to Sennacherib that he would pay the tribute required as a condition of sparing Jerusalem. The amount was so large that Hezekiah had to strip the Temple of its gold in order to meet it. The "lion" was for a moment appeased, but shortly he arose again in his wrath, when he was told that King Hezekiah had formed an alliance with Tirhakah, King of Egypt.

Sennacherib ordered forward his army of one hundred and eighty-five thousand men, and they pitched their tents in the environs of Jerusalem. The dwellers in Jerusalem gathered on the walls to view their dangerous foe. I hovered near the tent of the general in command, and was not far in the rear when he and two high personages, the "head of the eunuchs," and the "head of the cupbearers," went even to the wall of Jerusalem to treat with King Hezekiah, who refused to come out. Then the chief cupbearer harangued the people; defied them, spoke against their God, who he said was not able to deliver them. He tried to intimidate them by reminding them of the sad fate of their brethren, whom Sennacherib had conquered in other cities.

I espied a tall form upon the walls, a man who seemed to have great power by his words to quiet the fears of the people. I was told afterward that it was the prophet Isaiah. I determined to get inside of the besieged city, which I did. A strange hush was upon the people in the streets, and I was told that their King was in the Temple, with the letter of Sennacherib laid before his God, for whose help he was pleading.

I came out as I had gone in, entirely unobserved. I made my way back to the camp of the Assyrians, and laid down to sleep. But in the dead of night a strange fear took hold upon that vast army. It was the plague, more dreaded than any foe. The dead and the dying were all about me, and I fled for my life, and eventually returned to Nineveh. A report reached us there that King Hezekiah and his people claimed that the disaster that came upon Sennacherib's forces, was because of "the help of the Lord," in answer to the prayers of their King and the prophet Isaiah.

HEZEKIAH RECEIVED THE LETTER . . . AND READ IT . . . AND SPREAD IT BEFORE THE LORD (Isa. 37: 14-21).

Let us recall Byron's poetic version of our lesson story, in part:

The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold:

Like the leaves of the forest when summer is green
That host with their banners at sunset were seen.
Like the leaves of the forest when autumn hath blown,
That host on the morrow lay withered and strown.
For the angel of death spread his wings on the blast,
And breathed in the face of the foe as he passed.
And the eyes of the sleepers wax'd deadly and chill,
And their hearts but once heav'd, and forever grew still.
And there lay the steed, with his nostril all wide,
Though through it there rolled not the breath of his pride.
And the tents were all silent, the banners alone,
The lances unlifted, the trumpets unblown.
The might of the Gentile, unsmote by the sword,
Hath melted like snow, at the glance of the Lord.

Illustration and Application

What are the closest parallels to this story of wicked siege and providential deliverance? There are two in the story of the Prophet Elisha (II Kings 6 and 7). When the Syrians realized that the prophet was their most dangerous foe, because God revealed to him, and, through him, to the king of Israel, their plots for attack, an army was foolishly sent to capture one who had thus proved himself an intimate of God. Elisha's young servant awaking one morning to find the village of Dotham, where he dwelt with his master, surrounded by an armed foe, cried out in alarm; but Elisha calmly prayed: "Lord, open his eyes!" "And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." God smote these foes with blindness, showing he could close the eyes of enemies, as well as open the eyes of friends. How much that prayer, "Lord, open his eyes!" is needed by young men of to-day, who mostly care only for what they can see, or what appeals to the senses! Oh that young men might open their eyes to see God and the providential forces with which he is daily influencing the lives of men and nations! About their souls devils gather for wicked siege, but ministering spirits are also at hand to give victory to all, who, like Hezekiah, call on God in prayer.

In the very next chapter we read of another siege, in which the Syrians again surrounded God's people, this time in the city of Samaria. The siege continued until starvation in the city was a worse foe than the army without. Then again in "man's extremity" came "God's opportunity." "The Lord made the host of the Syrians to hear a noise of chariots, and the noise of horses, even the noise of a great host . . . . Wherefore they arose and left the camp as it was and fled for their life." And the starving people apprised of their deliverance came out to feast at the deserted tables of their panic-stricken foes, who had heard the same cavalry of the skies that the young man awhile before had seen. Invisible forces, we are coming to know, are far mightier than visible ones, and why should we fear anything when doing the will of him who is Captain of them all?

Jerusalem itself was providentially delivered from siege at a later period than our lesson, when Alexander the Great, conquering the world, approached it, and saw at its gate, in shining robes of white, the impressive figure of the High Priest, which he had previously seen in a dream, and so regarded as a divine omen that he should spare the city. In consequence he marched away, and the city was delivered by him who symbolizes the soul's Deliverer from the besieging powers of darkness. When temptations and remembered sins assail us, let us call our heavenly High Priest to our aid and find safety behind the Cross where he offered himself for us.

Londonderry's deliverance might be cited as another parallel, and Lucknow also, succored by the "saints of Havelock," whose coming was heralded by "the pipes of the MacGregors." In every hour of extremity let Faith say to Despair: "Dinna ye hear it? God's rescuers are coming."

Surely we must put in the list of sieges God has raised, Pekin, where missionaries and diplomats so miraculously withstood the great army of Boxers for weeks, in the British Compound, with Rev. Frank D. Gamewell as their Isaiah. The international army that relieved them was itself, hardly less miraculous than God's army of the air—an unprecedented union of soldiers representing nations jealous of each other, and armed in anticipation of fighting each other. There was another army, the multitudinous prayers of the Christian world, that fought beside those hard-pressed legations and missionaries.

That man must be dull indeed, who, recognizing that God has been in the ever-onward march of the geologic ages, with earthquakes and volcanoes as his well-directed and resistless artillery, fails to see God in history also, using revolutions for earthquakes, making the wrath of man to praise him, and to drive the wheels of progress. Prof. Austin Phelps has called attention to the fact that the world's great leaders were all "predestinarians," that is, they believed God was working out great plans in history, and that they had been called to take a vital part in those plans. This was notably so of the great warriors Cyrus, Mahomet, Cromwell, Napoleon, Havelock, Gordon, and many more, but true also of peaceful leaders like Socrates, Luther, Sir Mathew Hale, Spinoza, Fra Angelico, Dannesker, and many more.

But lest anyone should forget that God's plan includes plain people and even children, let us hasten to note two Bible stories, where a girl and boy took the most decisive part in God's plans. One is the story of the great Syrian General Naaman, s-d from leprosy by the brave and forgiving word of th-t-tle maid he held as a slave: "Would God that my rd were with the prophet that is in Samaria, for he w-ld recover him of his leprosy." (II. Kings 5). A boy k the important part in saving Paul from assassina-n, when Paul's nephew, having overheard a group of -n-spirators swear they would neither eat nor drink till -y had killed Paul, bravely carried the story to Paul, -d from him to the chief captain. It was God's annou-d plan that Paul should go to Rome, not die in Jerusa-n, but in that plan this boy had the decisive human part (ts 23: 11-24). In the light of these -o stories, the children and plain pe-le have a right to sing and say:

I am only a part of God's great plan
But I'll always do the best I can.

If man's extremity is God's o-portunity, then in every extr-ity, whether national or per-al, we should trust and not e afraid. The two great words, th-, that this lesson should print on r hearts, are: providence and tr-. God cares for us, and therefore e should be free from anxious c-, whatever comes. Let us not - little the great word provider-, for example, by supposing G- leaves nothing to us, and will do r us what we can do, or that he d- great things to accomplish sc- trifle for lazy people.

A Bible Society colporteur c-vassing a district, called at a ho- and asked the old lady who ca- to the door, "Please, madam, ha- you a Bible?" The excellent l- was astonished, not to say ino-nant, that persons should dare f- come around, insulting respecta- Christian people, and asking th- whether they had a Bible. course she had a Bible! She wo- let the visitor see it with his o- eyes, and then he would not thi- her a heathen any longer! "Ma- go up-stairs and fetch the Bil- from off the bureau, and let t- gentleman see the family Bible which my father left me The volume was brought down and laid on the tabl- and when it was put on its back, it opened itself natura- at a certain place. "Ah!" said the venerable lad- "well, after all, I think there is a Providence in yo- coming; for here are my spectacles which I lost yea- ago, and I could not imagine where they were."

There may have been a "providence" in the incide- if it led her to use her recovered spectacles in readi- her neglected Bible, which, let us hope, was suggest- as the way to make it all providential, for we would n- forget that God has been manifestly in events as sma- and brought out of them great good. When Columbu- little fleet was far on toward the west, a flock of bir- passed before him toward the northeast; he turned h- fleet in the direction whence they came, and soon di- covered San Salvador. Otherwise his course would hav- led him to Virginia. So Spanish rule and greed and lu- were turned away, and this vast territory of ours left fr- to civil liberty and the Protestant faith. Not alone t- sparrow's fall, but the sparrow's flight, is under the d- recting eye of God.

But our view of God's providence, while includin- small things, must take a wide range. Bishop Berkle- has recorded a comparison which occurred to him in S- Paul's Cathedral, in London. He saw a fly crawling o- a pillar, and he says, "It requires some comprehensio- in the eye of the intelligent spectator to take in at on- view the various parts of the building, but to the fly whose prospect was confined to a part of one of the stone of a single pillar, the joined beauty of the whole or th- distinct use of its parts was invisible, and nothing coul- appear but the small inequalities on the surface of th- stone, which, in the view of that insect, seemed so many deformed rocks and precipices."

* International Sunday School Lesson for July 2. Sennacherib's Invasion. II. Chron. 32: 9-23. Golden Text: "With us is the Lord our God to help us and to fight our battles." II. Chron. 32: 8.

IN GOLDEN SUMMER DAYS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Senator's Debt

WHAT a charming man Senator Blank is; so genial, so full of real bonhomie, and so eloquent on the floor. He has every quality for leadership. But where did he get that insignificant little wife; such a dowdy, so unused to society, so primitive? A wife like that is a positive handicap in Washington! Why do men marry so early, before they reach their full development and know their needs? And when they have made a mistake like that, why not leave that sort of wife at home, safely secluded in her native air?" Emily Borden poured forth this tirade without stopping for breath. She and her friend, an elderly lady, had just come from the beautiful Congressional library, and had passed the Senator, an old friend of Mrs. Fanwood's, on the street. Mrs. Fanwood was a woman of sixty, who knew everybody and remembered everything. A fountain of agreeable anecdote and correct information. She was welcome at any dinner table and in any drawing-room, as welcome as the youngest belle of the season, and far more entertaining than she. Emily Borden, from college a year ago, and from New York at the moment, was Mrs. Fanwood's guest.

"Senator Blank owes his wife so large a debt of gratitude, my child," he said, as Emily finished her speech; that a whole lifetime of devotion on his part can never pay it. The score between them would be formidable if there were not so much true love on both sides."

"Please explain. I don't understand."

"Of course you don't understand. How should you! But when the Senator married Mary Pillsbury, in a little backwoods town of North Carolina, he was keeping the country store. He sold women's dresses and sunbonnets, molasses, soap, flour, hardware, cider, sugar, baking-powder, tinned goods, biscuits, stationery, and whatever else is sold in a country store. He was fond of reading, but had only a limited education. The one wish of his heart was to know books and to study law. But the path to learning for him had been blocked by poverty. He had never known anything but grinding care.

"Mary said to him one evening, 'Dick, honey, you go ahead and study, I'll keep the store.' They were very poor, and they had two children. The husband laughed at her. But the next day, the next week, the next month, the wife repeated her plea. Dick's old mother, who used to sit by the fire smoking a clay pipe, one day stood up and put her wrinkled hand on the young man's shoulder.

" 'My boy,' she said, 'Mary's right. She'll manage. I'm pretty strong yet, I'll help her; you go to college.'

"Dick went. He worked hard to pay his way, and the women worked hard at home. Just after he had finished college and the law school, the old mother died. The wife had no time to cultivate her mind, or study the arts of dress. She had undertaken to carry a heavy load; she had tackled a big job. The store was made to pay till the law office supplanted it. Dick went into politics. He rose rapidly, like Jonah's gourd, I think. Here he is now; the younger children are at good schools. The older boys are at West Point and Harvard, and the little dowdy mother and insignificant wife is where she ought to be, with the man she helped make. Emily, I could stoop and kiss the hem of her dress, I honor her so deeply."

"But, Mrs. Fanwood, she is common. She never could have been pretty. And she is not adaptable."

"Common she is not. She is the real thing; a sincere, strong, lovable, patriotic American woman, true to the core. In its way, an earthen jug that is real, surpasses a bit of plated ware. There are depths of tenderness in that soul; there is a fund of kindness; there is common sense. She is ballast to her husband, who is mercurial. She keeps him from making mistakes. To me, she is finer than he."

"I suppose," said Emily with resignation, "that it is often like this, and that if we could lift the edge of a curtain and take a peep, we should find that successful men often owe a great deal to the wife or sister or mother, modestly in the background."

"No doubt of it," answered Mrs. Fanwood.

Copyright, by H. C. White Co.

CANYON ROAD AND VIRGINIA CASCADE, YELLOWSTONE PARK

Our great country abounds in stupendous mountains, mighty rivers, splendid cascades, and foaming mountain torrents. The magnificent scenery of the Yellowstone Park is excelled nowhere on earth; paralleled only in the glorious scenery of the Himalayas in India, or the Andes in South America. For stay-at-home pilgrims this picture is a glimpse of unrivalled beauty.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

JOSEPHINE. It is not conventional to receive presents from young men who are not related or engaged to you, flowers and bon-bons excepted.

A. H. F. Any letter addressed, President of Woman's Exchange, New York City, will be received and answered, if stamps are enclosed for the purpose.

JOANNA. Miss Helen Gould is very generally honored and beloved by American women. So, too, is Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth. Of course there are many others, but the fame of these three is sung through all our coasts.

Comparative Ills

OF the two great disadvantages, blindness and deafness, most people, if asked off hand, would say that the former was the least endurable. To have this bright world shut out, the blue sky, the sweet fields, the tossing sea, the white shimmer of the full moon, and the golden affluence of sunset, seen no more, appears at first insupportable. But singularly, blind people are very cheery and patient as a rule, though they dwell in a house of darkness, with shutters closed and blinds down. Deaf people, on the other hand, are often irritated by the trouble they have in communicating with the company about them. They are supersensitive as to their lack of hearing, and reply to what they fancy is said rather than ask to have a sentence repeated. The deaf sometimes read from the lips of those who speak with them, or by some mechanical device, manage to hear in part, but they are much more acutely distressed and depressed more deeply than are the blind by their handicap. The house of darkness is bearable. The house of silence is a chamber of poignant trial.

Those who are endowed with perfect sight and unimpaired hearing should do what they can to help the less well-equipped children of humanity. They should be eyes to the blind, and ears to the deaf.

When these infirmities come to the young, a great many alleviations and mitigations are possible. Other senses serve the one who has lost sight or hearing. The brain has more than these avenues of approach; more dominant powers than we dream. Schools do much for the pupils who are early brought to them. The case of Helen Kellar shows what almost miraculous development may be the portion of a person both blind and deaf, if patiently taught and intelligently receptive.

Once in this world a Man lived who gave blind people sight, and deaf people hearing. As He went up and down the highroads of his native land, with a word, a look, a touch, he healed the sick and restored life to the dead, and everywhere wrought deeds of kindness. Still, Jesus of Nazareth passeth by, and still he goes about doing good. Not always does he remove an evil or a burden now, but he gives strength to endure whatever must be borne, and enables us to bear with confident courage whatever trials he sends.

Sweet Girl Graduates

Schools and colleges are sending forth in these days their quota of eager and buoyant young women, all equipped for contact with the world and ready to take part in the vital issues of the hour. They are sending out the boys, too, but they have a swathe more directly cut for them than their sisters have. For a boy, the choice is between business and a profession, and he has usually made it before he leaves school. Our girls have more intricate problems. What are they to do? Some will stay at home and fill in the chinks that a home has for a dear daughter's ministry, and will help educate and influence brothers and sisters still in their juvenile stage. Some will become doctors, nurses, teachers, journalists, artists, missionaries, or women of business.

After graduation a girl looks about her in search of the employment for which she is best fitted, unless she prefer a domestic career. Most fortunate among women is she who is early wooed and won, who early is beloved by a good man, and in response to his courtship becomes his wife. The offices of wifehood and maternity are to some of our gifted graduates, and the more highly they are gifted the greater will be their success in that sphere to which love calls them.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

CHAPTER XV.—Continued

MISS CYNTHIA shook her head. "Nothing happens in Innisfield," she sighed. "There is just church and prayer-meeting and the sewing-society. You would not care to hear about such things."

"I should care to hear about anything that interests you," he said in a low voice. "Tell me what you are thinking of, too; we'll try and get acquainted all over again, and perhaps by next summer——"

"No—no!" whispered Miss Cynthia, with a frightened little shiver; "not next summer! I shall not——"

He waited patiently for her to finish her sentence. Then he bade her a hasty good-bye at her own door, and hurried away in the gathering darkness.

Miss Cynthia went in and closed the door definitely behind her. She was glad to find Abby Whiton building a fire on the sitting-room hearth. She stood close beside her without removing her hat or gloves.

"The' was a man come to the door to see you this aft'noon," said Abby, bending to blow the reluctant little flames into brisker life. "He left his card, an' who'd ye s'pose it was? I studied over it quite a spell before I remembered."

"It was James Blake," said Miss Cynthia, quietly. "I met him on the way home."

"Fer goodness' sake', wha' d' he want?" demanded Abby Whiton. "An' where in creation did he come from? I wouldn't 'a' knowed him from Adam! would you?"

Miss Cynthia made no reply. She had dropped into a chair and was staring thoughtfully at the leaping flames.

"I guess mebbe you'd better take your things off an' stay a spell," observed Abby Whiton, with a delicately sarcastic sniff. She turned her back on the small figure of her mistress and sought the seclusion of her kitchen, where she grumbled suspiciously into the depths of the coal-hod and exploited her disturbed feelings through the safe medium of the iron tea-kettle.

"Ef she sh'd git to sparkin' (thump) at her age (thump—thump) the' ain't no tellin' how it 'ud come out! (thump, thump, bang!)"

CHAPTER XVI.

ON the second morning after Miss Cynthia's meeting with James Blake, the postman delivered a letter into the hand of Abby Whiton. Miss Whiton had been engaged in strenuous conflict with the flying leaves, which raced hither and yon in impish glee, as if defying her and her powerful implement of warfare.

"I d'clare the' ain't a season of the year when things is reel neat outdoors," she complained to the postman. "What with snow an' slush in winter, an' tree-blows all over ev'rythin' in the spring, an' caterpillars an' birds an' cherry stuns, an' goodness knows what, all a-messin' things up in summer, an' these 'ere pesky leaves in th' fall—it does seem 's 'o the Creater might ha' had more consid'ration fer orderly folks!"

She paused to finger the thick letter, directed to her mistress in a man's small, firm handwriting. "I wan-ta-know!" she muttered suspiciously. "Now, I wonder ef he'd hev the gall—after all these years. Course, she's got money, an' the' ain't nobody, 'cept me, to hender."

Abby Whiton's memory was of a superior quality and texture, and she had recalled without effort the single romance of Miss Cynthia's life. She had thoroughly agreed with the late Mrs. Day and Grandmother Breyfogle in their strong disapproval of the penniless young man. And, on one occasion, she had experienced the peculiar satisfaction of intercepting a note intended for the girl's private perusal. It had been tucked under the doormat. Abby had found it there, and conveyed it without delay to her mistress, with the remark that she hoped she knew her duty. Mrs. Day had praised her warmly for this act of service, Abby remembered. She also remembered Miss Cynthia's pale face and reddened eyes, as they appeared that morning at breakfast, and for many mornings and evenings thereafter.

"I do' know es I'd better inte'fere this time," the excellent woman cogitated, as she carried the letter upstairs. "She's gittin old 'nough to know her own mind, ef she's ever a-goin' to."

She knocked resoundingly at her mistress' door. "Here's a letter," she announced. "An' I guess it's from him!"

"YES," SAID CYNTHIA, "I MEAN TO READ IT AFTER AWHILE."
THE MALTESE CAT PURRED LOUDLY.

She was vaguely disappointed in Miss Cynthia's manner as she received the letter. She deposited it quietly on the bureau, and immediately resumed the bit of mending she had in hand. "Mebbe it ain't from him, after all," reflected Abby Whiton. "Seems 's 'o she'd ought to ha' perked up an' showed a little more int'rest, if it was."

On the fourth morning thereafter, she carried up a second letter; and a week later a third. "If these 'ere l... ters ain't from him, I'd like to kn... who in creation's a-writin' to her ... frequent," Miss Whiton remarked ... herself. She watched her mistr... closely, and except that she now w... out for long walks without regard ... the weather, she could detect no d... ference in her manner or conduct.

"I never heerd o' sech a thing ... goin' out fer pleasure on a day li... this," she ventured, by way of exp... tulation, when Miss Cynthia was abo... to sally forth in the face of a co... driving rain. "Seems 's 'o it wa'... hardly respectable."

"It doesn't hurt me a bit," said Mi... Cynthia, absent-mindedly. "I like ... Besides, I've got to go and see ... Mrs. Phillips: I promised her."

"You sent her beef-tea an' jell' y... terday," sniffed Abby. "Course, ... b'lieve in doin' good; but the's such ... thing as carryin' it too fur."

"Not for me," Miss Cynthia mu... mured, with clouded eyes. "I didn... do anything for years and years. Yo... know I didn't, Abby."

"I guess you done full es much ... most folks," grumbled Abby; "an' no... you're a-doin' twict es much es an... other woman in this 'ere town. Foll... 'll be sayin' you're reel bragity a... stuck-up, bein' so waful good an' cha... it'ble all of a suddent."

"I don't care what people say abou... me," answered Miss Cynthia, with ... dispirited sigh.

The fourth letter arrived that afte... noon. Abby Whiton placed it on th... sitting-room mantel-piece; then stoo... back and regarded it thoughtfully, he... hands on her hips. "I'll bet a dolla... she ain't answered one of 'em!" sh... ejaculated. "I ain't seen her a-doin... it, anyhow, an' I've kep' my eye o... her pretty constant. I d'clare it'... enough to rile a saint!"

After a further period of reflection ... she removed the letter from its prom... inent position to a retired nook o... her pantry shelf. Here it reposed un... til Miss Cynthia had returned fro... her walk and was well established b... the cheerful fire, which Abby had fully... accepted as one of the institutions o... the newly-organized household.

"Here's another of them letters o... his'n," Miss Whiton announced, hand... ing the missive as gingerly as though ... it contained a charge of dynamite. "It... come this aft'noon while you was out ... an' I saved it fer you."

"Thank you, Abby," Miss Cynthia ... said, with an entire absence of sur... prise or pleasure. She laid the letter ... on the table at her side, and went on ... stroking the big maltese cat which ... had climbed to her lap.

"Well, ain't you a-goin' to read it?" demanded Abby sharply. Her flushed face exhibited undaunted determination in every puckered line.

Miss Cynthia looked up and met the old woman's shrewd, anxious eyes fastened expectantly upon her. "Why yes," she said, smiling faintly. "I mean to read it after awhile." The big cat purred loudly and arched his back under the steady motion of the

CONTINUED ON PAGE 549

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

Take the Children to the Country

TAKE the children to the country,
Take them into purer air,
Where the fields are starred with beauty,
And the world is fresh and fair.
They who never saw the sun set,
They who never saw it rise—
Never saw the wondrous beauty
Of the rainbow in the skies.

They are old while yet in childhood,
Weary, care-worn girls and boys;
Bearing all too soon life's burdens,
Young, without their childish joys.
Give them days of blessed sunshine;
Give them food enough—to spare.
Give them all of nature's tonics
In the pure, life-giving air.

Let them see the fresh, green meadows,
See the forest and the sky;
Let them feel the strong, clear breezes
Of the river flowing by.

Tell them how a loving Father
Counts them dearer far than gold;
Tell them how the gentle Shepherd
Calls them early to his fold.

We who guard our own dear children,
As the apple of our eye,
Shall we see God's other children
Left to suffer, pine and die?
Left to those who'll teach them evil,
And their youthful feet beguile,
Till their pure and holy fancies
Fade amid surroundings vile?

"Feed my lambs!" The Master said it.
When we meet Him by and by,
What account have we to render,
If we pass them idly by?
"Inasmuch!" O blessed Master,
Seeking still to follow thee,
We would hear thy voice proclaiming,
"Lo! ye did it unto Me."

Pittsfield, Me. MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

Little White Cots at Mont-Lawn

THERE they stand, rows and rows of them, in the clean, cool dormitories of the Children's Home. Each bed, with its dainty furnishings, so pure and white, seems to beckon some city waif, to come and rest a tired little body in its clean cool embrace, while sweet dreams of a morrow amid the fields and flowers, foreshadow ten long, lovely days, and sweet, restful nights.

There is nothing which appeals to a Mont-Lawn visitor's heart more than a sight of these little beds, even when they are tenantless. How much more so when the little ones, their hard day's work of play over, and their evening prayers said, lay their curly heads on the pillows and sail off to dreamland.

When at play, a noisy, happy band, scampering about the grounds, the children are almost irresistible, their bright faces and laughter finding echo with those who have almost forgotten childhood's days. But it is when they are gathered to their little white nests, sleeping unconscious beauty, then something tugs one's heartstrings, as there rises the contrasting scene, the hot, crowded, uncomfortable places in the city which these little sleepers call home. If the donors of the cots, those who have endowed them for the season, could stand by these little innocent, sleeping children, they would thank the good Father for having put it into their hearts to contribute to this beautiful and blessed charity.

PRAYER-TIME AT MONT-LAWN

In writing to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, asking if some children in which she is interested can go to Mont-Lawn this year, Mrs. Mary B. Bishop, director of a children's mission in New York, says, "The children are pleading with me to write to you, and ask if they may go to Nyack again this year. They say that never in all their lives did they have such a happy time, and that the teachers said they were good; so they are very sure you will let them go again. We have been entertaining these many months with accounts of Mr. Klopsch's visits to the Home, of the stories he told, and prizes he gave, and of the bedtime stories told by the teachers. The influences of their summer outing at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Home have not been limited to the summer, but have spread throughout the entire year. I am confident that the children have been made better and sweeter thereby."

Letters written by the donors of cots are very interesting. Many are most pathetic, showing that although its life may have closed upon this earth, yet still a little child may lead in the thought to help others. One mother writes, "Enclosed find $21 for the endowment of a little bed in Mont-Lawn. I would like the name, 'Catherine Holden Glidden,' put over the bed. My little girl passed into life everlasting in March. She loved all the poor children, and about the last thing she talked of before she was taken sick, was that she wanted to be a rich little girl, so that she could help poor little girls. She was only four years old, but had a beautiful spirit and was ready for the change. I hope to visit Mont-Lawn some day, but in any event there will always be a bed endowed in my Catherine's name."

There is nothing more tender than the heart of a little child, when its interest and sympathy are aroused. A father writes, "I enclose check for $24—twenty-one to endow a bed, and the three dollars represents the penny savings of my little seven-year-old, who is interested in the children you are blessing so fully." This letter is from a Superintendent of schools in a large town, which is fortunate in having such a generous-hearted man in so important a position. A friend from Long Beach, Calif., sends $100, saying, "Send as many poor little ones as you can for that amount. I think your Children's Home at Mont-Lawn must be the means of bringing the sunshine into many little darkened lives, and I am glad to help along so good a work."

Another letter, enclosing $80, states that a subscriber's only daughter died some time ago, and her last request was that her mother send this amount to the Fresh-Air Fund.

Two friends send $21 "in the name of the Lord," and request that seven of the poorest, most needy and destitute children be sent to the Home. Away from Rome, Italy, comes a letter, enclosing cot endowment, and saying, "Though I am so far away, I do not want to forget God's little waifs."

Mr. Herman E. Martens of Indianapolis, sends $63, in which to endow three cots, in the name of his three daughters, Ruth, Julia and Frieda, who are much interested in Mont-Lawn and its little visitors. A beautiful letter accompanied the check, in which the writer asks THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to "Kindly accept the gift in His Name, who said 'Suffer little children to come unto Me!'"

Receipt of other contributions for cots will be acknowledged later. Meanwhile, the good work goes on. Let us make 1905 the "Banner Year" for Mont-Lawn. No nobler impulse ever stirred a human heart than that which prompts one to come to the rescue of innocent children, who appeal to us in their helplessness. $21 endows a cot for the season, giving a vacation of ten days each to seven children.

[Send for illustrated booklet describing the work at Mont-Lawn.]

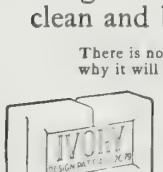
Baby's Food
can always be uniform if you use Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. The original. Especially prepared as an infant food. Send for Baby's Diary, a valuable booklet for mothers. 108 Hudson Street, New York.

An Evidence of Civilization.

Ivory Soap is one of the evidences of civilization. You will almost always find it in homes whose occupants surround themselves with the things that help to make life pleasant—good china, oriental rugs, flowers, cut glass.

Ivory Soap's mission is to keep everything in the house (including the occupants) clean and bright.

There is no "free" uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.



Ivory Soap
99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

$3.60 Bargains in Carpetings

Our factory must be kept running during the summer, and we are making special offers on all our lines of goods. $3.60 will cover a room with a handsome reversible wool rug. Just the thing for summer use, our famous Bruxelle Rug, all sizes. Do not buy a carpet until you get our catalogue of rugs, art squares, curtains, etc., showing all goods in actual colors. Why we can sell so cheaply, our very favorable terms, free trial offer, guarantee of satisfaction or money refunded, free delivery plan, all explained in our book. Send for it to-day to place nearest you.

SANITARY MANUFACTURING CO., Inc.
178 Oxford St., Philadelphia. 238 Omaha Building, Chicago.

AGENTS $20 to $50 weekly Entire or spare time Selling STANDARD SELF-Filling -Cleaning Fountain PENS
No ink dropper. No smeared fingers No "blow" No taking apart to clean No twisted rubber No valve or piston No awkward hump No complication FREE LESSONS in Successful Salesmanship make experience unnecessary. Write for new plan and do it NOW.
Standard Pen Co., 1506 Spitzer, Toledo, O.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable.—Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemetery. Catalogue free.
KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 415 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

PATTON'S SUN-PROOF PAINTS
are guaranteed to outwear all other paints. Send for free book about paint
PATTON PAINT CO.
218 Lake St., Milwaukee, Wis.

THE "BEST" LIGHT

Made in Over 100 different styles.
100-Candle Power Light at a cost of 2c per week.
More brilliant than Acetylene or Electricity. No Grease—Smoke—Bitter Odor.
Agents Wanted Everywhere.
THE BEST LIGHT CO., 3-70E. 5th St., Canton, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana Mo.

Oread Institute of Domestic Science.
School motto: "We learn to do by doing."
Normal Course in one year.
Graduates readily find employment.
Good health at end of term.
Term begins Sept. 6th, 1905.
Catalogue Free. Worcester, Mass.

NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy.
The Newton Horse Remedy Co.
Toledo, Ohio.

"He that works easily works successfully." 'Tis very easy to clean house with SAPOLIO

The Old Hymns

THERE'S lots o' music in 'em, the hymns of long ago;
An' when some gray haired brother sings the ones I used to know,
I sorter want to take a hand. I think o' days gone by,
"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand, and cast a wistful eye."

There's lots o' music in 'em—those dear, sweet hymns of old,
With visions bright of lands of light and shining streets of gold;
And I hear 'em ringing—singing, where memory dreaming stands,
"From Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strands."

They seem to sing forever of holier, sweeter days,
When the lilies of the love of God bloomed white in all the ways:
And I want to hear their music from the old-time meetin's rise,
Till "I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies."

We hardly needed singin' books in them old days; we knew
The words, the tunes of every one, the dear old hymn-book through!
We had no blaring trumpets then, no organs built for show;
We only sang to praise the Lord, "from whom all blessings flow."

An' so I love the dear old hymns, and when my time shall come—
Before the light has left me and my singing lips are dumb—
If I can only hear 'em then, I'll pass without a sigh,
"To Canaan's fair and happy land, where my possessions lie!"

The Christian's Destiny*

VERY little is revealed to us in Scripture of the details of the heavenly life, and the little that is told is chiefly told in symbols. Paul had a vision of it, but he said it was not lawful to repeat what he saw and heard. John, in his apocalypse, struggles vainly, as we perceive, to give us an idea of the glories and delights of the heavenly home. He falls back on the things we count precious here, and compares the splendors of heaven to gold and huge jewels. However satisfactory such things might be to the Jewish mind, we realize that it is not in material wealth and splendors that the joy of heaven consists. Even here, there are many who have enormous wealth, who are discontented and miserable.

The inference from this silence and figurative language is clear. It is not intended that we should dwell on the prospect, but give our thoughts to our present life and duty. If we have faith, we are sure that God will be good to us in the life beyond the grave, and we should leave the details with him. Perhaps it would not be possible for us to understand what the happiness of pure spirit is. We are so accustomed to the expression of sensation by the senses, that it is impossible to conceive of a life, in which, stripped of the body, we live and move and enjoy. As the caterpillar cannot be supposed to know, or imagine, anything of the existence of the butterfly, which is its future, so the heavenly life may be far beyond our powers of imagination. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

How foolish would be the conduct of a boy, who, being the only son of a millionaire, knew that his father's vast wealth would some day come into his hands, if he spent all his time in planning what he would do with it, and how he would enjoy himself when he entered on his heritage! A wise friend would say to him: "Enjoy your present freedom from responsibility; make the best of your privileges; study to fit yourself for the duties you will have to perform, but do not indulge in futile reveries." Life is a preparation for eternity, and we know that the best mode of preparation is to do well and faithfully the duties immediately at our hand.

He whose eyes are continually on the stars may stumble over an obstacle in his path. He whose eyes are continually on his path, misses the glories of the sky. It is the combination that is needed in life. "Now are we the sons of God," with duties to perform, with obligations to fulfil, and all the more earnestly should we live, because of the brilliant future, vague but certain, lying before us. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." That it will be vastly greater, infinitely happier than anything we have known, is certain. Life would be a farce, a hopeless enigma, if there were no higher development at the end. All the trials and sufferings, all the education and training that we undergo in our course through this world, are fitting us for our destiny, and God, who knows what that destiny is, adapts his providential dealings with us to that sublime end.

One hint of the future is vouchsafed us. John tells us that in that glorious time "we shall be like Him, for we shall see him as he is." At last our efforts will succeed; at last our hopes will be fulfilled. The imitation of Christ, the struggle to tread in his steps, the wrestling to have his spirit, will, in that coming time, find its fruition. The goal will be reached. What more delightful glimpse could have been given us than this? That pure, lovable innocent, magnanimous soul, which has won the admiration of the world through all the centuries, and wrung homage even from his foes, will be the type of heavenly society. We shall be like him! Imagine a world peopled with men like Christ! What better conception of bliss could be given us?

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for July 2. I. John 2: 15-17; 3: 1-3.

The New Moderator

WITH remarkable unanimity, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church agreed on the distinguished man whom it would honor with the highest office in its gift. More than once before the name of Dr. James D. Moffat has been suggested to former Assemblies, but each time the claims of some other candidate were recognized. "All things come to the man who can wait," and at Winona Lake the old adage came true. The only minister whose name commanded any support fell into line by seconding the nomination of Dr. Moffat, and the Assembly unanimously elected him.

DR. JAMES D. MOFFAT

Dr. Moffat is fifty-nine years of age. He was born at New Lisbon, O., and was educated at the college of which he is now President—Washington and Jefferson. He took a subsequent course in theology at Princeton, from which he graduated in 1871. His first charge was at Wheeling, W. Va., where he remained for eleven years. He then assumed the office in which he has done most successful work in training young men for the ministry. Washington and Jefferson College, though modestly refraining from aspiring to the rank of a university, has an excellent record for the ability and scholarship of its graduates, and under Dr. Moffat it has advanced on its early reputation. He has displayed remarkable tact in its management and has exercised the same quality in his relations with his brother ministers. A tribute to his usefulness in the disputes which have disturbed the Assembly in former years, was paid by Dr. Mackenzie, who nominated him. He said that in coming years, he believed Dr. Moffat would be known as the great pacificator. The tribute was no mean one. Pacificators are needed in every department of the world's work, and not least in the assemblies of ministers, where men feel strongly and are apt to express themselves strongly. It enjoys the honor of the divine encomium, for Christ said, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

Training Girls For Home-Makers

Love, as the basis of education, is the principle which underlies the system adopted in the Havergal School for Girls, a new Christian training school at Tarrytown-on-Hudson. The pupils taken are those who, perhaps, would otherwise have had no religious training, or where a family has been broken up through death or sudden disaster. In addition to the public school course, the girls receive instruction in home duties and etiquette. Much attention is given to moral and religious development. There are special courses in typewriting, stenography, bookkeeping, dressmaking, the graded system of sewing, domestic science, home economics and music. A course in physiology is given, special attention being paid to personal hygiene. In summer, there are special nature studies, a school garden and lectures in practical and scientific gardening. Each girl is given a vegetable plot and also ground for the cultivation of flowers. In training these girls to be homemakers, and to fill any sphere in which they may be called, the social side of life is recognized, and the teachers walk with the pupils out into the real world of people and out into nature's own haunts. There is systematic Bible study each day. Any one desiring a girl to have these advantages, can obtain all information, by addressing the Principal of the Havergal School, at Tarrytown-on-Hudson, N. Y.

FEED YOUNG GIRLS

Must Have Right Food While Growing

Great care should be taken at the critical period when the young girl is just merging into womanhood that the diet shall contain all that is upbuilding, and nothing harmful.

At that age the structure is being formed, and if formed of a healthy, sturdy character, health and happiness will follow; on the other hand unhealthy cells may be built in, and a sick condition slowly supervene which, if not checked, may ripen into a chronic disease and cause life-long suffering.

A young lady says:

"Coffee began to have such an effect on my stomach a few years ago, that I was compelled to quit using it. It brought on headaches, pains in my muscles, and nervousness.

"I tried to use tea in its stead, but found its effects even worse than those I suffered from coffee. Then for a long time I drank milk alone at my meals, but it never helped me physically, and at last it palled on me. A friend came to the rescue with the suggestion that I try Postum Coffee.

"I did so, only to find at first that I didn't fancy it. But I had heard of so many persons who had been benefited by its use that I persevered, and when I had it brewed right, found it grateful in flavor and soothing and strengthening to my stomach. I can find no words to express my feeling of what I owe to Postum Food Coffee.

"In every respect it has worked a wonderful improvement—the headaches, nervousness, and pains in my side and back, all the distressing symptoms yielded to the magic power of Postum. My brain seems also to share in the betterment of my physical condition; it seems keener, more alert and brighter. I am, in short, in better health now than I ever was before, and I am sure I owe it to the use of your Postum Food Coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

No Agents or Branches. Est. 17 Years. Mail Orders Or

SUITS AND SKIRTS MADE to MEASURE

ONE-FIFTH REDUCTION
From Former Prices.

Money Refunded if We Fail to Fit You.

For a short time only, we will make to order any Suit, Skirt, Jacket or Rain Coat illustrated in our Catalogue, from any of our reliable materials, at a reduction of ONE-FIFTH from Catalogue prices.

We make this exceptional offer to close out our stock of Summer fabrics.

Over 150 Styles and 400 materials from which to select.

If we make a garment to your measure, you may feel safe in the thought that you are well-dressed, and you'll LOOK it, too. WE CARRY NOTHING READY-MADE.

Our prices enable you to have your Summer costume made to order for less than is usually asked for the ready-made kind.

$6 Suits NOW $4.80 $4 Skirts NOW $3.2
$12 Suits NOW 9.60 $7 Skirts NOW 5.6
$18 Suits NOW 14.40 $10 Skirts NOW 8.0
$25 Suits NOW 20.00 $12 Skirts NOW 9.6

Write at once for our Catalogue and Samples while our stock of the more desirable materials is complete

We Send FREE to any part of the United States our Summer Catalogue, showing the latest New York Fashions, a large assortment of Samples of the newest materials, and simple directions for taking measurements correctly. WRITE FOR THEM TO-DAY.

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York

THE FIG TREE CHART

IN EIGHT COLORS 22 x 29 INCHES SHOULD BE IN EVERY HOME

Most beautiful and instructive chart ever published, teaching vital truths in an interesting manner. To introduce we give choice of valuable premium—teacher's Bible, ladies' or gents' shoes, ladies' or gents' umbrella. Premium alone usually sells for $2.2[illegible]. We send chart and premium for $2.00. If shoes are wanted send correct size, and 20 cents extra for postage on either premium.

ALPHA ART PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Dept. C. H., 95 Des Plaines Street, Chicago

Exclusively for the treatment of EPILEPSY
Facilities and Location Unsurpassed. Rates Moderate.
DR. J. W. WHERRY, Medical Superintendent.
DR. WM. P. SPRATLING, Chief Consultant.
For brochure, terms, etc., address the management.
The Health Resort Co., Box 7087, Rochester, N. Y.

SUMMER HOMES IN GREEN HILLS OF
Vermont and Lake Champlain
Terms, $4 to $10 per week.
New trains between Boston, New York, Springfield and Vermont points. As good as any on the continent. 150-page illustrated brochure mailed free on receipt of 6c. in stamps or postage.
Address A. W. ECCLESTONE, So. Pass. Agent, 385 Broadway, New York City.

LOANED FREE
32 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and Evangelistic Services.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

ROYALTY PAID ON SONG-POEMS and Musical Compositions
We arrange and popularize
PIONEER MUSIC PUB. CO. (Inc.
D 321 Manhattan Building
CHICAGO, ILL.

OSTERMOOR CHURCH CUSHIONS

Used by 25,000 Churches.

Samples, Prices, Handsome Book "Church Cushions" Free
OSTERMOOR & COMPANY, 112-118 ELIZABETH STREET, NEW YORK

Old cushions made over cheaply.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 546

lile hand. "Would you like to know wo the letters are from, Abby?"

I've b'en s'posin' all 'long they was fun him," replied Miss Whiton, with a rm tightening of her lips. "'Tain't so I disremembered what happened a pell back. I've thought it all over s'e them letters has been comin', an' I o' know but what we was all mist k in that young feller when he first cne sparkin' ye. He looks reel well-to-do. I took pertic'lar notice of his cles the day he come t' the door. It I guess 't wouldn't do no harm to b reel keerful. Like es not he's got a wife an' children a-ready; I heerd o'eech things before now."

iss Cynthia sighed. "Sit down, Aby," she said kindly. Then she was sint for a time, absent-mindedly ca-ressing the purring, fawning creature o her knees.

The letters are from James Blake," sl said, at last. "I meant to tell you. Yi are the only one left to care much wit happens to me. But it is not as y think, Abby. I have no thought o marrying."

Well, I'd like to know why not!" sipped Abby Whiton. "'F he's re-spctable an' well-o-do—an' he cert'-n doos look so. An' even ef he ain't g much prop'ty, 'tain't es if you ha'n't got a-plenty. I do' know why y shouldn't hev a home an' husban', s'e's other folks. An' goodness k ws the' ain't no pickin' an' choos-ir to be done in this 'ere town, with n as scarse es hen's teeth. It's pb'ly yer las' chance."

iss Cynthia was staring into the fi. "Abby," she said at last, "I've n er made any will. I must do it—s n. I can't think what to do with t money. I wish I could leave it to ho girls have good times while they a young, and want good times so m h." There was a passionate wail in er low voice.

bby Whiton rose up with a smoth-ed ejaculation of wrath. "Anybody'd thk you was a full hundred years ol to hear you a-goin on!" she ex-clmed. "An' you a-growin' younger an better-lookin' 'an I've seed you in yrs. Not that I mean to flatter yer vaity a mite. A flatterin' tongue 's an'bomination to the Lord, an' you fr or the Breyfogles too clost to be r lly han'some. But I'll say this m h; you hev changed, an' not fer th worse. My! you c'd 'a' knocked me d n with a feather the day I come h e, an' seen you a-standin' there in th blue dress. I d'clare to goodness I ought I'd seen a ghost!"

iss Cynthia's face wore a piteous lite smile. "Oh, Abby," she breathed, "(you say your prayers?"

Fer the lan's sake!" Miss Whiton eyd her mistress with horrified in-cdulity. "I sh'd say I did. I say 'em ju es reg'lar es I scrub the kitchen flr. Course I say 'em! Did you s'pse I'd fallen from grace? Well, I ain't."

Do—you—ever—pray—for—me?"

Well, I just guess I do! Cert'nly, I do, Miss Cynthy. I hope I know my dcty. I've remembered you 'fore the t'one of grace sence you was a baby. Th you was turned fifteen, I ast the Lrd to make you a good, 'bedient child, an' you cert'nly did mind me w'en you come in the kitchen. Then I ook to intercedin' 'at you mightn't bekerried away with foolishness an' th pride o' the world. 'Bout that time ye kind of took a notion of fixin' yer hir all perky an' curly, an' I caught ye-a-lookin' in the glass too frequent. I ep' that up pretty constant till you ws twenty past, an' Jim Blake was on of the way. Of late years I've b'en westlin' in prayer to hev you kep' in th strait an' narrer way tell you g through this 'ere vale of tears an' sie to heaven. I'm sure the' can't noody ast no more 'an that fer no-bdy!"

Miss Cynthia pushed the big cat frm her knees. Her face had grown suddenly pale and pinched. "Please don't pray that prayer for me any more!" she begged tremulously. "Don't, Abby! Please don't! I don't want to go to heaven for a long, long time. You don't want I should; do you, Abby?"

"You don't s'pose I'm reelly yearnin' fer another fun'ral, do ye?" demanded Abby, with a grim humor which only partly concealed her real emotions. "I ain't the soft-soap kind, an' never was, but I guess you c'n make out what I think 'bout you without me a-tellin' ye."

Abby's unquestioning faith in the potency of her petitions did not appeal to Miss Cynthia's sense of humor. She raised wistful, imploring eyes to the puckered old face. "I wish," she began, slowly and with long pauses, "that you would pray to have me live a long time. I want—to—to live. And please don't put in anything about this vale of tears, when you pray for me. I don't want to cry any more, Abby. Seems to me I've hardly ever laughed. I should like to laugh—a good deal, and—and be happy. People do, you know—good people. It isn't wicked to be happy; do you think it is, Abby?"

"Mebbe I've be'n a-doin' wrong by her all these years without thinkin' a word about it!" muttered Abby, in the privacy of her kitchen pantry. "Prayers is awful powerful things. Most all of mine hes b'en answered, first an' last."

Then she sank on her knees beside the flour-barrel and closed her eyes.

"Oh, Lord!" she petitioned devoutly, "I don' know es I understan' what Miss Cynthy 'd ought to hev as well es I thought I done. I reelly ain't s'sure es I was once what's good fer her. She's cert'nly got some queer notion er other in her head 'at I can't make out. But, oh Lord, I do want she should be happy—jest es happy es she kin be. Jest let her git her fill of livin'—good, happy, healthy livin'! Amen!"

She presently heard her mistress laugh, a little low laugh of pure enjoyment; and peeping in at a crack of the door, she beheld her deep in the perusal of the letter. "That soun's more like it," said Abby Whiton to herself, with real satisfaction. "Jim Blake was bound an' determined to see the fun in ev'rythin'. I remember, always a-laughin' an' carryin' on. That was one reason the folks couldn't abide him. Mis' Day ust to say he was light-minded an' triflin, an' Gran'-ma Breyfogle, she hadn't no airthly use fer anybody without prop'ty."

Miss Cynthia had laughed more than once over James Blake's thick letters. She had cried, too—cold, reluctant drops, which left her eyes tired and smarting.

"Just to prove to you that I haven't really forgotten," he said, in his first letter," and to make a good, square foundation for what I hope will come afterward, I'm going to tell you of everything we did fifteen years ago. If I get things mixed, you must set me right."

There had followed curiously boyish accounts of the old school days, when he had carried her books for her to a certain corner, beyond which the sharp eyes in the windows of the Breyfogle house made it unsafe to go.

"There was a Sunday School picnic in Bentley's grove one year (he wrote) and, wonder of wonders, you were allowed to come to it with your teacher. A good old soul was Mrs. Turner. What has become of her; do you know? You wore a thin black dress, with round pink spots all over it, and a straw hat with blue ribbons."

Miss Cynthia shook her head, with a little laugh. "I wore a black muslin with little white briar roses running all over it," she said, and sighed.

Then she turned again to the letter. "We sat in the edge of the meadow

CONTINUED ON PAGE 556

5% Without Risk

Our investors' fees not interest; those who wish to speculate with their money, not to be content to receive a fair return [illegible] Savings Bank [illegible] investments liked.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS and LOAN CO.

[illegible] reputation for [illegible] and prompt dealing [illegible] [illegible] of its kind, the [illegible], established 12 years, [illegible] under the supervision of the New York Banking Department, by whom it is examined each year.

Our Patrons are Protected

By assets amounting to almost two million dollars. Our loans are made upon the best class of New York and Suburban Real Estate—to home buyers, who pay us interest and part of the principal each month, which is in turn reinvested.

WE PAY 5% PER YEAR ON YOUR SAVINGS

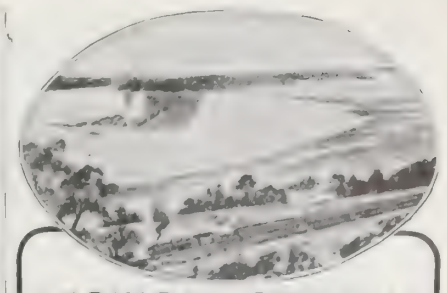
which best earnings for every day in our care. Your money is always subject to your control if required for other purposes. START NOW. Earnings begin as soon as your money is received, a check mailed you back, semi-annually, or compounded, if desired.

Our clients include many prominent clergymen, professional and business men in every State of the Union—some, doubtless, in your locality—to whom we are privileged to refer you. They heartily endorse our methods.

Assets, ... $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, $150,000
Write for Particulars

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS and LOAN CO.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, N. Y. City

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM



MICHIGAN CENTRAL
"The Niagara Falls Route"

Summer Vacation Tours to the Thousand Islands, St. Lawrence River, Adirondacks, Catskills, Hudson River, White Mountains, Forests and Lakes of Maine, New England, Sea Coast, etc., with full information regarding routes and rates.

Mackinac Island and other Michigan Resorts, Sault Ste. Marie, Petoskey, Harbor Springs, Charlevoix, the Au Sable River, etc.

Topinabee, on Mullet Lake in Northern Michigan. A delightful spot for the summer.

The above booklets, beautifully illustrated, sent on receipt of six cents postage.

O. W. RUGGLES, G. P. & T. A., Michigan Central Railroad Co., Chicago, Ill.

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

Four Little Bee Books FREE
All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundredfold. Different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.
A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio

WING PIANOS

ARE SOLD DIRECT FROM THE FACTORY, AND IN NO OTHER WAY

You SAVE from $75.00 to $200.00

When you buy a Wing Piano, you buy at wholesale. You pay the actual cost of making it with only our wholesale profit added. When you buy a piano, as many still do—at retail—you pay the retail dealer's store rent and other expenses. You pay his profit and the commission or salary of the agents or salesmen he employs—all these on top of what the dealer himself has to pay to the manufacturer. The retail profit on a piano is from $75 to $200. Isn't this worth saving?

SENT ON TRIAL

Anywhere WE PAY FREIGHT No Money in Advance

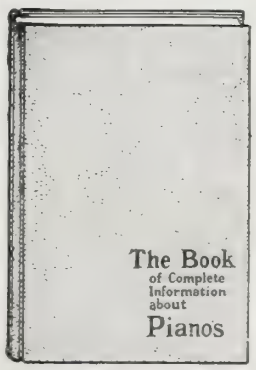
We will place a Wing Piano in any home in the United States on trial, without asking for any advance payment or deposit. We pay the freight and all other charges in advance. There is nothing to be paid either before the piano is sent or when it is received. If the piano is not satisfactory after 20 days' trial in your home, we take it back entirely at our expense. You pay us nothing, and are under no more obligation to keep the piano than if you were examining it at our factory. There can be absolutely no risk or expense to you.

Do not imagine that it is impossible for us to do as we say. Our system is so perfect that we can without any trouble deliver a piano in the smallest town in any part of the United States just as easily as we can in New York City, and with absolutely no trouble or annoyance to you, and without anything being paid in advance or on arrival either for freight or any other expense. We take old pianos and organs in exchange. A guarantee for 12 years against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material is given with every Wing Piano.

SMALL, EASY MONTHLY PAYMENTS

In 37 years over 40,000 Wing Pianos have been manufactured and sold. They are recommended by seven governors of States, by musical colleges and schools, by prominent orchestra leaders, music teachers and musicians. Thousands of these pianos are in your own State, some of them undoubtedly in your very neighborhood. Our catalogue contains names and addresses.

Mandolin, Guitar, Harp, Zither, Banjo The tones of any or all of these instruments may be reproduced perfectly by any ordinary player on the piano by means of our Instrumental Attachment. This improvement is patented by us and cannot be had in any other piano. WING ORGANS are made with the same care and sold in the same way as Wing Pianos. Separate organ catalogue sent on request.



You Need This Book

If You Intend to Buy a Piano—No Matter What Make

A book—not a catalogue—that gives you all the information possessed by experts. It tells about the different materials used in the different parts of a piano; the way the different parts are put together, what causes pianos to get out of order, and in fact is a complete encyclopedia. It makes the selection of a piano easy. If read carefully, it will make you a judge of tone, action, workmanship and finish. It tells you how to test a piano and how to tell good from bad. It is absolutely the only book of its kind ever published. It contains 156 large pages and hundreds of illustrations, all devoted to piano construction. Its name is "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos." We send it free to anyone wishing to buy a piano. All you have to do is to send us your name and address.

SEND A POSTAL TO-DAY while you think of it, just giving your name and address, or send us the attached coupon and the valuable book of information, also full particulars about the WING PIANO, with prices, terms of payment, etc., will be sent to you promptly by mail.

WING & SON, 352-364 W. 13th St., New York
1868——37th Year——1905

Cut or tear out this coupon and mail to us, after writing your name and address at bottom. We will promptly mail book and other information.

WING & SON
352-364 W. 13th Street, New York

Send to the above address Book of Complete Information about Pianos, also particulars and terms of payment on Wing Pianos.

_____

_____

_____

THE WORSTED
FLEISHER'S
BEST YARNS

The time spent in knitting and crocheting is both pleasant and profitable. Machine-made garments do not equal those knitted or crocheted by hand, in softness, beauty, and distinctive elegance—when the best yarns are employed.

The "Fleisher" Yarns combine all the excellent qualities that are required—evenness, elasticity and loftiness. The colors are bright and lasting.

If you use The "Fleisher" Yarns you can be sure that the working will be a pleasure and the finished result satisfactory.

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

Your dealer should carry them.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL" mailed for four tickets from The "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B," PHILADELPHIA

$ $ $ 5% $ $ $

5% interest

is the keystone which completes the arch of money-saving. Every dollar you save can be safely invested so that it brings compounded semi-annually, for the exact time your money is here.

5% interest

We have been in business for 11 years and loan money only on improved real estate. No speculation or risk. The borrower pays us back part of the principal each month in addition to the interest, and this money is then invested in similar loans.

Your money is absolutely safe and always at your command: you can withdraw it without advance notice.

Write for booklet about this safe and profitable investment.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
Dept. E, Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

The Wonderful new self-heating

Thermalite Bag

Looks like the ordinary hot water bag, but is far superior in every way. The "Thermalite" Bag No. 5 will give heat at a uniform temperature (about 125° F.) for 5 hours. It stores heat for future use—turn the heat on any time you wish, day or night. Lasts a lifetime. No refilling or renewal of contents. No danger. Imparts a refreshing fragrance. Guaranteed. Price $2.50. Money back if not satisfactory. We send prepaid on receipt of price if druggist cannot supply you. Descriptive book free.

THE THERMALITE CO., 164 Elm Street, New York, U. S. A

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 549

and told each other's fortunes with daisies, and you stuck my hatband full of them. I was ashamed of the hat because it was old and shabby. I was often ashamed of my clothes in those days. But you were always as fresh and neat as a daisy that had opened over night.

"Once I wrote some verses about you, and that old cat of an Abby Whiton found them and gave them to your mother. I see old Abby is with you yet, and looking more vinegary and nipped than ever. She didn't know me when I called; but I remembered her all right."

There was not a word in these first letters about the writer's present life, and Miss Cynthia wondered at it shyly. They were written from a western city, on big square sheets of paper which breathed a delicate aroma of fine tobacco, so suggestively masculine that Miss Cynthia shut the letters carefully into her bureau drawer when she undressed at night.

She spoiled many sheets of her own small, violet-tinted paper before she managed to say what she had vaguely determined upon before the arrival of the first letter.

"Friend James: (she wrote, in her fine, pointed hand) I am very much obliged to you for writing to me. It has seemed almost like being young again to read your letters. I never knew letters could be like that. But I don't want you should write to me any more. Once I was very unkind to you, and I am sorry, as I told you. I am trying to be kind now, so I must say, please don't write to me again. And don't remember the old days, except to laugh at them, as you did before."

She signed her name stiffly, as to a business letter. Then she tried hard not to expect an answer. When one came, very promptly, she was so glad she cried. Afterward she shut the letter, unread, into her bureau drawer for a whole day.

"I have no right to let him love me again," she told herself passionately. "It would be more cruel than it was before, and more deceitful. But oh, I can't tell him—I can't!"

It had occurred to her more than once that she might go to Boston and consult the doctor. "If I should be getting better!" she thought, with a strangling heart-throb. "But—if I am really worse and he should tell me so right out, the way he did before, I couldn't bear it—now."

By slow degrees the autumn merged into winter. Before Thanksgiving day the streets of Innisfield were piled high with snow, and jangling sleighs passed back and forth before the old Breyfogle house on Maple Street.

Abby Whiton petitioned the Lord night and morning, and at odd moments behind the pantry door, and down in the vegetable cellar, and sometimes with merely the thin shelter of her checked gingham apron between her closed eyes and the world. And the burden of all these fervent prayers was for Miss Cynthia, that she might "live out her days, oh Lord! an' be happy, an' laugh more'n she does!"

CHAPTER XVII.

DEACON SCRIMGER stood on the bleak piazza of the parsonage and laid hold upon the handle of the door-bell with an energy which sent a jangling peal through the silent house. It was Saturday morning, and the hour was half past ten. Little Mrs. Pettibone came at once to the door; she looked worried and anxious as she admitted the old man into the narrow, sparsely furnished hall.

"I s'pose the dominie 's to hum," began the deacon, blowing his nose a resounding blast, as he deposited his shabby old hat on the hall table. "My! the pas'nage feels mighty warm an' comf'table this mornin'. The' 's very few folks, Mis' Pettibone, 'at c'n afford to burn so much fuel in these 'ere hard times. It must cost the pastor a good deal, I sh'd say."

"We are obliged to keep the house warm on account of Mr. Pettibone's weak throat," the minister's wife made haste to explain. "We try to economize in other ways," she added apologetically.

"H—m!" commented Deacon Scrimger, with an air of cautious reserve. "I see you git time to fuss with houseplants," he went on, rolling his rheumy eyes about the little sitting-room. "I hope the Lord's business don't suffer none on account of 'em. A paster's wife has a great r'sponsibility a-restin' on her a great r'sponsibility. You'd ought to realize that, Mis' Pettibone."

"I try to," murmured the little woman, with becoming meekness.

"Folks is bound to look up to ye fer an example," continued the deacon. "An' they'd ought to find ye with yer lamp always trimmed an' burnin'. My wife was a-tellin' me this mornin' that you hadn't called to see her fer quite a spell. N'glectin' past'ral visitation 's a turrible mistake fer a minister's wife, Mis' Pettibone; you'd ought to be a-goin' to an' fro on the walls of Zion purty constant. The fact is, this 'ere community is gettin' alarmin'ly indifferent to holy things. Sev'ral prom'nent members of the congregation hes spoke to me 'bout it of late. One contrib'ter to the paster's salary says to me, 'The sermons don't seem to be a-takin' holt, somehow,' he says. 'The' ain't 'nough sound doctrine in 'em,' he says."

The deacon paused to lace his horny fingers comfortably across the pit of his stomach. "I've be'n noticin' fer some time back 'at sinners is 'lowed to feel too easy in their lost condishun. What we reelly need in this 'ere commun'ty is a sound revival of religion; an' I've come 'round this mornin' cal'latin' to talk it over with the paster. I understan' the Methodists is plannin' to git one up. I tell ye, they've got a man 'at 's up an' a-doin'!"

Two pink spots had appeared in Mrs. Pettibone's cheeks, her little hands were folded tightly in her lap. "Could you—would you mind— waiting till—till some other time to talk this over with Mr. Pettibone?" she asked, with a dogged timidity of manner. "Mr. Pettibone is so very busy with his sermon this morning; I told him I wouldn't disturb him. If you would excuse him till Monday, perhaps."

Deacon Scrimger's mouth had screwed itself into a puckered knot during the progress of this speech, his eyes had narrowed into crafty slits. "What's the paster be'n a-doin' with his time all the week till now?" he demanded sharply. "Seems 's 'o as long's he's had nothin' else to occ'py his time sence the Sabbath 'at his sermon 'd ought to be pretty nigh drawed to a close come Sat'day. As fer somethin' important, what's more important 'an lost souls? I guess I'll jes' step right int' the study, Miss' Pettibone, an' put that question to the paster; mebbe it'll give his sermon the snap that's be'n a-wantin' in em lately."

Mr. Pettibone laid down his pen with a patient sigh as the loud creak of his study door apprised him of the dreaded interruption. He was a pale, scholarly-looking man, with a fine, grave face, lined with the severe doctrines of his creed, and the manifold perplexities incident to his pastoral charge in Innisfield. He greeted Deacon Scrimger with a cordial handclasp, which conveyed a hint of the prayer for fresh supplies of Christian charity which he had promptly put up at sight of the old man's long-drawn face.

TO BE CONTINUED

DEMAND FACTS

About What You Eat.

When it comes to food, dema to know the facts about what goes int our stomach.

Not only that it is pure, but th you are not deceived in the description its contents and condition. Some ked breakfast foods that have thus far led, are now being advertised in close imi ion of the Grape-Nuts advertising, th ing in that way to finally make a succ s of the failure.

But false statements of the mer of human food will never on earth bu up a business. These flaked foods a not pre-digested. They are not fully c ked and the starch in them is starch sti and has not been turned to sugar as clai d.

Chemical analysis tells the truth nd the analysis of the famous chemi of the world show Grape-Nuts the onl pre-pared breakfast food in which the s ch part of the wheat and barley has en transformed into sugar and the re ready for immediate digestion. W is this true? All the thin rolled flake ds are made by soaking the grains of eat or oats in water, then rolling, drying nd packing. These operations do not ok or pre-digest the starch.

Contrasted with this pretense, ob ve the care, method and skill in m ng Grape-Nuts.

The barley is soaked about one hu ed hours, then it is slowly warmed for me days and sprouted, the diastase ng developed and part of the starch t ed to sugar (and later on all of it), the he grains are baked and the sprouts str ed off. Then comes grinding, sifting nd mixing with the creamy colored ur made from white and maccaroni w at. This mixture must be skilfully mad in right proportions. This blended ur contains just the ingredients dema ed by nature to rebuild the soft gray b- stance in the nerve centers and brain ut how to make the food easy to digest, at was the question.

It certainly would not do to mi in drugs, for there is a certain failure re to come to the person depending on drugs to digest food. They may do a temporary expedient, but pure food ad digestible food is the only final resort d safe way. So to change the remai ng starch part and prepare the other elem ts in this blended flour, it is made up go massive loaves like bread, the in de being dark cream color and quite st y to the touch. These loaves are sliced d again go through long cooking at cer n temperatures. Then the rock-hard s es are each one carefully inspected d ground ready for packing and use, ha g gone through 10 or 12 hours in the diffe nt operations.

When finished, each little granule ll show a sparkling substance on its surf . A magnifying glass will bring it t clearer and develop little pieces of p dextrose sugar, not put on "or pou d over" (as the head of a large Sanitar n once stated in his paper), thus expos g his appalling ignorance of food proces s) but this sugar exudes from the interio t each as the starch is slowly turned o sugar in the process of manufacture. Th kind of sugar is exactly like what is fo d in the human intestines, provided e starch of the grains, potatoes, bread, r cake, etc., etc., has been perfectly diges t But many are weak in that form f digestion and yet need the starches, p Grape-Nuts supplies them pre-diges d and ready to go quickly into the blood

Visitors are shown freely through works and can follow the steps of mak Grape-Nuts from the grain to the finish product. The proportions of differ t kinds of flour, and the temperatures not disclosed, and it seems impossible others to steal these secrets of the mak But purity, cleanliness and skill are sho in every corner of the immense pure fo factories. People who care for resu from choicely selected food, those w want the food to rebuild the soft g substance in brain and nerves that g the go, the vigor, the life, will understa why the imitators who try to copy announcements about Grape-Nuts ha failed in the past.

There's a reason for Grape-Nuts an profound one.

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

ellin's Food is endorsed by the phy-cians. Hundreds of doctors are ing Mellin's Food in their own fam-es for their own children. If Mel-
's Food is good for the doctor's baby ought to be good for your baby.
et us know if you would like to try ellin's Food and we will send you a mple bottle free of charge.

ellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' od, which received the Grand Prize, e highest award of the Louisiana Pur-ase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. High-than a gold medal.

ELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

NATURO
Ten Centuries of Physic

Mankind endured the mistaken suffering of physic for over 1,000 years before Twentieth-Century science discovered the true inwardness of this vital matter and produced NATURO the closet with the slant, the only sort of construction that is actually comfortable, cleanly, healthful.

Eminent physicians are pronounced in their praise of Naturo. Progressive architects are unanimous in specifying it.
You owe it to yourself to understand this subject. Booklet F, fully illustrated, free on request.
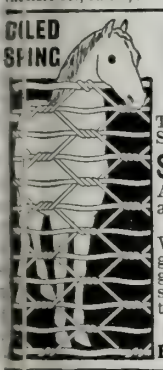
The Naturo Co., Salem, N. J., U. S. A.

COILED SPRING


FENCE
That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.
SOLD DIRECT TO YOU
At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.
Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.
KITSELMAN BROTHERS,
Box 297, Muncie Indiana.

Boys' Names Wanted
We want names of bright boys between 12 and 20. We want to get them interested in our illustrated magazine for boys, which has a circulation of over 150,000. Every issue contains Fascinating Boy Stories, handsome illustrations, departments of Amateur Photography, Stamps, Coins, Curios, Puzzles, Games, Jokes, Physical Culture, etc., and each month awards a large number of valuable prizes. If you are not a subscriber and will send us five boys' names and addresses and five 2-cent stamps, or 10 cents in silver, we will enter you as a subscriber fully paid for 6 months in advance.
STAR MONTHLY, 440 Hunter St., Oak Park, Ills.

OMOSA BEST GROWN COFFEE
BIG INCOMES
$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK
for getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289. 31-33 Vesey St., New York

LAWN FENCE
Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address
COILED SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D Winchester, Ind.

Government Irrigation
The U.S. Government will construct an Irrigation System in Klamath County, Oregon, embracing about 300,000 acres. This will open rich lands for homes. Full and reliable information sent on receipt of 50c. by W. S. Welch, Principal Public Schools, Klamath Falls, Ore.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

ARE YOU DEAF?
We have 25 kinds of Instruments to Assist Hearing. Sent on approval. Write for Catalogue.
W. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia

$5.80 A DAY is the average salary made by agents selling our COOKER and line of KITCHEN SPECIALTIES. Free samples. Write at once.
H. ROBINSON, 899 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, Ohio

KRINOGALON is better, purer, more pleasant than soap for your toilet, but not dearer. Try it. Made by the MERSEY MFG. CO., Jersey City, N. J. Since 1890.

AGENTS OUTFIT FREE. Easysweep Dust Pan. Handled with foot; dirt emptied without litter. Large Catalog very latest household articles; rapid sellers. Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. 6, Bath, N.Y.

The Happy Singer

HE just kept on a-singin' when the shadows hid the sky;
"Bright lamps a-shinin' in the windows up on high;
Love will kiss the lilies in the gardens by-an'-by,
An' we'll rest in the beauty of the mornin'!"

Had his share of sorrow; but with faith forever strong
He saw, amid the red thorns, all the sweetest roses throng;
Evermore the music of that loved, world-reaching song:
"We'll rest in the beauty of the mornin'!"

O, it charmed away their sorrows in the valley of despair-
The crosses that were bitter up Life's Calvary to bear;
And the sweetest benedictions touched the singin' spirit there,
Resting in the beauty of the mornin'.

FRANK L. STANTON.

A TEST FOR A KING

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

HEZEKIAH was a good king. The son of the wicked Ahaz, he, probably through his intercourse with the young prophet Isaiah, had in the very beginning of his reign, re-established the public worship of Jehovah, and celebrated such a passover as had not been since the time of King Solomon. He destroyed idolatry out of Judah, restored the priesthood and the office of the Levites, so that again the truth of God in his Word was taught throughout the land, and the tithes again paid for their maintenance. But in those days, as in these, doing is easier than being, and it is very rare when one is much in the active service of the Lord that some sense of self-importance does not creep in. Therefore, God, in mercy, puts his children to the proof.

"After these things. and this faithfulness." God put Hezekiah into the furnace, not to punish, but to purify. Sennacherib, king of Assyria, was permitted by God to enter Judah, and to come up against the fenced cities, thinking to win them for himself. What had he done to merit this treatment? an unthinking man, ignorant of the ways of God, and of his purposes for his children, might say. It was just because of the faithfulness of Hezekiah that God was faithful to him: not having learned to understand what the Psalmist wrote: "I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that thou in very faithfulness hast afflicted me" (Psalm 119 : 75). Before God can really dwell in us by his Holy Spirit we must have a contrite and humble spirit" (Isa. 57 : 15), "a broken and a contrite heart" (Ps. 51: 17). And it was in order to bring this about, and to prove both Hezekiah the king and also his people whom he had led into the way of righteousness, that God suffered Sennacherib's invasion.

What was the first impulse of this king when the enemy came up against him? He had restored the public worship of Jehovah; would he in his trouble instinctively turn to his God? "When Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that he was purposed to fight against Jerusalem, he took counsel" — not with God, as Jehoshaphat had done in similar circumstances (II. Chron. 20 3-22)—but "with his princes and mighty men!" What a proof that the most perfect outward activity in the service of God is not a proof that we are really counting upon him! Our real faith in God only comes out when we are closely tested. Therefore the trial of our faith . . . is much more precious than gold that perisheth (I. Peter 1 : 7). Hezekiah took counsel then with men, and "they did help him." Their tactics were to cut off the water supply of the invading army. This was not all; the king strengthened himself, and built up all the wall that was broken down, and raised it up to the towers, built another wall without, repaired Millo, the city of David, made weapons and shields in abundance, and set captains of war over the people.

In all this the king acted just as though the coming struggle was to be between Sennacherib and him, and as though it were his business, not God's. But when he spoke to the people, he spoke as a man of faith. He gathered together the captains of war, and spake to their heart, saying, "Be strong and courageous, be not afraid nor dismayed, for the king or Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him; with him is an arm of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God, to help us, and to fight our battles."

Hezekiah was a true believer, but he had not yet learned so to believe in God as to leave things in his hands without himself doing something; and thus, with all his precious service to the Lord, he did not make room for him so to work that no hand but his own right hand might be recognized in the defeat of his enemies. Things must go farther, and Hezekiah must be brought to extremities before he would cast himself in helplessness upon his God.

The Bible in the Battlefield

Rev. H. Loomis, agent of the American Bible Society in Japan, sends us the following translation of a letter received from a soldier of the Japanese army, written on the field shortly after the great battle at Moukden:

NEAR MOUKDEN, April 25th.

I have read through the Gospel of Mark, which was given me by your Society, and for which I thank you very much. I am very fond of the Bible, and, availing myself of leisure hours, I read it over and over again. Since my landing in Korea last year, I have participated in many great battles. After fighting the battles of Liuyang and Shaha, I was assigned to the Port Arthur besieging army, and fought the famous battle of Shojuzan and 203-Metre Hill. After this, I was again sent back to my own regiment, to fight the battles of Mouk den and Talien. I am still uninjured through all these great battles. This, I think, is entirely due to help from Heaven. From now on I shall study the Bible more earnestly, and try to obey its teachings.

It is still far from the end of the war, and we will have to fight a great many more battles. I have had no chance so far to distinguish myself by my valor, but some day I believe I will.

K. TAKUKAWA.

Mr. Loomis, in a personal note, says:

The interest of the sick and wounded soldiers in Christianity is truly wonderful. A few days ago I visited the Toyama hospital in Tokio, and had an audience of a thousand eager listeners to an address on the Bible and Christianity. At the close, the men rushed to the front and seized the Gospels and tracts as fast as we could give them out. Our supply was soon exhausted.

The Emperor and Empress have just subscribed the sum of 10,000 yen ($5,000) for the work of the Y.M.C.A. This is a most significant event, and evidence of the esteem in which representatives of that work are held.

A WORKING BRAIN
Can Be Made Successful on Right Food

A busy man in one of America's largest watch factories tells how by change of food he gained a clear brain and steady nerves and averted a mental and physical breakdown. He says:

"I was accustomed all my life to the ordinary diet of the average table. I thought that meat, potatoes, and other vegetables and fruit were necessary, and that tea, coffee and pastry in moderate quantities were not injurious.

"But I found, in course of time, that my dietary was affecting my health seriously. For four years I continued to run down. In time my nerves became seriously affected, they seemed constantly keyed up to the highest tension, and I became subject to the most violent bilious attacks which used to leave me in a weak and nervous condition for several days. The climax seemed to have been reached a few years ago, when I found myself about as near a physical wreck as a man could well be, and live. Physicians, tonics and other medicines, visits to the country, etc., etc., were of no avail.

"In sheer desperation I concluded, a few months ago, to see what effect a diet of Grape-Nuts food would have. I had often heard of it, but had little hope it would help me. I at once cut out all the heavy dishes with the tea and coffee that I had always used and began to eat Grape-Nuts with cream and a pinch of salt. Afterwards, I added fruit, with occasionally an egg beaten up in milk, and entire wheat bread. This has been practically my diet for more than two months.

"I found that with the new diet I gained complete relief almost immediately from all the distress that used to follow every meal, my bilious condition was speedily regulated and relieved, my nerves have grown healthy and steady—in short, my run down constitution has been reconstructed and built up. As to the effect upon my mental powers, I have only to point to the fact that I have recently been placed in a responsible position in our establishment where complete concentration of mind is required to deal with complicated records and reports, and that I have been enabled to keep my accounts absolutely correct, which my numerous predecessors uniformly failed to do.

"I think these things speak volumes in favor of Grape-Nuts food as a nerve and brain builder. I ascribe all my improvement, mental and physical, the fact that I am possessed of steadier nerves, a clearer brain, a fine appetite, and have gained healthily in weight, to the cutting out of heavy food and the systematic use of Grape-Nuts food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Triple Motion
WHITE MOUNTAIN
Ice Cream Freezer

The White Mountain is the easiest and quickest freezing apparatus ever invented. With this famous freezer you can make an unlimited variety of frozen desserts at home easily, quickly and at trifling cost. The only freezer made with the wonderful triple motion.

"Frozen Dainties" FREE.
Our beautiful book of 50 receipts, new this year from cover to cover sent on request. Write for it to-day

WHITE MOUNTAIN FREEZER CO.
Dept. A,
Nashua, N. H.

HOW TO BECOME A NURSE

WE have equipped thousands of earnest women now in successful practice, endorsed by physicians and patients, and earning $12 to $30 weekly. We teach this profession by correspondence.

An interesting booklet that will make clear to you the aims and methods which have made the Chautauqua School pre-eminent in its field will be gladly mailed at your request.

THE CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING,
341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

MEN AND WOMEN AGENTS
You can make a STEADY AND BIG income, selling

IDEAL COMBINATION COOKERS BAKERS
The season is now on—every housekeeper buys, and every sale means to you a Profit That Is Worth While. Ideal Cookers are widely advertised. Thousands in use. Cooks an entire meal over one burner of any stove. Cuts cost of fuel in half. Some of our agents sell a whole carload a season. General, State and County Agents given exclusive territory and a most liberal Money Making Offer. No capital required. Write to-day for our 48-page catalogue and full particulars.
Toledo Cooker Co., Desk H, Toledo, O.

BICYCLES ON TRIAL
for 10 days. We ship on approval to anyone without a cent deposit. Finest guaranteed 1905 Models with Coaster-Brakes & Puncture-Proof Tires, $10 to $24
1903 & 1904 Models of best makes..... $7 to $12
500 Second-Hand Wheels All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8
RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town at good pay. Write at once for Special Offer on sample bicycle.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H-71 CHICAGO

GINSENG
Culture is the "Only Way" to make big money on little capital. Pays 500 per cent profit in 4 years. One-quarter acre today is worth $10,000, and yields more than a 25 acre farm. No other safe business will do this. Large returns from small gardens. I started 5 years ago. Sales now exceed $12,500. I tell you how to do as well for 5 cents, and help you to succeed. Write to-day.
T. H. SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Ave., Louisville, Ky.

GINSENG
Detailed advice and special instructions regarding its culture. It will pay you to investigate our practical and common sense methods. We supply choicest American Roots and Seeds, at most reasonable prices, help you towards successful cultivation, and pay you highest market price for your Dry Roots. Send stamp for illustrated booklet "E."
NORTH AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Station C, Louisville, Ky.

Corns Little but troublesome. A little box of A-CORN SALVE removes them. No knife, no poison, no danger. Easy, quick, sure. 15c at your druggist's or by mail.
Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

Men, Women and Children all healthy and happy and all drinking Coca-Cola WHY?

DRINK Coca-Cola

CIOUS & REFRESHING

Good all way do

DRINK Coca-Cola

Because of its Delightful Flavor and BENEFICIAL Results

1.50 A YEAR 5c. A COPY
ublished 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK ≡ MAGAZINE NUMBER ≡ JUNE 28, 1905

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

VOL. 28—NO. 26
Offices: Bible House, N. Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

"THE FLOWERY FIELDS OF JUNE"

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

Mrs. S. E. C., Trimble, O. In our Sunday School, we have had a difference of opinion as to what is meant by sealing Christ's tomb? Please enlighten us.

If a door or entrance had to be sealed, it was customary to first fasten it with some band or ligament (leather, or iron), then cover the fastening with clay and stamp the latter with the seal of some high official, which none without proper authority would dare to break, under penalty of the law. Whether the seal placed on the tomb was Roman or Jewish, is uncertain.

R. G. B., Strassburg, N. W. T., Canada. Can you tell me what scriptural authority we have for thinking of our Lord as an "Elder Brother?"

The title, though it does not occur literally in Scripture, would seem to be justified by Col. 1: 15, and Romans 8: 29.

H. S. D., Mich. City, Ind. Does Matt. 5: 44 mean individuals or a persecuted church or sect? I think it would be harder for an individual than it would be for a company.

It can be applied to men and women individually or collectively, or even to nations and races. It is the basis of the great law of kindness, sympathy and brotherly feeling, which the Saviour taught.

A. E. H., Denver, Colo. Where in the Bible can I find that it is wrong to take one's own life?

It is contrary to the whole spirit and teaching of Christianity. Even from the earliest times it was regarded as a temptation from the Evil One. Remember Job's terrible temptation in his sickness and how he was enabled at last to overcome it, and await God's good time in all things (see Job, chaps. 14 and 42). Remember also Paul's advice to the jailer (Acts 16: 28). This expresses the abhorrence which the suggestion of suicide excited among the early Christians. Any temptation of this nature is only to be met by taking the whole trouble to the Lord, and asking him to give strength to bear it and to resist the tempter.

Mrs. Joseph H., Glens Falls, N.Y., sends us this kind word of encouragement:

For a paper that is wholly undenominational, I think I can safely claim, that to me, the reading of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is next to my Bible. I never yet have allowed any one to destroy one of them, and I have been a subscriber a good many years.

P. E. B., Fort Plain, N. Y. Why are rich landlords allowed to charge exorbitant rents for poor accommodations? 2. Why do not more wealthy Christians build better tenements, and charge reasonable rates? 3. Why do not more of the poor come out in "God's country" where they can have pure air and water free, also plenty of work if desired, and plenty of room for all?

1. It is a mistake to think that all landlords are grasping. Taxes, repairs, insurance, water rates and other burdens bear heavily on city property, and if loss through tenants be added, you can understand why rents are abnormally high in New York. 2. The tenements of to-day are incomparably superior to those of twenty or even ten years ago, and are improving all the time. "Model tenements" at cheap rates would be an excellent experiment. 3. The chief trouble is with our immigration laws, which result in keeping a very great proportion of our newcomers in New York instead of distributing them where most needed, as is done in Canada.

W. A. A., Douglasville, Ga. Who was author of the saying, "Thou art a man, therefore let nothing that concerns man be indifferent to thee?"

It is from an old Greek play, the Heautontimoroumenos, Act 1, Scene 1, and the exact language is: "I am a man, and nothing that concerns a man do I deem a matter of indifference to me." Cicero refers to the passage in De Officiis.

J. M. S., Kettle Falls, Wash. Is it right for a minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to sign a saloon license or any other papers granting the sale of liquors?

It is incomprehensible how any Christian pastor, if he knows anything whatsoever of the evil the liquor traffic is doing in the world, could be persuaded to put himself on record as favoring the saloon.

Reader, Mineola, N. Y. I read a story many years ago of a pastor who, intending to dispense with a hymn, started his congregation on "Old Hundred." Can you tell me where to find the incident?

It is related by Frederick Saunders, in his book, Evenings with the Sacred Poets. He tells how a Georgia pastor, having left his spectacles at home, arose and began to explain to his people. He said, "My eyes are dim, I cannot see," and the people at once repeated the words to the tune of "Old Hundred." (Those were the days of "lining out" the hymns). He was surprised, and when they had finished the line, he continued, "I meant but an apology." This was sung to the second line of the music. Greatly excited, the pastor cried out, "Forbear, I say, my sight is dim"—and this also was promptly and vociferously sung. Greatly mortified, he now exclaimed, "I never meant to read a hymn," and the audience, perceiving the point, sang no more. Of course no one vouches for the accuracy of the story.

C. R. P., Alabama, N. Y. I see in last week's MAIL-BAG that the national drink bill amounted to the fabulous sum of almost a billion and a-half of dollars. 1. To what use is this money put? 2. Is any of it used for religious or charitable purposes? 3. Or does it all go for the support of the General Government? 4. Is there such an institution in the United States as a home for the wives and orphan children of inebriates, and if so, where is it located?

The money goes to enrich the distiller, the brewer, the saloon-keeper and the intermediaries and subordinates engaged in the various branches of the drink traffic. A portion of it goes to the general Government and a portion to the State and local governments. In some cities, part of the excise moneys is applied to charities and benevolences. Part of these moneys goes into the general tax budget and helps to support almshouses, which are to a very large extent filled with those who have been impoverished through drink, directly or indirectly.

M. S. G., Vicksburg, Miss. What is the meaning of the word "reveling," in Galatians 5: 21? Where does the dance come in?

It means an orgie or any kind of wicked, riotous, disorderly, drunken, gluttonous indulgence. There is no mention of the dance in the passage quoted.

C. B. T., Augusta, Me. When was the Grand Army of the Republic organized, by whom, and who are eligible to membership?

The Grand Army was organized April 6, 1866, in Decatur, Ill., by Dr. B. F. Stephenson of Springfield, formerly surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry. Soldiers and sailors of the U. S. A., Navy or Marine Corps, who served between April 12, 1861, and April 9, 1865, in the Civil War, and were honorably discharged, and members of such State regiments as were then called into active service and subject to the authority of the United States' general officers, are eligible to membership.

Florence McC., Titusville, Pa. What is the signification of the term, "deemster," and what sort of an official position does a man bearing this title occupy?

"Deemster" was an officer formerly attached to the High Court of Justiciary in Scotland, who pronounced the doom, or sentence of death upon criminals. The name is now given in the Isle of Man to two judges who act as the chief justices of the island, one presiding over the north, the other over the south division.

Mary A., Waterbury, Conn. At what time, morning, evening or noon, does the day begin among the various nations?

At midnight, among the European nations and English-speaking races; at sunset, among the Jews in their "sacred year," and also at sunset as regards the feast days of the Roman Church. Most modern astronomers reckon a day from noon to noon, as the ancient Egyptians did. In olden times, the Greeks, Babylonians, Syrians and Persians held sunrise to be the day's beginning, and this still prevails in those lands wherever modern ideas have not penetrated.

Mrs. M. A. B., Canton, O. When was the Brooklyn Bridge begun and when completed?

The first bridge, known as the East River Bridge, connecting Manhattan and Brooklyn, was commenced January 3, 1870, and opened to traffic May 24, 1[8]83.

R. G. A., Germantown, Pa. Who was Apollonius, and what were the principal events of his career?

He was a Greek, a native of Tyana in Cappadocia, and was born about two years before the commencement of the Christian era. Two hundred years later, Flavius Philostratus, a noted Greek author, wrote his biography at the request of Julia, the wife of the Emperor Septimius Severus. The book is full of supernatural incidents, and attributes to Apollonius so many miraculous and wonderful deeds, that the modern reader would be very apt to discard the whole as fabulous. When Apollonius was born, Jove sent a thunderbolt from Olympus to announce the event. He lived exclusively on fruits. He never married. He kept silence once for five whole years. He had dreams and visions. He checked the plague, cast out evil spirits, restored the dead, made wonderful predictions which came true; tamed a lion, and sent it around Egypt bedecked in garlands; made even the trees salute him by bowing their heads as he passed, and could transport himself to distant places in an instant. When he was a very old man, he entered the temple of Minerva at Lindus, and was never seen again. This story led to the assertion that he had been translated. So great has his history been clouded with myth and fable, that it is impossible at this late day to distinguish the true facts concerning his life and works.

GOING TO CHURCH IN NORWAY

Norway's western coast line is a succession of rocky masses, fringed with islands, with here and there an excellent harbor. There are few good-sized rivers, but many streams. The fjords or inlets are a characteristic feature of the scenery. It is a common occurrence to see long, canoe-like boats, pulled by several rowers, and loaded with villagers in their Sunday "best," on the way to the parish church, a few miles across the fjord. It is a very pleasant and agreeable sight to watch them and to listen to their singing, the fresh, strong voices keeping time with the oarsmen.

Miscellaneous

L. J., Fingal, Kan. The pronunciation is Kosmos, Applee-kay, Glad-is (as the word "glad.")

C. E. D., Winnepeg. We believe the criminal charges were withdrawn.

J. L. C., Silver Star, Mont. We are not to judge of the secret motives of men. God alone knows the heart.

R. L., Holmes, N. Dak. We have never heard that the Mikado of Japan held any other religious views than those of his forefathers.

Mrs. J. W. H., Jonesboro, Ind. 1. The authorship of the Apostle's Creed was discussed in a recent issue in THE MAIL-BAG. 2. The hymn in which the lines:

"Strange that the harp of thousand strings Should be in tune so long" occur, are from Hymns and Spiritual Songs, by Isaac Watts.

G. E. O., Altoona, Pa. Giving in support of religious work and for general church expenses is a duty incumbent upon every church member. The Gospel is free, but the workers have to be paid. Any member, therefore, who evades this responsibility is a moral delinquent, and even from a worldly view, is doing just as dishonorable a thing as if he tried to avoid paying his lawful debts. As to the exclusion of persistent offenders in this respect, we believe every church has the right to its own proper course of action. When the person is really unable to pay, of course the matter is quite different.

S. J., Dazey, N. D. In your paper of June 7th C. H. S. asks "Which of the three Scandinavian countries, Norway, Sweden or Denmark, has right on its side in the present consular dispute? I would say that Norway, according to its constitution as well as the Rigdag, is a perfectly free constitutional country, and therefore entirely competent to judge for itself with regard to the question about the consular service. King Oscar has vetoed a law which the Storthing of Norway established. He lost his ministers, who were responsible to Norway for their actions. He showed no care of Norway's interests, and for that reason might have forfeited his most loyal kingdom. There are not in Norway different classes, as in Sweden, i. e., nobility and aristocracy. The Assembly at Eidswald, May 17, 1814, effaced the nobility in Norway, and even the King could not restore it. There is not much danger to be apprehended from Russia. A separation of Norway and Sweden will be the best outcome, if no other agreement can be reached."

NEW YORK, JUNE 28, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

PANORAMIC VIEW OF THE FRESH-AIR HOME BUILDINGS AT MONT-LAWN, TAKEN FROM FRONT OF MAIN BUILDING

OUR CHILDREN'S TEMPLE READY

Mont-Lawn on the "Fourth" will Dedicate the Only Structure of its Kind in the World

EVERY passing summer brings new joys to our Fresh-Air Home at Mont-Lawn and its hundreds of little guests. This year the crowning joy will be the dedication of the Children's Temple. This beautiful building, the only one of its kind in the whole world, as far as known (for in no other land has a noble and imposing edifice been reared expressly for children), is now completed, and will be thrown open on July Fourth, with fitting ceremonies, in which eminent divines and laymen, as well as the boys and girls of the New York tenements, will participate.

Fourth of July is the day of all others, to which children look forward with delight. In view of the approaching dedication, the Fourth of 1905 promises to exceed in interest all previous Independence Days at Mont-Lawn. Standing amid such lovely surroundings, the Children's Temple forms a prominent feature in a composite scene of rare beauty, against a background of grandeur framed by the everlasting hills. Here will gather in large numbers the friends of the children, who are made to feel that they are the guests of the occasion, and that all the beautiful and interesting features of the day, are something in which they have a part. Not one, however tiny, will be left out, but seated upon the terraces and lawn, they will listen to the kind words from those whose hearts are overflowing in love for them.

As the little ones gather in the chapel for a time, singing with a will songs appropriate to the day, how their voices will ring out, and how their eyes will sparkle and their cheeks glow! After the morning games, etc., on the Fourth, comes, what is to many of the 250 children, one of the most important events of the day—dinner in the big tent. Here they are seated, after giving thanks to God "ever great and good"—and such a feast as is spread before them! the most delicious vegetables, grown in the Home garden, with generous slices of roast beef, and bread, white and sweet, not to mention what all children seem to want "plenty of gravy." With appetites whetted by pleasure and exercise since the early morning breakfast, the good, well-cooked food disappears rapidly, while William, the "chef," and his assistants, in their convenient outdoor kitchen, contiguous to the tent, are kept busy replenishing supplies. "Teachers" move about among the diners, waiting upon them most attentively. It is touching, no matter how hungry they may be themselves, to see the larger boys and girls cut up, and otherwise prepare the food for the very little ones, who may be sitting beside them. After the dinner, some of the smaller children take a nap in the cool dormitories, and the others amuse themselves in various ways, while the teachers and grown-up guests dine under the big tent.

OUR BEAUTIFUL NEWLY-COMPLETED "CHILDREN'S TEMPLE" AT MONT-LAWN

In the course of the dedication exercises, a number of prominent speakers will take part, while appropriate music will add to the interest of the occasion. This being the feature of the day, no effort will be spared by Dr. Klopsch, "The Children's Friend," and others interested, to make the exercises such as will leave a lasting and joyous impression upon the little ones who are the fortunate recipients of this splendidly organized and generously distributed philanthropy. The usual flag drill, in which the children march and countermarch, carrying flags and singing patriotic songs, is always a feature particularly enjoyed by the children, and scarcely less so by those watching the spirited scene. "Children's Tea" and "Ice Cream Festival" follows, when the little ones serve their guests in turn. When darkness begins to settle over the scene, there will be the usual display of fireworks, sky-rockets, fire-fountains, etc. Stages will be run between the Home and the railroad station at frequent intervals, conveying, free of charge, guests and visitors to Mont-Lawn. The Children's Home extends a cordial invitation to friends to come and partake of its hospitality, and enjoy with the children this day of days, the Fourth of July, 1905.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

A SERMON BY

REV. R. A. HUME, D.D.
Missionary, of Ahmednagar, India

God's Need of Men

TEXT—John 17: 24: "Father, I desire that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am."

IT is a common thing to preach on man's need of God. We can only begin to understand how great that need is. Most men do not feel any such need, and that is the reason why they have so little sense of God in their lives. Even the best of men only very partially appreciate how they need God. Yet it is truly God whom they need more than anything else, and more than all other things put together. The great Augustine well said, "O God, thou hast made us for thyself, and we are restless until we lose ourselves in thee." Man needs God.

But it is an even greater and more inspiring thought that God needs men. Little as most men understand how much they need God, much less do they begin to have the faintest conception of the sublime and inspiring truth that God needs them. Yet this is the simple truth which the Lord Jesus Christ revealed. This is the reason of the incarnation. It was because God needs this world of men, because it is of infinite value and importance to him that he incarnated himself in the man Christ Jesus, in order to seek and to save those lost children who are made in his image and whom he needs. Men seek only that which is of value to them. They are every day letting things go with which they have been once connected, because these things have no remaining value for them. They seek, and continue to seek with intensity and with persistence only that which is valuable. It is the same with God. He only seeks that which is valuable to him, and the Lord Jesus Christ reveals not only how much man needs God, but he is the supreme revelation of the greatest thing that man can know about God, namely, that the eternal and infinite God himself needs his human children. This truth is assumed by the Lord Jesus Christ in everything he said and did. It is not so much put into definite words as it is his constant assumption.

Vital Personal Relations

This is also the teaching of the highest modern psychology. This great science, which men are only beginning adequately to understand, teaches that there is no unrelated self. No person can be great himself apart from great relations to many persons. A great teacher, a great patriot, a great reformer, a great preacher, cannot be great except and because he is in deep and vital personal relations to an immense number of other persons. And he becomes himself largely because of those relations which he bears, and into which he consciously enters with the many others whom he serves, and from whom he himself receives inspiration while he gives them inspiration. He becomes himself a great lover because he himself loves many. On a psychological basis it would have no meaning to say that God is love, except and because he is actually in loving, personal relations with all his human children. And he loves them because they have spiritual value to him. A mother cannot be love except so far as and because she has children whom she needs and who make her a mother, without whom she could be neither mother nor lover. So even God himself can love and does love, only because there are countless beings made in his image with whom he has eternal and necessary relations. Of these beings, the only ones of whom we have any clear knowledge are human beings. The teaching of psychology and the inward meaning of Jesus Christ and his teaching is that the eternal and infinite God needs his human children. Man is God's opportunity of self-expression, of self-revelation in this world. Without men he cannot adequately express himself in any direction.

Needs Men to Inspire

God needs men to think his thoughts. What good would it be for the finest teacher in the world to be filled with great thoughts and great inspirations, unless he had pupils to whom he could impart his thoughts and his inspirations, and whom he could develop and train to think his thoughts after him? What good would it be for the editor of a great paper to write the most helpful and inspiring editorials if he had no readers to be helped by what he wrote? In fact, he could not write those editorials without having those readers clearly in mind, and adapting his thoughts to their power of comprehension. Similarly, God needs men to think his thoughts after him, to appreciate his wisdom and greatness. It is a wonderful indication, both of the patience of God and of God's great need of men, that he has filled this universe with his thoughts, and that he has waited and is waiting so patiently to have men think after him his manifold thoughts of wisdom and might, and thus to appreciate him.

God needs men to satisfy his heart. How great are the possibilities of human affection! How much the true greatness and value of life consists in the loves of human beings for one another! Most married men and women could not possibly be what they are except for the calling out of the possibilities of affection through the relations which they bear to one another. The greatest privilege of being a father and mother is that it develops the sense of fatherhood and motherhood, and all that those sacred words mean through the relation of having children. The pathos and tragedy of life is that, whereas life might be so unspeakably rich in love and appreciation, if only men and women, and boys and girls developed those loves and appreciations which are the greatest wealth of life; these are only slightly developed. The saddest thing in life is that men and women, who might be great lovers and great friends, and unspeakably rich in the development of their affectional nature, are poor, and starved, and dwarfed by being satisfied with things rather than with loves; by imagining that money, or reputation, or even knowledge can, by any possibility, however abundantly possessed, satisfy the human heart. The teaching of Browning's great poem, "Paracelsus," is, that a strong man himself finds out that, without love, unceasing search for knowledge and the attainment of immense knowledge, only shrivels and disappoints the soul. But we now know, that because man is made in God's image, therefore what is true of man is true of God, and so even illimitable and infinite wisdom in the eternal God would prevent God himself from having satisfaction for his own self unless he also were a God who is himself love, who, therefore, needs the response of love from every being made in his image. Brother men and sister women, the heart of God needs your heart, truly needs your heart, to understand his love for you and his love for all who are made in his likeness. He needs your response to his love. That was the reason why he incarnated himself in Jesus Christ; to make you understand that he needs you and s you, because without you he is not complete. He n you to feel and to respond to his love.

REV. R. A. HUME, D.D.

God needs men to accomplish his purposes. W can the greatest general in the world accomplish v out soldiers to carry out his plans? What can captains of industry accomplish without men to exe their vast designs? What can even God himself complish without human instruments to do his work his human children? Was there anything ever don this world for man without God using some other as his instruments? What an inspiring thought the infinite, eternal, omnipotent God, is so relate us that even he actually needs you and me to do s of the things which he wishes to do, which even he do only through us, and which will be left undone do not act as his instruments and loyal children. course, there is a true sense in which God is not pendent on any particular man, for if that man to know and to do God's will, God can and will raise some other man to do

What is Necessary for the World

But that does not imply that God is not disappointe his plans for that particular man; that he does not h to wait for some other more loyal and faithful son t what that one ought to have done. One of the princ things which the Lord Jesus Christ reveals about and our heavenly Father is, what joy his Father God in that obedient, loving, faithful Son of his. The v that twice came from heaven to Jesus saying, "Thi my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," is a s gestion to you and to me that that is the way that can make our heavenly parent feel toward us. We be such beloved sons of the Father of our spirits that us too he can be well pleased, because we follow wh our Elder Brother leads, and take his help in being lo to that Father of ours who is as much our Father earth as in heaven. Do you recall those lines in Wal Scott's poem, when in an emergency in Scotch hist Roderick Dhu was not on hand, it is said,

> Oh where was Roderick then?
> One blast upon his mountain horn
> Were worth a thousand men.

Well, that simply expresses th truth, that in ev great emergency if one strong leader is absent, or if man fails to do his duty, a great cause may be sacrific But the principle which is involved in great things equally the principle involved in little things. If t humblest man in the world fails to do the humblest d at the right time, it is in some sense a loss to the wo and to God. So, for all men, in the humdrum duties daily life God has a purpose and an intention, and G needs the common men and women in the humbl walks to do his will in the humblest relations of life. brother men and sister women, however insignifica you may count yourselves, be assured, that since you a a son or a daughter of the eternal living God, your G needs, actually needs you, to do his will every mome in every situation where he places you.

Christ's Need of Companionship

The whole life of Jesus Christ is an illustration of th great inspiring truth which we so little appreciate—th God needs men. How much Jesus Christ needed human companionship. He needed his disciples when was misunderstood, when he was in perplexity, wh he was in sorrow. It was not simply for their sak that he chose disciples, as we sometimes imagine. was also partly for his own sake that he sought an secured human fellowship. How pathetic that questio of his, when some of his followers had deserted him an gone away, which he asked the remaining disciple "Will ye also go away?" How pathetic that exper ence of his in Gethsemane when in deepest anguish soul, understanding his approaching death, he desired t have the most appreciative of his disciples near him i the anguish of that garden. How sorry he was wh he found them asleep, and said, "Could ye not watc with me one hour?" Now, Jesus Christ was the fulles human expression of God. That seems to me almost a good a definition as we can have of what the Lord Jesu Christ really was. And in his need of companionship, an appreciation, and of love, he makes known to us the inspiring truth that God needs men, needs you and me. Of course God needs religious men and women. Of course he loves them and needs them most of all. The heavenly Father had his need supremely satisfied in his beloved Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. And Jesus Christ had his need of companionship most fully satisfied by the most appreciative and the most faithful of his disciples. There was one of the twelve who received in peculiar measure that great designation, "the disciple whom Jesus loved." And in all the history of the world it is especially the faithful, the good men and women, both in the greater and lesser relations of life, who have made and satisfied God's need of men. But it would be a mistake to imagine that God only needs those men who call themselves religious. We recognize more and more that true religion does not mean wholly nor principally reading the Bible and going to church and calling one's self a Christian. It includes in every single relation of life, and in every least detail of every such relation. I would that even the plain, simple men and women who have such a humble estimate of themselves that they think that they are not religious, all not very good, should realize that their heavenly Father greatly, very greatly needs them, and that He actually has great satisfaction in the nameless, unappreciative services which they do, without recognition from men. But our God also needs sinners, truly needs them. What made Jesus weep over Jerusalem and say, "Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem! How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not." He needed that proud, self-satisfied city of Jerusalem which rejected him. His words in the 15th chapter of Luke and 8th verse are a wonderful illumination of how God feels toward sinners, "I say unto you, that there shall be joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine righteous persons who need no repentance." Just think of it! Our God in heaven is more glad when one sinner says from his heart, "I am sorry," than over ninety-nine good angels who never made him any trouble. Do not fathers and mothers understand what a peculiar joy there is in their hearts when some son or daughter whom they love unspeakably, but who has made them no end of trouble, turns about and honestly says, I am sorry. And this word of Jesus means not only that when some very, very wicked man reforms, but that when anyone of us is sorry for anything, great or small, which he or she has done which ought not to have been done, then our Father in heaven and in earth has an exquisite joy, such as even good angels cannot give him. I myself believe that Jesus from associating with publicans and sinners, not simply because they needed him to save them from their sins, but because many of them had that kind of good disposition and readiness to appreciate a good thing, which even many saloon-keepers and irreligious men are known to have in these days. I wish that I could make every man and woman in America and in the whole world, who makes no religious profession whatever and who imagines that he is of no use to God, to realize that God in heaven actually needs everyone of these publicans and sinners of to-day, and longs for their fellowship and their confidence. Think of what God did through the man Paul, who had done some awful and wicked things, and who called himself the "chiefest of sinners." When he took the help of the Lord Jesus Christ and became his disciple and let him use him, it was partly because Paul was once so great a sinner that God needed him, and could do through him what he could not do through a better man, and made him, probably next to the Lord Jesus, his greatest instrument for good to the human race. My brother men and sister women, though you may have been very irreligious and may think yourself of no good, I want to give to you the inspiring good news that God needs, actually needs you; that he longs for you, and that if you will only let him do it, he will take you and do through you as well as for you, a wonderfully important service. "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

Loyalty to God

Christ had Satisfaction

Our text suggests that God needs men not only here on earth, but he needs them in heaven. While Jesus had need of his disciples in this world, in his last great prayer he said, "Father, I desire that those whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am." Jesus is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. God also is the same in heaven that he is in the earth. He always is like Jesus Christ. So it is because he needs men and women in heaven that he calls them there.

Our Departed Ones

are even now increasing the joy of their Lord and God in his upper mansion. If President Roosevelt should call your son and appoint him to some important position near himself, would you cry, though he had to leave your home and your intimate fellowship? Of course not. You would feel that you yourself had a great privilege, in the knowledge that the President of the United States needed your boy to do a service for the nation and the world which no one else could render. Well, why should not we understand that that is the way that God deals with us when he calls our dear ones to be with him in heaven?

God needs the world, the whole world. This is the justification and the urgency of foreign missions. God's moral and spiritual wealth is being wasted, is being unutilized, because such multitudes of his human children are not acquainted with him and do not realize that he needs them. What an unspeakable sorrow it must be to the God of love that he sees hundreds of millions of his children whom he dearly loves, who imagine that they have to appease God in some way, and that they can please him by austerities and rites and idol worship, and by repeating his name over and over again. If you and I had any adequate appreciation of the pathos of the simple fact that God's heart is in tears because many, many of his children thus misunderstand him, and fail to give him that filial relation which Jesus Christ has come to give to every human being, we should appreciate the urgency of foreign missions far more than we do, and would gladly give more and do more for that great cause and for other causes than we have yet done.

LEADERS IN THE ANTI-MORMON WAR

MRS. ELIZABETH DYE ELLIS

MRS. THEODORE W. BIRNEY

MRS. FREDERIC SCHOFF

MRS. DARWIN R. JAMES

MRS. DAVID O. MEARS

THE Woman's Crusade against Mormonism has begun in earnest. Everywhere the publication in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD of the petition to the United States Senate for Smoot's removal is a subject of discussion, and everywhere the movement meets with hearty approval. Women all over the land are signifying their eager willingness to enter the ranks to do battle against Mormonism, and in defense of the purity and integrity of the American home.

They are realizing that the time is ripe for action in protesting against the presence of an avowed Mormon apostle in the Senate of the United States.

An organized movement by the women of this country can have but one result—success. At the head of the National League of Women's Organizations stands the name of Mrs. Frederic Schoff, as Chairman of the Executive Committee. Mrs. Schoff is the President of the National Congress of Mothers, and she has been indefatigable in her efforts to arouse women to a sense of their responsibility in the crisis which is now rapidly approaching, when the mothers, wives, and daughters of America shall say whether polygamy shall longer bear its defiant head in our land, and whether the emissaries of the Mormon hierarchy shall have a voice in the Senate Chamber. Associated with Mrs. Schoff are many well-known women. Among them are Mrs. Darwin R. James, President of the International Council of Women, and of the Presbyterian Home Missionary Society of the United States; Mrs. Elizabeth Dye Ellis; Mrs. Theodore W. Birney, who was Founder and first President of the Congress of Mothers, and Mrs. David O. Mears, of Albany, President of the New York Assembly of Mothers. Women's organizations all over the country are coming into line, enlisting in this great movement. Mrs. Sarah Platt-Decker, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, has signified her approval of the movement. In her official position, at the head of so many thousands of organized women, Mrs. Decker can wield a splendid and helpful influence. Mrs. Evelyn Clark-Morgan, former President of the League of American Penwomen, and of the Columbia Heights Art Club of Washington, D. C., has written a very strong endorsement of the women's movement against Mormonism, as has also Miss H. B. Huey, Regent of the "Declaration of Independence" Chapter, N. S. D. A. R. of Philadelphia. Miss Huey writes as follows to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"I understand that you are preparing a form of petition to be used in obtaining signatures for the unseating of Reed Smoot of Utah. I write to say that there are some 750 Chapters in the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and I am sure that the Declaration of Independence Chapter would consider it an honor to send one of these petitions to the Regent of each of these Chapters, if such a plan met with your approval."

This is the kind of co-operation that is needed in this fight by women for women. Every woman is in duty bound not only to give her own signature to this petition, but to influence as many others to do so as possible. Women who belong to an organization have all the greater opportunity, as every woman's name—a plea in itself—from the highest to the humblest, will have its full weight and significance, appended to this petition. Read the Women's Memorial in last week's issue, and sign it, and secure the signatures of all your women acquaintances. Then return it to this office. If you need more Memorials, send to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for copies, which will be mailed free.

From week to week THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will give the latest information concerning the progress of the Women's Campaign, which promises to be the most important movement inaugurated in the country for many years. Clubs, societies and all other women's organizations are invited to communicate, in order that the work may be as thorough and far-reaching as possible.

THE TOMBS OF THE PROPHETS

THE LEGENDARY "TOMB OF ABRAHAM"

THE TOMB OF EZRA ON THE LOWER TIGRIS RIVER

TRADITIONAL TOMB OF EZEKIEL

A Visit to Their Traditional Graves in Ancient Mesopotamia

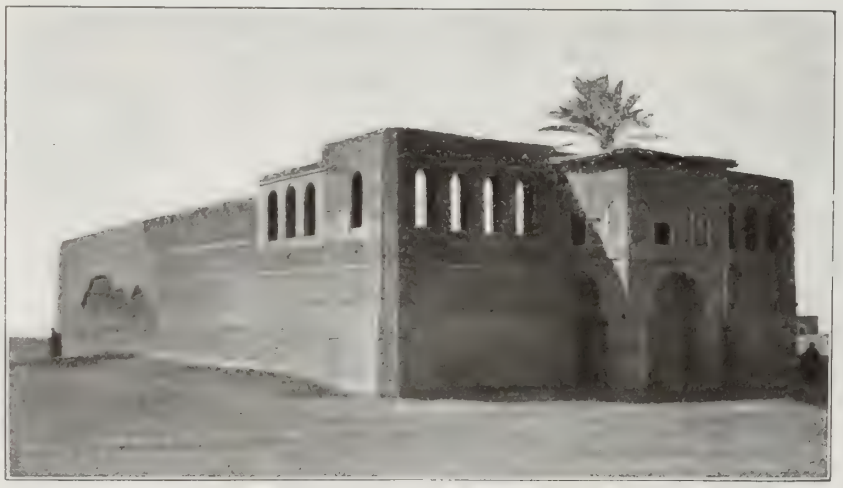
BY PROF. EDGAR JAMES BANKS

THE Turkish Empire abounds with the tombs of the illustrious ancients. Not only the greatest leaders of Mohammedanism, Judaism and of Christianity, but some of the most renowned pagans are buried within the Sultan's empire. The tombs of many of the Hebrew patriarchs and kings are in Palestine, King Hiram and perhaps Alexander the Great, were buried near Sidon; the graves of the Homeric heroes are along the Dardanelles, that of Hannibal near Ismid, of Gordius in Phrygia, of Constantine at Constantinople, and this is but the beginning of a long list. Even in far-off Mesopotamia, where we look in vain for the burial places of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Sargon, and other illustrious Babylonian kings (who were probably cremated according to their custom), we find the traditional tombs of some of the greatest of the Hebrew characters. Most of these tombs are no doubt spurious; others we may be sure are genuine.

One of the spurious tombs is that of Jonah, which stands upon the ruins of Nineveh. A second tomb of Jonah is near Kufa in Babylonia, while two others of the same prophet are in Syria. If the prophet Jonah was buried in any one of these, we can never know. Adam and Noah, so the Mesopotamian Moslems assert, were buried in the mosque of the sacred city of Nejef, by the side of Ali, the great saint of the Shiah branch of Mohammedanism, and there their graves are still pointed out. Isaac, they assert, was buried in the Jewish quarter of Bagdad. According to the Moslems, too, even Abraham and Joshua, who are counted among the greatest of their prophets, were buried in Babylonia, Abraham at Tel Ibrahim, near Babylon, and Joshua just outside of Bagdad, although we know from Scripture and the ancient historians that Abraham was buried at Machpelah, and Joshua at Timnath-Sera. These alleged tombs play an important role among the people of the East. On the other hand, the tombs of the prophet Ezekiel at Kifil, and of Ezra on the lower Tigris, are certainly as authentic as any of the Palestinian tombs of the great Hebrew characters.

The Babylonian traditional tomb of Abraham is a few hours to the southwest of Babylon, upon a high mound bearing Abraham's name. It is a small structure, about sixteen feet square and ten feet high, and surmounted with a bee-hive shaped dome. Before its entrance is attached another square structure, somewhat smaller, which serves as an anteroom for repose and thought, before entering the more sacred chamber within. The walls are of brick from the ruins beneath, and the open, arched doorway leading to the outer chamber, is now half bricked up. The shrine is in a dry, sandy desert, so remote from any habitation, that the pilgrims who visit it are but a few of the most devout. Last December, while exploring in the vicinity, I found the place deserted. The outer room, lighted by the doorway, was entirely bare, and the windowless inner chamber was so dark that it was necessary to stand for a moment in the doorway to become accustomed to its obscurity. On the right of the chamber was the grave, marked by an oblong, white plaster mound.

The mound upon which the tomb is standing is far more interesting, for it is the ruin of a fallen stage tower of the temple of a Babylonian city named Cutha. A number of years ago, Rassam, who dug a few trenches and tunnels into the ruin, was rewarded by the discovery of bricks bearing the name of "Nebuchadnezzar," and of the city "Cutha." This ruined city, as one of the original homes of the Samaritans, should be of unusual interest to the Bible student. After Sargon, the Assyrian king had destroyed the city of Samaria, in 722 B. C., and led away the ten tribes of North Israel into captivity, he took the people of Cutha and other Baylonian cities, and settled them in the capital of the deported Israelites. Centuries later, these people from Cutha were the Samaritans who fought the returning Hebrew exiles, and who wished to assist in the rebuilding of the temple at Jerusalem; it was a Samaritan woman with whom Jesus was talking at the well, when he was reproved by his own people for offering her "living water."



EXTERIOR OF THE SO-CALLED "TOMB OF JOSHUA" AT BAGDAD

The so-called tomb of Joshua to the right of the Tigris at Bagdad, is far more imposing. It is a large, square, brick building of two stories, inclosing an open court. Opening from the further end of the court is a large chamber, containing the legendary grave of the prophet. To mark the site of the grave, is a large paneled wooden case, about ten feet long and five feet high and wide. Upon its head are two tin projections. One day, while I was standing in the guise of a Turk in this holy room, a young Moslem woman entered, and weeping, fastened a little faded rag about one of the tins, while she prayed that Allah might present her with offspring. It forcibly reminded me of the mother of Samuel, who in the days of old, went to the Temple and uttered a similar prayer. At times the tin projections are nearly covered with these little offerings.

Was the patriarch Joshua buried there? Certainly not, for we have authority that he was buried elsewhere. The appearance of the tomb indicates that its age is but a few centuries, and it stands almost in the centre of the famous round city of the glorious "Bagdad of the Kalifs," and upon the ruins of their palaces. Certainly some Joshua, perhaps a priest of the descendants of the exiled Hebrews, was buried there, and the ignorant Jews have confused him with the patriarch.

The tomb of Ezra, the great leader of the exi is on the right bank of the lower Tigris, a few rs above its junction with the Euphrates, and the tle triangle between the river still known as the Garde of Eden. The tomb is regarded as authentic, not on by the Jews who flock there from every part of the st- ern world, but by the local traditions and the repo of the early travelers. Probably no person enjoys the dis tc- tion of occupying as a tomb a larger building. his immense structure is three stories high, and inclos a court sufficiently large to shelter not only the villa n, but the crowds of pilgrims who, flying their He w flag of red and green, and chanting their hymns of old, come there to worship. The roof and upper cl n- bers are open for use during the terrific heat of ne damp Babylonian summer; the lower rooms are re w- ed for the burial of the more illustrious dead, o r protection from the cold of winter. The grave re n- bling that of Joshua at Bagdad, is beneath a l e brick dome in the rear of the b l- ing. Hebrew inscriptions in brill t colors cover the walls.

About half way between the ruin of Babylon and the sacred desert cit of Nejef, and a few hours' ride from e is the little Hebrew town of Kifil, haps the oldest and most important brew settlement in Babylonia. H e is the tomb of the prophet Ezekiel authentic as any of the tombs of e ancients. It was here, or near h that the exiled prophet sat in his h by the river, and comforted his ex people with his discourses. Here painted his wonderful word picture the restored Jerusalem, and of the turn from exile, and here he passed close of his life, and was buried. K the name of the village, is the Ara corruption of the prophet's name. village nestling among the palms always been prosperous, and is still of the most flourishing settlements Babylonia.

The tomb, which is the life of the community, is so what smaller than the great building above the gra of Ezra, and its architecture points to the best Ara period. It is surmounted by a large, tiled, conical to peculiar to the Arabs. The interior is simple, as all Moslem shrines in Moslem territory must necessarily to escape the rapacity of the Turks. Practically only decorations are the numerous Hebrew inscriptio upon its walls. Although it lacks all of the barba splendor which characterizes the Moslem shrines, it p sesses, in spite of its simplicity, a wealth far greater th all of the gold and enamel of the shrine of Ali at Nej From the time of the prophet until the present, the o Hebrew laws relating to the worn-out rolls of the Scri ture have been observed, and the discarded manuscrip of the Old Testament have been buried in the genize as the place appointed to receive them, is called. T genizeh at Kifil is said by the Jews of the village to in the walls of the tomb. As yet, none of the two three explorers who have visited the shrine have co rupted its ignorant rabbis, by bribing them to exhum those sacred relics. Some day, when the country is a cessible to the traveler, or when the rabbis becom more intelligent, there may be added to the treasures the world, manuscripts of the Old Testament books, fa older and more valuable than any which have yet bee discovered at Sinai.

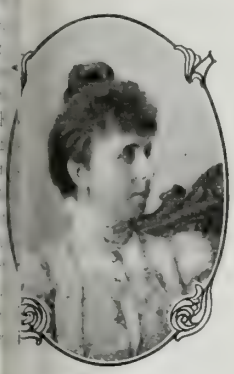
CHINA ROOM IN THE PALACE

CROWD AT THE PALACE WAITING TO CHEER THE KING

THE THRONE OF SPAIN

Alfonso, the Young King of Spain

In the ancient and royal city of Madrid, a city that is considered by all Spaniards as the greatest of European capitals, there was born nineteen years ago a child, who was from his birth a king, Alfonso the Thirteenth. His father had died a short time before, and his mother gave the son the name he bears in memory of her husband, and in honor of Pope Leo XIII. He had two older sisters, but according to the royal law, they were passed by as heirs to the throne when a son came to the Spanish House.



THE QUEEN-MOTHER

On account of matters of state, and no less from iron-bound custom and tradition, the King had to spend much of his life in Madrid, a city that is bleak in winter, and as hot as Central America in summer. The magnificent royal palace was built by a Spanish king, who considered the climate at this particular spot as beneficial to his health. It is in the classic style, and constructed of white marble. It is in an unattractive quarter of the city, and has no park, and the grounds are comparatively small. From the palace the King was taken during the summer months to the beautiful seaside resort of San Sebastian. Here all the stiff formality of the court was cast aside, and the boy King could wade about the beach, gather shells, and throw pebbles into the dancing waters of the bay.

Spain, in the eighties, was in a state of unrest. Don Carlos, the pretender to the Spanish throne, was still a factor to be reckoned with, and he still had many adherents, especially among the mountaineers. The country, after the birth of Alfonso, seemed to become more hopeful, and a general desire for peace was manifested. For the first few years of his life the little King's health was far from robust, and his present good physique is due to the untiring and loving care of his mother, the Queen-Regent. Several times his life was despaired of, and all Madrid was filled with the most intense anxiety, as the welfare of the country had become inseparably linked with the present dynasty. He had an English governess, who had immediate charge of him early instruction on all except Spanish subjects, and it is doubtless from her that he received such a good foundation in English, as he now speaks that tongue with almost no accent.

The young monarch was put through a physical and mental curriculum that would seem little short of hardship to a boy born in a more modest station in life; for the position of being a king, at the present day, is a most exacting one. Every hour was set off by rule: a certain portion for study, a certain portion to physical exercise, and a certain portion spent with his mother and sisters. When he reached the age of ten he was given in charge of men teachers, and he had practically an establishment of his own. Admiral de Tejada was appointed superintendent of his studies, and under his direction the royal lessons were made more practical, much more so than had been the custom with ruling houses, with the possible exception of the Hohenzollern in Germany.

He became proficient in languages, and speaks English, French, German and Italian. Latin and Greek, science and the higher mathematics were included in the curriculum. As became a ruler of Spain, great attention was paid to Spanish history and literature. The most interesting course taught to Alfonso was one by a professor from the University of Madrid, on world politics and political enonomy, and the King's interest in these subjects is still a growing one. The King rose before seven, and, after a breakfast of coffee and rolls, studied until one, with the exception of an hour off for exercise. He was never left alone for a moment, and, in addition to his regular instructors, a colonel was always in attendance, and a staff officer slept in his room at night. Several hours were devoted to drill and military instruction; and he early developed a passion for soldiering. At San Sebastian a boy regiment was formed for his especial benefit. It was uniformed and equipped like the regular Spanish troops, and the King used to review his miniature force, mounted on a small pony. Everything was arranged by him, even to the music played by the band.

ALFONSO, KING OF SPAIN

Horsemanship comes naturally to all of Spanish blood, and the King was taught to ride when but a few years old. At the present time there are three hundred horses in the royal stables, and Alfonso takes his greatest delight in driving his own turnouts, especially an English four-in-hand. Constant practice has made him such a skilful rider that he now sits his charger like the Cid himself. His appearance on parade is helped by the fact that he is much taller than the average man of the country over which he rules.

He has a clear, olive complexion, blue eyes and brown hair, that he evidently owes to some of his German ancestors on his mother's side of the house. He has a frank cordiality of manner and evident desire to please those about him.

He always had strong objection to having matters of state discussed without his knowledge. At the time of the Spanish-American war, the ministers and his mother tried to conceal the disasters that followed one another so rapidly in the summer of ninety-eight; but Alfonso soon discovered the trend of events, and those few months were probably the saddest of his young life. It is said that he still has hopes of making Spain again great upon the sea.

At the age of sixteen he took the oath as King of Spain, and the long and successful regency of his devoted mother was practically at an end; but the bond of affection between her and Alfonso is a very strong one, and he wisely accepts her judgment in many things.

The coronation of a Spanish king, while stately, has few of the old customs that lent such splendor to the crowning of Edward of Great Britain. The Spanish King takes the oath to the Constitution, and crowns himself. He has a high admiration for Great Britain, and wishes his country to progress, like her, along modern lines. Even his pleasures are of the most up-to-date sort. He is a keen motorist, a photographer, and an expert hunter both on foot and on horseback.

During the last few weeks he has been making a tour of France and England. Paris received him as she has received no other king since the lilies of Bourbon floated from the Tuileries. The populace cheered him from his arrival till his departure.

While driving with President Loubet, an anarchist threw a bomb that struck on the shoulder-plate of a cuirassier guard. It glanced off, and exploded behind the royal carriage. In the intense excitement which followed, the King was perfectly calm, and, after seeing that all was done that could be for the injured, he resumed his ride as coolly as if nothing had happened.

From France he went to England, where King Edward made his fellow-sovereign an honorary general in the British forces. The English people received Alfonso with great cordiality; and it has been rumored that he might marry an English princess, but that is doubtful, as the British royal house is as intensely Protestant as that of Spain is Catholic. His heritage is, in great part, a heritage of trouble, and he will have many difficulties to face. It is to be hoped that he will develop the strength of character to solve them in the best interests of Spain. Throughout his trip he showed that he had great self-possession, a true knowledge of what his position demands at the present day, and, above all else, a general spirit of true manliness that augurs well for that people whose lot has been cast with the tower of Castile and the Lion of Leon.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor — LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor — G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Mont-Lawn

OUR beautiful Fresh-Air Home on the Hudson, which has been rightly named "The Children's Paradise," opens its hospitable doors a few days hence, to the first contingent of the season. With shout and song and merry scramble, these little ones of the tenements will invade the quiet hillsides. They will romp across the great grassy lawns, and gaze in wonder at the new and beautiful Children's Temple which has reared itself, like some magical structure, since their last visit; they will surround it, and note every architectural detail, from the massive stone abutments to the gilded fleur-de-lis on the bell-tower. They will be lost in childish admiration of the beauties of the stained glass windows, and, most of all, will they linger before the southern triple window, with its wondrous picture in many-hued cathedral glass, showing the Saviour blessing the little children.

This, above all others, is the scene in the life of Jesus which appeals to the childish heart. It stamps the edifice with its true character as "The Children's Temple." And when, on the nation's greatest holiday, the Temple will be formally dedicated, the young children of the tenements and the slums, no less than the eloquent public speakers and the consecrated preachers of the Gospel, will have their appropriate share in the ceremonial. It is fitting that the children for whom the beautiful Temple was especially reared, should share in the honors of this joyous and memorable occasion, the first of its kind of which we have any knowledge. It is the only Children's Temple in America, if not in the whole world. Within its walls happy little ones of every nationality will worship; they will sing the songs of the Redeemer; they will praise Him with their hearts and lips in sweet unison; there their united prayers will ascend, that the heavenly Father may richly reward and bless the noble-hearted men and women throughout this land who have proven themselves the friends of the children of the poor, and through whose generosity over 2,000 little tenement boys and girls are enabled annually to enjoy the pleasures and benefits of a delightful outing at Mont-Lawn. Let us hope that our friends may aid us in sending more of them there this year than ever before.

The Prizes of Life

IN a notable baccalaureate sermon preached at Princeton University, recently, Dr. Woodrow Wilson, the President, gave expression to certain ideas which deserve more than passing attention. Speaking of the age's need of men of education, he explained that one of the reasons why they are specially needed now, is that the modern struggle for wealth is "more like a consuming fever than a right function of health." This outspoken view has summoned to the front not a few defenders of the money-making principle, but all that they have said by way of reply does not vitiate in the smallest degree the wholesome truthfulness of Dr. Wilson's remarks.

The present struggle for wealth is like a consuming fever. It absorbs the man's vital functions, robs him of his interest in literature, in politics, and even in religion. We are told that in former days men spent more time in business, and gave to it a more close and undivided attention than they do now. But the struggle then was not so exciting, because different methods were pursued. Then it was sober plodding, tireless industry and strict economy, that won fortunes. Now, men discard those methods, and try by some clever trick to accumulate their millions. They see that very few of the largest fortunes in existence have been made by actual work. The rigging of the stock market, the dexterous squeezing of a rival railroad, the cornering of some necessity of life, are much quicker methods of money-getting. A clever combination, a specious trick, will produce more profit in a day than our ancestors made in a year. Between present and past methods, there is all the difference that may be seen in the tense face of the gambler at Monte Carlo and the sober business man in his office. Modern business life, as Dr. Wilson said, is like a consuming fever.

Can education improve those conditions? We think it can. If the young man in college is imbued with right principles, he will discover that the accumulation of a vast fortune is not the best end in life. It will give him other ambitions, the desire to serve his fellow-men, the wish to improve social conditions, the cultivation of art and science. He will learn to place a lower estimate on the value of wealth. He will see that even worldly fame is not gained by a colossal fortune. Who thinks of Crœsus now? Is not the fame of such men as Homer, Plato, Demosthenes, Newton, Shakespeare, Columbus, Luther, Savonarola, Washington, Livingstone, Stanley, a fame more enduring and better worth having? The world is said to worship money, but it has higher treasures. It reverences unselfishness, devotion to duty, self-sacrifice for humanity.

There is nothing wrong in honest money-getting. It is an honorable ambition to accumulate a competency for old age, a provision for children, to enable them to fight the battle of life under favorable conditions. It is only when the acquisition of a fortune greater than a man can use becomes a passion; when he is indifferent to the ruin of his victims that brings grist to his mill; when every interest and impulse in his nature is concentrated on this one aim, that money-getting becomes a vice. There are some men whose lust of gold is insatiable. Like the daughters of the horse-leech their cry is perpetually, Give, give. They make money the gauge of every estimate of value and even measure men by their possessions. That the coming generation may be delivered from so false and degrading a view of life and may rise above so coarse and sordid a conception of man's destiny, is our hope, and none can render more efficient service to that end than the professors in our universities and colleges. Give us, we ask them, better, nobler, grander men than a race whose highest ambition, whose absorbing desire, is the raking together of huge fortunes, that may become a curse to the possessors and a menace to the welfare of the nation.

The Immigration Problem

OUR national lawmakers in all probability will be confronted by the immigration problem when Congress reassembles. It is one of the burning questions of the day, and it is of the highest importance that it should be dealt with wisely and conservatively.

Among the various plans for the better distribution of the great army of immigrants who are now reaching these shores every year, one which is deserving of careful consideration has been suggested by Frank P. Sargent, United States Commissioner-General of Immigration. In view of the phenomenal increase in foreign arrivals—those of the current year, it is estimated, will exceed one million souls—it has become an urgent necessity that something should be done to prevent further congestion in our large cities.

Commissioner Sargent's idea is to establish a government Bureau of Information, to be operated in connection with the Immigration Department, and through which the newcomer may obtain reliable intelligence concerning the demand for labor in various sections of the country. As its advice would be absolutely authoritative, the immigrant could act upon it with confidence. This Bureau, however, would not do the work of an employment agency. It would be in communication with the officials of different States, who would be invited to place in the Bureau exhibits of their various industries, tables of wage rates, labor prospects, and such other practical information as would be of assistance to the immigrant seeking work and a suitable location in which to make a home. Such a Bureau the Commissioner believes, would effectually protect the newcomer against land swindlers, speculators, labor contractors and the horde of human sharks that now prey on unsuspecting aliens. Special care would be taken to prevent immigrants from being sent to localities where labor troubles or "lockouts" existed. One strong recommendation in favor of the proposed new Bureau is that its abundant facilities would satisfy all the reasonable needs of the immigrant who, instead of stopping in the large cities to seek out his friends, as he now does, would go direct to the place where he could work to advantage, without loss of time or money.

Something of this sort is imperatively needed. I[n] year, 32 per cent. of the total immigration remaine[d] New York. With proper facilities and efficient adm[in]istration at Ellis Island, these 263,000 aliens could h[ave] been distributed in distant localities where they w[ould] have been welcome, instead of swelling the vast a[rmy] which constitutes the foreign element of New Y[ork], where thousands, through lack of employment, v[ere] liable to become a burden upon the community.

Canada has an immigration system which, w[hile] unfitted in some of its details for adoption here, m[ight] still afford us some points that could be copied to adv[an]tage. Every newcomer to Canadian soil knows, be[fore] he begins his journey, his exact destination, the labo[r] which he is to be employed, and the rate of wa[ges]. There is no congestion in the Canadian cities. If [the] adoption of Mr. Sargent's plan would result in prev[ent]ing further congestion in our own cities from this sou[rce], and in sending the immigrant to the point where he [can] do the most good, it will be a most welcome blessing

The Women's Battle

THEY have fired the first gun in the campaign, [for] the Women's Memorial for the expulsion of R[eed] Smoot by the United States Senate, is now being sig[ned] by American wives, mothers and daughters in ma[ny] parts of the Union. It should be signed in all [the] States, and in every city, town and village.

Every woman owes it to herself, her sex, her hor[ne] and her children to see to it that she does her f[ull] share of the work in this campaign. In churches, religious and social organizations, in all the vari[ous] women's societies, the ladies should bestir themsel[ves] and make active propaganda for securing as large[st] list of signers as possible. Before the summer clos[es] the Memorial should be inscribed with the names not [of] thousands, nor hundreds of thousands, but millions [of] true American women, who have resolved to make t[his] effort to check the Mormon evil a triumphant success.

Work and agitate! Send for Memorials, if you ha[ve] not enough already. Get together, organize and pla[n] so that ere the summer is half-way gone, the women [of] the country will be a solid unit in this movement. A[nd] if you do this, who can resist the influence of such [a] formidable and altogether unprecedented demand [of] the united women of the nation?

It is the women's battle. Working and pulling [all] together, they are bound to win.

The Scandinavian Troubles

This letter, from a Western State, explains itself:

DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH, Bible House, New York:

Dear Sir:—Please urge the Christian people all over the wor[ld] to do their utmost to prevent the possibility of war betwe[en] Sweden and Norway.

We feel confident that you and the Christian people with yo[u] can do the best thing in the modern Peace movement, b[y] urging all the Christians to act like true disciples of Christ.

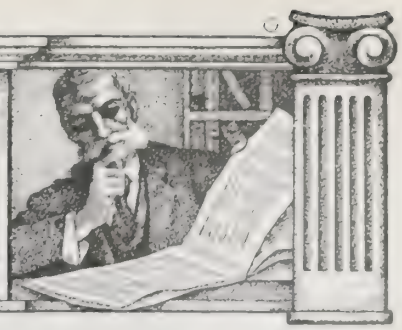
FINNISH PASTORS IN OHIO.

According to the latest reports from both Stockhol[m] and Christiania, there seems but little prospect of a reso[rt] to arms to settle the present difficulties between Swede[n] and Norway. It is true, however, that action on th[e] part of the Swedish Rigsdag, or parliament, may chang[e] the present aspect of affairs, as the Swedish people hav[e] not yet spoken through their representatives. The Rig[s]dag has been summoned by the King, to meet this mont[h] in extraordinary session, to consider a future line of con[-]duct in regard to Norway.

The present deplorable conflict between Russia an[d] Japan has had a modifying influence on the warlike spir[it] of the European nations, and it is likely that arbitratio[n] may be employed to tide over the present difficulties. The Scandinavian mind is slow to anger, but if it is onc[e] aroused to the point of conflict, it means a most obstinate and, doubtless bloody struggle among the vikings of th[e] North. The prayers of the Christian world should aris[e] to prevent an appeal to arms, more especially as othe[r] powers in Europe might become involved in such a war.

It is unfortunate that political ambition should hav[e] placed these two countries in the attitude of enemies, o[r] in such a condition of weakness, the result of separation as may bring to them the hard fate of Finland.

The BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER



TREATING WITH AFGHANISTAN

FEARS that Russia may seek to restore her lost prestige in Asia, by advances on the west, for which she had begun preparations before the war with Japan, are evidently active in the British mind. The most accessible route to India for Russia is through Afghanistan, a country of four million inhabitants, lying between British and Russian territory. Great Britain and Russia have each made high bids for the friendship of the Ameer. His predecessor was favorable to England and resisted the blandishments of the Czar; but he had a wholesome fear of Russia's power and was careful not to offend his gigantic neighbor. It was not clear how his son, the present occupant of the Afghan throne, would be disposed. The British Government, therefore, chose the present auspicious occasion to send a diplomatic embassy to his Majesty. It must have been obvious to him that the friendship of England was better worth having than that of Russia, for he bade the envoys cordial welcome to his court at Kabul and treated them with royal hospitality. With a shrewdness that does him credit, he summoned the chiefs of the wild tribes, which render him precarious allegiance, that they, too, might be joined in the obligations he undertook. Great Britain, on her part, agreed to continue the subsidy granted to his father, which helps him to maintain his army, and the Ameer, on his side, agreed to resist to the utmost of his power any aggressions from a foreign foe, and to call on the British Government for aid if he needed it. The following are the quaint terms in which the beginning of the treaty was made:

> There is God. Extolled be his perfection.
>
> This is Majesty, Siraj-ul-millat-wa-ud-din Ameer Habibulla Khan, Independent King of the State of Afghanistan and its dependencies, on the one part, and the Honorable Mr. Louis William Dane, C. S. I., Foreign Secretary of the Mighty Government of India and Representative of the Exalted British Government, on the other part.
>
> It is said Majesty does hereby agree to this, that in the principles and in the matters of subsidiary importance of the Treaty regarding internal and external affairs and of the engagements which his Highness, my late father, that is, Zia-ul-millat wa-ud-din, who has found mercy, may God enlighten his tomb! concluded and acted upon with the Exalted British Government, I also have acted, am acting, and will act upon the same agreement and compact, and I will not contravene them in any thing or in any promise.

It is desired to introduce railroads and telegraphs into Afghanistan, but the people are suspicious of British designs. It is said that the Ameer has sufficient intelligence to understand the advantages to his country of civilization, but he finds it difficult to convince his people. The object of the treaty is to promote friendship and good feeling, in the hope that in time the suspicious may be allayed. More than all, it may lead to the preaching of the Gospel in that country, which will be the greatest blessing to its people.

> How beautiful on the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace (Isaiah 52 : 7).

The Emperor's Cup

Our country has a right to be proud of the trophy won by the Atlantic in the ocean yacht race. Of the eleven yachts which started from Sandy Hook on May 17, the Atlantic, owned by an American, designed and built by an American, and manned by an American crew, was the first to cross the line on May 29. Her voyage was accomplished in twelve days, two hours and one minute, thereby breaking all previous records. Her average speed was ten and a-half knots an hour. It is a curious fact that the yachts second and third at the finish should have belonged to other nationalities. The second in the race was the German Hamburg, and the third, the British Valhalla. The American boat was ahead of the German by twenty-two hours, and of the English by more than two days. Kaiser William, who gives the $5,000 gold cup, of which a photograph appears on this page, has provided prizes for the second and third yachts, so that each nation taking part in the race will have a memento of it. The result is very gratifying to American pride, and is a sufficient answer to the charge sometimes made about the challenge cup, that it has been held because the American yachts did not have to cross the ocean, as their rivals had. How delightful it would be if this rivalry, stimulated by the Kaiser's generous gift, should become the only kind of contest between the nations.

> Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more (Isa. 2: 4).

THE KAISER'S $5,000 PRIZE CUP

Peace Conference at Washington

A graceful tribute to President Roosevelt's services in the cause of peace, has been paid by Japan and Russia. Washington, D. C., has been chosen by the two nations, as the place at which their envoys shall meet to discuss the conditions of peace. Russia, in the first instance, suggested Paris, but to this Japan naturally objected, on the ground that it was the capital of her enemy's ally, and the seat of the government which, throughout the war, has strained the laws of neutrality in the effort to render aid to Russia. Japan, who has of course the right to dictate terms, proposed Chefoo, in China. To this Russia objected, that as all the envoys would be old men, it was inadvisable that they should be required to make so long a journey. President Roosevelt proposed Geneva, or the Hague, but it was clear that Japan was opposed to any European city. Finally, both belligerants intimated that Washington would be acceptable, and the President has cordially assured them of a welcome. It is believed that the Conference will organize in that city and exchange credentials, and then if the weather is too hot, will adjourn to some northern summer resort for the negotiations. It is thought that two months must elapse before final conditions are arranged, and the envoys can reach Washington. This will bring the meeting to the middle of August or later, but it is hoped that an armistice may be arranged at the seat of war, to prevent further bloodshed. Japan, however, has had a long and bitter experience of Russia's treachery, and is even now, dubious about her good faith. She is, therefore, reluctant to abandon hostilities, even temporarily, as the interval might be used by Russia to bring up reinforcements and munitions of war. The terms on which Japan is willing to make peace are not known, but it is thought they will be moderate. Our Government, and those of Germany and France, are urging Japan not to impose humiliating conditions, and it is thought that the advice will be taken. If peace is really concluded, as now seems possible, it will be a great gratification to this nation that its Chief Magistrate was the means of bringing it about. It will be a greater glory than any that could have been otherwise won.

> Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God (Matt. 5: 9).

Selling a Fortune

A suit begun in New York has given rise to strange disclosures. It is alleged by the complainant that a young man applied to him some time ago for a loan. He represented that he owed large debts and was besides in need of money for his daily expenses. He wanted $55,000, and was willing to sell for that sum a fortune that would come into his hands at the death of an elderly lady. It was stated that the actuary's estimate of the value of the fortune subject to the delay, according to the life insurance rates, was $185,000. The lender was to be entitled, under the contract, to collect and retain the whole sum whenever it fell in, on condition of his advancing the $55,000 at once. That any man should be so reckless as to dispose of his future interest for such a sum, argues a folly almost akin to lunacy. All business men ridicule his recklessness, but it is to be feared that many of them are guilty of greater folly. The man who sacrifices his hope of heaven for present gain makes a worse bargain.

> As Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright. For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected (Heb. 12: 16).

BRIEF NOTES

The Baptist Missionary Society (England) has built a new steamer for its work on the Congo River. She is named the Endeavor.

Persons desirous of spreading the Gospel among the Chinese laundrymen in our cities, will be glad to know that they can obtain Gospel portions and tracts in Chinese at nominal prices from the China Inland Mission, Church Street, Toronto.

DELIVERANCE FROM THE GRAVE

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON,

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS*

SCENES in King Hezekiah's sick chamber: Scene I. The king lies upon his bed of ivory, which is close against the wall. The elegant cushions of damask afford him no comfort, for he is sorely afflicted with a malignant carbuncle.

Scene II. The prophet Isaiah, long known and loved by Hezekiah, enters the sick chamber and delivers the message from God: "Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die, and not live." His voice is choked and his eyes are full of tears, at the thought of losing his royal friend, but speak he must. The message being delivered, he leaves the room.

Scene III. The king weeps, and turns his face toward the wall that his attendants may not read the conflict in his soul. He would be alone with God. He pleads for more of life. He is only thirty-nine years of age, and has been king but fourteen years. From his youth up he has walked in the commandments of the Lord.

Scene IV. The prophet Isaiah is again at the king's bedside after a few moments' absence. He has another message from God, which he speaks to Hezekiah: "Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears; behold I will heal thee: on the third day thou shalt go up unto the house of the Lord, and I will add unto thy days fifteen years." The astonished king turns his face toward Isaiah, and asks for a sign that this is a true promise.

Scene V. The king rises upon his bed, and looks out of the window that he may see the sun-dial, for Isaiah has told him that the sign shall be the return of the shadow, as if the sun had gone back on its course. As the king watches the dial, he sees the shadow move backward. It seems to Hezekiah like the shadow of God's protecting hand, and he falls back upon his bed content, although the agony of his malady has not abated.

Scene VI. The attendants are making a poultice of figs to place upon the king's carbuncle, at the command of Isaiah, for the Great Physician has so ordered —he who afterwards, when incarnate in Jesus—used clay in opening blind eyes, and his own spittle for loosing the tongue of the dumb, for God uses and bids us use all natural remedies.

Scene VII. The royal patient is resting quietly, for he knows that the hand of his God is upon him for good.

Scene VIII. It is the third day since the king's prayer for life, and God's promise was uttered. The royal apparel has been laid in order, that the king, now fully restored to health, may be arrayed, and proceed to the Temple to praise God for his recovery and prolonged life, in sight of all the people.

Scene IX. There is no form on the couch, there is no face at the window anxiously looking out for a sign, for he who was here is in yonder Temple. There are no attendants who await his return, for the king is strong and well, and will not need to lie down again upon his return.

A NOTABLE INCIDENT OF HEZEKIAH'S REIGN (II. KINGS 18: 4)

Illustration and Application

1. The Uses of Disease. Jesus in healing a sick man said: "Sin no more lest a worst thing come unto thee." That is a new commandment of Jesus that we should obey God's laws of health. What sorrow would be saved, if we would all obey them as divine laws, no less than the Ten Commandments. The wilful breaking of health laws is no less a sin, and the obeying of them no less a highway to happiness! "For thy good always," is written on all God's laws—not one of them arbitrary, but all for our sakes. But God overrules not only the wrath of man, but the mistakes and even the sins of man, and so sicknesses of the body are often made to work for the benefit of the soul. In the case of the great ones of the earth, like Hezekiah, it is often a cure of pride, either curing it or preventing it, by reminding one tempted to think himself almost a god, that he is only a weak mortal after all. "Do you see anything lacking in this imperial show?" said one citizen to another, in the midst of the splendors of a Roman festival. "Yes," said the other, "it lacks permanence." The dangerous carbuncle said that to Hezekiah. Sickness not only promotes humility, and brings out, in those who receive it patiently, some of the most golden virtues, such as sympathy and helpfulness, that usually lie hidden and undeveloped in times of prosperity. A poor man watched the floods wash away his home and mill. They were all he had in the world. But, as he stood on the scene of his loss, broken-hearted, after the water had subsided, he saw something shining in the bank, which the waters had washed bare. He found it was gold.

Virtues more precious than gold has sickness and other afflictions laid bare in many of our lives. Writing this lesson in a hospital, the writer thanks God for all the days when he has been laid upon his back that he might look more steadfastly up to heaven. A young officer in the army of the famous Wolfe was apparently dying of an abscess in the lungs. He was absent from his regiment on sick leave; but resolved to rejoin it, when a battle was expected. "For," said he, "since I am given over, I had better be doing my duty, and my life's being shortened a few days, matters not." He received a shot which pierced the abscess, and made an opening for the discharge. He recovered, and lived to the age of eighty. Many a man has found blessing and benefit through a wound—if not for his body, for his soul Here it is fitting to quote "The Exchange of Pain," by Mr. J. S. Stone:

'Tis peace in pain to know that pain
  Secured us pain's eternal end;
And that the more exceeding gain,
  To which by grace our souls ascend,
My great Redeemer won for me
By more exceeding agony.

Beholding thee—in what repose,
  By what still streams of Paradise—
Beholding memory of thy woes
  Still in those deep pathetic eyes—
Ah me! what blest exchange for pain,
If I attain, if I attain!

And let us broaden the thought to all affliction which for the present is not joyous but grievous, nevertheless afterward—"O the beautiful 'Afterward'!"—it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them that are exercised thereby.

A prominent writer illustrates the subject in the following way: One night, a few years ago, on the wild Newfoundland coast, a fierce storm arose before the fishing fleet could make the harbor. Wives and children strained their tear-dimmed eyes, hoping to see through the darkness and tempest the coming sails. About m night it was discovered that the cottage of one of t fishermen was on fire, and notwithstanding all th efforts it was totally destroyed. When the morni dawned the fleet was found safely anchored in the ba As the wife went to greet her husband with the tidin of their loss, he said: "Wife, I thank God for the bu ing of the house, for it was by its light that the fleet w able to make the port; but for the fire we had all perished A more signal deliverance was that of one who was sav from a soul-destroying commercialism by the burning of his property, who learned to say, "If they had n perished, I should have perished."

"If you love me, lean hard," said a well woman to sick woman at her side. This prompted the followi sonnet in which God says the same to us:

Child of my love, lean hard!
And let me feel the pressure of thy care.
I know thy burden, for I fashioned it,
Poised it in my own hand, and made its weig
Precisely that which I saw best for thee;
And when I placed it on thy shrinking form
I said, "I shall be near, and while she leans
On me, this burden shall be mine, not hers.
So shall I keep within my circling arms
The child of my own love." Here lay it dow
Nor fear to weary Him who made, upholds,
And guides the universe. Yet closer come—
Thou art not near enough. Thy care, thyse
Lay both on me, that I may feel my child
Reposing on my heart. Thou lovest me?
I doubt it not; then, loving me, lean hard!

2. The fear of death. In our le son we see a godly king afraid to di Such a fear was not justified even i Old Testament times, when little w revealed of future rewards and punis ments, for the Hebrew people wer then in preparatory school, learning God's rewards and punishments to me and nations in this world—to which w give too little thought. Even thoug the future was unseen, it should hav been enough to Hezekiah that he wa never unseen by God. But since th doctrine of immortality has bee brought to light in the Gospel, we hav far less excuse for fear of death.

Assurance of Immortality.—Face t face with death, what did I answer t my own question, "How do I know tha when the heart ceases to beat, the sou shall live on?" I know, because Jesu knew. I am sure of immortality be cause Christ was sure of it. This is th voice of Reason as well as Faith, sinc all the world's strongest reasoners de clare or admit that Jesus Christ, in th words of Richter, was "the purest among the mighty, the mightiest among th pure;" too good to deceive, too grea to be deceived. His credentials are no alone ancient miracles, but a threefol present miracle; his matchless life his matchless words, his matchless in fluence. His matchless life! There i is before us in the Gospels. No on could have invented it. It would have taken a Christ to invent a Christ. Renan and the princes of scepticism have long since admitted that he lived, and lived substantially the life attributed to him, and that no other life has approached his in goodness or greatness. His matchless words! There they are before us in the New Testament. The world is agreed, "Never man so spake." His matchless influence! See it on every side, as real and resistless a force in the development of Christian and humane institutions that make the world a better home for woman and child, for the weak and oppressed, as the earthquakes and glaciers that prepared the earth for man.

In the presence of this threefold miracle, Christ's matchless life, his matchless words, his matchless influence, it is not faith only, but sound reason to accept unquestioningly as the surest things we know, whatever he taught, using our own imperfect reasoning only on what he did not teach.

Immortality he proclaimed both in words and deeds. "Let not your heart be troubled. In my father's house are many mansions." So far read the young preacher from John 14, at the deathbed of an aged saint, almost impatiently the dying man cried, "Read on!" "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself." "That's it," exclaimed the dying saint; "it's himself I want." "Where I am there ye may be also." Christ wastes no words in gratifying petty curiosity about heaven, but in his words and resurrection and ascension, teaches his own immortality.

*International Sunday School Lesson for July 9, Hezekiah's Prayer, Isaiah 38: 1-8. Golden Text: "God is our refuge and strength; a very present help in trouble," Psalm 46: 1.

IN MY VERANDA NOOK

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Punishment by Torture

A FATHER in New Jersey recently punished his two children, aged, respectively, three and five years, by burning their fingers with a lighted match. They had the usual passion that children have for playing with fire.

Few babies can resist the delight, akin to that of creation, which comes from setting papers and chips in a blaze, and few parents have escaped the anxiety consequent on this juvenile proclivity.

A child's heedless little hand may light a conflagration which may lay waste a city. A child's dallying with fire may result in its own death, or the destruction of its home. The terror of this is always with the tenement-house mother, who is often compelled to go to her daily work, leaving little children alone for the day, locked up in her room. Often the mother obliged thus to leave her children takes the precaution to carry the stock of matches with her, and occasionally she makes sure that there is no kerosene left in her apartment.

Equally the danger of fire menaces richer homes. A certain little boy—now a grave, middle-aged citizen, when a boy of five, amused himself by kindling a fire in his mother's bed-room, and dancing gleefully about it with, I suppose, the same sort of delight that Nero experienced when he played his fiddle and looked over the burning roofs of Rome. Fortunately, in the case of the fire in the bedroom it was discovered in time to save the home from ruin.

Children outgrow this passion with larger experience, but it is a peril to themselves and their friends during early years. Still, when people undertake the responsibility of bringing children into the world, and of bringing them up to years of maturity, they must accept whatever trials go hand in hand with the joys. In this enlightened age there is no excuse for punishment by torture, whether it is inflicted by blows, or in some other way. The father who thought to break his children of a bad habit by scorching their little fingers, did far more harm than he intended, and probably by accident inflicted deeper burns, with the indelible scars, at least on his memory, of a cruel deed. His action was ill-judged, and a fearful blunder. Perhaps he may never recover from its consequences. Long after the little ones have forgotten their pangs, his own will continue. Heroic methods of punishment are not appropriate for children of tender age, or indeed of any age. Furthermore, the discipline of little children in the nursery should be wholly left to the mother. It is her province to guide the little ones until they emerge into the world of childhood, and leave behind them the novelties of infancy. Fathers are confronted with business worries, with the many things that meet a man beyond his own door, and a father can seldom measure the amount or quality of chastisement with even-handed justice.

In the case of the man whose mistaken severity has brought him forward and set him in the pillory of the newspapers, there is no reason to suppose that he has not been usually a kind and judicious parent, doing his best to provide for his family, and to live honestly and faithfully for their good. He is much to be pitied. Yet even more to be pitied are little children everywhere, who are helpless and undefended in the presence of parental theories, blindness and prejudice. A child is so small, unable to strike back, or to find asylum if ill-treated, that one's pity is moved when one thinks of the children who have to learn hard lessons through suffering.

Kipling's wonderful genius has shown this in the pathetic little story of the Black Sheep, which is too literal to be a dream of fancy. Dickens drew it in heavy lines in the story of poor David Copperfield, in the hands of his abominable stepfather, Mr. Murdstone. We have reached a period in which children are studied and regarded as never before. Yet, many a time some flashlight reveals lurid depths. This is peculiarly the case, as might be expected, among the children of the foreign contingent in a great city like New York or Chicago. The instinctive movement of a child in the poorest quarters, when spoken to in reproof, is to throw up the arm as if to shield the head or ward off a stroke. The gesture tells its own story.

If only little children from the very first grow up under a reign, not only of love, but of justice; if they could be taught obedience from babyhood, and ruled not by impulse, but by the gentleness of law, the world would enter upon a better era. It cannot too often be repeated that children should not be punished for the consequences of what they do, but that the motive should be sought for. Because some act has involved trouble and inconvenience to parents, they should not mete to children a corresponding penalty.

STILL GATHERING FLOWERS

When you were young and I was young, all in the sunny weather,
Our wedding bells were blithely rung, and we set out together.
Now we are old, the tale is told of many happy hours.
But still we walk in cheery talk, and still we're gathering flowers.

Life's Little Tragedies

THE morning newspaper often gives one a glimpse of life's little tragedies. They are always happening here and there. The great ones are heralded in large type and black head-lines. The small ones are tucked away in fine print. For instance, one reads of a little dog playfully careering about in an uptown street of New York, a dog that makes friendly advances in the hope that somebody will adopt it and take it home, since it has lost its master. Numbers of those unfortunate people who do not understand dogs are always ready to raise the cry of mad if they see a dog alone in the street. It may not have shown the faintest symptom of rabies, but that does not matter. The shout is raised, the frightened people dash pell-mell in every direction, and up comes a policeman with a revolver, which he does not in the least know how to use. He fires five, six or seven shots into the struggling body of the poor dog, not one of them touching a vital point. At last the dog is carried off in a cart to a vacant lot, where the policeman finishes his game of target, and at last blunders into killing the poor little mark for his random shots.

This may not be a great tragedy, but it gives a big heartache to any lover of animals, and particularly to any one who cares for the dearest animal companion of man, the dog. Policemen should be taught the use of pistols. Pistols themselves are excessively perverse. In the hand of a child, they are sure to go off and kill a playmate. In the hand of a guardian of the peace, they refuse to do their office quickly.

Truth-telling as a Fine Art

At the first glance, it seems as if nothing can be quite so easy as to tell the truth. Yet truth is many-sided, and it is sometimes far from being simple. All truth is not to be told. Take the example of a physician who is observed by his patient in conversation with a member of the family. It is decidedly for the patient's good that he or she shall not be informed of the substance of the little colloquy. To tell precisely what was said, may cause a rise of temperature or nervous depression, that will be hard to conquer. If questioned, what is the person with whom the doctor has been talking to do? Shall he tell precisely what was said? Shall he evade, or prevaricate, or falsify? A literal repetition of truth may be perilous. If he decline to answer, he arouses suspicion. There are fine shades of truth. There are people who pride themselves on candor, and on saying and acting on every occasion exactly what they mean. They run amuck over the proprieties and amenities of life, and often do more harm than good. Where are we to draw the line between veracity and hypocrisy? Does tact ever trench on the borderland of insincerity? In an old book, familiar to most of us, there is a phrase that solves the problem: Speaking the truth in love, we are not likely to go very far wrong. Whoever does this, will be pretty sure to scatter sunshine on his path and to keep from making mistakes. We often pay dearly in this world for mistakes. The thing we did not mean to do, the word we did not mean to say, spring up and confront us, and make us bitterly sorry.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—CORA. For a full reply to your question you must ask a physician. A person who has strong digestion and food assimilation may be said to be well.

—AVIS. If you think there is any probability that your invention will meet a felt want and bring you in some money, apply for a patent at the Patent Office, in Washington, D. C.

—A READER. A man who has three times asked for the postponement of his marriage deserves to have the engagement broken. I think there is nothing more for you to do in the matter. Unless he has excellent reasons for his course, he shows plainly that he wishes to be free.

THE KITCHEN KINGDOM

The popularity of the queen of the kitchen depends largely upon her ability to surprise and please her subjects. If she will invoke the aid of her task will be simplified and the loyalty of her subjects unquestioned. ¶ The ways in which it may be prepared in combination with milk, cream, eggs, fruits and vegetables of every description are almost innumerable. Its use is a constant succession of dainty surprises. ¶ Remember, too, it is the food of real health and strength. It is made of the whole wheat berry and contains every element necessary for building bones, teeth and muscle, and for producing energy. ¶ Always serve according to directions in "The Vital Question Cook Book," which we send free upon application. ¶ Triscuit, the whole wheat cracker, should be used in place of bread. It makes fine toast and is excellent with butter and cheese.

Shredded Whole Wheat Biscuit

THE NATURAL FOOD COMPANY
Niagara Falls, N. Y.

SHREDDED WHEAT

THE RESURRECTION OF MISS CYNTHIA

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

CHAPTER XVII.—Continued

"I'VE jest be'n a-havin' a few words of counsel with Mis' Pettibone," observed the deacon, as he seated himself with a deliberation which betokened a lengthy visitation. "I was reelly s'prised to learn f'om her that you hadn't completed yer prep'rations fer the comin' Lord's day."

"I seldom do until Saturday," said Mr. Pettibone, with a determinedly pleasant smile. "I have always considered it a wise practice to finish my sermon after the pastoral work of the week is over. I find suggestive material in the spiritual condition of the people themselves, you understand."

"Wall, now, it don't 'pear to me that's any way to write a sermon," replied the deacon, with a controversial clearing of the throat. "It ain't the proper way to present the doctrines; an' that, I take it, is your business in the pulpit. You'd ought to git over the field 'bout once a year. Say, take baptism an' sich in the spring, an' mis'laneous doctrines in the summer; but come this season of the year sinners need to hear about the abidin' wrath of the Almighty."

Mr. Pettibone smiled. Deacon Scrimger took notice of the smile, and it spurred him on to greater freedom of speech than he had before ventured upon with his dignified pastor. He leaned forward and planted his elbows on his knees, the better to scan the minister's face. "Do you want to know what some folks—payin' contrib'ters, too—is sayin' 'bout you?" he demanded. "They say 'at they've heered on good 'thority 'at your wife don't b'lieve——"

The Reverend Pettibone drew himself up with a portentous frown. "My wife's beliefs need not be a matter of discussion between us, brother," he said stiffly. "I think you have never found me lax when it came to presenting the doctrines of the Church."

"Yes, I hev," contradicted the deacon triumphantly, "I ain't heered a sermon on the subjec' of the devil sence you was married to Philura Rice. Folks need to be roused up on the subjec', I tell ye. An' I'll let you know 'at th' adversary's a-gettin' in powerful work in this 'ere commun'ty, right now. We'd ought to be roused up."

"I agree with you, Brother Scrimger, that the work seems to be languishing somewhat," said Mr. Pettibone, with a worried sigh. "If our church-members could only be made to realize the outflowing love and power of God——"

Deacon Scrimger interrupted his pastor with a violent explosion of senile coughing. "Thet's jest it!" he complained, "thet's the sort of talk you've be'n a-givin' us f'om the pulpit till we're all well-nigh sick an' tired of it. The' ain't no snap in thet kind of preachin', I tell ye. 'Tain't the sort to 'rest the 'tention of lost souls an' keep 'em out o' hell. They set back in their seats an' go to sleep on th' brink o' torment, whilst you're a-moseyin' on 'bout what the church-members had ought to be a-doin'."

His pastor regarded him with a perplexed frown. "What I have preached regarding the loving kindness and mercy of God ought to appeal to saints and sinners alike," he said, after a thoughtful pause. "It has been so impressed upon my mind of late years that I feel more and more impelled to give it to the world. It seems to me that is what the world is hungering and thirsting for."

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

"Thet's be'n purty evident to the most of us," said the deacon, "an' 'tain't hard to guess where you git your pecooliar views. Well, I called in to talk up the subjec' of a revival this mornin'. I s'pose you've kep' yer eyes on what the Methodists are a-doin'. That new man of theirn is a hustler f'om way back. He's a-givin' 'em doctrine, hot an' heavy, right erlong, an' he's a paster 'at knows his biz f'om a to izzard. I heered he'd got the Northrup fambly to hire a pew there, an' Northrup 's a moneyed man. Did you an' Mis' Pettibone git eround to see 'em? I heered you didn't?"

"I called upon the family soon after their arrival in town," said Mr. Pettibone coldly. "They informed me that they were in the habit of attending the Methodist Church; so I notified Mr. Smiley of the fact."

"Huh!" exploded the deacon wrathfully, "that ain't no way to build up Zion, an' I guess you'll fin' it out. I'm in favor of procurin' the services of a good, smart, godly evangelist to come an' labor 'mongst us fer a spell."

But the minister was silent. His face had assumed a look of dignified composure under suffering, such as a martyr might have worn with propriety.

"The' 's be'n consid'able dissatisfaction amongst the payin' contrib'ters, off an' on." Deacon Scrimger resumed with an inquisitorial air. "I felt 's 'o it was my Christian dooty to mention it."

The Reverend Pettibone suddenly rose up to his full height—he was a tall man. "I think I fully appreciate your motives, Brother Scrimger," he said dryly. "I shall consult the Session of the church about these and various matters at an early opportunity." He glanced at his watch. "I am sorry to appear rude, brother; but as I have a funeral service at half past eleven, I shall be obliged to suspend our conversation for the present."

When the door had fairly closed on the lingering visitor, little Mrs. Pettibone came flying into the study. Her blue eyes were very bright, her cheeks very pink; she was half laughing, half crying, as she threw her arms about her husband's neck. "Oh, you poor dear, you!" she cooed, "I tried hard to keep him out; but he just marched right in, in spite of me. Don't you mind a thing he says, dearest."

The Reverend Pettibone rested his tired head upon her little shoulder. "You are such a precious comfort," he breathed. "What should I do without you?"

Mrs. Pettibone laughed joyously. "I don't know, I'm sure," she said wisely. Then she kissed him twice on the little bald spot which was beginning to appear where the dark hair had once been thickest. "Every single thing—even our worries—works together for good to those that love God," she whispered. "Isn't it good to remember that! Now, dear, come to lunch; it's all ready, and you haven't much time."

One of the results of the interview betwixt the Rev. Silas Pettibone and his solicitous parishioner became evident during the first week of the new year, when it was formally announced from the pulpit that a series of revival services would be held in the Presbyterian Church, conducted by the pastor, who would be ably assisted by the well-known evangelist, Rev. G. Algernon Guffey, and the sweet singer of Israel, Filbert Swick.

It was observed (particularly by Mrs. Pettibone) that the minister's earnest

CONTINUED ON PAGE 565

ROYAL Baking Powder

Makes the food more Wholesome and Delicious.

Parisian Massage Cream

Produces a Beautiful Healthy Skin

There are different things in it—better things—better for the skin—that is why you will get such wonderful results from using Parisian Massage Cream. These ingredients are the most simple and harmless you can imagine—this we guarantee—but they also compose the most successful cream ever offered for producing a pink, healthy skin, for cleansing it from all impurities including blackheads and for preserving in the skin the softness and delicacy of youth. It is also unequalled as a lubricant and flesh food in massage, to remove crow's feet and all wrinkles and to round out hollow cheeks and neck.

Parisian Massage Cream is made of sweet and pure materials which will never get rancid—they cannot. This dainty, wholesome, harmless, cleansing Cream, is what you should use. You will agree with us, when you have tried it and have seen what it will do for you.

Send 10 cents (postage) for large free sample and valuable book about Care of the Skin and the Art of Massage.

THE VICHONA CO., 13 Main St., Zanesville, Ohio
Lady Agents Wanted—Make $30. Weekly

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES

Dewey's Improved Acme Dress and Corset Protector

Better and cheaper than Dress Shields, being a complete garment, always ready to wear with any dress. The best Protector to be worn with the Popular Shirt Waist Suits, and Shirt Waists, as they require no sewing in. The only perfect protection from perspiration.

REDUCED PRICES. One Pair Does the Work of Six.
No. 1. Bust Measure 28-33 $ .50 No. 2. Bust Measure 34-39 $ .6
No. 3. Bust Measure 40-45 .75 No. 4. Bust Measure 46-49 1.0
Agents Wanted. Catalogue Free. Send Money by P. O. Order
M. DEWEY, Manfr., 1395 H, W. Monroe St., Chicago, Ill

Best for Baby—Best for You

The most effective skin cleansers, soothers, healers and beautifiers ever made.

SPIM SOAP

and SPIM Ointment. Thousands of mothers endorse them. No more powder—SPIM'S the thing. Especially valuable for tender skin. 25c for SPIM Soap—50c for SPIM Ointment. At druggists, or sent direct, prepaid. Album of "400 Beautiful Babies," free for wrapper from Soap or Ointment. "Watch the Baby" Booklet, free to any address. It tells how your baby may win a prize of $5 to $100.

Spim Co., 55 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N.Y. (C. B. Knox, Pres.)

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all afflictions of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Delightful after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

SUMMER HOMES IN GREEN HILLS OF

Vermont and Lake Champlain

Terms, $4 to $10 per week.

New trains between Boston, New York, Springfield and Vermont points. As good as any on the continent. 150-page illustrated brochure mailed free on receipt of 6c. in stamps or postage.

Address A. W. ECCLESTONE, So. Pass. Agent, 385 Broadway, New York City.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 564

fa· appeared more pallid and grave tha usual as he read this important no·ce; but there was no lack of unc·ie in his carefully prepared comments on the coming "season of gr·ce." The congregation understood v·guely that their pastor had laid himse, a willing sacrifice, upon the altar of he cause.

was understood, also, that the R·. G. Algernon Guffey and his adjunt would make their headquarters at the parsonage, while controlling th campaign.

iss Cynthia Day expressed but a la·guid interest in the proposed re·eval. She subscribed, with her no·-found liberality to the fund which w· being raised for the purpose, but sh told Mrs. Buckthorn, who was actively engaged in canvassing the ne·hborhood, that she could not promis·to attend the meetings.

"I'm 'fraid you'll miss a blessin', Cynthia, if you set idly by," sighed M·. Buckthorn. "You'd ought to come up·o the help of the Lord against the m·hty! The' 's goin' to be sunrise pr·er-meetin's every mornin', an' ten o'·ock meetin's fer church-members, an· aft'noon mass-meetin's, an' a five o'·ock female prayer-meetin', an' reg'·la· preachin' services every evenin' wh after meetin's fer inquirers, be·sides experience meetin's. It'll be a gl·ious time. The Rev. Guffey is a re· power in the pulpit; they do say fo· s is comin' way f'om State Bridge an· Farmsley to hear him."

"Did you say that both those men w·· to stay at the parsonage?" in·qued Miss Cynthia.

"·ert'nly; where 'd you s'pose they 'd ·tay? It'll be a reel spiritual bles·si· to be under the same roof with 'er· I do hope our paster 'll get liv·en· up, an' stren'thened in the doc·tries."

"· don't see how Mrs. Pettibone will fin· time to do anything except cook for· three hungry men," observed Miss Cynthia thoughtfully.

"·he'll be to every meetin'," said M· Buckthorn tranquilly. "She w·uldn't dare to stay away. Of course so·e of us ladies 'll sen' her in a cake or· pie now an' agin to help out; I ca· say 'at I think much of Philura's co·in'. She never had much to do wi· cookin' before she was married, an· they hev to cut an' trim pretty cl·· to git along on his salary, I sh·uldn't wonder."

·rs. Pettibone squeezed Miss Cynthi·s little hands very tight in both he·own, when that lady called at the pa·onage for the express purpose of int·fering with the arrangements of the committee. "I can entertain both of ·ose men easier than you can," insi·d Miss Cynthia. "Abby is perf·· willing, and I have plenty of roo·."

"· just love you for wanting to do it," exclaimed Mrs. Pettibone impulsi·y; "but you mustn't think of it. We're obliged to have Mr. Guffey with us.

"· shall take the other man, anyw·," said Miss Cynthia decidedly. "·there anything peculiar about his di· that I ought to know?"

"·h, no; all Mr. Swick wants in par·ti·ar is a piano in good tune. He's a· al nice young man."

·iss Cynthia found herself actually gla· of the presence of Mr. Filbert ·wick in her house. He was a red-·uked, broad-shouldered, complacent yo·h, who had not yet assimilated the·elation incident to success in his ·wn.

"· was just this way," he confided to ·iss Cynthia, during the second we· of his stay. "I was clerking it in· shoe-store in Elmira when Mr. Guey was holding union meetings the·. You never saw anything like the·time we had there. Great excite·met, everybody interested. But his sis·er was taken down with grippe rig· in the middle of it, and lost his voe.

"Well, the committee sent for me. I'd been singing in the church choir, off an' on, and in Y. M. C. A. meetings. So I went in with him, then an' there, an' I've been at it ever since."

Mr. Swick's youthful satisfaction with himself and his work was a pleasant thing to witness. He was possessed of a robust baritone voice, and in the brief intervals between services, he lifted it up in Miss Cynthia's parlor, in long-drawn solos.

"I wish you'd come and hear me," he said, with a touch of boyish wistfulness. "I wrote to mother and told her how good you are to me, and she sent her love."

"Did she?" smiled Miss Cynthia. She hesitated a little, then said quietly, "Well, I will come to the meeting to-night—just to hear you sing."

"You'll get a blessing," Mr. Swick assured her with sincere enthusiasm.

"How is it with your soul?"

Miss Cynthia blushed. "I—I don't know," she faltered, taken quite unaware. "I hope—I trust——"

Mr. Swick shook his head.

"If you should die to-night, sister," he went on, "how would it be?"

He was astonished at Miss Cynthia's reception of this pertinent inquiry. She had risen, and was regarding him with wet, indignant eyes.

"You have no right to ask me such a question," she said, in a low vibrant voice. "Do you hear me? You have no right!"

She turned and left the young man, sitting dazed and irresolute.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE Rev. Mr. Guffey had preached his great sermon on Dives and Lazarus, to a crowded house. Behind him rose the serried ranks of the choir, the girls gay with ribbons and tossing feathers, the young men stiff and uneasy under the curious eyes of the congregation. At the evangelist's right hand sat Mr. Pettibone, pale and worn with the fatigue of his conflicting emotions.

The hush that followed the preacher's vivid portrayal was broken by Mr. Swick's youthful voice, upraised in long-drawn, sonorous cadences. The singer had taken a position on the platform directly in front of the evangelist.

Most of the women were in tears, and many of the men sat with white, strained faces when the last, lingering inquiry for the lost wanderer of the song died away amid the crowded galleries.

A tense silence followed, during which the eyes of Mr. Guffey traveled slowly from pew to pew. Heads were bent to avoid that inexorable gaze. A wave of irresistible power was sweeping the plastic crowd.

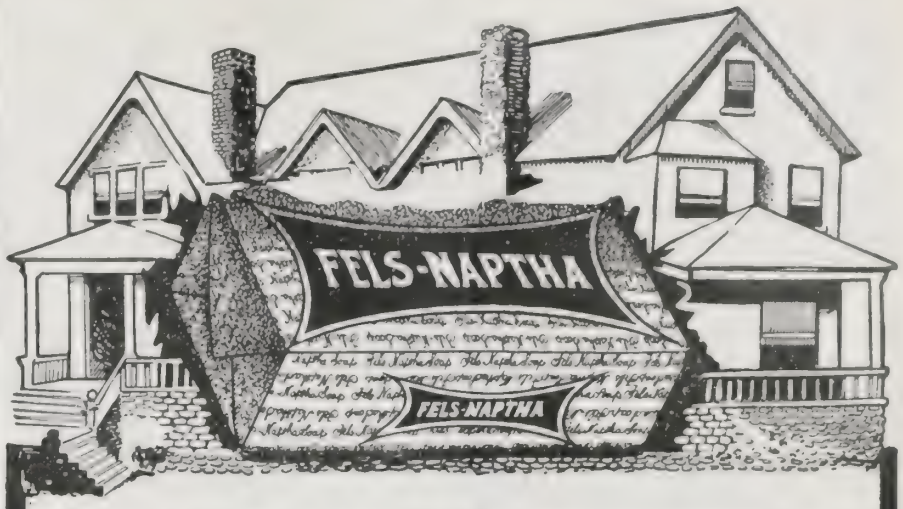
He was speaking now, deliberately, quietly, but with what seemed to the excited congregation an unearthly comprehension of their weak, struggling desires. The invitation was given to rise and come forward to the front pews. There was no other way—no other time. The final words rolled out over the swaying throng like the tolling of a funeral bell.

A woman raised her voice in a faint shriek of anguished despair. "Wait!" she cried. "I am coming!" and staggered down the aisle. Instantly the choir broke forth into the triumphant swing of a revival hymn, and the aisles were filled with hurrying figures. The crest of the slow-gathering wave was sweeping in.

In the furthest corner of the Breyfogle pew sat Miss Cynthia Day. She had come to the meeting as she had promised, after a faint-hearted apology to Mr. Swick, which that young man had received with boyish embarrassment.

Miss Cynthia, sitting quietly in her own pew, had been singularly unmoved by the sermon. The Breyfogle

CONTINUED ON PAGE 566



A Big Thing in the House

It's a big thing to get rid of half the wash-day work and expense.

It's a Big Thing

to do away with the disgusting suds-steam through the house; and to have sweet beautiful thoroughly purified clothes without boiling or scalding.

It's a Big Thing

to know that Fels-Naptha soap does what nothing else will do; takes out dirt, grease, grime and stains with cold or lukewarm water, and without hurting the most delicate fabric; simply dissolves the grease and dirt and takes them out.

It's a Big Thing

to have Fels-Naptha soap wash everything from the grimiest overalls to the daintiest silks and ribbons; clean your dishes, silver and glassware so they shine and glisten; and your tiles, tubs and oil-cloths—without hurting the varnish finish; and to do it all like magic in half the usual time.

It's a Big Thing

to be sensible; to drop a wrong old way when you learn of something better, and give a reasonable proposition a fair trial. And it's only a little thing to write to us for a free sample of Fels-Naptha soap if your grocer hasn't it; and prove the truth by following the easy directions on the wrapper.

Fels-Naptha Philadelphia

INCOME OF

6% per annum on sums of $100 or more, withdrawable after one year . . . . . .

5% per annum on any amount deposited, withdrawable at any time . . . . . .

SECURED by first mortgage on New York City improved real estate, and a guarantee fund of 10% of the face value of all mortgages in force.

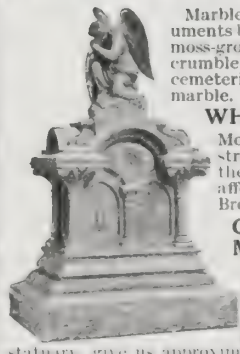
This corporation is subject to examination by the Superintendent of Banks of the State of New York.

KNICKERBOCKER SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY

(Established 1883)

38 Park Row New York City

IN MEMORIAM



Marble and granite monuments become discolored, moss-grown, and in time crumble and decay. Some cemeteries now prohibit marble.

WHITE BRONZE

Monuments are indestructible. Time and the elements do not affect them. White Bronze won both the Gold and Silver Medals at the St. Louis Exposition. If in need of monuments, markers, head stones, posts, grave covers or statuary, give us approximate sum you can spend, and we will send a variety of Beautiful Designs, prices, etc. No obligation to buy. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

AGENTS WANTED

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.

70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

Learn to Knit

Get the new Columbia Book of Yarns (6th edition), and follow the easy, clear instructions, and your knitting education is complete. Begins with the simplest stitch and shows how to knit many beautiful articles. 100 pages, 100 illustrations. A dollar book for 15 cents. At dealers' or by mail. COLUMBIA YARNS take a more brilliant color because they are finer than other yarns.

Look for the Columbia trade mark on the label around every skein.

Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

DON'T SHOUT!

"The Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E

34 South 16th St., Philadelphia

HAROLD HEARD, Indianapolis, Ind., at six months

His mother writes:

"At three months he suffered from inanition, and although many foods were tried he grew worse, until his death was hourly expected. A friend suggested

ESKAY'S FOOD

We tried it, and the pictures tell the result."

If your baby is sick or poorly nourished—try ESKAY'S FOOD. It nourishes and strengthens from the first feeding. SEND POSTAL TO-DAY for a liberal sample and our book "How to Care for the Baby." FREE on request.

SMITH, KLINE & FRENCH CO.
427 Arch Street Philadelphia, Pa.

HAROLD HEARD at eighteen months

"The Nation's pleasure-ground and sanitarium."—David Bennett Hill.

THE ADIRONDACK MOUNTAINS.

The lakes and streams in the Adirondack Mountains are full of fish; the woods are inviting, the air is filled with health, and the nights are cool and restful. If you visit this region once, you will go there again. An answer to almost any question in regard to the Adirondacks will be found in No. 20 of the "Four-Track Series," "The Adirondack Mountains and How to Reach Them"; issued by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL

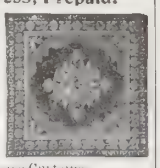
A copy will be mailed free on receipt of a two-cent stamp by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, Grand Central Station, New York.

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.25

Sent to your home by Express, Prepaid.

Sizes and Prices
9x 6 ft.,	$3.25
9x 7½ ft.,	3.75
9x 9 ft.,	4.25
9x10½ ft.,	4.75
9x12 ft.,	5.25
9x15 ft.,	6.25

Beautiful and attractive patterns, choice colorings. Woven in one piece. Both sides can be used, more durable than high-priced carpets. Sold to you direct at one profit. Money refunded if not satisfactory.



Also Importers of Portieres and Lace Curtains. New Spring Catalogue showing goods in actual colors, sent free.

ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 689 Bourse, Philadelphia, Pa.

LOANED FREE

32 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and Evangelistic Services.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago conscience was taking her severely to task. She winced under the pale radiance of Mr. Guffey's eyes, which seemed to focus itself directly upon her shrinking little self. "How can I be so cold?" she asked herself passionately. "Why do I not respond?"

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 565

She wished, with a curious, detached longing which seemed to lay hold upon her like an invisible hand, to rise and join the kneeling, weeping throng which was gathering in the front pews.

"One more!" the evangelist was saying, in low, urgent tones. "Two more——! Won't you come, brother? Won't you come, sister? Come now, or it may be too late!"

His strange, compelling eyes were riveted upon Miss Cynthia. He was speaking directly to her. She was rising—moving forward!

Miss Cynthia heard and saw all with the confused vision of a hypnotic. She was thinking of but one thing, and that was how to gain the front pew in the most expeditious manner possible. She knew that she could find peace in no other way—in no other place.

Then her dazed eyes fell upon Harriet Puffer. The child's pink mouth had fallen open; her little hands clutched rigidly at the back of the pew. Edwina, standing at her side, was bathed in tears. Both children were pale and wild-eyed. Miss Cynthia stopped short, the color rushing back to lips and cheeks. She smiled reassuringly at the twins. There was a vacant place in the pew beside them. She slipped in and sat down. The children cuddled close against her encircling arm like frightened birds. Of a sudden she seemed flooded with an immense light and peace. She smiled radiantly into the astonished face of the evangelist. His eyes no longer drew her toward the struggling, moaning crowd in the front seats.

His lips formed a single word —"Come!" He beckoned her with an authoritative gesture.

She shook her head, still smiling.

The "experience meeting" had begun. Miss Cynthia saw Mrs. Pettibone rise and slip away like a patient, smiling little ghost, to prepare the late supper for the evangelist, and she heard Mrs. Buckthorn's loud-whispered comment on her withdrawal. "A-shirkin' her dooty, as usual!"

It was Mr. Pettibone's kind, tired voice which urged everyone present to take some part in the meeting. He reminded them of their obligations to their Maker, who was not ashamed to call them his sons and daughters.

"He ain't got no more snap 'an a tow-string!" complained Deacon Scrimger in the ear of his wife.

"I wisht he'd resign!" she replied.

Miss Cynthia could never have told just how it happened, but suddenly she stood up beside the Puffer twins.

"To find God," she said quietly, "is to find love and happiness and peace—and life—within ourselves! We must love one another, and be kind—be kind." Then she passed quickly down the crowded aisles, and out under the quiet light of the stars.

It was bitterly cold, and the freshfallen snow creaked under her light feet. She was happy even joyous—in the deepest depths of her heart. All the fear and doubt and rigid holding on to life in the face of an awful, impending doom had left her.

"I am not afraid! I am not afraid!" she murmured, and lifted up her face to the dark sky, which seemed to stoop warm and close, like the kind face of an infinite and compassionate Love.

TO BE CONTINUED

Transformed by Grace

AT different times THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has published incidents in religious work, within its own knowledge, which showed, in a remarkable manner, the wonderful transforming power of Divine grace, not only in character and conduct, but even in the lineaments of the human face. The two photographs which appear above, illustrate this in a very striking way. These pictures are of the same man, once a desperate criminal, and known in many States as "Rebel George." The first photograph was taken on March 27, 1898; the second, five years later. He accepted Christ while behind prison bars.

THE SAME MAN, BEFORE AND AFTER REGENERATION

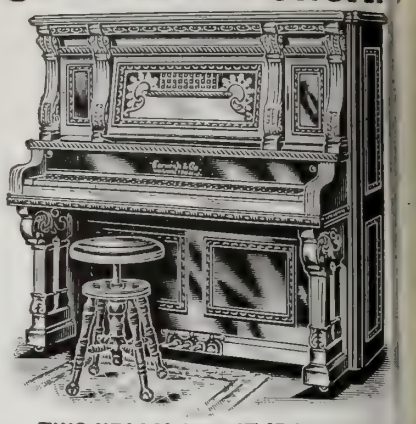
George K—— was born in Ohio, in 1849. He was involved in many crimes, and was finally convicted of felony in 1898, and imprisoned five years in San Quentin, Calif. It was during this experience that K—— was converted. He made full confession and surrender, and "all desire to sin was taken away from him." In the prison, he became a messenger of the Gospel to the other criminals. He worked with the aid of Gospel leaflets and books from the Moody Colportage Library, read to the men, talked with them, and had the joy of knowing that his humble ministry was producing good results. On being released he had a hard struggle to keep clear of wicked courses, but with God's help he triumphed. Since that time his life has been a model of simple, straightforward Christianity, and he has made many friends. His whole appearance is now that of a quiet, refined and thoughtful man.

It was the conviction of Evangelist D. L. Moody that there were many behind prison bars who, like this man, would yield to the Gospel story, if attractively presented. This led him to add to the work of the Bible Institute Colportage Association a new department, centreing about the Prison Book Fund, maintained by the voluntary contributions of interested friends the country over. This work, which lay perhaps closest to Mr. Moody's heart in point of need, opportunity and quick spiritual returns, was instituted in 1895, since which time more than 452,227 copies of Gospel books, Bibles, Testaments, "portions," magazines, tracts, etc., have been carefully circulated among the inmates of over 2,000 penal institutions, State prisons, penitentiaries, county and city jails, reformatories, convict camps and similar places. This vast amount of helpful literature, representing about fifty-seven tons of reading matter, has been sent for judicious distribution through the hands of chaplains (where any were attached to an institution), wardens, jailers and resident Christian lay workers. The demand is always greater than can be supplied. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are invited to assist in this great work of reaching an immense army of unsaved men and women.

CORNISH PIANOS AND ORGANS



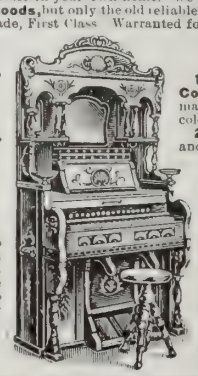
TWO YEARS' CREDIT IF NEEDED

Simple as A B C to furnish your home with a beautiful High Grade Cornish Piano or Organ, on a plan of payment arranged to meet your convenience. Special terms. We can satisfy any honest person and sell for one-half what agents and dealers charge. Everybody has the benefit of our Factory prices. Everybody can buy on any terms, for any reason. We will ship the Piano or Organ on 20 days' trial. Freight paid—no money in advance. Goods shipped at our risk and safe delivery guaranteed. Payment commences after one month's use in your own home. We do not make or sell cheap, trashy goods, but only the old reliable Cornish Pianos and Organs—High Grade, First Class. Warranted for twenty-five years.

$25 FIRST PAYMENT

Balance at your own convenience

Distance is no objection. We ship promptly everywhere. We have 250,000 satisfied patrons.



If you want to buy a first-class Piano or Organ at factory cost we invite you to write to us to-day for our remarkable collection of aids to purchasers.

FREE

1. The Beautiful Cornish Album, marvel of printing, color and design.
2. A set of colored and embossed Miniature Pianos and Organs.
3. Our unique registered reference book—5,000 recent purchasers' names and addresses—some that you know.
4. Our plan to give every purchaser 96 FREE music lessons the most successful tuition in the world.

All these FREE if you write AT ONCE and mention this magazine.

REMEMBER!!! We make here in our own large and complete Factories in beautiful Northern New Jersey, the World Renowned Cornish American Pianos and Organs. We employ hundreds of skilled mechanics, and we build and sell at First Cost direct to the general public the finest Pianos and Organs in America. You can't get a Cornish if you don't come to us direct, and if you do we insure your satisfaction by our iron-clad bond backed up by a Million Dollars of Plant and Property. Don't think of buying elsewhere—Get the Cornish Plan First.

$10 FIRST PAYMENT

Balance $5 a month or at your convenience

CORNISH CO. Washington, New Jersey

Established 50 Years

THE "GLEN" STEEL FOLDING MAT

THE ONLY MAT THAT BOTH FOLDS AND ROLLS UP.

NO dirt can exist in house where a Glen is used. Scrapes every particle of mud from the shoes. Neat and attractive, is easily cleaned and does not curl up. Its wonderful construction and flexibility will make it wear a lifetime. Unexcelled for residences and entrances to all public and private buildings. We make soda-fountain mats on same principle.

Write today for circular and price list.

Glen Manufacturing Co., Dept. A, Ellwood City, Pa.

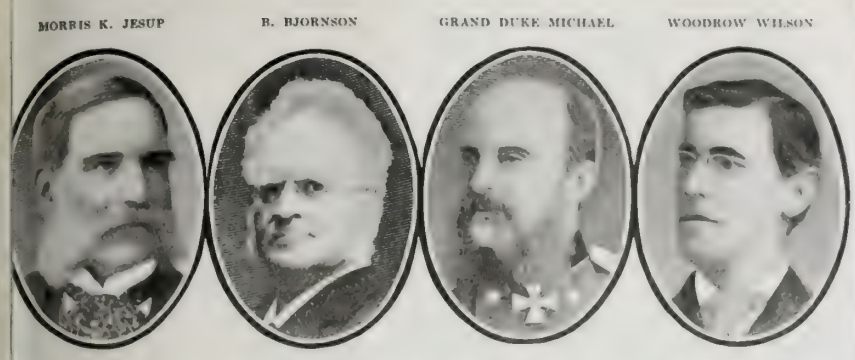
WOODBURY'S SOAP CREAM POWDER DENTAL CR.

FOR THE FACE

By deciding to try Woodbury's Facial Soap you build better than you know—It is literally a facial tonic. Stimulating while cleansing the outer self.

Send 10 cts. for samples of all four preparations.

The Andrew Jergens Co., Sole Licensee, Cin. O.



PROMINENT MEN of the HOUR

MORRIS K. JESUP, President of the American Museum of Natural History, has just received from Count Cassini, Russian Ambassador at Washington, notification of his appointment as a Knight of the Order of St. Stanislaus. The Order is one of the most exalted in Europe, and its members, in addition to the dignity of knighthood, have enjoyed the rank of hereditary nobles since 1831. A number of months ago Mr. Jesup gave to the Academy of Arts and Sciences at St. Petersburg a valuable series of the Jesup Exploration Collection. His collection is exceedingly valuable, and was greatly appreciated by the scientific men of Russia, as well as by the Emperor himself.

GRAND DUKE MICHAEL, granduncle of the Czar, has been announced as the choice of the Emperor for peace envoy at Washington. The Duke is famous in Russia for his sagacity, and, above all, for his moderation. He has made a distinguished record as a soldier, displaying great courage on several occasions. He was among the first to recognize the desperate nature of the present conflict, and while intensely patriotic, will endeavor to do all in his power to bring an end to the war.

WOODROW WILSON, President of Princeton University, preached a baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class at that university that aroused widespread attention. It is interesting to note that President Wilson is not a clergyman, and is among the first lay educators to preach in a college pulpit. He took for his subject, "The Struggle for Wealth." He said that educated men were never so much needed as at the present day, as "the modern struggle for wealth is more like a consuming fever than a right function of health." This statement has brought out a great deal of criticism from the newspapers of the country. They claim that the struggle fifty years ago was much harder, as the difficulties in the path of its attainment were much greater. Mr. Wilson was born in Virginia in 1856, and graduated from Princeton in 1879. He studied law and practised that profession until 1883. He taught history in Bryn Mawr College and Wesleyan University. In 1890 he was called to Princeton as a professor of jurisprudence and politics, and in 1902 was elected president.

BJORNSTJERNE BJORNSON, the most famous Norwegian poet and novelist, has taken a prominent part in the Norwegian literary movement. The poet has urged his countrymen to moderation, and he has always pointed out the danger that might come to them from either Russia or Germany, if a break should come with the sister nation of Sweden. He has returned to Norway, but it is uncertain what line of conduct he will pursue in the present crisis, although no Norwegian has been so much in the public eye for the last few weeks. He was born in 1832, and studied for a while at the University of Christiania. He became a journalist, and then a manager of a theatre. He lectured in America in 1880-81. Most of his writing have been translated into English.

John Chambers: Servant of Christ*

WHILE the skyrockets blaze upward or the hillside fires flare, it is hard to note the moon's rising, or the ascension of the fixed stars. Only at midnight, when all is still, is the steady radiance of the heavenly bodies appreciated at its full. So, while men in political, professional, or clerical life, are dazzling the public by their personality, it is hard to tell whether the very fire which is to test their work, be that kindled by stubble, or that shed by exhaustless star or fadeless gem.

Death clarifies, brings into full splendor and relegates to darkness. As the centuries move on, the glory of the Crucified becomes intensified. So, also, with the servants of Him who, though lifted up on a Roman gibbet, draws all men unto Him. Christian history is sown thick with the names of great men and women who were co-workers with the Master.

Of these, John Chambers of Philadelphia, was one. Active in every good work, a fearless foe of evil, a tireless shepherd, a pastor who worked unceasingly to win back a single erring soul, he was one of the Quaker City's most popular preachers during his fifty years' pastorate. But was his life and message "as the crackling of thorns under a pot?" Rather behold to-day a steady beacon. In the imposing Chambers-Wylie Memorial Church, on the fairest avenue in William Penn's city, in the Bethany Church, in the Church of the Love of God, in the various Chambers Memorial churches, in the heart of ten thousand people—under white locks or childhood's tresses—the name of John Chambers is yet revered. As many as nine congregations remember his name. Seen in perspective, the story of his life is one of romance and industry, flower-bordered and star-illumined with high ideals.

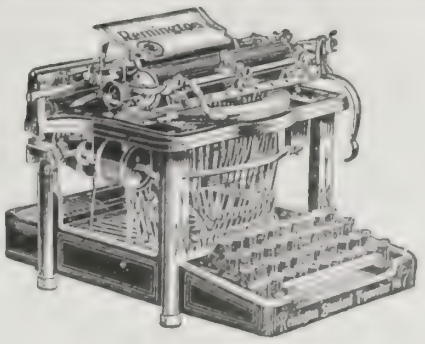
Born in Ireland, in 1798, the son of a refugee patriot, as a babe at the bosom, he was landed at Newcastle, Del., and in Ohio grew up in a log cabin among the stumps of cotted fields. To Baltimore, reached by horseback over the Alleghenies, the ambitious lad came for a livelihood and learning. He arrived in the now Monumental City in time to handle a spade, which all good Irishmen know how to do, in throwing up entrenchments to resist the British invasion. Truly converted to God, he began cottage prayer-meetings at once, with other young men, and under his pastor, Rev. John Mason Duncan, studied for the ministry. In due time he was licensed to preach, ordained in New Haven, Ct., by men whose names shine gloriously in American history, and in Philadelphia began his work of saving souls. He started a Sunday School in the thirties, when such nurseries of the churches were rare. He believed in sounding the trumpet of the printer's making, and was the first minister in Philadelphia to advertise the topics of his sermons. He built a new church edifice on the western border of the advancing city, which was then Broad Street. Soon this was overgrown and lengthened toward the East. In temperance work, in Missions, in Sunday School, on the public platform, in the homes of his people, John Chambers allowed himself no second place. Servant of all, he was spiritual guide and inspirer, especially to young men, who soon became his aids in the prayer-meeting. His communion seasons, at which 1,300 members participated, and at which "never less than seven and never more than one hundred and twenty" united with the church, were great events. He led at least four thousand persons to the Master. And the secret of all was his earnest presentation of the everliving Gospel applied to the conscience. No sermon ever closed without a personal appeal.

So does true biography inspire. Not mere eulogy, but critical appraisement is in this story of a fruitful life, which ended as to the flesh in 1876. John Chambers had no shining gifts of scholarship, he left no tomes of wisdom. He wrote his record on living hearts, and to-day a great city is greater, a country richer, the Christ Kingdom advanced because this winsome servant of Jesus lived and toiled.

John Chambers and His Ministry in Philadelphia*, by William Elliot Griffis, D.D., L.H.D. Andrus & Church, Ithaca, N. Y., publishers. Price $1, postpaid.

Our Cold Waves

We American are always talking about our mountains of gold and coal and iron, of our fat fields of corn and wheat, but few of us ever realize that we have in our climate a great advantage over all other nations. In the cold wave, which, in summer and winter, so often sweeps across the land, and sends the thermometer tumbling thirty degress in almost as many minutes, we have a constant, a never-diminishing asset of priceless value. The wave acts as a tonic, but, unlike any tonic made by man, it carries no reaction. No other land has cold waves.



30 Years
Of unquestioned ascendency.

30 Years
Of steady improvement in quality.

30 Years
Of constant increase in sales.

And Still Growing

This is the record of the

Remington
Typewriter

REMINGTON TYPEWRITER COMPANY, NEW YORK and EVERYWHERE

$30
Colorado
AND RETURN

Summer vacation rate from Chicago in effect daily, with correspondingly low rates from all points. A fine chance to visit this wonderful land of mountains, lakes and canons, of charming scenery and health-giving air at a minimum of expenditure. The best route is via the

CHICAGO, UNION PACIFIC AND NORTH-WESTERN

LINE. Two superbly appointed fast trains daily over the only double-track railway between Chicago and the Missouri River. The Colorado Special, only one night to Denver from Chicago; two nights from the Atlantic seaboard.

The Best of Everything.

Send 4 cents for booklets, maps, and full information as to hotels, boarding houses, rates, train service, etc.

All agents sell tickets via this line.

W. B. KNISKERN,
Pass'r Traffic Mgr. C. & N.-W. Ry.,
CHICAGO.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

UNION PACIFIC THE OVERLAND ROUTE

NW275

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo

CLEAN CUT CAKE TIN

FREE TO AGENTS
Outfit free Exp. prepaid.
HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

No argument is stronger than a convincing fact.

The claims of the

Emerson

Piano are backed by strong and unusual testimony. We have been making pianos 55 years, so that the Emerson has been on public trial for more than half a century, and in that time more than 83,000 have been sold

Is not this record in itself overwhelming proof of excellence? Does it not tell you its own story of tone-beauty, power, and permanence? Does it not suggest to you that with such an instrument at an extremely low price, you cannot afford not to investigate?

Write for illustrated Catalogue and Booklet describing our remarkable new Short Grand, the greatest American triumph in its line

Emerson Piano Company
117 Boylston Street, BOSTON
167 Michigan Ave., CHICAGO

Tuning up The Automobile

In "tuning up" the auto for a tour, lubrication is the chief consideration. For this purpose Dixon's Flake Graphite should be used. Half the pleasure of Automobiling depends upon the lubricant that makes everything go right—and keeps it going right. Write for lubricant booklet—then you'll know.

Department V,
JOSEPH DIXON CRUCIBLE CO.
JERSEY CITY, N. J.

The Velvet Grip EVERY PAIR WARRANTED

CORSET CLASP

CUSHION BUTTON

HOSE SUPPORTER

CLASP TOP STYLE

For attaching to lower edge of Corset
Quickly adjusted or removed

OF YOUR DEALER

Or Sample Pair on receipt of price.
Mercerized 25c. Silk 50c.

GEORGE FROST CO., Makers
Boston, Mass., U. S. A.

THE NAME is stamped on every Loop.

SOME HIGH-CLASS CHINESE FRIENDS OF THE MISSION

AN ACTIVE CHINESE MISSION

FOR the past two decades, few countries have been so interesting, from a missionary standpoint, as the Celestial Empire. The seed sown by heroic and self-sacrificing workers for the Master has begun to bear fruit, and the converted Chinaman has shown a steadfastness in the Christian life that might prove a worthy example to many who have been familiar with the Gospel from their earliest years. The good work already accomplished renders yet more vivid the contrast between the small Christianized spots and the vast country still given over to the religion of painted idols, and the misery and degradation that always accompanies it.

One of the most successful outposts of the Christian religion is that conducted by Rev. Lyder Kristensen and his wife. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has recently received from Mrs. Kristensen a very interesting account of their work at Norwegian Lutheran Mission, at Kuin Cheo.

"We have had an unusually large number of Chinese at our meetings during the first half moon of the Chinese New Year," she writes. "On the sixteenth of the first moon (Feb. 19), it is the custom, in this part of China, for every man, and woman and child, to go for a walk on the city wall, or in the idol temples, to worship their gods of wood and stone. By so doing, the Chinese believe they will be happy the whole year through. On that day we have crowds of people on our grounds from early morning to late at night. The Bible women and ourselves had the great joy of speaking of God's love to hundreds of women and children, who never in their life before heard a word about the Father's care for his children. The last crowd of women did not leave before it was dark.

"We have regular meetings going on for men and women each day of the week, and on Sunday five meetings are held. The Sunday forenoon services are always well attended, and often a large number have to stand outside. Inquirers' meetings are held Tuesday and Friday afternoons, prayer-meetings each Wednesday. On Monday and Thursday and Saturday forenoons there are house to house visitations. There are women's meetings on Thursday and Sunday afternoons. Prayer-meetings are held Thursday mornings before the service, and Sunday School with the school girls just after the afternoon service. There is also Sunday School for the Christian men; besides these meetings our chapel is open for two hours every night throughout the week, where Mr. Kristensen and the native evangelist preach to men from the city. Then comes the care and responsibility for the work in general, and attending to all the sick people who come to us, early and late, for help in their troubles.

"The opium curse is a terrible one in this part of China; it is heartbreaking to see how many are slaves to the deadly habit, and how many thousands shorten their lives by taking an overdose of the poison. When a Chinese husband and wife get angry with each other, the one who feels wronged, buys some of the drug and drinks it down with tea or water. They lie down to sleep, from which in most cases they never awake in this life. Many a time they come and beg us to go and save the life of a dear one, who has taken an overdose of opium in order to commit suicide. Such calls are always responded to by us no matter when they come.

"At the Chinese New Year we opened a day school for girls, and at present we have fourteen pupils, and in a few days we expect five more. We have our evangelist's daughter to help in teaching them, though we have to superintend the instruction throughout the entire day. These dear, small, brown faces, come each morning at nine, and study until one o'clock, when they go home for dinner. They come back again at 2:30, and study till it becomes about 6:30. They are so happy to be in our school, and they prefer it to their own homes. Many of them have very unhappy home life. The heathen Chinese say that the children in our school are well trained, and made fit to be good and loyal wives. This is a testimony worth something, as it is said by Chinese students. The lot of the Chinese girl is an unhappy one, and I long to bring to them the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

A College Chapel Dedicated

The old stone chapel at Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., with its vaulted ceilings and two arched doorways, made famous by the sermons preached in it during the last century by Dr. Mark Hopkins and his brother, lovingly called "Prof. Al," has passed into history. On an opposite eminence a new chapel has been built, costing over a quarter of a million of dollars—the most beautiful College Chapel in America. It stands a little southeast of the site of the famous "Haystack," where the idea of the formation of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions was originated in an outdoor prayer-meeting. The stone structure known as Goodrich Hall was taken down to make room for the new chapel. The building is nearly square in appearance, and yet cruciform, with many beautiful arched windows. The lofty tower is square, having eight long Gothic windows. The general aspect is that of strength, solidity and beauty. It will be known as the "Thompson Memorial Chapel."

The dedication services constituted a part of the one-hundred-and-eleventh commencement of this historic college. President Harry Hopkins presided. He is a descendant of Samuel Hopkins, D.D., author of the System of Divinity and the hero of The Minister's Wooing, and is the son of Dr. Mark Hopkins, who was a giant in the chair of Mental and Moral Philosophy, from 1836 to the time of his death.

The "Great White Plague"

Editor THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

I have been reading with deep interest your article, "Pilgrims of the Great White Plague," for the time has come when our New York City authorities must do something for the relief of the thousands of consumptives who walk the streets of our city, dying in their shoes. They frequent our Bowery Mission nightly and daily, just to rest upon our benches. They linger at our after-meetings for bed tickets, so weak and coughing and expectorating that even the lodging-houses often refuse to take them. At one of our after-meetings, a man sick with consumption came up to me and asked me to pray for him, and I said: "What would you like me to pray for?" and he replied: "For a bed for me to die in." When we get their consent to go to the Home for Incurables they are nursed up a little, and as soon as able to stand on their feet again they are dismissed, and back they come to us again, homeless and friendless. Our constant problem is what to do with the poor fellows. It is a growing problem to us in the Bowery Mission, how to befriend and provide for them. Some kind-hearted millionaires should provide some such homes as you describe, where these poor fellows could go and be kindly cared for.

MRS. SARAH J. BIRD.

FOOD IN SERMON

Feed the Dominie Right and the Sern are Brilliant.

A conscientious, hard-working and inently successful clergyman writes: "glad to bear testimony to the pleasure increased measure of efficiency and h that have come to me from adopting G Nuts food as one of my articles of diet.

"For several years I was much distre during the early part of each day by ind tion. My breakfast, usually consistin oatmeal, milk and eggs, seemed to turn and failed to digest. After dinner the h ache and other symptoms following the br fast would wear away, only to return, howe next morning.

"Having heard of Grape-Nuts food, I fi concluded to give it a fair trial. I quit th of oatmeal and eggs, and made my breaki of Grape-Nuts, cream, toast and Postum. result was surprising in improved health total absence of the distress that had, fo long a time, followed the morning meal. digestion became once more satisfactory, headaches ceased, and the old feeling energy returned. Since that time, four y ago, I have always had Grape-Nuts foo my breakfast table.

"I was delighted to find also, that whe before I began to use Grape-Nuts food I quite nervous and became easily wearie the work of preparing sermons and in st a marked improvement in this respect resu from the change in my diet. I am convin that Grape-Nuts food produced this re and helped me to a sturdy condition of me and physical strength.

"I have known of several persons who w formerly troubled as I was, and who h been helped as I have been, by the use Grape-Nuts food, on my recommendati among whom may be mentioned the R ——now a missionary to China." Na given by Postum Company, Battle Cre Mich.

"There's a reason."

Read the little book, "The Road to W ville," in each pkg.

All kinds of frozen desserts—ices, sherbets, chilled fruits, etc.—can be made at home easily and at trifling cost with the famous the only freezer with marvelous triple motion which makes a finer, mellower cream.

Triple Motion WHITE MOUNTAIN Ice Cream Freezer

"FROZEN DAINTIES"

our new book containing 50 receipts, will be sent free on request. Write for it to-day.

WHITE MOUNTAIN FREEZER CO.,
Dept. A, Nashua, N. H.

A book about 4% and Banking by Mail

We have just published an interesting booklet F describing the methods and management which have led 49,000 careful investors all over the United States and from many foreign countries to deposit their money by mail in this bank.

This booklet explains the local conditions which enable us to pay 4 per cent on deposits with absolute safety; and shows the great advantage of our simple banking-by-mail system.

Shall we send you booklet F?

Assets: Twenty-six million dollars.
49,000 depositors.
Small accounts welcome.

The Cleveland Trust Company

CLEVELAND OHIO

OOD CAUSES HELPED

The following sums have been contributed by our readers for the support of the rthy causes mentioned below:

Any Good Cause

M Maggie Landen- ch..... 2 00
M H H McEwen. 1 00
Nie Whiter 50
Mgaret M McCoy.. 1 00
J D. Walnut, Ia 2 00
M P Nevinger..... 50
Lis Name, Gray's ver, Wash. 3 00
M H M Anderson . 50
Takes..... 50
M A J Dexter.. 50
H Haldane 50
M F H Stevens 50
Mr. Mrs J A Wright 25
M S F Doremus . 2 00
M W Cummings 50
M Ziemer..... 2 25
Job Wittel..... 50
M C E Jenkins.... 1 00
M M J Burke..... 2 00
Fk H Peeston 50
Flood Goddard. 3 00
Clarine Eberhardt 25
Grad Roller. 50
M S Ballard..... 50
J P, Florence, Mass 1 00
L cCuteneon 25
Fdorwich, N Y 1 00
Dniel Grim 50
A friend. Trenary, ch 3 00
O N Welander 25
A L Yohn 75
M C L Brown 1 00
M L A Woodward 50
M Gettysburg, Pa. 1 00

Foreign Missions

J Barney..... 50 00
Flood (for Africa) 5 00
Flood (for China) 5 00
M Lucius Agard. 50
M John Pierce..... 2 00
— Waldo, Fla. 45
C Tinker (for Rev Paton) 5 00
Mrs J Shellenberger r Rev J Paton) 6 00
M J G Muir (for y J Paton) 1 00
W Lowry (for India) 4 60

Society of Soul Winners

J Barney..... 10 00
C Kans..... 50 00

African S Sch Union

J Barney 10 00

Home Missions

J Lewalt..... 2 00
M Laura E Raub 5 00

Jey McAuley Mission

C Kans..... 10 00
N aves..... 5 00
Jas Dougherty 1 00
C Kans..... 100 00

Ison-Gate Mission

Jennette B Ibsen. 5 00
C Kans 10 00
J Bogle 5 00
L arich and family 5 00
In His Name, Monct. Ariz..... 1 00
H N, Brooklyn, N Y 50
Mr Garvin Hetherton 1 00
P Vanzant..... 5 00
J Bell 50
L Bickley 1 00
Mrs W F Gillespie. 3 00
C Kans 50 00
In s Name, Oswe- Ill 3 75
M Sarah Tillotson. 50
Mi Anna B Raub 5 00

Wrey Rescue Mission

C Kans..... 10 00

Missionary Rest House

Reier, Thornville, O. 2 00
M M E Curl 65

Pundita Ramabai

I God 5 00
M M Huffman.. 3 00
Mrs H Miller 10 00

Ms. Anna Kristensen

Reier, Delevan, Wis 1 00

African Bible Society

Geo J Thompson 5 00
Mrs Wm Donaldson 5 00
Pittsburgh Presby'n
G Wrightston'n, N J 3 00

Miss Shattuck

Mrs Wm Rollo 10 00
Mr Herbert Allen. 5 00
Mrs J A Guffin 12 00
Mr B Sturges 60 00
Mr and Mrs J C Puttelsey..... 30 00

Invalid Child'n's Home

J Barney..... 10 00
C Kans 10 00
Mrs G Van Gelder 2 00
C Kans 50 00
Mrs De Atley. 1 00
A Subscriber, Clayton, Texas 50
Mrs Margery Raub Irvine 5 00

Armenian Fund

I Grod 5 00
Mrs F Longenecker.. 5 00
Helen Fray 10 00

Hull House

C B. Kans 10 00
C B. Kans. 50 00

Steele Orphanage

C B. Kans 10 00
J E Bogle 5 00
C B. Kans 100 00

The White Door

Girls' Friendly Soc. Binghamton, N Y 5 60
C B. Kans 10 00
L Emrick and family. 5 00
A S. Elizabeth, Pa 1 50
Mrs Addie Tipler 75
C B. Kans 100 00

Jacob Riis Settlement

C B. Kans 10 00
C B. Kans 50 00

Lepers in India

(Miss Reed)

Marie S Ladd 1 00
James Weand..... .05
A Friend, Bedford, Mass 15 00

Rev. E. Snook, P. I.

Jeannette B Ibsen 10 05

Sch. for Poor Boys, Ga.

Friend, Cleveland, O. 15 00

Relief Wk. Among Poor

C B. Kans 10 00
J M Polhemus 1 30
W A Dyer 2 50
A Friend, Trenary, Mich 2 00
In His Name, Oswego, Ill 3 75
Miss Laura E Raub.. 5 00

E. Olsson's Work

H Farnsworth 1 00
Mary J Shellenberger 6 00

Phil. S'nday Br'kf'st. Ass.

C B. Kans 10 00

Dr. W. F. Grenfell

S J H. Germantown, Pa 50

Gospel Wk. in Guam

S J H. Germantown, Pa 50

Fanny Crosby Fund

George Williamson. 1 00
S Sch of Presby Ch. Sacket's Harbor, N Y 1 40

Rev. N. Zamora, P. I.

Jeannette B Ibsen 5 05
B P. Waupaca, Wis. 5 00
Mary J Shellenberger 6 00

Door of Hope

C B. Kans 50 00
Mrs Sarah Tillotson 50

Rose H. Lathrop

Mrs H M Frederici . 2 00

Cremorne Mission

G H W. Shandon, Calif 50

Elhanon Home, N. C.

F M Fritz 5 00

Work Among Eskimos

In His Name, Oswego, Ill..... 3 75

Mayesville Institute

Miss Helen C Buttner 25 00

F. Crittenton Mission

C B, Kans 100 00

Salvation Army

J G Bell..... 50
In His Name, Oswego, Ill..... 3 75

S.A. Break'f'ts. for Poor

Mrs John Pierce. 1 00

Working Girls Home Fd.

(Mrs. Booth)

Helen S Dickinson. 1 00

Calvary Nursery, N. C.

J G Bell. 50

Rev. J. A. O'Connor's Wk.

Miss J Redman 2 00

S. Home for Blind Babies

L R Bickley 1 00

Foreigner's Mission

C B. Kans 56 00

Called Higher

Miss Jessie T. Decker died at her home, 444 Cort Street, Rochester, N Y., Feb. 22. She was a life-long invalid, and is happy at last with her Lord she loved so much.

Entered into rest at her home at Turner's, Mo., on April 15th, 1905, Miss Edith Turner.

O parents, brothers, sisters dear,
For her sweet spirit have no fear.
No dread can it appal,
For while in health and happiness,
This truth she held in sacredness,
That "Christ is all in all."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Character Making

GEORGE ELIOT, in one of her novels, speaks of "that inexorable law of human souls, that we prepare ourselves for sudden deeds by that reiterated choice of good and evil which determines character." This is the height to which at last habit climbs. The character is the man. Habit is seen moving into the realms of the moral nature, and, like the contracting tire about the felloe of the wheel, binding all the parts into a fixed whole.

We start out in life with a varied equipment. No two of us are at the beginning alike. But even then we discover that habit has already been at work. We belong to a race, a nation, a family, a place, and there are racial, national, family and local habits. These continue from generation to generation and leave their impress upon each individual. The crowd of immigrants whom one sees at Ellis Island have ways that are as distinctive of the country from which they came as is their costume, or their speech. They may be quickly absorbed into our American life, but should you go into their homes years hence you will find many things to show that they were originally Scandinavian, or Irish, or Italian. Our habits are something more than our repeated acts, in ways that have become familiar and easy to us. They are the expression of changes that have taken place in ourselves. This is the real explanation of their becoming habits. The baby had an instinct to suck. Feeding it with a spoon soon destroys that instinct. A change takes place in the baby. The dog has an instinct to bury his bone; bring him up in the house, at first he will scratch the carpet, to make a hole for his bone, but feed him abundantly and he will soon lose the instinct.

Habit shapes the body, we all know. The soldier walks erect, the sailor sways or rolls in his gait, the shoemaker grows round-shouldered, as the student often does. A man's occupation records itself in his bodily lines, and the lines remain long after the occupation ceases. The more important truth is, that habits affect the man himself; they make character. Habits, which, in the animals, and in the beginning of life with us, are prompted by instinct, are, in the main, in man, the result of choice. Our mental and moral nature is so constructed that choices tend to perpetuate themselves. Each choice is a step in the path in which the second step is easier than the first, and, in a measure, follows from it.

*From The Right Life, by Henry A. Stimson. Mr. Stimson has handled this vital subject in a most interesting way, and his style is far removed from the dry and somewhat preachy method so often adopted in treating ethical topics. Starting with a person's relation to himself, he deals in turn with the universe, the family, the world of men, God, habit and character, conscience, etc. Price, $1.20. Published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

Books Received

Southern Writers; Selections in Prose and Verse; edited by W. P. Trent. A volume of selections designed primarily for use in schools and colleges. Well deserving a place in any library as a work of reference. Pp. 524, cloth covers. Price $1.10. The Macmillan Co., London and New York, publishers.

The Mormon Menace, being the confession of John D. Lee, the Danite under Brigham Young. A remarkable book, which tells the innermost secrets of the Mormon system. Pp. 368, cloth covers. Price $1.50. Home Protection Co., 156 Fifth Avenue, N. Y., publishers.

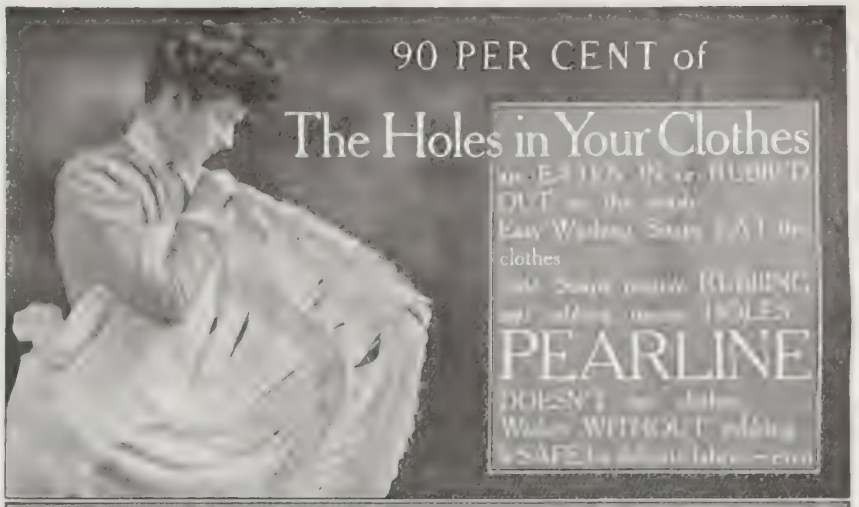
For a Free Conscience, by L. C. Wood. A capital story. Pp. 414. Price $1.50, cloth binding. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Toronto, and Chicago, publishers.

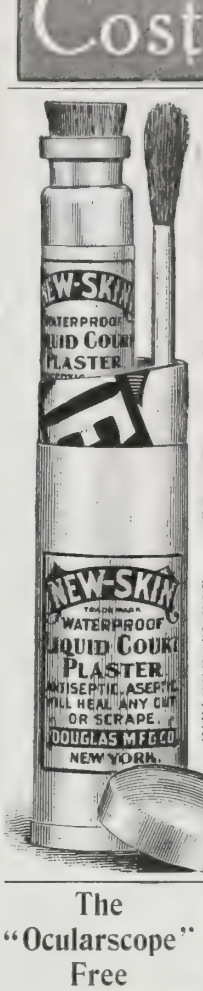
Girdle of Gladness, a volume of poems, by Arad Joy Sebring. These are on miscellaneous topics, principally religious. Pp. 63, cloth covers. Richard G. Badger, Boston, publisher.

The Parochial School, a Menace to the Nation, by Rev. J. J. Crowley. This is an expose of the Catholic parish school system, by one who knows it intimately. Pp. 482, cloth covers. Price $1. Published by the author, Sherman House, Chicago, Ill.

The Traveler's Hand-Book. A neat little comprehensive Manual for transatlantic tourists, valuable to any one traveling abroad. By Josephine Tozier. Pp. 211, cloth covers. Price $1. Funk & Wagnalls, New York and London, publishers.

New Music Received: America's Prayer, a national anthem, by Grace B. Maxwell, Greencastle, Ind. Trust to the Father's Care, song and chorus, by Harriet J. Decker; Pioneer Publishing Co., Chicago. For Home and Commerce, song, with piano solo, by J. W. Betts, Chicago, Ill. Hail America, a national song and quartette, by the same author.





NEW-SKIN
TRADE MARK REGISTERED
WATERPROOF
LIQUID Court Plaster

Heals Cuts, Abrasions, Hang-Nails, Chapped and Split Lips or Fingers, Burns, Blisters, etc. Instantly Relieves Chilblains, Frosted Ears, Stings of Insects, Chafed or Blistered Feet, Callous Spots, etc., etc.

A coating on the sensitive parts will protect the feet from being chafed or blistered by new or heavy shoes.

Applied with a brush and immediately dries, forming a tough, transparent, colorless, waterproof coating.

Mechanics, Sportsmen, Bicyclists, Golfers, Etc. are all liable to bruise, scratch or scrape their skin. "NEW SKIN" will heal these injuries. WILL NOT WASH OFF, and after it is applied the injury is forgotten, as "NEW SKIN" makes a temporary new skin until the broken skin is healed under it. Lasts

Pocket Size sized illustration 10c
Family Size 25c
2 oz. Bottles for Surgeons and Hospitals 50c

At the Druggists, or we will mail a package anywhere in the United States on receipt of price.

DOUGLAS MFG. CO., Dept. 33 96-102 Church St., N.Y.

Valuable Information Pertaining to Oil

A new, Free, copyrighted book, by Otto G. Tague, Editor of The Oil News, the recognized oil organ, will be mailed to any address.

This book gives detailed information that all persons interested in oil should have. It tells how leases are obtained; how companies should be organized; how companies in which stockholders lost money during the past three years were organized and mismanaged; how money was lost; the only manner in which oil can be produced profitably; the percentage of profits; gives data as to cost of obtaining leases, drilling wells and operating same—in fact, contains reliable information that leaves the reader fully posted on the production of petroleum and the profits to be made therefrom.

This Book is Free for the Asking

A postal card will bring it. It offers nothing for sale, but is given as a souvenir for the purpose of increasing the patronage of The Oil News.

OTTO G. TAGUE, Editor The Oil News
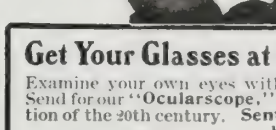
319 Opera House Block, Lima, O., U. S. A.

The "Ocularscope" Free

Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "Ocularscope," the latest invention of the 20th century. Sent Free, with our beautiful Illustrated Catalogue of spectacles and eye glasses. Mail order only. Send to day.



GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS
402 Houseman Building, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Talking Parrots Free

Fine, tame parrots, perfect beauties, sure to make splendid talkers. Parrots are very long-lived, many living to reach the age of thirty, forty or sixty years. They are a never-ending source of pleasure and astonishment with their adroit remarks at opportune times, showing them to have almost the reason of human beings. Parrots like these we give free sell at $10 each or more.

We have contracted for a large supply of these fine parrots, all tame birds, raised by hand, that may be safely petted and handled, and will delight any family fortunate enough to secure one. Extra tame birds like these are valuable and expensive. Every one wanting a parrot should act at once. A parrot as above described will be given free and can be sent safely anywhere to any one sending us twenty-four yearly subscriptions to THE AMERICAN QUEEN at the special price of 25 cents a year.

THE AMERICAN QUEEN is the best household, family and fiction magazine, now in its ninth successful year. We want to add 200,000 new subscribers to our list at once and will spare no expense to accomplish this object and to make it the best household magazine published; we have unlimited capital that will be used for this purpose. Sample copies supplied free to show to your friends.

THE AMERICAN QUEEN, Dept. 23
125 East 23d Street, - - New York.

"Hello Polly"

Parrots are the most jolly, sociable and interesting of all home pets. We import great numbers of choice, young, hand raised birds which are unsurpassed, and we guarantee every bird to learn to talk.

Price $3.90 Each

and upwards, if ordered before Aug. 1st, including shipping case and food for journey. Good cage $1.40. Illustrated catalogue free if you mention this paper. Imported German Canaries $2.40 each. Complete bird book 25c.

IOWA BIRD CO., Des Moines, Ia.

No Money Required

until you receive and approve of your bicycle. We ship to anyone on

TEN DAYS FREE TRIAL

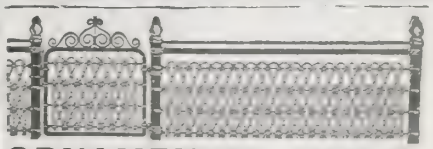
Finest guaranteed 1905 Models $10 to $24
with Coaster-Brakes & Puncturelss Tires.
1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes $7 to $12
500 Second-Hand Wheels
All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8
GREAT FACTORY CLEARING SALE.
RIDER AGENTS WANTED in each town to ride and exhibit sample wheel. Write at once for catalogue and Special Offer.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAGO

LEPAGE'S PHOTO PASTE
IN JARS AND TUBES.

For photo or general use. Dries quickly—never discolors paper. Very strong—corners will not curl. Largest bottle now sold for 5c., by mail, 10c.; in bulk for large users, carton work, etc.

LEPAGE'S MUCILAGE
2 oz. size retails 5c., by mail, 10c.

LEPAGE'S GLUE—1 oz., 10c.; by mail, 12c., bot. or tube. RUSSIA CEMENT CO., 154 Essex Avenue, Gloucester, Mass.



ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Cleverly considering Grace, Strength, and Durability. Moderate in cost. Sold direct to you. Catalogue Free. Box 302 KITSELMAN BROS., Muncie, Ind.

Invest Your Savings at Pleasantville Terrace

Hundreds of people who acted on this advice have already nearly doubled their money.

Pleasantville Terrace is unquestionably the greatest real estate investment opportunity now available anywhere.

Here are some of the many excellent reasons that have induced so many thoughtful people to invest in Pleasantville Terrace:

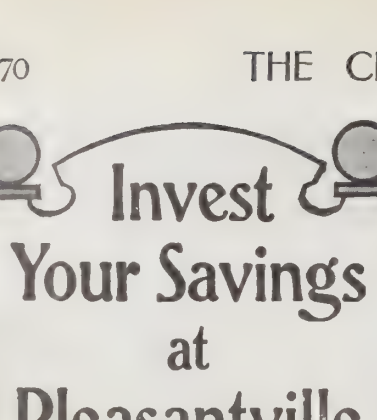
Pleasantville Terrace is intersected by the main line of the Atlantic City Railroad (Reading system), 11 minutes from the Boardwalk. All trains stop there, except express.

Pleasantville Terrace is 55 feet higher than Atlantic City—the only desirable high ground suitable for building, in or near Atlantic City. No swamps. No malaria.

Atlantic City real estate values have grown enormously. The entire island was originally sold for less than $20 an acre—now valued considerably over $90,000,000.

A lot 50 x 100, that cost $700, was sold a few months ago for $50,000. A property bought five years ago for $6000 was sold a few days ago for $150,000. But Atlantic City has practically outgrown the boundaries of the island on which it stands. It must expand inland.

FRANKLIN P. STOY, Mayor of Atlantic City, says: "I regard Pleasantville Terrace as the natural suburb of Atlantic City."



BEACH SCENE, ATLANTIC CITY
11 Minutes from Pleasantville Terrace

We anticipated this a few years ago by purchasing the General Doughty estate, and laid out Pleasantville Terrace. If we had to buy this land now, we would have to charge many times the prices we ask.

Just think of it—a building lot 25 x 100 feet—11 minutes from Atlantic City's Boardwalk, for prices and terms like this:

1 Lot, $30—$1 cash, $1 weekly
2 Lots, $60—$2 cash, $1 weekly
3 Lots, $85—$3 cash, $2 weekly
4 Lots, $110—$4 cash, $2 weekly
5 Lots, $135—$5 cash, $2 weekly

The company definitely guarantee continuously increasing values and insure successful development of Pleasantville Terrace by offering special premiums to those who will build.

Title is guaranteed. No mortgages. No taxes until 1906. No charge for deed. If you die before lot is paid, we issue deed to your heirs without further payments.

Whether you want to buy for a home near the country's greatest playground, or for investment, by all means investigate this proposition. Do it to-day.

ATLANTIC CITY ESTATE CO.
Victor J. Humbrecht, President
1001 Drexel Bldg., Philadelphia

Please send me illustrated booklet describing in full Pleasantville Terrace.

Name.....

Address .....

FLOWERS

(See illustration on first page)

CHILDREN of dew and sunshine, balmy flowers!
Ye seem like creatures of a heavenly mould
That linger in this fallen earth of ours,
Fair relics of her Paradise of old.

Amidst her tombs and ruins, gentle things,
Ye smile and glitter in celestial bloom;
Like radiant feathers dropped from angel wings,
Or tiny rainbows of a world of gloom.

Yes; there is heaven about you; in your breath
And hues it dwells. The stars of heaven ye shine;
Bright strangers in a land of sin and death,
That talk of God, and point to realms divine.

Childhood and you are playmates; matching well
Your sunny cheeks, and mingling fragrant breath.
Ye help young Love his faltering tale to tell;
Ye scatter sweetness o'er the bed of Death.

Sweet flowers, sweet flowers, be mine to dwell with you!
Ye talk of song and sunshine, hope and love;
Ye breathe of all bright things, and lead us through
The best of earth to better still above.

HENRY FRANCIS LYTE.

The Indwelling Christ*

MANY people are puzzled by such expressions as that which is the subject of consideration this week. "How," they ask, "can any one, human or divine, be said to dwell within another?" Allowing for the Orientalism of the phrase, there is less mystery in it than appears at first sight. We all understand what influence means, and it is easy to see that influence may be weak or powerful in proportion to the strength of character of the person exerting that influence and the person subject to it. It may be declined in the positive, comparative, and superlative degree. "Indwelling" is the superlative. When a man loves his son, and the son not only loves, but intensely admires his father, it is easy for one who has never seen the father, to understand from the son's conversation and conduct, the kind of man the father is. His opinions on politics and society, his manner of looking at all questions, his habits and ways, all reflect the father, and give a reflection of him. It is sometimes so with a teacher of strong character. It used to be said that every Rugby boy during Dr. Arnold's administration bore the impress of that great man all through his life. It is often so in a certain degree with able writers. There are men who have been so inspired by Carlyle and Ruskin and Beecher and Phillips Brooks, that those giants of literature live in them. There is less original in the most original character than we recognize, or are conscious of. It is not always imitation, but an unconscious yielding to a power in which we have confidence.

What, then, is the power of the influence of Christ? If we regard him merely as a man, his life and character, as portrayed in the Gospels, excite our admiration and our reverence. It was a beautiful life, so gentle, so loving, so compassionate to the weak and the erring, that we instinctively feel for him the highest esteem. To be such a man as he, what higher aim could any man have? We can imagine a man being so wrapt up in that character, as to be changed in his own being. In every act and thought he might be influenced so that he would say, "What would my great Model have done and said in these circumstances?" That would be a natural result of the contemplation of that marvelous Being.

There is, however, a higher view of that influence. Suppose that the man who admires Christ, learns that he is still living and it is possible to communicate with him. How much closer is that relation! He can talk to his reverenced Model in prayer, and can lay before him the innermost secrets of his heart. He can tell his difficulties and get guidance from him. The Model has then become his friend and companion. After communion with him he goes forth to battle with temptation, and to help the weak and the erring as his Friend did. "I am with you alway," Christ said. The man has become a Christ's man, or, as we say, a Christian.

Then comes a deeper experience. Christ told of a mysterious power which existed in him. In the parable of the vine and the branches, he taught us that there was in him a reservoir of spiritual power accessible to us. There was bread that he could give, which would be perpetual sustenance; living water, which should perpetually assuage thirst. We see him limited and crippled by the poverty of human speech struggling to make his meaning clear to his followers. It was to be a close union, as close as body and soul. It was to be power, so that the things that he did, they might do also. It was to be abiding vitality, overflowing and inexhaustible, from which he supplied every need. It was to be eternal life, and because he lived, they should live also. It is impossible to describe so intimate a relation, but it may be experienced. If we put away the veil of sin and the desire for it: "We all with unveiled faces reflecting as a mirror the character of the Lord are transformed into the same image even as from the Lord."

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for July 9. Col. 2: 6-10; 3: 8-16.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELISTS HART AND MAGANN, of Fairbury, Ill., have recently conducted successful revival services in First M. E. Church, St. James, Minn., and First M. E. Church, Clinton, Mo. There were about three hundred professions in these meetings.

—THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION of Waller County, Tex., is to erect a monument to the memory of Hon. John M. Pinckney, whose tragic death occurred at Hempstead, Tex., April 24, 1905, while engaged in an effort to establish law and order.

—MRS. E. M. WHITTEMORE writes us that the "Mother Home" of the Door of Hope, has now been established at Tappan, N. Y., upon a beautiful tract of forty-three acres, with commodious buildings. There are now sixty-five branch Doors of Hope in different parts of the country.

—MARY SHARP, the well-known American missionary in Liberia, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that Mr. D. W. Washington, of Memphis, Tenn., has contributed $960 toward building a new schoolhouse and church for her work among the Kroos. One of the first converts under Miss Sharp's ministry will have spiritual charge of the church services. Miss Sharp has now been in the African mission field twenty-seven years.

—THE EPWORTH LEAGUE International Convention at Denver, July 5-9, will number thousands of earnest young Prohibitionists among its delegates. There will be forty-one great Young People's Rallies during the four days' sessions, one of which, Saturday night, July 8, at Coliseum Hall, has been arranged as a Temperance demonstration. Two other rallies the same night are announced, with "Citizenship" and "Education and Culture" as their allotted subjects.

Helping the Ex-Prisoners

THE work of the New York Prison-Gate Mission is making excellent progress. Last month over 800 ex-prisoners were met as they came forth to liberty from the penal institutions of New York, besides many that came from other States. Not only does the Mission feed and shelter these unfortunates, but it is frequently called upon to clothe them. It also attends to their spiritual wants by pointing them to the Friend of sinners. One of the main objects is to find them employment as soon as possible. And this has been done in several hundred cases the past winter and spring.

Some time ago, two farmers, one in Maryland and the other in New York, wrote to the Superintendent, offering to employ two of our men on a farm. The Mission sent them. Both men gave satisfaction. Letters recently received show the success of the Prison-Gate Mission in bringing about the restoration of men who were once outcast from society.

ROYAL OAK, MD.

H—— is getting along nicely, he seems to like his home; he attends church regularly. I take him to the League and try to throw around him every religious influence. After he came here I got him clothes for every-day work and clothes for Sunday, and had his hair cut, and now he looks like a different man. He goes to Sunday School and is in the Bible class. I want to get him into the Church if I can. Pray for me that the Lord may bless me in that effort. I like him very much.

J. W. S.

SCHUYLERVILLE, N. Y.

Your man is trying to learn farming as fast as possible, and is very sincere. He is satisfied with the place, and will stay, at least through the season. I believe now he is going to be an upright, honest man and Christian through our Redeemer. I am now in my ninety-third year; I expect soon to go home to my Saviour. I. V.

Contributions may be sent to Mr. Andrew A. Knowles, Treasurer, 33 Wall Street, New York.

MELLIN'S For the Baby FOOD

A baby who frets, worries, cries, or sleeps poorly is probably poorly nourished, unless there is actual disease. Mellin's Food provides plenty of good nourishment; easily digestible, and does away with all fretting and crying. Try Mellin's Food; we will send you a sample.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infant Food, which received the Grand Prize the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

REDUCED RATES TO BALTIMORE

Via Pennsylvania Railroad, Account International Convention United Society of Christian Endeavor.

For the International Convention United Society of Christian Endeavor, at Baltimore, Md., July 5 to 10, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell round-trip tickets to Baltimore, at greatly reduced rates, from stations on its lines east of and including Pittsburgh, Erie, and Buffalo.

The rate from New York will be $6, Newark, N. J., $6.10, with corresponding reductions from all other points.

Tickets will be sold on July 3, 4, and 5, good for return passage leaving Baltimore until July 15, inclusive. On payment of $ to Joint Agent at Baltimore an extension of return limit to August 31 can be obtained.

Tickets via Philadelphia permit stop-over within limit, if deposited with the ticket agent at Broad Street Station.

Special excursion tickets are on sale every Saturday and Sunday from Baltimore to Washington and return at rate of $1.25 for the round trip. These tickets are good for return passage until the last train Sunday night, affording ample opportunity for delegates to visit the National Capital.

Bee Keeping—

Without doubt the most pleasant and profitable occupation in which men or women can engage is bee culture.

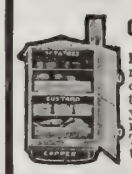
THE
A. I. ROOT CO.
MEDINA, OHIO,

largest makers of beekeepers supplies in the world, will gladly supply interested persons with the most advanced ideas on this important topic.

Ask Root—he KNOWS

A FINE COOK FOR $1.00 A YEAR

By using the



O-HI-O Combined Steam Cooker & Baker

Guaranteed to save 50 per cent in fuel, labor, time and provisions. A whole meal, from soup to dessert, cooked over one burner on any style stove, No intermingling of odors or tastes. Insures you deliciously cooked, easily digested, never spoiled, steaming hot meals. Thirty days trial. Fine for summer cottages. Grand for Canning Fruit.

Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue Free.
$1 Cook Book for 4c postage. We want Good Agents. Guarantee $30 to $40 weekly and expenses.
O-HI-O COOKER CO., 727 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, O.

FENCE Stronges Made

See how closely it is woven. Sold direct to the farmer at factory prices, on 30 Days Free Trial. Your money back if not satisfied. Write today for free Catalogue.

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY
Box 47, Winchester, Indiana

BIG INCOMES

$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK

for getting orders for our Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder, Spices, and Extracts. For full particulars and Special Terms address at once Mr. P. B., care of

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289. 31-33 Vesey St., New York.

$75 MONTH & EXPENSES POSITION PERMANENT; NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED; SELF SELLER. PEASE MFG. CO. STA. K CIN. O.

Another Munificent Donation

FROM the same source from which we recently received $2,000 for distribution among missionary and philanthropic institutions, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received another check for $1,000, which ...m has been apportioned as follows:

...dustrial Orphanage, Ahmednagar, India Rev. R. A. Hume	$100 00
...incoln University, Cumberland Gap, Tenn. Gen. O. O. Howard	100 00
...ayesville Institute for Colored Children, Mayesville, S. C	50 00
...remorne Mission, New York	50 00
...nday Breakfast Mission, Philadelphia, Pa.	50 00
...issionary Rest Home, Goshen, N. Y	50 00
...esley Rescue Mission, New York	50 00
...lhanan Home, Miss Mattie Perry, Marion, N. C	50 00
...oyers Street Midnight Mission, New York.	50 00
...ome for Blind Babies, Brooklyn, N. Y	50 00
...ciety for Suppression of Vice, Anthony Comstock, New York	50 00
...nnesseetown Mission, Rev. Charles M. Sheldon Topeka, Kans	50 00
...oravian Mission, Rev. Ch. Schmitt, Nain, Labrador	50 00
...ospel Mission among the Cubans, Rev. Joseph Norwood, Ybor City, Tampa, Fla	50 00
...iving Waters Mission, New York	50 00
...ational Temperance Society, New York	50 00
...amen's Association, New York	50 00
...bigail Mission, C. P. De Vare	50 00

UNDER DISCIPLINE

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THE ways of God with man are essentially different to the ways of man ...ith man. "The Lord seeth not as man ...eth; for man looketh on the outward ...ppearance, but the Lord looketh on ...e heart" (I. Sam. 16: 17). Man exalts ...s fellow-man for his good deeds; God, on ...e contrary, takes pains to humble yet ...ore those who are faithful to him, in ...der that he may more fully dwell in ...em (Isa. 57: 15). Thus our Lord says of ...s Father, as the great Husbandman, Every branch (in me) that beareth fruit ...e purgeth it, that it may bring forth ...ore fruit" (John 15: 2). "Whom the ...ord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth ...ery son whom he receiveth" (Heb. 12: 6). ...ust because he tells us, "From me is thy ...uit found" (Hos. 14: 8), and, "Without ...e ye can do nothing" (John 15: 5), ...herefore he brings his chosen ones into ...eeper and deeper chastenings and humil...tions, that he may have more room in ...em and through them, to manifest him...lf and his working.

God's school for his children cannot but ...e an enigma to men of the world; but to ...ose whose eyes are open to see the ways ...f God, his love and his wisdom are ...ear as the day, in his dealings with his ...ildren. Hezekiah was a true man of ...od; therefore it was worth while that he ...ould pass through a severe school. We ...o back to Isa. 38th to study his prayer. ...is in the time of our communion with ...od that our real condition comes to light. ...ezekiah was only thirty-nine years of ...ge when the message from the Lord came ...o him through his friend the prophet ...aiah. "Thus saith the Lord, Set thine ...ouse in order, for thou shalt die and not ...ve." It must have been hard for him to ...ear that he should be sick unto death ...st at the time when the enemy was at ...e gates, and still harder that, after all ...s faithfulness, he should receive this mes...ge from God that he who had been so ...uch better than his father and the kings ...ho preceded him, should be cut off in the ...rime of life like the wicked, who only ...live out half their days."

But could he, would he, trust the Lord ...hen all seemed so dark? In his trouble ...e did not reproach God, but as a man ...nder the law he pleaded his own faith...lness: "Remember now, O Lord, I be...ech thee, how I have walked before thee ...truth, and with a perfect heart, and ...ave done that which is good in thy sight." ...nd Hezekiah wept sore. The inspired ...ord of God says of him, "He did that ...hich was right not only in his own eyes, ...ut in the eyes of the Lord, according to ...ll that David, the man after his own ...eart, had done." How could he under...and God's ways with him? He had ...ead, "Because thou hast made the Lord ...hich is my Refuge, even the Most High, ...y habitation, there shall no evil befall ...hee, neither shall any plague come nigh ...y dwelling" (Ps. 91: 9, 10); and the ...lague had come nigh his dwelling, and laid hold on him; and God had said that he should die. Hezekiah wept sore.

"Then came the Word of the Lord to Isaiah, saying, Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of David thy father." This way of addressing him must have gone to his heart. Ahaz, his earthly father, had been a wicked man, who had shut up the temple of the Lord and established idolatrous worship in Judah. God does not look upon Hezekiah as the son of Ahaz, but as the son of David. And he said, "I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears; behold, I will heal thee; on the third day thou shalt go up unto the house of the Lord. And I will add unto thy days fifteen years; and I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria: and I will defend the city" (II. Kings 20: 5, 6). It was just at this moment, it seems that Isaiah (not the Lord) prescribed the lump of figs. But even then Hezekiah wanted a sign. Neither the Word of the Lord nor the remedy sufficed him; and God brought the shadow on the sun-dial fifteen degrees backwards.

It is by comparing Isa. 38 with II. Kings 23, and II. Chron. 32, that we gather the different sides of God's dealings with his servant. Oh, how much we all need the chastening of the Lord, that all may come to light, which is in our hearts.

SOMETIME

SOMETIME earth's weary ones shall find
A rest from all our care,
And lay our heavy burdens down,
So hard for us to bear.

Sometime the shades of earth will lift,
And in their gloomy train
Shall follow all the ills of life,
Its sorrow and its pain.

Sometime the untold bliss of heaven
Will on our vision shine,
And garlands there divinely fair,
Our raptured brows entwine.

Sometime we'll reach the gates of pearl,
And meet our loved ones there,
Whose forms are clad in royal robes,
And victors' palms they bear.

Sometime the city of the blest
Shall our glad eyes behold,
Its jasper walls, its radiant halls,
And streets of gleaming gold.

Sometime we'll know as ne'er before
God's wondrous gifts of love,
And sing his praise with sweeter songs,
In shining courts above.

Gillis, La. MAHLON OLIPHANT.

A WIDOW'S LUCK

Quit the Thing That Was Slowly Killing Her.

A woman tells how coffee kept her from insuring her life:

"I suffered for many years chiefly from trouble with my heart, with severe nervous headaches and neuralgia; but although incapacitated at times for my house work, I did not realize the gravity of my condition till I was rejected for life insurance, because, the examining physician said, my heart was so bad he could not pass me. This distressed me very much, as I was a widow and had a child dependent upon me. It was to protect her future that I wanted to insure my life.

"Fortunately for me, I happened to read an advertisement containing a testimonial from a man who had been affected in the same way that I was with heart trouble, and who was relieved by leaving off Coffee and using Postum Food Coffee. I grasped at the hope this held out, and made the change at once.

"My health began to improve immediately. The headaches and neuralgia disappeared, I gained in flesh, and my appetite came back to me at once. Greatest of all, my heart was strengthened from the beginning, and soon all the distressing symptoms passed away. No more waking up in the night with my heart trying to fly out of my mouth! Then I again made application for life insurance, and had no trouble in passing the medical examination.

"It was seven years ago that I began to use Postum Food Coffee, and I am using it still, and shall continue to do so, as I find in it a guarantee of good health." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Read the big little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

MY BOOK IS FREE

IT is entitled "HOW MONEY GROWS" and it will tell you:

How to Invest Small Sums.
How to Tell a Good Investment.
How You Can Convert $100 into $358.83.
How to Choose Between Real Estate and Stocks.
How Savings Banks Make Their Money.

It tells a hundred and one other things you will be interested in knowing.

This book is not an advertisement of any particular investment. It is a talk on investments in general, and is based on my personal experiences and observations.

I will send my book, free, to any address. I want to place a copy in the hands of every man and woman in America. I want it to be the most widely circulated book that has ever been published.

I want YOU to send for a copy.

You will find it a veritable guide-book to safe and profitable investments of all kinds.

If you are now investing small amounts ($10 a month and up), my book will show you how to invest them wisely, so that your money will work directly for you.

Most everyone could and should save at least $10 a month from his income.

Sit right down and write me a postal, saying simply: "Send How Money Grows." I will send you the book by return mail.

W. M. OSTRANDER

161 North American Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

POND'S EXTRACT

THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR

Quick Relief

is given to cuts, burns, sprains and bruises by prompt use of Pond's Extract. Cooling, soothing, healing.

Witch Hazel is not the same thing. On analysis of seventy samples of Witch Hazel—so often offered as "just as good"—fifty two were found to contain wood alcohol or formaldehyde or both. To avoid danger of poisoning insist on having

THE OLD FAMILY DOCTOR

POND'S EXTRACT

Diamonds on Credit

1/4 CARAT—QUALITY A-1 WHITE PERFECT

PRICE—$36.00 $6 DOWN & $3. PER MO.

3/8 CARAT—QUALITY A-1 WHITE PERFECT

PRICE—$52.50 $9 DOWN & $5. PER MO.

Let us send you, on approval, prepaid, choice of rings shown, upon terms indicated. Send first payment with order, or we will send ring C. O. D., first payment, subject to examination, balance monthly. Ring Catalog No. F 180 FREE. If interested in WATCHES or other JEWELRY, ask for Special Catalog.

HERBERT L. JOSEPH & CO.
Diamonds — Watches — Jewelry
218 F 180 State Street CHICAGO
Responsibility $250,000. Estab. 1882.

20 MILLIONS

Last year Washburn-Crosby Co. shipped over 20 MILLION BARRELS and SACKS from their enormous mills. This is pretty good evidence that the housewives of the world think that GOLD MEDAL FLOUR makes more bread and better bread, more pies and better pies, more biscuits and better biscuits than any other flour on earth. Every pound of GOLD MEDAL FLOUR is sifted at least ten times through the finest silk cloth made expressly for this purpose.

WASHBURN-CROSBY'S

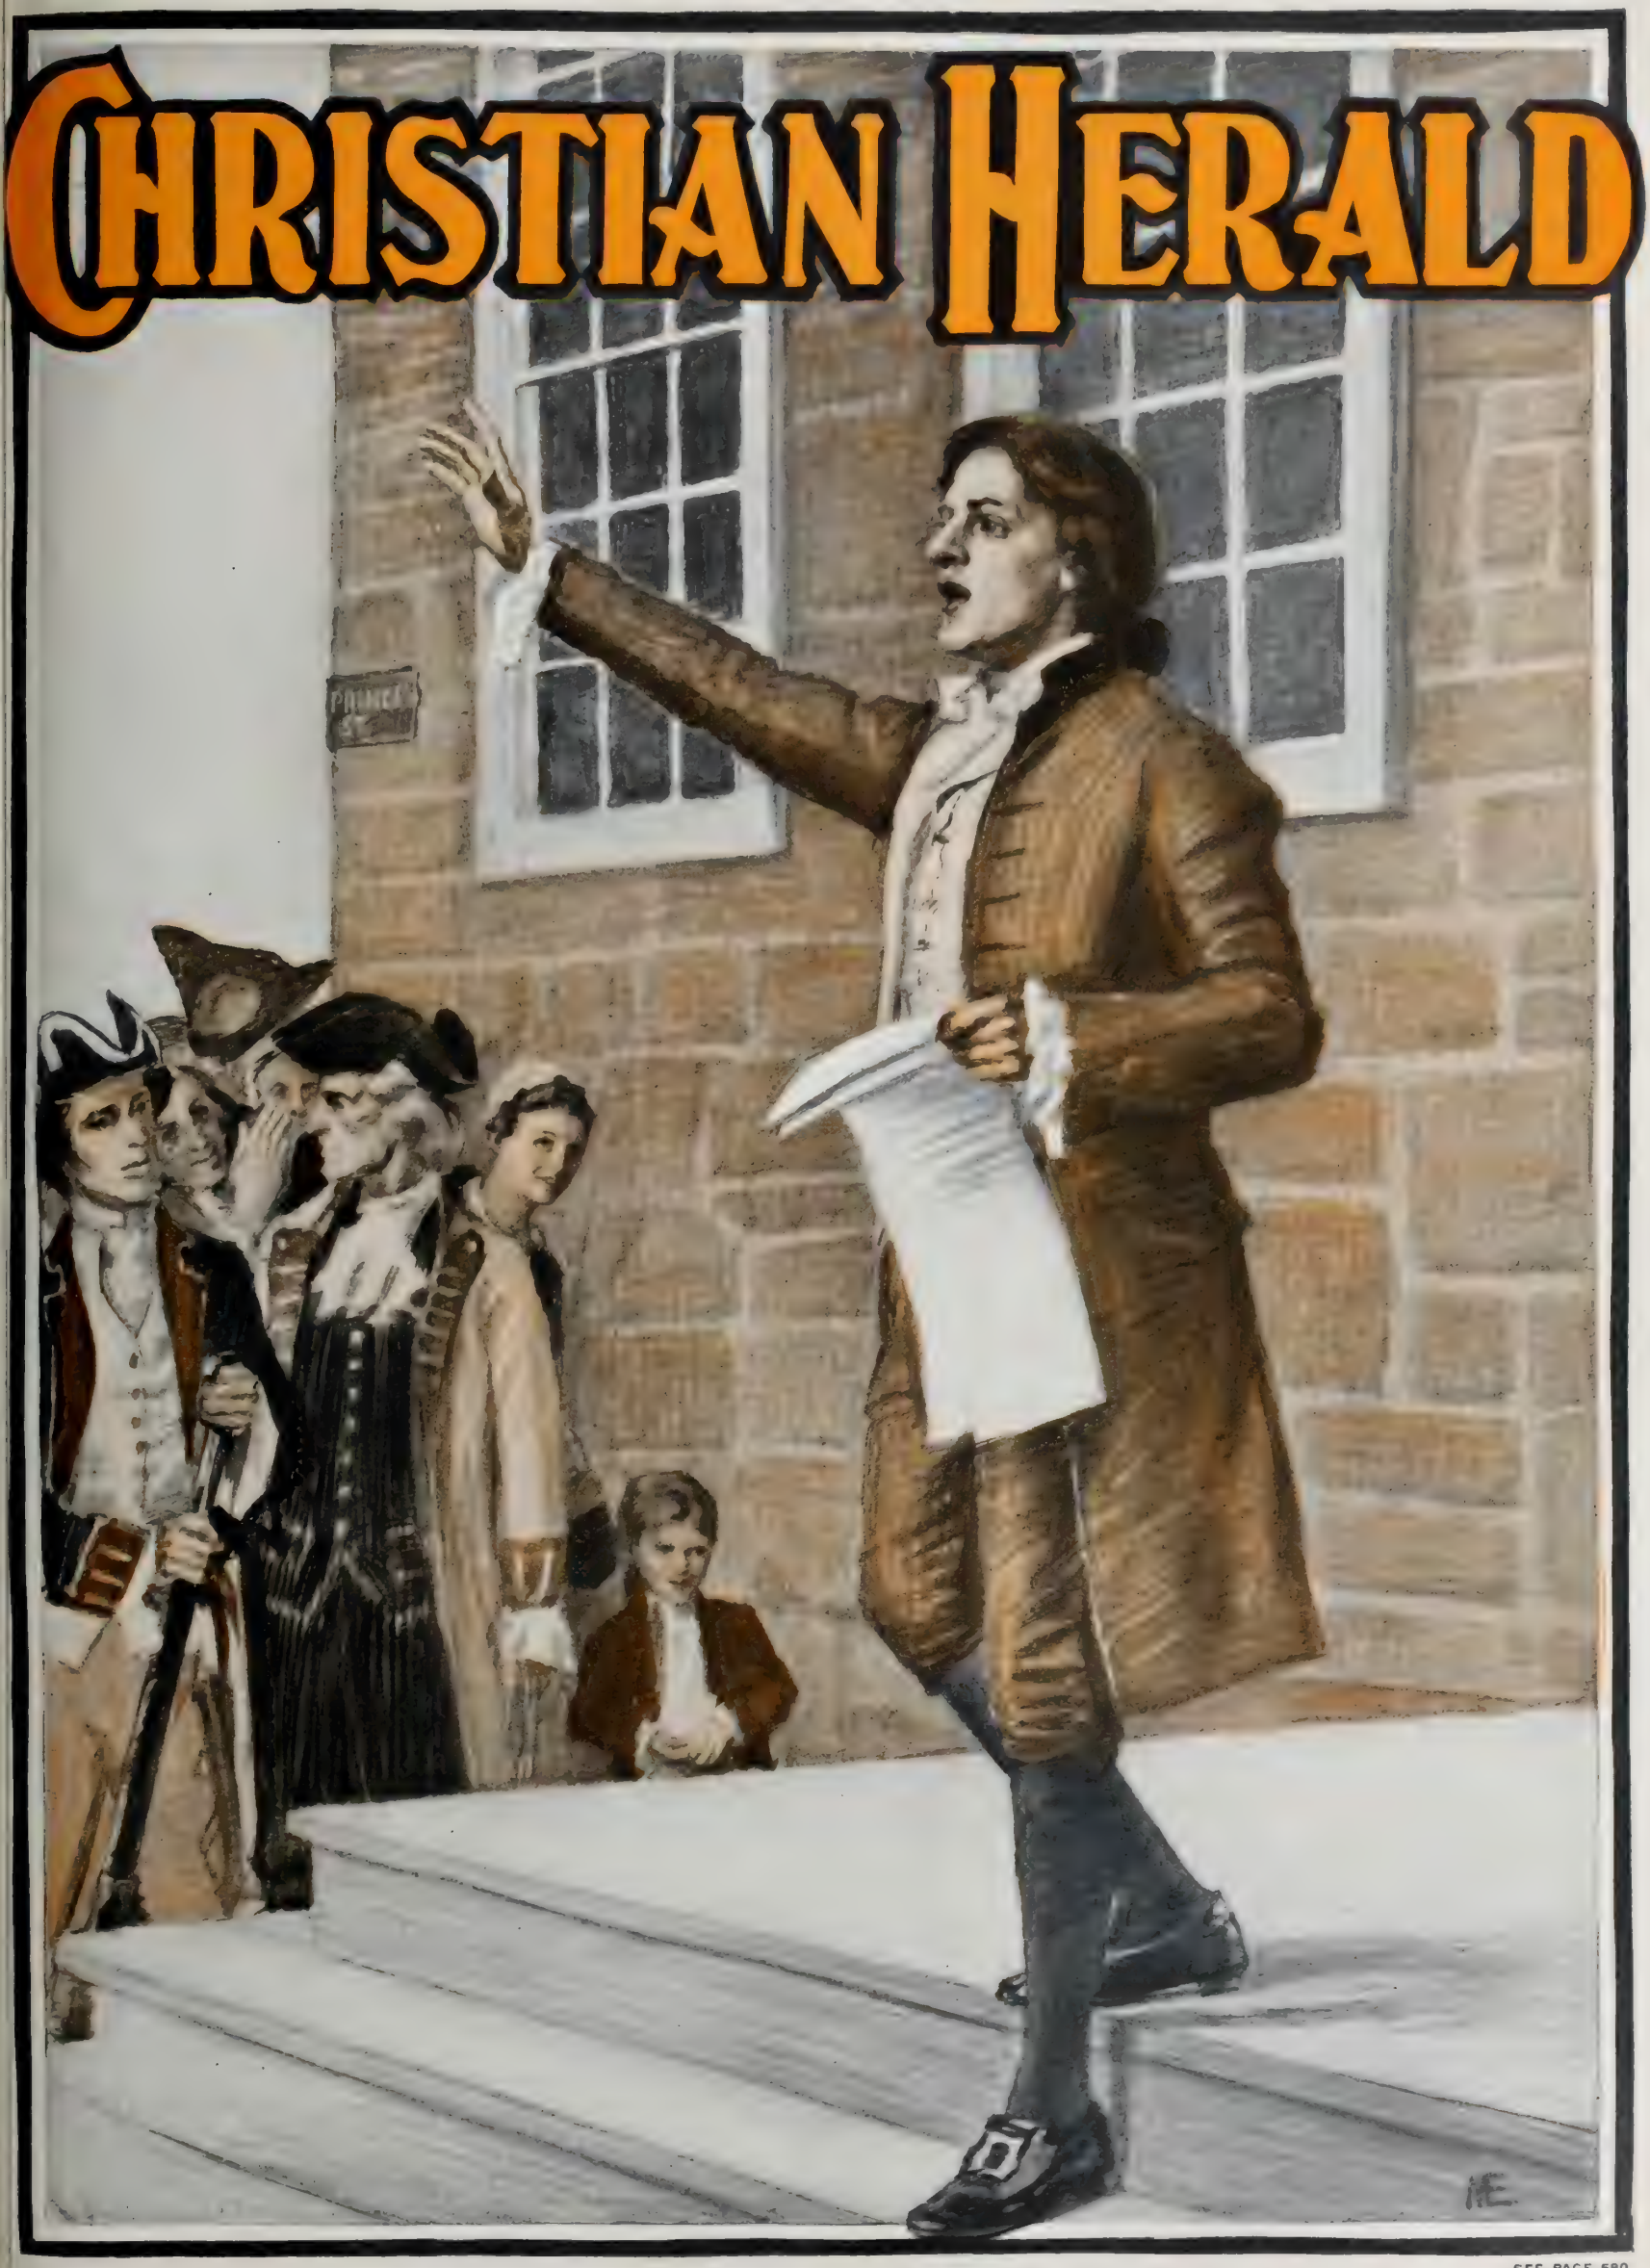
GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

COPYRIGHT - 1905. WASHBURN - CROSBY CO. MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. U.S.A.

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
UBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

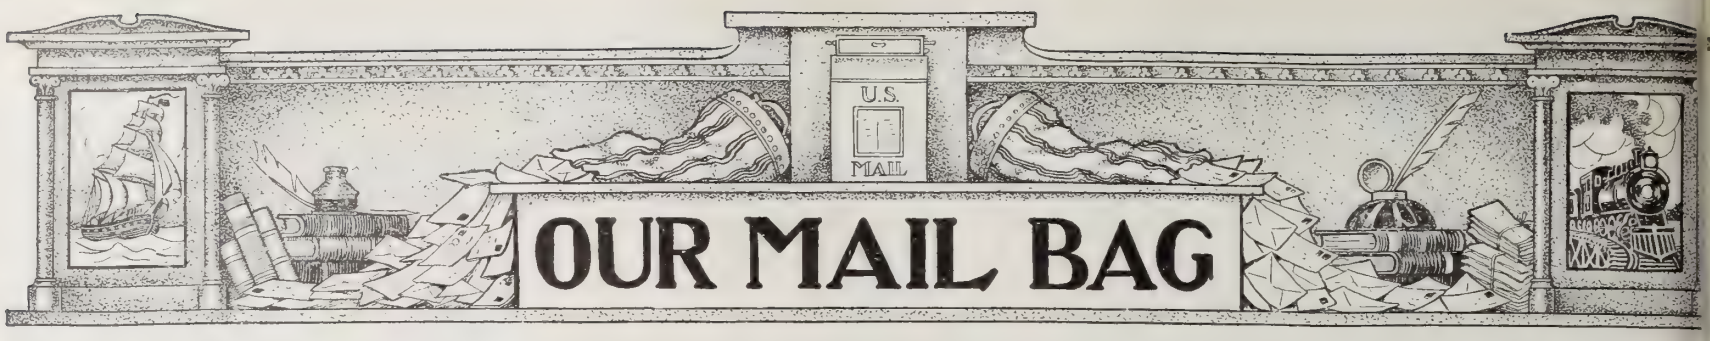
NEW YORK, JULY 5, 1905
Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch
VOL. 28 – NO. 27. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

CHRISTIAN HERALD



SEE PAGE 580

INDEPENDENCE DAY IN THE OLDEN TIME



OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

I. E., Xenia, O. Why did not Robert Burns marry "Highland Mary?" He was betrothed to her.

His various poems to Mary Morison or Mary Campbell, were all written after his marriage to Jean Armour, and are merely the recollections of a youthful admiration. That which begins "Thou lingering star with lessening ray," would indicate that the subject of the poem had died.

W. E. J., Lebanon, Tenn. 1. Why is the Erie Canal to be enlarged, and what will be its dimensions when the alterations are completed? 2. When will it be finished, and what is the total cost?

1. The canal is to be enlarged in order to permit the passage of large boats from the Great Lakes to New York City. The enlargement is to be such as to accommodate barges having a draught of 10 feet, a width of 25 feet, and a length of 125 feet. 2. There is some opposition to the enlargement, and it is uncertain when the alterations will be completed. The State of New York appropriated $100,000,000 for the proposed changes.

Reader, Salem, N.J. Would a pastor be justified in influencing votes against the re-election of a church official because of some difference of opinion about church work?

There might be circumstances which would justify a pastor in objecting to the re-election of some one who was totally inefficient or an obstructionist. Such objections, however, should not take the form of electioneering, but should be stated at the proper time and place before the nomination. If the congregation, notwithstanding such objections, decide to choose the person in question, the pastor should gracefully acquiesce.

A. G. M., Buffalo, N. Y. Is Prince Gustave of Sweden, who married Princess Margaret of Connaught, a Protestant or Catholic?

By law, the monarch of Sweden is obliged to be a Lutheran in religion. As Prince Gustave is in direct line to the throne, he would be of the same faith.

Dr. M. Leon, Mannington, W. Va., writes:

I noticed in your valuable paper of April 19, a beautiful little poem, "This, Too, Shall Pass Away," written by Mr. P. H Hayne. There is a similar little poem in the Hebrew language, whose author is claimed to be Solomon Maimon, the noted Jewish-Polish philosopher.

G. H., Newark. 1. Can a young man of eighteen enter the United States cavalry? 2. What is a private's pay per month, and is there any chance for promotion?

1. Yes; but he must get permission for so doing from his parents, and present it in writing to the recruiting officer, otherwise he will have to wait until he is twenty-one. 2. Privates receive $13 per month, with twenty per cent. additional for service in Porto Rico, Cuba, the Philippines, Alaska, and Hawaii. Men often rise from the ranks, and a number are promoted to commissions every year. It would be better to go to West Point. Write to your congressman for information.

G. B., Redwood City, Calif. What disposition do the people of Venice make of their dead?

Near the city of Venice are several islands, called the cemetery islands, where the dead of the city are buried, as in other countries.

Reader. 1. In how many battles did Napoleon take part as commander, and how many times was he defeated? 2. Was he a greater general than Wellington? 3. Was Napoleon a Christian?

1. Napoleon, one authority says, commanded in about eighty battles. He lost, perhaps, half a dozen. His greatest victory was Austerlitz; his greatest defeat Waterloo. 2. He was undoubtedly a greater military genius than Wellington. It has been generally agreed by military experts that he would have won at Waterloo, if his Marshals, Ney and Grouchy, had carried out his orders. 3. Yes.

H. S., Greenport. Where is Bayreuth, and why is it so often mentioned in connection with music?

It is the capital of the Bavarian province of Upper Franconia, forty-five miles northeast of Nuremberg by rail. In 1875 a national theatre was built for the performance of Wagner's music. Wagner is buried in the grounds of his villa here. The Bayreuth festivals are attended by music lovers from all over the world.

Reader, Bellefontaine, O. 1. What is the difference between the Roman Catholic and the Protestant Bibles? 2. Which is the more accurate? 3. Is the Roman Catholic the more complete? 4. Was the Protestant version taken from the Catholic?

1. The differences cover the chief points of separation between the two churches. The Protestant Bible renders the passage, "except ye repent;" the Roman Catholic has it, "except ye do penance." 2. The Roman Catholic, being a translation of the Latin Version, is not so accurate as the Protestant, which was made from the original languages. 3. It contains the books known as the Apocrypha, which Protestants regard as uninspired. 4. The translators in both instances appear to have availed themselves of any happy renderings found in the other translations; but as the Catholics translated from the Latin, and the Protestants from the Greek, Hebrew, and Aramaic, neither can be said to have taken from the other.

J. G. W., Westfield, Mass. 1. What are the most important cathedrals in England? 2. Where is the birthplace of Governor William Bradford of Plymouth Colony? Is the house in which he was born still in existence?

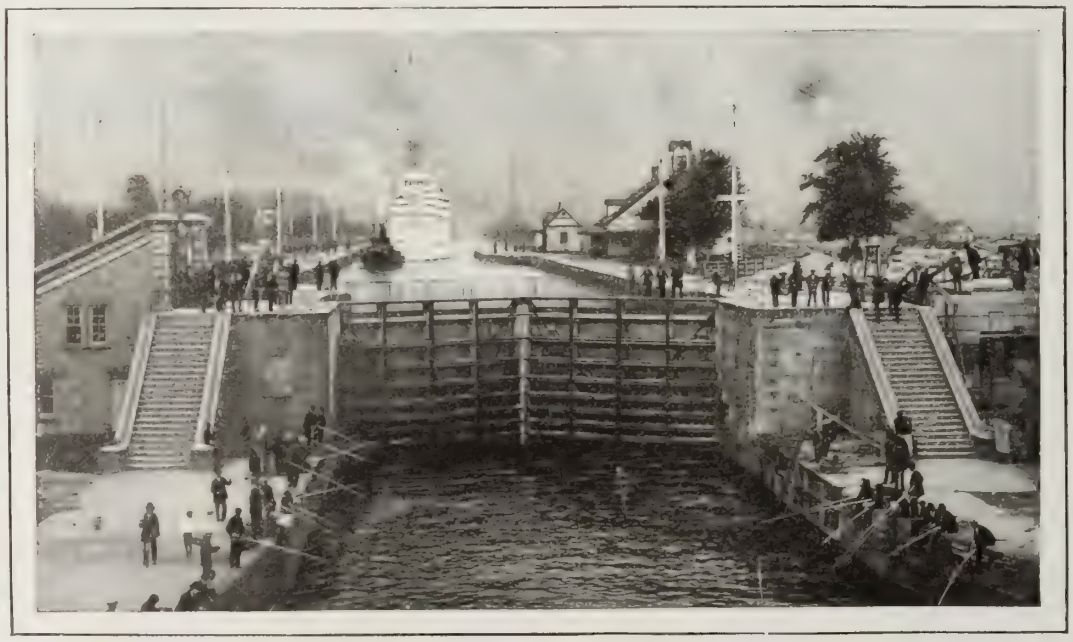
1. The most important cathedrals are Ely, Lincoln, Salisbury, Peterborough, Durham, Wells, York, Canterbury, and St. Paul's in London. 2. Governor Bradford was born in Austerfield, Yorkshire, England. We are not certain that the house is still standing, but the church and font of his baptism are still in existence.

D. N. D., N. Dak. Is Paul describing in Rom. 7 his state before or after conversion, when he says that the things he hated, those he did?

He is presenting, in dramatic form, the struggles of an unconverted man striving to become good. He presents the difficulties encountered, the failures and disappointments. He cannot obey the law. There is no hope of salvation by that path; but he makes a discovery, the results of which you may read in the following chapter. The rebellious spirit is given into God's hands to be regenerated. Christ dwells in him, changing his character and leading him to give himself wholly to God. The spirit within him, Christ's spirit, cannot sin, and he gives himself up to its power.

Ellen S., Somerville, N. J. How many King Pharaohs are mentioned in the Bible, and who were they?

The name "Pharaoh" was borne by ten Egyptian kings, the best known of which are the king to whom Joseph explained his dream; he who began the persecution of the Hebrews, and who put to death the male children; and he who was summoned by Moses to permit the departure of the Hebrew people, and who, after undergoing the plagues released them, but followed them to the Red Sea, where his army was destroyed. "Pharaoh" is a title equivalent to "Cæsar."



THE GREAT LOCK ON THE ST. MARY'S RIVER

The lock on the St. Mary's River, between Lake Huron and Lake Superior, is one of the triumphs of American engineering. It was constructed fifty years ago, and has cost six millions. The river falls twenty feet to the mile here, and the ship canal was built to permit the passage of large sea going steamers. More traffic passes through this lock than through the Suez Canal.

ASTRONOMICAL INFORMATION

F. W., White Pigeon, Mich. What will be the date of the full moon in May, 1906?

The moon will be full on May 7, 1906, which will be Monday. LEWIS SWIFT.

D. B., Port Elgin, Ont., Can. 1. Will the sun be seen totally eclipsed in any part of Manitoba on the 30th of next August? 2. On what day of 1909 A. D. will the planet Mars be in opposition to the sun when near his perihelion?

1. The southeastern part of Manitoba will be totally eclipsed. The sun will rise eclipsed at Winnipeg. 2. Opposition of Mars will occur about September 20, 1909. LEWIS SWIFT.

Mrs. N. D. B., Parker, Kan. In what month and day did the eclipse take place in 1869?

The total eclipse of 1869 took place on Saturday, August 7. The coming eclipse is its second return. All eclipses of both sun and moon occur regularly every 18th year, 11th day, 7th hour, and 42d minute. It will return, therefore, in September, 1923. LEWIS SWIFT.

Miscellaneous

Runabout, Wilmington, N. C. Garage is pronounced "Gar-raj," with accent on final sy Reader, Greenwood, Neb. "Auld Lang Sy the title of a Scottish song. It means, "Old of long ago."

L. M. Conway, Hurlock, Md., can use l books, cards, bright pictures, juvenile pap mission work, to good advantage.

A. L. W., Bristol, Tenn. No, legitimate insu is not a game of chance, but a proper provisi those that are dependent and who would t helpless by the death of the bread-winner.

Rev. F. W. Hart, M. E. Church, Charles Portage Co., O., would appreciate any help effort to put the Gospel before the people o section, in lantern slides. Any letters w answered.

Subscriber, Lexington, Ky. Legitimate ance is simply making a provision for those might otherwise be left penniless and helpl the event of the death of the breadwinner. no more a risk or a "chance" than any re business investment,

H. E., Mobile, Ala. There is no specific in tion in the Bible, but the church has long h as a rule that the marriage of those so close lated was unnatural and inadvisable. The dren of such marriages are often sickly or d erate.

Jane D., Hackensack, N. J. 1. Our Child Home is always open by J 2. You can endow a cot for $ provide a boy or girl with days' outing for $3. 3. All munications and contribu should be sent to THE CHRI HERALD, Bible House, New

Rev. Mr. Perkins and American missionaries in Liberia, Africa, are now he furlough. They will be gl answer any inquiries respe child adoption in Africa may be sent by patrons i United States. They ma addressed care of THE CHRI HERALD.

R. L. L., Landrum, S. C. pension moneys are appro ed from the general revenu the government, raised by ation and otherwise. Each S bears its proper share of general tax. You will find question of a larger navy, and con, fully discussed in daily newspapers.

Reader, South Royals Mass. Your position is an fortunate one. You shoul member, however, that opin differ, and that others, no do see many good qualities in pastor, which you may have sibly overlooked. Why not the best of the situation and to cultivate pleasant relat all round?

Wisconsin Subscriber. 1. bacco was unknown in Script times, consequently it is where referred to in the Bi Its use, however, is gener conceded to be an indulge which has many disagreeable features, and i besides, bad for both body and brain. Wh apart from any question of morals, we beli people are better without it. 2. Write to A. Hall, publisher, Syracuse, N. Y., for booklet Ecclesiastical Amusements.

Reader, Wallace, Mo. The best remedy for envy of neighbors is multiplied kindness, especia to your poorest and neediest neighbors. Th may be some whom you can help without paup izing; some poor girl, some sick mother, so man or woman to whom a "lift" in a pinch mig mean a great deal. Seize every opportunity show your desire to do such things, not openly ostentatiously, but with tact and discreti Again, if you are prospered in this world's goo you might interest yourself in the children of t poor. Give them an occasional chance of enj ment, an outing or some such pleasure. Th never forget such kindness, and it wins the pare also. There is no sovereign remedy against t shafts of envy, but kindness will win in the er When people begin to know that a man or wom has a good, tender heart, all the envy dies out a is followed by genuine respect and admiration.

A reader interested in natural history wro recently, asking, in regard to a question and a swer in this department, why it was that antle are not found in the forest if deer shed the annually. We sent the question to Mr. Erne Thompson Seton, who is considered the foremo authority in America on all matters concerni the ways of wild animals in this country. H was for some years official naturalist to the Go ernment of Manitoba, and has published ma books dealing with the life in the woods. H most famous work is Wild Animals I Ha Known. In addition to being a very interesti writer, he is one of the most famous illustrato of the day, making the drawings for his ow books, as well as many that appear in popul magazines. He contributed many drawings t the Century Dictionary. Mr. Seton very kindl wrote the following answer:

Cos Cob, Ct.

Deer shed their horns annually. I have foun thousands of them in the woods. Truly yours.

ERNEST T. SETO

NEW YORK, JULY 5, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

PETS OF THE MISSION

MISSIONARIES CANOEING ON THE CAVALLA RIVER

NEWLY ADOPTED

AMONG LIBERIA'S HEATHEN TRIBES

LIKE the soldier who, after years of service in a foreign land, returns to his native home on furlough, the missionary who comes back to us from the heart of heathendom, for a brief and well-earned respite from labor among equatorial tribesmen, is a figure of more than usual interest. For the soldier of the ross has his trials, his perils, nd his adventures like the oth- r. He has a greater prize in iew, however, for his battle is ith the forces of sin, and not r gold or fame, but for immor- l souls.

A few weeks ago Missionary . M. Perkins, and Jessie Arms erkins, his wife and co-worker, rrived in New York from Li- eria, where they have been boring for several years among ne heathen tribes. Their mis- on station is at Wissika, and eir work is under the M. E. hurch. They gave most encour- ging reports of the progress of ne Gospel in that section of frica. Wissika (called "Kwissi- a" by the natives), is on the ght bank of the Cavalla river, nd has been the site of a mis- on station nearly twenty years. earby is "Sunrise," with a few w houses—the beginning of a ative Christian settlement. our missionaries constitute the orking staff: Messrs. A. L. Buchwalter and F. A. Price being the associates of Mr. nd Mrs. Perkins. The mission family includes also a number of natives, who are aking hopeful progress in Christian training. "There are thirty-eight now in the ission," said Mr. erkins, "includ- g three men and eir wives. They ve come to us in fferent ways, me of their own cord. They were ired of doing evil-way' and anted to do God-way'; some ve been placed children by eir parents. everal are here ecause the hearts the mission- ries could not ndure the ought of poor, elpless girls be- g sold into slav- y, when it was in our power to reach out a hand, and save them from a life that promised only shame and misery. Do we gather fruit? We cannot say that all who are with us have been converted, but some are. We look into their faces, we watch their daily lives, we hear their testimonies, and it is enough. Among the town people there are some who are asking the way; they recognize that the 'mission fashion' is best. In their hearts they would like to be with us; but to tear themselves away from the superstitions of their fathers is like giving up life itself. Some have the courage to do it. In the town of Sunrise are a few families who have separated themselves and come out for Christ, and others, we believe, will follow."

A MISSION GATHERING AT BARRAKA, LIBERIA

"The mission has a nice farm, which is planted and well tended by the native boys. They go to school regularly. We noticed a desire," said Mr. Perkins, "to get up off the ground had gotten hold of a number of the larger boys, for they had made for themselves bedsteads. Rev. Robert Law, of the Free Church of Scotland in Africa, once said: 'It is a hard thing to raise a population the length of the alphabet.' We think it a great thing when an African has a desire to get up off the ground, to live in a good house, to wear clothes, or to read a book; a greater thing when he is willing to put forth the necessary effort to get these things for himself. We were pleased to see that our boys had turned bed-makers.

"One of our young men is so filled with a desire to see his people saved, that he goes among them frequently, preaching the Word. As a result, a young man named Jacob came to us, and asked if he might stay in the Mission and 'learn God-way.' He was in earnest, and has come to stay. The man who did the preaching has another burden on

Continued on Page 589

BUILDING A GIRL'S HOUSE AT THE MISSION

MR. AND MRS. PERKINS

THE MISSION BUILDING, WISSIKA

THE BRITISH CONQUEST

A FOURTH OF JULY SERMON

Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

GOD pity the man without a country. God pity such a man as Philip Nolan, whom Edward Everett Hale pictures in his famous story, who, on account of his own sins, has lost the confidence and the respect of the people among whom he was born, and who, on account of those sins, is excluded from the land of his birth. God pity the man who does not glory in the sacrifices and triumphs of his nation's heroes and heroines, who does not live in his country's hopes, and who does not feel a thrill of honest pride when he mentions his birthplace and avows, as did Paul, "I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city." God pity, I say again, the man who does not feel in every part of his body, mind and soul, that the land of his nativity is the best place in all the world in which to be born, that his people are the best people in all the world with whom to associate, does not hope that the place of his cradle will be the place of his sepulchre.

> Such is the patriot's boast where're we roam,
> His first best country ever is at home.

"That man is little to be envied," wrote Inch Kenneth, "whose patriotism would not gain force upon his country's plains of Marathon, and whose piety would not grow warmer among her ruins of Iona." That American's life is not to be envied who, with a cold, lethargic temperament and unmoved heart could go and look at the Lexington's Commons, where a little handful of farmers dared defy the British soldiers; or upon Breed's Hill, commonly called Bunker Hill, where the first cannon sounded forth the call for the "minute men" to rally for America's liberties; or upon Valley Forge, where, in the awful winter of 1777 and 1778, George Washington and his brave wife shivered and shook in camp with the common soldiers; or upon Old Independence Hall of Philadelphia, where the immortal document of the Declaration of Independence was signed; or upon Yorktown, where Cornwallis and his officers were compelled to surrender their swords to the allied French and American troops, which surrender practically ended the bloody conflict for American freedom.

But as I began to think over my sermon, which was to precede our national holiday of the Fourth of July, I said to myself, "Have we truly triumphed over England? Are we truly independent of our mother-land? Has not the British nation conquered us, in truth and in fact? Has she not and does she not annually send over great invading armies and annually demand that we pay her not only gold, but things more precious than gold? Yes, yes," I said to myself, "England is not a conquered rival, but a conquering friend. Instead of preaching a patriotic sermon to show how the American nation has triumphed over the British empire, I will twist my theme around. I would tell how the British empire has conquered America. And when I show how the British empire has conquered us, I will glory in that conquest. For as England and Scotland and Ireland have put their impress upon us, so we in turn, through them, are helping to put our impress upon the whole world for civilization and for Christ."

A Common Language

The British Empire, in the first place, has conquered America by the power of the tongue. The first words that we learned to lisp at our mother's knee, the words that we shouted on the playground and spoke before the school desk; the words that we read in the morning newspaper and in library book, and hear from our lecture platform and pulpit, are English words. The language of the American people is the language of England's rose, and of Scotland's thistle, and of Ireland's shamrock. The same tongue we speak was spoken for centuries in the British Isles. Therefore, though a new nation was born on July 4, 1776, it was not a new race. It was simply the Goddess of Liberty as a bride, leaving the old English homestead, and setting up in housekeeping for herself. She still belonged to the old English family. She still spoke the mother tongue. More than that, she was dominated by her mother's accustomed ways of thinking and doing things. And this tie of language which binds the American people to their British kindred, cannot be found binding us to any other nation on earth.

When two nations like the British people and the American people, speak the same language, they must inevitably be one in feeling. It does not make much difference who sits upon the English throne, or who is in America's presidential chair, the two nations are one. They are one because they have the same teachers. They are one because they have the same legends. They are one because they naturally think alike, whether they will or no.

A Common Literature

This fact was illustrated some years ago, when John Hay, then Ambassador to London, unveiled the bust of Sir Walter Scott, in Westminister Abbey.

"The books a boy reads," said Mr. Hay, "are those most ardently admired and longest remembered, and America revelled in Scott when the country was young. I have heard from my father, a pioneer in Kentucky, that in the early days of this century, men would saddle their horses and ride from all the neighboring counties to the principal post-town of their region, when a new novel by the author of 'Waverley' was expected. Through all the important formative days of the Republic, Scott was the favorite author of the Americans, and while his writings may not be said to have had any special weight in our material and political development, yet their influence was enormous upon the taste and the sentiments of a people peculiarly sensitive to such influences from the very circumstances of their environment." What John Hay said in reference to the influence of the pen of the Wizard of Abbotsford upon America, can be said to a greater or a less extent of all the leaders of English and Scottish and Irish thought.

British thinking cannot be divorced from American thinking. To the American mind, a map of the British Isles is not a mere collection of city or town names. Each spot has its sacred history on account of the men who have lived there, and whose fields of influence were trans-Atlantic as well as cis-Atlantic. Some years ago I rode through Scotland and England on a bicycle. From Glasgow I went to Ayr. There I found that my youthful idol, Burns, once lived. From Ayr I went to Bannockburn and Stirling Castle. There I found that Bunker Hill was only an echo of Stirling Castle. Those old Scottish chiefs

Inspired America's Independence

From Bannockburn I went to Edinburgh. There I stood at the graves of Guthrie and Chalmers, and went into John Knox's old home and recognized these men as my teachers. From Edinburgh I went down to the Lake region, and there found its poets, my poets. There I reverently stood by the roadside, while a nurse led John Ruskin past me. John Ruskin, then with his mind a Melrose Abbey in ruins, but John Ruskin still, who wrote the books that are on my library shelves. From there I went up to London. Almost every place I stopped, I could go and find the grave of one of America's benefactors.

England has conquered America by the power of the tongue. Because the same linguistic doors are opened to both people, the two nations are one in sympathy and one in life. There is an old saying among the Spaniards, "Columbus set sail from Spain and discovered America; but not until Washington Irving set sail for Spain was the Alhambra discovered for the Americans." That is true. From nearly all foreign lands are we separated by the great "Towers of Babel, the Towers of Unknown Tongues." Around these, or over these, but few of us have the linguistic ability to go or to climb. But though between us and England rolls the Atlantic ocean, two thousand miles wide, the bridge of a common language spans it. Over that bridge every day walk the British statesmen, the British reformers, the British authors, the British preachers, the British leaders of thought. They come to us saying, "Americans, take our books. Americans, follow our customs. Americans, study our ways of doing thi Take us to your hearts, as we are taking you. language is one. We need no Washington Irving discover us for each other. We both sit at the fee the same Gamaliels and Hillels. The Anglo-Sa tongue makes us think and live alike." Americ still held to England by the anchorage of the Engl dictionary and the English grammar and the Engl spelling-book.

The British Empire has conquered us by the tongu but not by that alone. Every year she sends ove great, invading army. This army of invaders are st of muscle and clear of eye and brave of heart. Th have the bravery to cross the seas. Yes, but they a also brave enough to bring along their wives and ch dren, and gold, and picks, and shovels, and maso trowels, and plumb-lines. They plainly and blun declare that they have come to capture our lands and upon our mercantile thrones, and form their colonizati settlements. And as soon as they can get a footh here, they say they will send over for their fathers a mothers, and brothers, and sisters to come and live wi them in their new homes, which they have built in t new land, and which they are already beginning to ru And have they not well fulfilled their boasts?

Heritage of Ancestry

We find in America the English and the Scotch a the Irish families everywhere. Supposing I should a all those whom I address to arise, and say who we born in the British Isles, and who are sons and daughte and grandchildren of ancestors who were born ther how many do you suppose could stand up? A twentiet A tenth? A fourth? Yes, I think a fourth, or even third, is not overstating the numbers. When the ori inal Thirteen Colonies won their national independenc we had, all told, in this country between three and fo millions of people. We then had a smaller populatio than has the present city of New York. In a little ov a hundred years, we have nearly eighty millions of i habitants. Whence did these people come? From th American cradle? Yes. The American stork ha builded her nests in the chimneys of many home But the American stork from four millions of parent could not produce eighty millions of living descendant in a little over one hundred years. The vast number of the American inhabitants to-day, came over as emi grants from Europe, or their fathers or grandfather came thus. And by far the largest proportion of thes emigrants came as an invading army from the shores o England and Scotland and Ireland.

Great is the British army of emigration! Englan defeated Napoleon Bonaparte at Waterloo with a army of less than 70,000 men. The British empir hurled back the Russian Slav from the shores of th Black Sea in the Crimean war with an army of only 80,000 men. Havelock fought his way up from th coast to Lucknow and Cawnpore with only 1,200 men. Robert Clive, afterward Lord Clive, subjugated the whole Indian Empire with only a few thousand troops.

British Immigration

But, though the British Empire has won successes on land as well as on sea with small armies and navies, she has not won her American victory by a small number of emigrants. From Glasgow and Liverpool and London during the last hundred years, she has sent forth her best sons and daughters by the hundreds of thousands, and by the millions. Still that invading army is calling across the Atlantic for more re-enforcements. "Send me my brother and sister," calls back the Irish servant-girl to her parents on Killarney Lakes. "Let them come to me and I will pay their way." "Send me the girl I once courted among the Highlands or wooed under the shadow of Linlithgow, while I read to her the tragic story of beautiful Queen Mary, who was born among yonder hills," writes the young Americanized Scotchman, who is winning a fortune in the new world. "Send me my sisters and let them flee the London fogs," writes the young Englishman who is running a Texas ranch. Ah, yes, the invading army of the

* Text: III. John 14, "Our friends salute thee."

British Empire is growing. Her sons and daughters have been rapidly making a success among Michigan hills, and Georgia pines, and Western prairies, and in metropolitan New York. Am I wrong in stating that the British Empire has again laid siege and captured Baker Hill, with her immigrants every year coming in New York Harbor?

But the British Empire demands from us her annual exports of gold. We are told that the American struggle for liberty was brought to a climax when King George's prime minister demanded that the Thirteen Colonies pay a tax on tea. The Boston Tea Party was organized. One dark night, a number of young men, armed to the teeth, entered those ships, and tossed overboard all the boxes containing that imported tea. "Taxation without representation is wrong!" the people cried. "We will not pay one cent to the British throne until King George allows our people to vote in the House of Commons." But when George Washington took the oath of office as President of the United States, did we then cease to have any further dealings with British gold?

Pledges of Capital

Have you, as a rational man, ever stopped to consider how many American industries have been fostered and built up by British capital? The British workmen have come here by millions and settled in our land, and taken out naturalization papers. But the British capitalist, although many of them have never crossed the sea, have sent their moneys here, and invested them here, by the millions of pounds. The British Immigrant is here. The British millions are invested in American coal, as well as in Sheffield cutlery, or Manchester factory, or Belfast linen, or Glasgow mills.

If the British Empire dominates us in a linguistic and social and industrial way, how much more does she influence us in a religious way. Supposing our churches had been the outgrowth of the Spanish Cathedral, instead of the Scottish Kirk? What would have happened? Supposing the men who laid the religious foundations of our theological seminaries had come from another class than the Puritans, dominated by the spirit of Rev. John Robinson. Supposing the men who taught us our ideas of morality and right, had not been inspired by the teachings of a John Knox. Would we stand be the nation whose God is Lord, as we are to-day? Thank God that the Gospel fires which are to-day burning upon American hearths, were once started by the live coals of the old Puritans and the old Covenanters.

The spiritual lips of many centuries are pleading from our pulpits to-day—not spiritual lips which have been born within the last century. One of the most dramatic and pathetic stories ever told, was that of Cyrus W. Field, when he described before the New York Chamber of Commerce, "The story of the Atlantic Cable." For thirteen long years this persistent operator had struggled against contempt and ridicule of all sorts. At last the cable was successfully laid. Then the Great Eastern sailed out to sea to grapple for the cable which had been lost in mid-ocean the year before.

Again and again went the huge grappling-irons over the ocean bed. At last the hooks again caught. Slowly and surely this time the cable was again lifted. "Only when it was brought over the bow and on to the deck did the men dare to breathe," said Mr. Field. "Then we carried it along to the electrician's room to see if our long-sought treasure was living or dead. A few minutes of suspense, and it told of the lightning current again set free. Then did the long pent up passions of the men burst forth. Some turned away their heads and wept, others broke into cheers. But soon the wind rose, and for thirty-six hours we were exposed to all the dangers of an Atlantic storm. Yet, in the very height and fury of the gale, as I sat in the electrician's room, a flash of light came from the deep, telling me that those so dear to me, whom I had left on the banks of the Hudson, were well, and following me with their wishes and their prayers. This was from the sea, bidding me keep heart and hope." And so, like Cyrus W. Field, when I am sailing over the troubled seas of America's life, I find a supernatural power speaking to me. From my hand there is an inspired cable running. It reaches not, however, to the living of the earth, but to the living of heaven. It runs clear back to the Massachusetts Plymouth Colony; clear back to Scrooby Manor House; clear back to the Scotch Covenanters. The old religious leaders of England and Scotland and Ireland are speaking to me and saying: "Be of good courage, ye American people. The same God whom we worship, you worship. The same God who watched over us in the ages past, is the same God who will lead the English and the American peoples now forward in the great work of the civilization and the Christianization of the world, redeemed from sin."

Like a Whisper of God

As I believe the British Empire, under God, has religiously made this nation what it is, so I hope that the British Empire and the American people, side by side, are going to dominate the world everywhere for Christ. It is all folly for any one to state that the American government and the British government are not working hand in hand. When war was about to be declared against Spain, in order to liberate down-trodden Cuba, some one said to Mr. McKinley: "How is England? Will England uphold you in this war?" Then the President replied: "England is all right. England is America's friend." Ay, yes, the British government is our friend. She will always be our friend.

Why am I preaching this as a Fourth of July sermon? Because I feel that it is about time for some one to lift a voice and rebuke the prevalent idea that England is our enemy, and that England, or rather the British Empire, is jealous of us, or that we are jealous of England. I denounce the idea that, at the first chance, England and America, like maddened tigers, will leap at each other's throats. The second reason why I preach this sermon is, that I would turn our thoughts in love towards England, and thereby hasten the work which the two nations, hand in hand, are bound to do for the salvation of this world for Christ. "But," says some one, "how can you claim that England is our friend? We have had three great foreign wars. Two of those were with England. During the Civil War we almost had another bloody conflict with her. Can England be our friend?"

Oh, of course, we have had a little trouble with England. We have had two or three big family rows. When you were growing up in your father's home, all the children were not always at peace. Your mother, every little while, had to come to the rescue and pour oil upon the troubled waters. But those domestic troubles did not prove that the brothers did not love brothers and sisters love sisters. We have had a few domestic quarrels with our brothers and sisters across the seas. Our relatives living there are not saints. Perhaps some of the sinners are on this side of the Atlantic, as well as on the other side. But though we have had our national differences, they are only domestic differences.

The Two Nations are of One Blood

The two nations have the one great purpose for the civilization of the world for Christ. So let us one and all speak more about the good the British people have done us, and the good they are doing us. Then, by speaking about the good which our British brothers and sisters have done and are doing, we will be drawn closer and closer together, and as two nations be more able speedily to accomplish the work which God has given the English-speaking race to do.

In closing this Fourth of July sermon, I would end it with the sentiment with which Cyrus W. Field closed his speech at the Chamber of Commerce banquet of 1866. "I close with this sentiment," he said "England and America clasping hands across the sea. May this firm grasp be a pledge of friendship for all generations." Ay, more than this! "May the common brotherhood of the Anglo-Saxon race be the open door through which all peoples shall enter into and kneel in the great Temple, where they shall worship the universal Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Hallelujah! Then shall the sword be turned into the ploughshare and the spear into the pruning-hook. Then man shall never battle with man. And man shall not learn war any more. Amen and Amen.

THE GOSPEL FOR THE IMMIGRANT

It is now thirty-six years ago since Bloomfield, N. J., Theological Seminary was founded. It originated in the need of an institution for home-trained ministers. For thirty-five years the seminary has received and educated only young men for the German ministry among the immigrants of the Eastern section of our country. Under the leadership of two gifted men, Dr. Knox and Dr. Seibert—the Theological School, during these years, has accomplished a most excellent work for the upbuilding of the Master's Kingdom among the German immigrants. The one ambition of Dr. Knox, its first President, was to make the seminary an institution from which men should go forth, who would be recognized as the ministers of the Most High and faithful ambassadors of Jesus Christ for the salvation of souls. It has sent out a goodly harvest of preachers and teachers of the Gospel. Dr. Philo F. Stevens, of Passaic, says of some of its graduates under his observation: "If our church had an unlimited supply of youthful ministers like these, the future of the church would be hopeful indeed."

STUDENTS IN TRAINING TO PREACH THE GOSPEL TO THE IMMIGRANTS

Many noble, self-sacrificing students have been enrolled at Bloomfield. One young German sold his grocery store for $1,800, and with the proceeds studied for six years for the ministry. He is now the pastor of a German church. One hundred and twenty alumni have gone out and built up large, self-supporting, active churches in city and country. They rank high among the German ministers of the Union.

While Bloomfield will continue to be a German seminary, a greater work has now been providentially assigned to it. The faculty are keenly alive to their duty toward the flood of immigrants coming from the south and east of Europe, and are convinced that an effort must be made to Christianize the "stranger in our gate." German immigration has decreased, while the immigration from eastern and southern Europe has increased in the last thirty years from four to seventy per cent. The General Assembly and directors of the seminary have decided hereafter to give prominence to home mission work among these foreigners, and the faculty has enthusiastically taken up this new field. Two special teachers, Rev. John Dikovics, a scholarly Magyar, and Rev. B. Caltorti, Italian missionary at Montclair and Westfield, N. J., have been engaged for the new work. Twenty-seven new students were received this year, nine of whom are Germans, nine Magyars, and nine Italians. Six of these men can at once enter the theological department.

An effort is now being made to raise the necessary funds for this new and important work, and will gladly welcome any assistance in carrying out its project. Mr. Thomas W. Synott, of Philadelphia, offered to give a $2,500 endowment to the seminary, provided nine other persons would subscribe an equal amount within a certain period. This has been satisfactorily accomplished, but the management estimates that a $100,000 endowment will be needed this year, and invites the co-operation of God's people with that end in view.

Bloomfield, N. J. OTTO LICHTI.

THE RIVAL OF THE STREETS

CLASS IN "FIRST AID TO THE INJURED"

MISS EVANGELINE WHITNEY

WORK IN THE KITCHEN

THE problem of education in the crowded sections of a great city is not a simple one, for the city youth is subjected to peculiar dangers and temptations, outside of school hours. A proper home life, with all the uplifting influences the name implies, is largely absent, and many of the duties and responsibilities of the home devolve on the school. The beneficent results of school work are largely minimized, if the evil influences naturally rampant in crowded communities are not counteracted in some way. What profits it that the pupils have the best instruction of competent teachers from nine in the morning until three in the afternoon, if from three o'clock until midnight the corner saloon, the policy shop, the cigar store, the five-cent dance hall, the one-cent-a-cue pool rooms, and the low theatres and worse dives stretch out their glittering allurements for the unwary public school child?

There are certain city blocks which have a population of over four thousand persons. It is hard to realize what it means for the population of a country town to be crowded into a surface area 200 feet by about 600. Consequently, whole families live, eat, work, and sleep in one or two rooms. In many cases, according to investigations of the Board of Health, the second room consists of a small "blind" closet or bedroom, where air is derived by a narrow shaft. As a result of this terrible congestion, the boys and girls practically live on the streets, and the asphalt comes to be more of a home to them than the dark, stuffy room up four flights of stairs.

On the Board of Education, therefore, there devolves a peculiar duty. The work of the school must be extended not only in time but in character. The great new schoolhouses, perfect palaces many of them, are the only relieving feature in miles of dreary five-story tenements. A large new school building, including the site, costs approximately a million dollars. Many contain nearly a hundred class rooms, in addition to laboratories for the study of science; shops for carpentry and manual training, kitchens for the teaching of domestic science, gymnasiums and auditoriums, shower baths, plunge baths and swimming baths, for if cleanliness is next to godliness, it certainly ought to come next to education.

Not only in New York, but in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and other large cities, citizens who have the interests of their municipalities at heart have come to realize the necessity of providing for the children pleasurable occupation in the evenings and during the long summer vacation. Hence we have springing into existence a new manner of supplementary education which passes by the names, "recreation centres," "vacation schools," "open-air playgrounds," etc.

In New York, during the long, hot months of summer, the big school buildings are open under the name "Vacation Schools." Thirty-eight Vacation Schools are in operation during July and August. From 9 A.M. to 1 P.M., useful arts and physical exercises are taught to thousands of boys and girls who are unable to get away to the country or seashore. The boys receive instruction in carpentry, fret sawing, Venetian iron work, pyrography, chair caning and other profitable occupations. It is no uncommon thing for a boy to bring all the chairs of his own and his neighbor's families to be reseated and repaired. Basketry is another profitable occupation. The children are allowed to keep what they make, and soon their houses are stocked with all manner of beautiful and useful baskets. More baskets are made by the children of the Vacation Schools in six weeks than by all the tribes of North American Indians in a year. In the making of baskets there is opportunity for the child's natural taste to assert it In the beginning, the more striking and vivid co employed, the greater the delight of the young ma but gradually harmonies of color-tone begin to be ceived, and at the close of the vacation school term t are also as artistic and as beautiful as any made professional hands.

KINDERGARTEN ON RECREATION PIER

GYMNASTICS ON PUBLIC PLAYGROUND

The fret-sawing, bench work, and Venetian i classes turn out very cre able work, and the occu tion is so delightful that boys beg to remain a school hours to conti working at the object which they have set t hearts. Boxes, ph frames, inkstands, and n elties of all kinds are tur out in infinite number, yet to each scroll and ca ing some little mast workman has given his b thought and endeavor.

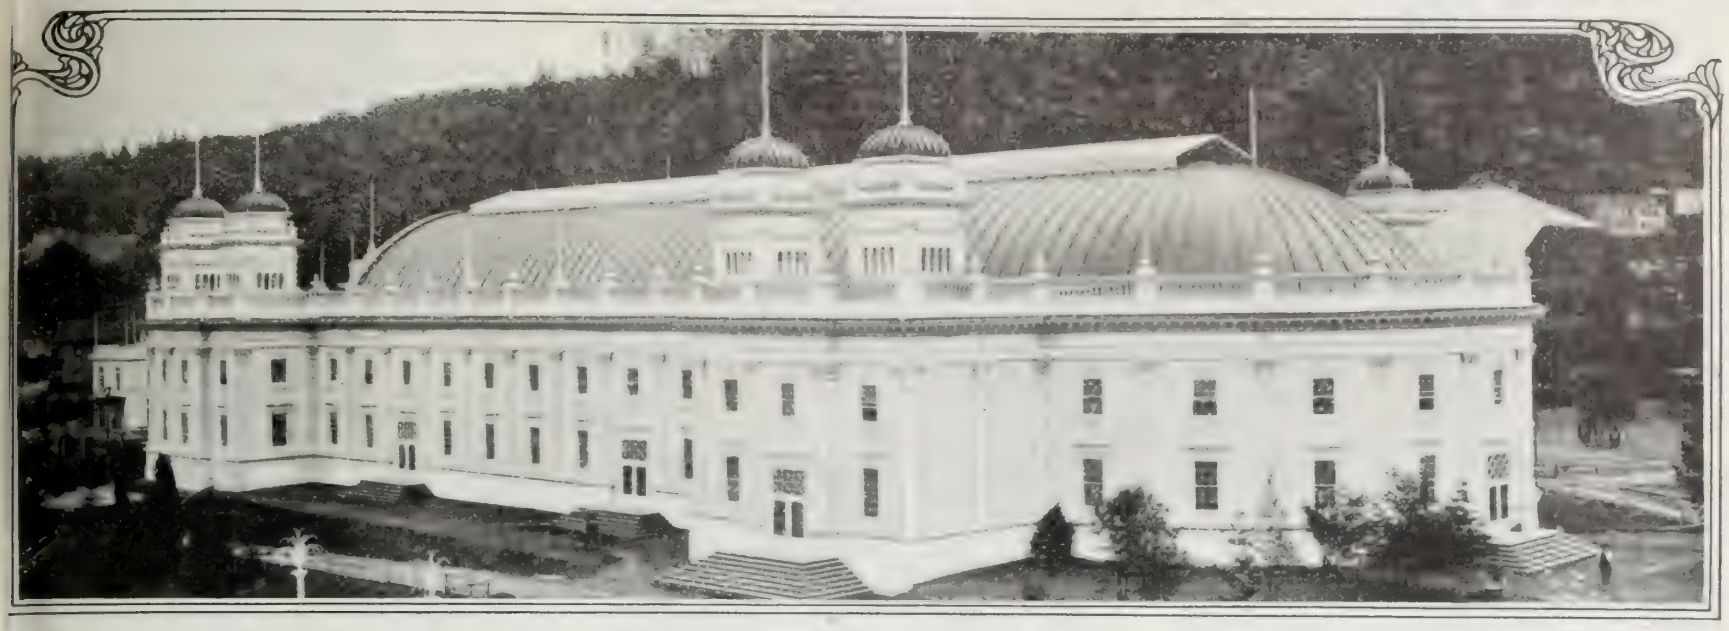
Perhaps the happi brightest and most so inspiring room in the va tion school is called "nature room." It is ways large and sunny a filled with flowers. In t windows are hanging b kets planted with ferns a vines. In great glass j fishes swim, in others b terflies, moths and bugs a kept and nature's peculi and interesting proces may be observed. In wi dow boxes seeds are spro ing, while just outside in the courtyard a miniature fa laid out with its fences, its tiny buildings, and all t paraphernalia of a country estate, gives its youthf owners much interest and care.

The girls have classes in sewing, dressmaking, milli ery, kitchen work, cooking, setting and waiting table and in nursing and the preparation of foods f invalids. In the kitchen, plain, wholesome cooking done every day. The children are allowed to bri materials and to carry home the results of their culi ary skill in edible form. The little housekeepe copy the recipes from the blackboard and keep the neatly in a book for future reference. One litt girl, when asked why she wished to enter the cookin class, replied, "Oh, it smells so good there." At th end of the term many are able to make good brea and they learn also how to make jelly and preserve bringing raw fruit to school and proudly carryin home tiny jars of preserved delicacies.

The sewing-classes are large and popular. Th children are told that if mother had bought a dre and had not time to make it, they might bring it t school and make it themselves. The result was tha last year, in one school, on the closing day the teache gave out three hundred finished garments made fro the children's own material. On the staff of almos every vacation school is a trained nurse, who give lessons in home nursing, the principles of first aid t the injured, the care and feeding of infants, and othe topics of like character, of which the immigran

CONTINUED ON PAGE 590

Portland's Beautiful Exposition



THE ORIENTAL EXHIBITS PALACE

The Lewis and Clark Exposition, at Portland, Ore., is one of the most beautiful that has ever been held in this country, from an architectural and scenic standpoint. he Palace in which the Oriental exhibits are placed, is, perhaps, the most interesting structure, as it contains the finest collection of Oriental art ever brought to America.

VIEW FROM THE GRAND STAIRCASE SHORTLY AFTER THE OPENING OF THE EXPOSITION

The Exposition grounds are in a natural park, encircled by hills covered with virgin forest. In the centre of the grounds is a large lake, dotted with islets, shown in e above picture. The large building across the river is the Government Building. To the left is the many-arched Bridge of Nations, which is a half mile long.

THE GRAND STAIRCASE OF THE EXPOSITION

The grand staircase of the Exposition, with its white pillars capped with clusters of electric lights, has a most imposing effect. It will be noticed how every irregularity f ground has been used by the landscape architect to combine the work of nature with his own art. To the left is the European Building, built in the Moorish style.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, Associate Editor

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

A Reasonable Demand

UNDER the caption, "What the Gentiles Demand," our esteemed contemporary, The Daily Tribune, of Salt Lake City, gives editorial prominence to the following very clear statement of the present situation in Utah:

> The Gentiles of Utah demand, and will fight until they gain, a compliance with the compact and conditions under which Statehood was granted to Utah. These are: The abolition of polygamy by the Mormon Church. The retirement of ecclesiasts from political authority. A cessation of commercial monopolization and absorption by the hierarchy, through the means of tithes extracted from its people. Nowhere else in the world would such a demand be necessary; nowhere else in the world would such a demand be contested. That the demand is necessary here, and that the hierarchy contests it, constitute our justification for this fight. The battle will continue until Americans win a complete victory; until the church retires from its temporal claims, and until it ceases to make of religion a cloak for illegalities and immoralities. No self-respecting Gentile can afford to be on the Mormon side in this controversy. All Americans who choose to come here will find ample opportunity for good work and profitable work in opening up the great resources of Utah, and in undoing the ungodly and unholy power of a barbarous hierarchy.

This is in line with the great movement just begun by the women of America, the object of which is expressed in the Memorial recently published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, viz: the absolute exclusion of Mormon politics as an influence in national legislation, and the removal of the Mormon apostle from the U. S. Senate. The country will no longer tolerate "an alien government within our republic," a hierarchy whose ambition is as boundless, whose methods are as defiant of law and human rights as its antecedents are notorious.

We welcome the co-operation of so able and efficient an aid as The Daily Tribune in the battle for womanhood and national morality. The points it makes deserve to be echoed and emphasized by the press of the whole country. Let the women take courage. Soon their allies will multiply on every hand, and their battle column will be augmented to grand proportions. The Daily Tribune has stated the Utah view of the question. It is the view that will ultimately be held in every State of the Union.

An Experiment in Disarmament

ONE of the most significant utterances of recent times, which has an interest for every nation in the world, was made a few days ago by an English statesman. Some one asked Sir Charles Dilke why the British Government was rearranging its system of colonial defense, the effect of which would be to leave Canada and the West Indies practically without British protection. Sir Charles suggested several reasons, and among them one that deserves special attention. He said: "It is clearly the view of the present government, and the matter is one in which their decision cannot be reversed by their successors, and is, therefore, final, that all future differences between ourselves and the United States will be settled by arbitration, or at least without the resort to arms." The logical result of this view, therefore, was that it was a useless expense to maintain a military force in a place where it was never likely to be needed.

This decision may prove to be a step toward the long-expected consummation of universal peace. True, it is small and insignificant, but it is a seed which will grow. It is an object lesson for the nations which deserves attention. If one government has so much confidence in its neighbor's sincerity and rectitude that it feels safe in withdrawing its troops; if it is so assured that any dispute that may arise will be settled amicably by arbitration, without resort to arms, that it dispenses with armaments on the frontier between the two, why should not other governments do likewise? Why should not arbitration everywhere take the place of war? The peoples will ask that question, even if their rulers ignore it. The principle so long advocated passes now from the stage of theory to that of experiment. That experiment is to be worked out in this hemisphere, but its lessons will be world-wide. Not only war, but the costly burden of preparation for war, is lifted from the shoulders of the people by this confidence of one nation in another.

If the lessons of this incident were well learned by the peoples of Europe, who are groaning under the awful load of militarism, the time would not be far off when they would insist on every international quarrel being settled by arbitration. Emperors and kings would have to cease their blustering, swaggering ways. Their menace of a host of men trained to war and to obey their commands, would be an idle boast. Officers and men would find their occupation gone, and would turn to useful pursuits for their maintenance, and the people who now support them would be relieved of their heavy burdens. No longer would a huge army be employed in watching another army across a frontier, that neither has any desire to pass. Dynastic quarrels would be settled, as private quarrels are, by justice and right, and that golden age so long predicted would come, when men shall not learn war any more.

Boisterous Patriotism

WHEN our annual Fourth of July is over, and we have taken toll of the expense, counting up what we paid for fireworks, and what we lost in tranquility through the racking noise of explosives all day long, and what the children suffered through accidents, we are apt to think that there might be a more excellent way of celebrating our independence.

Yet the cannon's thunder from fort and fleet, the skyrockets, the flaming wheels, the snapping torpedoes and the exploding giant crackers, with the bands playing, and the banners streaming everywhere, do help to emphasize a great truth, that we are a free and happy people. The boys and girls of this nation are early taught patriotism, both the American and the foreign-born children drawing in love of country with every breath. The schools help them to love the flag, they grow up in appreciation of liberty. They sing, "My Country 'Tis of Thee," with glad hearts and ringing voices. And the Fourth of July, though it be perhaps too boisterous and too clamorous and too bombastic, yet serves a good end, in accentuating for the young, the daily and hourly teachings that are given them by life under our glorious flag. Three cheers for the red, white and blue!

But let us not forget that the rare heroism of the fathers has left this legacy to the sons. We ought not to be satisfied with mere noise when we keep our American holiday. If we do our full duty and rise to our full opportunity, then, after the Fourth, if not during its hours, we shall turn over some backward leaves in our history, and remind ourselves of the great ones gone. How many children know the names of the fearless band who signed the Declaration of Independence? How many are familiar with that immortal document? Some who are on in years, who have grown gray in the midst of the privileges of this great republic, little know the price that was paid for it, and little appreciate the valor of the men who first uplifted the standard of revolution in 1776.

Oratory on "The Fourth"

SEE COVER PAGE ILLUSTRATION

UNHAPPILY, in our larger cities at least, the patriotic customs of publicly reading the Declaration of Independence on July 4 is no longer observed. Our artist in the picture on the first page has taken for his theme an old-time Fourth. Assembled in the public square, the good citizens are listening eagerly to the young "orator of the day," who, in impassioned accents, is reading the immortal Declaration. The figures and surroundings are those of the early part of last century, when the nation was still young, and when the assembled patriots were wont to open the day's celebration by singing some inspiring verses, like the following:

Freemen, rise and hail the morn
When Columbia's flag was borne
Proudly o'er a tyrant's scorn
By the brave and free!
Rise, for 'tis the glorious day
When your fathers from the sway
Of oppression tore away
Hope and liberty!

God of nations! unto thee
Grateful, now we bend the knee,
For our peace and liberty,
And our country's fame!
Guard, oh, guard our nation's cause,
Shield our rights, direct our laws,
And for all our vaunted joys
We will praise Thy name!

WHERE THE WOMEN STAND

To the Editor of The Christian Herald:

A friend has sent me a clipping from the Mor[mon] organ, The Deseret Evening News, which is greatly e[x]cised over the American Women's Anti-Mormon C[am]paign. In a long leader, it first affects to pooh-pooh [the] movement, and sets up the quite irrelevant claim [that] "these American women do not know what Mormo[nism] really is." It asserts (from the Mormon standpoi[nt] I suppose) that Utah is a "moral State"; yet in the [very] next paragraph it admits that Mormonism (i. e., po[lyg]amy) exists in Utah. It closes this remarkable def[iance] with the declaration that "the Mormon people are [not] engaged in any effort to oppose the (Anti-Polyga[my]) Amendment."

Now, Mr. Editor, for the enlightenment of this M[or]mon organ, I would state that the present movemen[t] is in no sense directed against the religious belief of [the] Mormons. Ours is a free country, and it is permit[ted] equally to all to believe and worship after their [own] fashion. But when that belief is translated into p[rac]tices that are diametrically opposed to existing la[w], then the matter is removed from the domain of religi[on], and the transgressors are liable to all the penalties p[ro]vided for those guilty of statutory crimes.

If the Mormon organ is really anxious to know w[hy] we women demand that Mormonism must go, I will re[fer] it to the testimony taken before the Senate Committ[ee]. That investigation was instituted at the request [of] American women. At our own expense, we engag[ed] counsel, and, to a very large extent, directed the g[en]eral course of the inquiry. By the mouths of ma[ny] witnesses—many of them Mormons, too—it was ma[de] clear that the present leaders of the Mormon hierarc[hy] are all theoretical, and not a few of them practic[al] polygamists. By their own admission, they have "v[io]lated the laws of God and man." The Mormon oath [is] an oath of treason!

These things are all quite clearly understood by t[he] women of our land, and the Mormon organ is simp[ly] deluding itself when it imagines the contrary. Furth[er]more, we believe they are generally understood by t[he] whole nation, which is cordially supporting us in o[ur] present movement. We demand the removal of t[he] Mormon Apostle in the United States Senate, not [on] personal grounds, nor as a religionist, but as the rep[re]sentative of a clerico-political corporation which is ser[v]ing men to Congress to serve its own selfish purpos[es] and not for the general good. We demand that o[ur] National Legislature shall be kept free from the pr[es]ence of any representative of the Mormon hierarch[y], because that hierarchy is a foe to all that America [doth] hold dear and sacred. While we have not charg[ed] that Senator Smoot is himself a polygamist, it is enou[gh] to disqualify him for participation in the making of o[ur] country's laws that he is the sworn Apostle and emi[s]sary of the polygamous Mormon hierarchy.

This, Mr. Editor, is the groundwork of our appe[al] and upon this platform we mean to stand until the fig[ht] is won. If the poor Mormon women of Utah we[re] allowed the privilege of free expression, I believe tho[u]sands of them would gladly sign our Memorial, as th[e] only hope of securing emancipation—probably not f[or] themselves but for their children—from social and mor[al] conditions at which every right-minded woman revolt[s] and which place her on a level with the cattle of th[e] field.

ONE OF THE SIGNERS.

. . .

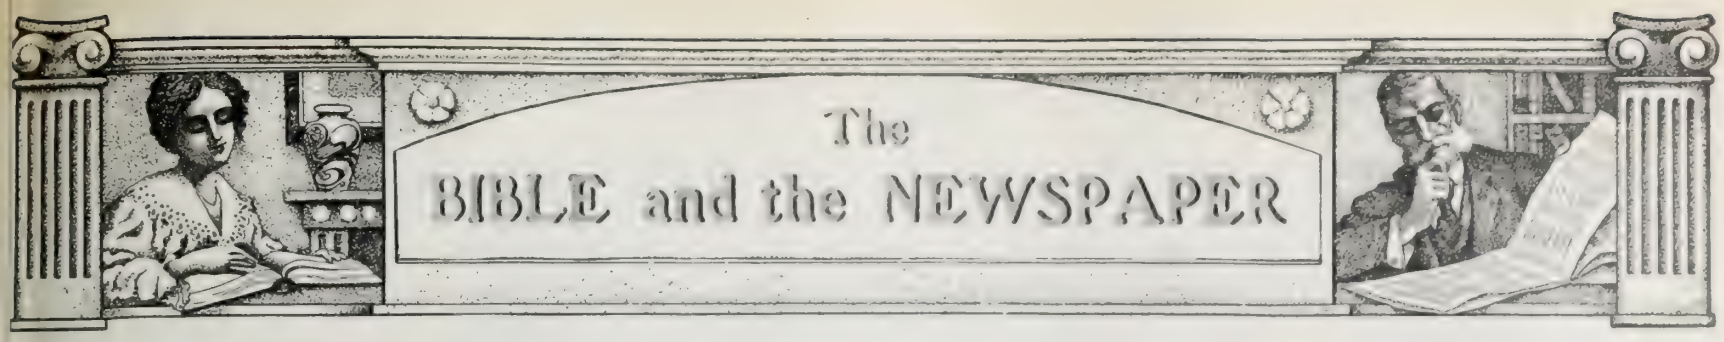
MASSACHUSETTS WOMEN AROUSED

It is with pleasure I send my endorsement of the splendid wor[k] THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has undertaken in the interest of decenc[y] and good morals, for of all pernicious doings in this so-called Chri[s]tian nation, Mormonism leads.

I recall visiting Salt Lake City in 1902, and the disgust whic[h] came over me on hearing apparently intelligent men and wome[n] saluting each other as "Sister" and "Brother"—terms sacred onl[y] to one's blood relatives. It was most annoying when a long-haire[d] apostle of the late Brigham Young persisted in thus addressing m[e]. I do not know how many wives he had, or what endearing term h[e] used with them, but this I do know, the man was repulsive an[d] leering, and his presence in the family I was visiting caused me t[o] shorten my visit and get away from an atmosphere so tainted wit[h] familiarity and apparent immorality.

In Massachusetts we hear too little of the Mormon movemen[t] and its dangers, and I for one am glad so reliable a publication ha[s] taken the matter up. I represent fourteen organizations, and I fe[el] sure that you have the moral support of every club and patrioti[c] woman in the Old Bay State, which has ever stood for right, justice[,] patriotism, and the home.

MARION HOWARD BRAZIER.



A Royal Marriage

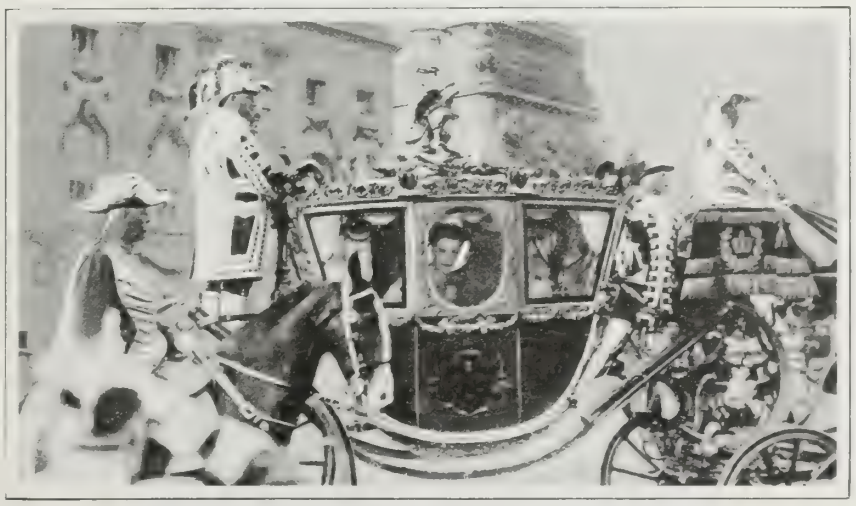
GERMAN newspapers are full of elaborate descriptions of the impressive ceremonies and imperial magnificence of the recent wedding of the heir to the throne of the Fatherland. The ride made her state entry into Berlin on June 3, escorted by cavalry and attended by high officers of state. The interval between that date and the following Tuesday was occupied by popular rejoicing, signing of the contracts and other preliminary proceedings. On the eventful day there was a double ceremony. The first was the civil portion, performed in the Electors' room, by Count Von Wedel, Minister of the Royal Household. The Royal party then proceeded to the castle chapel, where some sixty princes, representing the Royal families of Europe were assembled. After the choral portion of the service, the officiating clergyman, Dr. Dryander, addressed the young couple, taking the text selected by the Emperor, from Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following after thee, for whither thou goest I will go and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." The remainder of the ceremony was then performed, and the wedding party proceeded to the picture gallery, where the newly married pair received the customary congratulations.

The bridegroom, Prince Frederick William Victor August Ernest, eldest son of the Emperor of Germany, is twenty-three years of age. He is said to be very popular among the German people. Many stories are told of his goodness of heart, and his generous disposition. He was brought up under strict discipline, under the Emperor's own superintendence, and is reported to have been by no means a tractable pupil. More than once the Emperor's authority has been invoked to punish his escapades and curb his wild propensities. His faults, however, have been of a kind to endear him to the people, who would not have loved him half so well had he been a weak milksop. He was sent to the University of Bonn in 1901, where he distinguished himself by resisting the practice of duelling and of heavy drinking, but did not make the progress in his studies that his father and his tutors hoped. After two years he returned to Potsdam, and devoted himself to military duties and to outdoor sports, of which he is fond.

The bride is the Duchess Cecilie of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, youngest daughter of the late Grand Duke Franz. Her mother is a cousin of the Czar of Russia. She is not yet nineteen years of age. Those who know her say she is very bright and intelligent, speaks several languages, and is fond of outdoor exercise. The match is declared to be more of a love match than is usual in royal houses. That and the fact that the Duchess is German, have made the alliance popular throughout the empire. The position of the young couple will be one of immense influence, if as is probable, in the course of nature, they become Emperor and Empress of Germany. That they may be wisely guided in all their future life, is the prayer of every Christian soul in their great empire.

I exhort that prayers . . . . be made for all men; for kings and all in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty (I Timothy 2 : 1, 2).

GERMAN MAIDENS GREETING THE BRIDE



THE BRIDE IN THE IMPERIAL COACH ENTERING BERLIN

A Fortunate Discovery

A strange story is told of the way in which Peabody Museum, connected with Yale University, became possessed of its fine collection of Aztec relics. During the periodical cleaning up of the cellar under the museum at the end of a winter, some years ago, a man was removing boxes and crates and the cinders from the furnace. It happened that a professor, needing a strip of wood for an experiment he was making, went into the cellar in search of it. The workman, in reaching the wood for the professor, tore an apparently empty box apart. A dirty piece of metal fell out of the box as he did so. It looked like tarnished brass, but as it was curiously shaped, the professor took it away, with several other similar pieces, that had apparently been overlooked when the box had been unpacked. He took them to his laboratory, washed them and applied acids. To his astonishment he discovered that they were ancient Aztec ornaments of pure gold. A further search of the cellar yielded nearly a hundred pieces. They had been lying there neglected until a man came who knew their value. How many souls there are soiled and discolored by sin, whose value is priceless, that might be saved if they could be taken to Christ for cleansing.

The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost (Luke 19: 10).

Curing a Wounded Heart

A remarkable operation was performed last week in a New York hospital. An Italian was brought in suffering from a severe stab wound in his side. The doctor saw that he was near death, but decided to perform a critical operation in an attempt to save his life. The patient was put under anæsthetics, and the wound was examined. It was found that the heart had been pierced. A single stitch was sufficient to close it, and it was seen that the man still breathed after it had been put in. Quickly, for the man's life hung on seconds, ligatures were applied to the arteries and the wound closed. The patient still survived, and recovered consciousness. It was reported at the hospital that he passed a good night, and the doctors entertained hopes of his recovery. They say that not one case in a thousand recovers from such an operation. The heart is a delicate organ to treat, and it is so in a spiritual sense. Human power can do little for it, but happily a radical remedy is provided for all who seek it.

I will take the stony heart out of their flesh and will give them a heart of flesh (Ezekiel 11 : 19).

World's Fastest Train Wrecked

The news of the accident at Mentor, Ohio, on June 21, caused a thrill of horror through the country. The train that suffered was the Long Shore Limited, which, since June 18, had been making the journey between New York and Chicago in eighteen hours. It is believed to have been the fastest train in the world. As it was proceeding eastward on Wednesday night, it had reached Cleveland safely, and about nine o'clock left that city on its next stage. As it approached Mentor, twenty-three miles away, it entered an open switch leading to the freight house. The heavy locomotive kept the rails for a short distance, and then was derailed and turned to the left. The tender was hurled completely over it and was buried in the freight house. The next car ran with terrific force over the engine and was set on fire. The other four cars were tilted over one another and were soon burning. The living passengers did what they could in the work of rescue, but they were badly shaken and confused and could do little in the darkness. The shrieks of the injured as the flames reached them were terrible to hear. Nineteen dead bodies were ultimately taken from the wreck. The injured were put on board a relief train and carried to Cleveland. Railroad officials, when asked how it was that the switch was open, say that it was done by some malicious person. A train had passed safely over the track half an hour before, and there had been no occasion to touch the switches afterwards. But the fatal switch was thrown back and locked, and the lantern attached to it had been turned around. The engineer was among the dead, but the fireman declares that he saw all the lights white, indicating a clear way. The Company at once began a search to discover the wicked person who did the foul deed. In the meantime they have wisely resolved to return to the old schedule and make no more attempts to cover the distance in eighteen hours. They say that they are opposed to trains so fast, but that the public demands them. It is probable that they are right. Many men are more anxious to save an hour or two on a journey than to put the time to a good use when it is saved. How few there are who adopt the Psalmist's rule in estimating the value of time!

So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom (Ps. 90 : 12).

BRIEF NOTES

Resistance to payment of the tax for sectarian education in England has led to the imprisonment of 140 persons, more than one third of them Christian ministers.

The Rev. J. Walter Lowrie, Presbyterian Missionary, has been decorated by the Emperor of China as a mandarin, an honor extended to only one or two other foreigners. He was of great service to the Chinese government in adjusting the Boxer difficulties.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church adopted a resolution pledging the Assembly "to unite with other Christian and patriotic bodies in requesting the Senate of the United States in the exercise of its constitutional powers or prerogatives, to purge itself of all complicity with the crimes of the Mormon hierarchy, by expelling the Apostle Senator Reed Smoot from the Senate of the United States."

President Roosevelt to College Men

JUNE 21 and 22 were memorable days in several New England colleges. On the 21st President Theodore Roosevelt visited in turn Clark University and Holy Cross College, at Worcester, Mass. At Clark University, where he received the honorary degree of LL.D., President Roosevelt made an address to the graduating class, in the course of which he gave them some good, sound, homely advice. He said in part:

"The first duty of each one of you here is to carry your own weight, to carry yourselves; you aren't going to be able to do anything for any one else until you can support yourselves and those immediately dependent upon you. I do not want to see you develop that kind of idealism which makes you filled with vague thoughts of beneficence for mankind and an awful drawback to your immediate families.

"While I think we live in a pretty good world, I do not think it is the best possible world, and I hope we shall have a readjustment of rewards, even those of a pecuniary or material kind. Altogether too much in the way of rewards comes to a certain type of financier, and too little comes to the student, to the scholar, to the teacher. to the man who represents the scholarly side, the side of thought, thought-making, thought-producing work in our nation.

"I want to say that as a preliminary, and to have it understood that I never would have you lose sight of your fundamental duty at the outset, but while remembering that, remember also that it is not figuratively but literally true that the really first class work can't be paid for, cannot be done by the man who expects pay for it.

"I have always felt most strongly that it is true of the nation as of the individual, that the greatest doer must also be a great dreamer. Of course, if the dream isn't followed by action, then it is a bubble. It merely has served to divert the man from doing something. But great action, action that is really great, cannot take place if the man hasn't it in his brain to think great thoughts, to dream great dreams.

"As has been so well pointed out to-day, the marvelous rise of Germany in the world of industry or of commerce, no less than of art and of letters, has been due to the fact that the German was trained in his mind, that he had high ideals and finally shaped these ideals by his practical way. I was immensely struck, as I think all of us must have been struck, by the way in which, a few weeks ago, our fellow-citizens of German birth, or descent (many of whom are here in this audience), took part in the service of commemorating the life and writings of Schiller.

THE NEW THOMPSON MEMORIAL CHAPEL AT WILLIAMS COLLEGE

Dedicated June 22, President Roosevelt being present at the ceremonies

"From Germany this country has learned much. Germany has contributed a great element to the blood of our people, and it has given the most marked trend ever given to us along scholastic and university lines, to the whole system of training students and scholars. In taking what we should from Germany, from this great kindred nation, I wish that we could take specially the idealism which renders it natural to them to celebrate such an event as Schiller's life and writings; and also the keen, practical common sense which enables them to turn their idealistic spirit into an instrument for producing the most perfect military and industrial organizations that the world has ever seen.

"I hope most earnestly for the day when we shall see peace prevail among the nations of mankind; peace industrial, as well as military, prevail within the nations themselves. No man in public position can, under penalty of having forfeited the right to the respect of those whose regard he most values, fails as the opportunity comes to do all that in him lies for peace. But peace of a valuable type comes not to the man who craves it because he is afraid, but to the man who demands it because it is right. The peace granted contemptuously to the weakling and the coward is but a poor boon after it has been granted. . . . . .

"I have no patience with the brawler, the quarreler, the swashbuckler, and I have a little less for the academic person, either of body or soul, who believes that a nation any more than an individual can afford to put peace before justice. Put justice first; it will generally lead to peace, but follow it wherever it leads."

The same evening the President reac
Williamstown, Mass., in time to rece cordial greeting from the entire body students of Williams College, headed President Hopkins. This visit was in p suance of an invitation to attend the C mencement exercises at Williams next d which Mr. Roosevelt had accepted.

On Thursday, June 22, there was a r able assemblage at the Commencement ercises. Several honorary degrees w conferred, President Roosevelt being d orated last as Doctor of Letters. Wl the black silk scholastic robe, trimn with white, was thrown over his bro shoulders, there was loud applause. T
President then made an address which cupied nearly an hour in delivery, theme being "Idealism in Politics."
held up Lincoln and Washingson as pub men with high ideals which they strove realize in practical shape. Turning national questions, he said in part:

I want to see this nation act for righteousn first and then for peace. I wish to see the nat stand for the peace of justice, for the righteousn in the attainment of which peace is normally potent instrument, but for which we must sta whether peace comes or not. We have not got a such terrible crisis as that of 1861 facing us no
On the contrary, we have a series of rather hu drum little crises, which it is sometimes exasp ating to have to face, but which we have to fa

He believed in the Monroe doctrine, a in the building and maintaining of t
Panama Canal; but he would rather gi up both than see the country witho
"the means which can alone render i attitude as a nation worthy of the respe of the other nations of mankind. Keep building and maintaining at the highe point of efficiency the United States Nav or quit trying to be a nation."

Speaking of internal affairs, he declare that "just as we must never allow this go ernment to be changed into a governme by a mob, so we must never allow it be changed into a government by a pluto racy." He condemned the system und which mere money-making is unduly r warded. He advocated the supervision b the national government of great industri combinations and corporations.

As was stated in last week's CHRISTIA
HERALD, an event in connection with th
Commencement at Williams College, wa the dedication of the beautiful new co
lege chapel, erected on the former site o
Goodrich Hall, and known as "Thompso Memorial Chapel." It was built at a cos of over $250,000, and is the finest colleg chapel in America. The general aspect i that of strength, solidity, and beauty.

LITTLE DAVID'S DAY OF JOY

IN a poor little home, where poverty is king, and where his subjects are forced to yield obedience to constant demands, lives a woman and her little son. The husband and father works and does his best to support his family; but sickness and doctors' bills are hard to meet, when the man's labor brings but little over what is required for the daily needs.

LITTLE DAVID

David is their only child, and a brave, true-hearted little man he is. His mother injured her right arm a year ago, and since that time it has been useless; in fact, the entire side of her body is affected and her whole system weakened. She came to the Bible House not long ago, and asked if David might go to Mont-Lawn this summer. The little boy listened eagerly, while arrangements were being made to "book" him for ten days at the Home. His eyes shone with delighted anticipation when, suddenly, his glance fell upon his mother's crippled arm.

"But who will dress mother if I go?" he cried. "Father's away at work, and we don't know when he'll be back, and mother has no one but me."

The mother hastened to reply that she could get along very well for a time, even if she were not dressed or undressed for a few days. Such cases of affectionate devotion are not at all uncommon among the families of the very poor. Here was a little lad, looking forward eagerly to visiting that beautiful place up the river, of which he had heard such wonderful tales from his little schoolfellows who had been there—a place where children have all they want to eat, three times a day; where there are no "Keep off the Grass" signs in the big fields; where tents, ball-grounds and swings take up so little room that a fellow can run and race to his heart's content. And David had been told that there was an open-air gymnasium also; but he sometimes thought that that must be a fairy tale. The springs, the brook, and swimming pool—when he heard about all these wonderful things, he just "wanted to go."

"Won't I have a good time, though, mother?" he would say. "I bet I'll beat in those Saturday afternoon races the children have when Dr. Klopsch is there. He starts 'em, so Johnny Carter says. He's the man, Johnny says, they call the 'Children's friend,' 'cause he started Mont-Lawn, 'n he goes up there Saturday afternoons, and starts up games for the boys and girls; 'n he talks to 'em, 'n they aint a bit afraid, 'cause he says he loves 'em, 'n I guess he does, or he wouldn't be up there with 'em. O, mammy dear, won't it be fine if they'll let me go?" And Davy danced around and turned two or three "cart-wheels," finally walking across the floor on his hands, to the delight of his mother, who often said she thought her David was the smartest boy of his age she ever saw.

So, by dint of persuasion, David got his mother take him to the Bible House, to ask if he could not go to Mont-Lawn. It never struck the boy, until told he could go, that his departure would leave his mother alone, and practically helpless. When that thought came to him, all joy departed from his face, but was replaced by an expression of the most loving devotion.

Being assured that his mother would be looked after while he was away, David was finally persuaded that the visit to Mont-Lawn should be made.

A not less beautiful exhibition of the loving hearts of little children, is shown in the following letter from Superintendent Joseph Miller, of Bethany Mission of Salem, N. J.

DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Enclosed please find money-order for $27, the amount collected on Children's Day, at Bethany Mission Sunday School, to be used for sending the tenement children to Mont-Lawn. This collection was suggested to the Sunday School, by the reading of the enclosed clipping from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of May 17, 1905: "From Tenement Cellars to Mont-Lawn." $21 of the collection you will please use for endowing a bed for the season, giving seven children ten days each at the Home. Make the endowment in the name of Bethany Mission, of Salem, N. J., thereby encouraging the poor children of our Mission, many of whom sacrificed so much, that children poorer than they could enjoy God's pure air and comforts in the Home on the beautiful Hudson River. The balance of the money use for additional outings at Mont-Lawn.

If it can be arranged, will you please have the two little girls mentioned in clipping from CHRISTIAN HERALD, and have little Joe, the black-eyed, smiling little fellow of ten, know that Miss Mary Morris' class of boys of fourteen years of age, raised the $3, desiring that they might give him an outing, and I know little Joe will appreciate this when he learns that every one of these boys work hard in our Glass House, and in stores, not only helping themselves, but their parents.

I know they had to pinch hard and save, to contribute their part of the collection, and it will give them great pleasure to know that Joe had a good time at Mont-Lawn.

The above letter is particularly appreciated, as showing the generous and unselfish spirit of the young donors of this contribution to the good work at Mont-Lawn. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD extends sincere thanks to Bethany Mission, and to all others who have aided our fresh-air work among the tenement children.

THE BABIES ENJOY THE "STORY HOUR"

PARSEE CHILDREN AT THEIR KINDERGARTEN LESSON

A BRIGHT PARSEE GIRL'S LIFE-WORK

THERE is now visiting in this country Miss Susie Sorabji, a remarkably gifted young Parsee woman of Poona, India. Though young, she has already won high honors and official recognition in India as a pioneer educator, and as the introducer in that country of Kindergarten methods. She is the daughter of a Christian Parsee family, her father having become a convert and missionary at eighteen years of age.

A few years ago, Miss Sorabji stood alone in favor of kindergarten teaching. She was opposed, even to the point of gentle ridicule, in the India Government reports. Nothing daunted, she planned to break down this opposition, and succeeded so well that today kindergarten teaching is compulsory in the government schools.

There is no Kindergarten Training-School in India for the Government or the Mission teacher, but Miss Sorabji permit teachers to come and sit in her schoolrooms while her classes are in session and observe the methods in use there. These teachers are detailed one a month in turn to this work of observation. Miss Sorabji's methods are strikingly original, and her exercises, with the words and music accompanying them, are composed for the occasion. In her gay, bright kindergarten, the little human plants thrive amid joyous surroundings. The walls are hung with gay charts and fine pictures that lift the little hearts nearer to God, of whom the whole kindergarten speaks. The great world of nature, too, is opened up to the little child, into whose heart are being dropped, through the medium of song or story, or dramatic representation, of artistic picture, seeds of religion, truth, virtue, and loyalty.

The little ones take special delight in the nature study; they watch with joy the evolutions of the caterpillar and grub, the beetle and wasp, secreting and jealously guarding their specimens all over the school. When it is time for the kindergarten games, gay run the little people to the teacher, who holds in her hands gay roses, and poppies, forget-me-nots and daisies, all cut out of crinkled paper and at least a foot in diameter. "Let me be the rose?" asks one, while yet another pleads to represent the poppy. When all are satisfied, the schoolroom presents a gay scene indeed, the little dimpled faces peeping out under the gorgeous flowers, which the children wear as head-dress. The story-hour is one of the most joyous in all the day. To vest the mother-earth, the great ocean flows, the soft downy clouds, with personality, is to the little Indian child quite natural; and the story of a dewdrop, or the glittering stars is as real as the familiar tale about "the little boy around the corner." Then, in order that the little mind might have some form of expression, pencils and scribbling books are produced, and quaint representations of the leading object in the story grow under the little pencils. No effort is ever depreciated, but all are encouraged.

The story of Geography is a delightful game to the little ones, taught as it is under the trees, where a great relief map of India makes mountains, rivers and table-lands actualities. They sail their tiny boats in the blue waters of the Arabian, or Bengal Seas, touching at the various ports, and loading them with the produce of each district. Here they have miniature bales of cotton, or there packets of tea, rice, jute, or timber. Another instructive study is dramatized history. One boy is William the Conqueror, while the others are his barons, serfs, etc. The battle of Hastings has been fought many times in the garden of the schools of Poona. Turning grammar into a game is another marvel that Miss Sorabji has wrought. One pupil is Mr. Noun. He has sisters and brothers. The common Nouns are undignified and noisy. The proper Nouns give themselves airs and grace. Miss Verb has lively and active brothers, and quiet, passive sisters. And so on through the entire grammar.

MISS SUSIE SORABJI

It is both pretty and amusing to see these little people—the girls in white wrappers and night caps—hushing, rocking, scolding their baby dolls to music, and finally putting them to sleep in their little cradles. "It isn't play any more," you say, as you watch the sweet, earnest faces bending tenderly over the cribs. The tiny mothers are in earnest now, and it is with almost a start that they are recalled, by a crashing chord from the piano, to march round the room, and end the morning's exercises by the Kindergarten song, "How many miles to Babyland?" "What do they do in Babyland?" sing the wee warblers, and the answer comes back, "Dream, and wake, and play," etc,, but the humorous is reached when they sing, "What comes after Babyland?" and immediately, with little fists thrust in their eyes, they sing, "Books, and schools, and nasty rules." The little laughing faces that look up to be kissed when the song is ended, however, show that in this kindergarten at least, "Books and schools and nasty rules" find no place.

Beside having the management of the Victoria High School, founded by her mother more than a quarter of a century ago, and of her own Mohammedan, Hindu and Parsee schools, Miss Sorabji frequently lectures before large and distinguished audiences, composed of both Christians and non-Christians. So highly do the learned Mohammedans value her educational work, that an offer has been made by them to give her supervision of a large school in Bombay, with the privilege of teaching the Bible. This concession was made because she has made it an invariable rule never to teach or lecture without speaking for the cause of Christ.

Miss Sorabji has the only Parsee school in India where the children may be taught the Bible truths. It is in behalf of this school, recently established on an independent basis, that she now visits this country. She is visiting the summer Conferences during July and August, and will speak in many of the larger cities of the States and Canada, later in the season.

The little chapel of Bethany Mission in Bleecker Street, New York, was filled with a strangely mixed audience a few evenings ago. Black-eyed, swarthy-skinned Italians sat next blue-eyed, flaxen-haired little Irish lads and lassies, while here and there appeared the earnest, happy faces of the children of Ham. There were many children there, because they were to hear Miss Sorabji tell about the little East India boys and girls. She told, in simple language, the story of the founding of the schools at Poona, India, for educating the little Brahmin, Mohammedan and Parsee children; how upon the site of the little hut, where she used to gather the little children about her, there now stands a beautiful schoolhouse, erected by kind Americans, who gave her the money when she was here a few years ago. She told her audience she had come again to plead for the children of India.

"WHAT DO THEY DO IN BABYLAND?"

After the address, a little negro girl, who had been a most attentive listener, solemnly and earnestly confided to the writer, her intention of being a missionary just as soon as she grew up, "And I'm going to India," she added.

Just as Miss Sorabji was leaving the chapel, after having shaken hands with almost every one, a woman whispered something in Miss Sorabji's ear. "That was a five-dollar bill, the woman put in my hand," said Miss Sorabji, while her eyes glistened into tears, "and she whispered to me that it was from the 'mothers of the tenements.' Ah! such gifts as that almost break my heart!"

HOW THE DEATH OF CHRIST SAVES US

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON,

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS*

ISAIAH was placed first of the prophets whose writings are grouped at the end of the Old Testament, not because he was first in time, but because he was greatest in moral influence. We have already seen, in the stories of Sennacherib's overthrow and Hezekiah's prayer, that Isaiah was the uncrowned king of Judah, the power behind the throne. His writings show that he was also the Browning of the Hebrew poets, foremost in the eloquence of faith. Even Matthew Arnold would have had Isaiah and Jeremiah read in the schools to promote a loftiness of literary style. But in his book, Isaiah tells us nothing of himself but his name. At the same time he tells us so much more of Christ, as the promised Messiah, than any other prophet, that he was called by the Latin Church fathers Evangelista, the evangelist. He first proclaimed the Gospel the "good news to the poor," that all wrongs were to be righted by the coming of a Saviour-King.

HE WAS WOUNDED FOR OUR TRANSGRESSIONS

A complete outline of the earthly life of Christ can be made by grouping in chronological order all the references of Isaiah to his birth, his miracles, his words, his spirit, his death, and his resurrection. This may be done easily by those who have THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Red Letter Bible, for they have only to copy the starred passages, and set them in order, from "unto us a Child is born," until he was "wounded for our transgressions," and "taken from the earth."

That the fifty-third chapter was Messianic, the Jewish doctors, before Christ came, fully believed; but they were not a little perplexed to reconcile this picture of a suffering Messiah with other pictures of a conquering one, and so some of them conceived a theory there were to be two Messiahs, one a Sovereign, the other a Sufferer. Indeed, there was no precedent for one having all power voluntarily becoming the supreme Sufferer; but this is the very mark of the Messiah's pre-eminence above selfish men.

The story of all others for parents and teachers to keep in mind as they enter upon the teaching of this tender prophecy of the Cross, is that of Acts 8, where an African official is seen reading this chapter as he rides in his chariot. In Ethiopia he had heard of the true God, and he had made a long and costly journey to the Temple at Jerusalem to learn more about Him. The unspiritual leaders of its dead services could not help him much, but he got a copy of Isaiah, and his anxious heart soon found the very heart of it, the fifty-third chapter. But the book always needs a Christian heart to interpret it, and so God took Deacon Philip from his revival meetings in Samaria, to save this one soul by personal conversation. "From that same scripture he preached unto him Jesus," to the saving of his soul. And shall any one to whom this lesson comes be content to do less with it than to save a soul?

Illustration and Application

The one theme of this chapter is the atonement, and let us teach that great doctrine. No other is so fundamental to old and young in our Sunday Schools. It is surprising how many evangelical people who repudiate the doctrine of salvation by our own goodness alone, teach the children they are to be saved by being good. Isaac Watts, who wrote

> When I survey the wondrous Cross
> On which the Prince of Glory died,
> My richest gain I count but dross,
> And pour contempt on all my pride, when he wrote hymns for children, filled them with the contrary teaching of salvation by our own goodness. This is an exceeding common error of parents, teachers, and even preachers, because it is assumed that children cannot understand the atonement.

1. The Pre-eminence of the Cross. In Isaiah's gospel, as in the New Testament, the central, pre-eminent fact is the Messiah's atoning death, which some, even of those who read the Bible, would make secondary to his exemplary life. But both Testaments point to the Cross as his goal. Sinful man's first need is a new standing with God and a new nature from God, as the preparation for a new life in imitation of Christ.

Artists speak of "Van Dyke's Crucifixion" and "Rubens' Crucifixion," but Isaiah's Crucifixion—the word-picture in his fifty-third chapter—is greatest of all. Not even John or Paul set forth the atoning significance of the Cross so fully in any one chapter.

2. The True Cross has Eternal Foundations. Three chief facts about the atonement here stand out in bold relief: first, that in God's purpose and plan it began long before Christ came to this world. Christ was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Really the first gospel is the promise of a wounded Conqueror that followed the first sin. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head and it shall bruise his heel." This fifty-third chapter of Isaiah shows, second, that the atonement included Christ's entire human life, the "ministry of reconciliation," and, third, that the atonement culminated in an expiatory death on the Cross.

3. How the Death of Christ Saves Us. Thousands savingly believe the Bible's teaching that we are saved from our sins in repentance, because Christ died, who have no "theory of the atonement," just as they know a flower blooms, and that somebody loves them, and they love somebody, though they have no philosophy of love or of flowers. But it is a good thing to think. And there will come new appreciation of the sinfulness of sin, and the love of God, from wise thinking on the question how the death of Christ gives us new life.

JEREMIAH HOSEA ISAIAH EZEKIEL

ALL THE PROPHETS PROPHESIED OF HIM

One of the two chief theories is called "the moral influence theory." The devout Unitarian proclaims we are saved by the death of Christ, by which he means that the Cross softens man's heart, and reconciles man to God; but he denies that the Cross reconciles God to man. Those in orthodox churches also, who seek to eliminate all miracle and mystery from religion, are disposed to lean to this view. They deny earnestly that Christ was "punished" instead of the sinner, asserting that "guilt," being a matter of consciousness, can not be transferred, and that "punishment" and "penalty" imply guilt, and can not be spoken of as borne by the innocent. Those who hold the substitutionary or expiatory theory, which is the usual evangelical theory, and the natural interpretation of Bible passages on the subject, do not reject the moral influence side of the atonement. They do not forget that Jesus said, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." They know there is nothing to draw men from sinning like the Cross. But they say that the human conscience calls for deliverance from past sin as well as future sinning, and the moral influence theory shows no way in which God can be just and maintain the honor of law and government, and at the same time forgive those who have broken his law.

No intelligent person claims that guilt is transferred from the guilty to the innocent, or that "punishment," in the strict sense of the word, can be inflicted on any innocent person. But it is a matter of every-day occurrence that innocent persons voluntarily suffer in place of the guilty, and that this often softens the offender's heart, and maintains the honor of the law at the same time. A boy commits a crime. His mother, from her hard toil at the wash-tub, pays his fine, and suffers untold mental agony besides. The boy's heart is touched, and the honor of the law is vindicated. If such cases were forgiven regularly by the judge it would put a premium upon lawlessness.

A prisoner was indicted for some breach of the law. The judge who tried him had been his playmate in childhood, his comrade at school, and his companion in sin. But grace had delivered the one, the evil held captive the other. The prisoner was found guilty. Remembering his old intimacy with the judge, he expected a reprimand, or at most a light sentence. The severest sentence of the law was inflicted—a heavy fine, with alternative of imprisonment. The man was poor; sin had kept him so. To pay the fine was impossible. He must go to jail. But the judge, who wanted to show how God had pardoned him, came down from the bench, and paid the fine at once and in full.

Here is another fine instance of substitutionary atonement from the life of Stanley, the African explorer:

Stanley had with him many beads, which he exchanged with the natives for provisions. In the carrying of the goods across the mountains, many of these beads had been stolen, and among the guilty was found Stanley's trusted, reliable, and kind follower, Uledi. Stanley was much grieved to find that Uledi had been stealing, who was always as true as steel in the hour of danger, and, if necessary, would have forfeited his life for Stanley.

However, Stanley saw that stealing must be stopped, or they would soon have nothing to purchase provisions with. Therefore he called the chiefs together, and asked them what punishment should be inflicted upon Uledi. After keeping silence for a while, the principal chief decided that Uledi had better be flogged, and the rest agreed with him. Then Stanley asked the crew of the boat of which Uledi was coxswain, and who thought a great deal of him. The watchman of the boat replied: "Ah, it is a hard question, master. He is like our elder brother; but as the fathers of the people have spoken, be it so; yet for our sakes, master, beat him just a little."

Uledi's brother, on being asked, replied: "Spare Uledi; but if he must be flogged, give me half of it; I shall not feel it if it is for Uledi."

Then Stanley asked Uledi's cousin, who said: "Will the master give his slave liberty to speak?" and his request being granted, he kneeled on the ground, and clasping Stanley's legs, he said: "The Master is wise. All things that happen he writes in a book. Each day something is written in the book. Perhaps if master will look in the book, he will find something in it about Uledi. How Uledi saved Zaidi from the cataract; how he saved many men from the river; how he worked harder at the canoe than any three men; how he has been first to listen to your voice always. With Uledi, master, the boat-boys are good and ready, without him they are nothing. Uledi is Shumari's brother. If Uledi is bad, Shumari is good. Uledi is my cousin. If the chiefs say Uledi should be punished, Shumari says he will take half of the punishment, then give Saywa the other half, and set Uledi free."

Stanley replied: "Very well. Uledi, by the voice of the people, is condemned; but as Shumari and Saywa have promised to take the punishment on themselves, Uledi is set free, and Shumari and Saywa are pardoned."

As soon as Uledi was set free he came to Stanley and said: "Master, it was not Uledi who stole, it was the devil which had entered into his heart."

Stanley had found an impressive way to be just, and yet the justifier, the pardoner, of the penitent Uledi. It is but a miniature of the Cross, for the substitutes did not really suffer, except in mental anticipation, the penalty of Uledi; but it is an interpreting story, in the light of which to read Isaiah 53 and the New Testament passages that most fully express the atonement, remembering that Christ, having no sins of his own, was competent to take the place of those who had, and being divine was competent to take the place of them all. Read Rom. 5: 9; 1: 18; Gal. 3: 13; II. Cor. 5: 21; I. Peter 3: 18.

*International Sunday School Lesson for July 16, The Suffering Saviour, Isaiah 52: 13 to Isaiah 53: 12. Golden Text: The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. Isaiah 53: 6.

IN MY VERANDA NOOK

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Home Life

AMID the manifold publicities of life in the world, the sweet privacies of the home go on without disturbance. Outside, there are confusion and discords; within the home-doors there is confidence, there is peace. Many a man is saved from the wreck of all his hopes, and the loss of what is best in character, because of his unruffled private happiness. Men see only one side of him, perhaps a hard side. They call him pushing and arrogant; they think he sacrifices everything to success. They fancy that his supreme ambition is to build up a great business, or to have a grand career.

But go home with him at the day's end. As his key turns in the lock, there is a glad rush of children's feet. "Papa! Papa!" cry the merry voices. The baby totters up on her tiny feet. The next to the baby clings to his coat. The big boy shouts that his school won the game to-day. The elder daughter lifts her face for a kiss. And in the background—matronly, smiling, beautiful, benignant, waits his other self — the sweet wife, the mother of the bonny brood. They understand one another's moods. Often they have no need of speech, one heart so answers the other. The true life of their household is an oasis in the world's desert, an islet of calm in the world's wide sea, a haven of repose from every storm.

In home life there are a thousand charming incidents and episodes that never get into print. The delight over the good reports that the children bring home from school, to be anxiously scrutinized and only signed by parents; the solicitude about locating a lad in a business office when first he goes from home; the love affairs of the young people; the guests who come and go; and the first long journey or first ocean voyage, are themes of great moment. Illness may come, and death break the smooth and glad routine, but, taken all in all, the bright days far outnumber the shadowed ones, and the joys are more than the griefs. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Most contented and restful is the life in unobtrusive homes, that make little stir and are known only to the friends and kindred. The lime-light of notoriety never invades them. They are retired and withdrawn, but within them abides love a constant presence. And though hearts do break, and homes are broken, and the shame of the divorce court is in the land, yet as compared with the tried and true, the number of the faithless is small. The home life of the great republic is the pledge of its increasing prosperity, and love is forever dominant in the American home.

The Good Effects of Travel

Travel, however limited, however restricted to a narrow area, does a good thing for character in broadening one's horizon and enlarging one's sympathies. Women who stay always at home inevitably grow narrow. They cannot well help it. So, the loving husband who can afford it, should lay aside his natural wish to keep his wife near him, and encourage her now and then to go away on a visit, to attend a Federation or Convention meeting, and to go where for awhile others will carry the responsibility while she simply enjoys her unwonted freedom.

For children and young people travel is educational. It stimulates them in every direction, throws an illumination on their books and studies, and shows them how other people live.

A woman or a man who has traveled widely is usually an entertaining companion. In conversation he or she knows what to say, and has some fresh contribution to make to the current of talk.

Though one's travels may not carry one far afield, yet a trip to the nearest town may be productive of new ideas, so do not despise the small opportunity if the larger does not come in your way. Next to personal travel, a trip made by proxy is delightful. Send the youngster who will take in knowledge at every pore, and exact a full account of what he sees, where he goes, and whom he meets. In these days, traveling does not of necessity cost a great deal of money. One may go over a wide extent of land or sea, and spend only a small sum, if one reasons that show and display are subordinate to comfort.

ORPHAN GIRLS

Our Father, we are fatherless and motherless on earth:
And sorrow's wing has shadowed us, since here we had our birth.
But Thou can'st give us home and love, can'st give us joy and mirth.
Our Father, God, to thee we raise our hymn of heartfelt, grateful praise.

A Human Kaleidoscope

IN our childhood we used to amuse ourselves with a toy called a kaleidoscope. At the end of a paste-board tube there was an arrangement of bits of different colored glass; one shook the tube and looked through a peephole. Pieces of glass shifted and formed many lovely combinations, geometrical figures, squares, circles and flowers. They afforded constant pleasure to children, especially on rainy days, when, outside, the skies were gray. As we grew older we lost our interest in this plaything. The kaleidoscope lost its magic charm. We became acquainted with the several transformations, and the element of change leading to surprise faded away. But instead of the childish toy we have come to take an interest in the kaleidoscope of our own soul. This never drops into monotony. Of each one of us it may be said that time cannot wither, nor custom stale the infinite variety. How many moods we have! How many rooms there are in every heart affording accommodation for ambitions, hopes, fears, loves, and friendships. There is room for loyal and devoted faith, for affection going on from one world to another, and not even wavering when death takes a dear one out of sight. There is also room for mean and creeping and base things, for grudges, for feuds, for enmity. The human kaleidoscope is far more wonderful than any mechanical device made by human hands. It was the Almighty who made it, and who breathed into it the breath of life. We look not only into our own souls but out upon the world around us, and still the effects are those of the kaleidoscope.

Help for the Helpless

Countless readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will sympathize with the gifted author Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward, in her campaign against vivisection. For years Mrs. Ward has employed her eloquent pen in behalf of animals, and has fought a battle against the needless cruelties of science, as practiced upon defenseless little creatures, that are laid on the dissecting table, and made the subjects of experiment under the knife. In an address, made some little time ago, before a committee of the Massachusetts Legislature, Mrs. Ward said, "Mercy cannot mean barbarity to animals for the sake of kindness to men." She quoted Robert Browning's declaration, "I would rather submit to the worst of deaths, than have a single cat or dog tortured under the pretense of saving me a twinge or two." And again, it was a distinguished Harvard professor of surgery who asserted: "Better that I or my friend should die than protract existence through accumulated . . . torture upon animals whose exquisite suffering we cannot fail to infer." Mrs. Ward urges every one, wherever he or she may be, to use whatever influence can be brought to bear against the shocking cruelties perpetrated in the name of science, and very truly says that if the careless public knew what vivisection meant, an overwhelming public sentiment would be aroused against it.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—MAY. The baby's card should be very small and on it should be engraved the name and date of birth, but not the weight or any other particulars. Tie the card to the mother's with a very narrow white ribbon.

EDITH. Unless a man is faint, ill or a cripple, a young lady should certainly not hold his coat or other belongings for him. On the other hand, a man walking with a girl should always offer to carry her packages.

THE RESURRECTION OF MISS CYNTHIA

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

CHAPTER XIX.

AT the close of the final service, the Rev. G. Algernon Guffey found himself the centre of a stormy group composed of the more prominent members of the church. Among the indignant murmurs which reached his ear the voice of Deacon Scrimger cut like a rusty sickle.

"Them words of Cynthy Day's was jest the outcroppin' of the wicked heresies which hes be'n a-growin' up in this 'ere community fer years," declared the deacon, smiting his horny palms together in a fine frenzy of righteous indignation. "I shell insist on callin' a church meetin' an' gittin' right down to the root of the hull business." He glared malevolently at his pastor. "The' ain't no use in tryin' to save the unconverted, when perfessin' Christians is 'lowed to talk like that in a r'vival meetin'."

Mr. Guffey raised his eyebrows. "Let us not be too hasty in condemning our sister," he said judicially. "It is not given to every man to be so filled with the consuming anxiety after righteousness which you manifest, Brother Scrimger. As it is written, 'The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up'."

The deacon rolled his eyes proudly about the circle of attentive faces. "That's right, dominie, I ain't in favor of no halfway measures when it comes to r'ligious dis'pline," he remarked with a gratified chuckle. Then his lips tightened craftily. "I'd like a word with you in private, Brother Guffey," he whispered loudly, "concernin' the welfare of this branch of the Lord's Zion."

The evangelist laid his hand on the old man's shoulder. "Let us first sleep over the matter, brother, and the Spirit may see fit to instruct us in the night season," he murmured pacifically. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

"Well, I sh'd say Cynthia Day had ought to be dealt with im me--diately," broke in Mrs. Buckthorn, with a loud, discouraged sigh. "There's no knowin' how many pr—recious souls she's kep' out of the Kingdom to-night. I sh'll spen' the hours between now an' midnight on my knees, an' go forth to wrestle with her the first thing tomorrow mornin'. What do you perpose to do, Mr. Pettibone?"

Thus appealed to the pastor of the church became the target of a score of critical, expectant eyes. He hesitated visibly. "We should remember first of all the command of the Master and judge not," he said at length.

Fragments of whispered conversation were buzzing about his ears like teasing gnats; they arose from the circle of women that fringed the group. "They do say she's awful intimate with his wife—She's got the queerest idees — A terrible backslider, if not worse!"

Mr. Guffey terminated the conference with practiced ease. The evangelist adroitly contrived to detach Mr. Pettibone from his agitated parishioners, and presently the two men were walking alone on the frosty street. "Tell me about that woman," said Mr. Guffey.

"You mean Miss Day?"

"Of course; who else?"

Mr. Pettibone was silent for a moment. "I fear that I do not fully understand Miss Day's spiritual state," he said slowly. "She has been a member of this church in good and regular standing since early childhood, and I have observed nothing uncommon in her conduct until—well, really, I could not say just when the change took place; but she is certainly remarkably different to what she was."

He added a few sparse details concerning Miss Cynthia's more spectacular actions, to all of which the evangelist listened with a grave attention.

"Most extraordinary, I should say," commented Mr. Guffey. "Did you preach her into all that, Pettibone?"

"I don't know," said the minister honestly.

Mr. Guffey's lips widened in his slow, inscrutable smile. "They tell me you are especially strong in urging the Sermon on the Mount upon your hearers. It isn't popular doctrine, you know."

Mr. Pettibone turned upon the evangelist suddenly. "It is the Constitution of the Kingdom, as proclaimed by its Founder," he cried, almost sharply. "I must urge it—I must!"

"And be crucified for it," said Mr. Guffey under his breath. "The Pharisees are on your track now, brother."

Mr. Pettibone lifted his worn face to the stars. "Even so come quickly, Lord Jesus!" he whispered.

It was the day after this significant conversation that Abby Whiton, energetically ridding the doorsteps of a crust of frozen sleet in the gray light of the January morning, discovered the massive form of Mrs. Buckthorn advancing toward the house. That excellent woman was heavily swathed in shawls, and the tip of her prominent nose, purpled with the cold, protruded from the frosty folds of her blue veil.

Miss Whiton regarded this early visitor with an acrimonious smile. "Seems to me you're out pretty early this mornin' Mis' Buckthorn," she observed. "Ain't you 'fraid of gittin' rheumatiz?"

Mrs. Buckthorn groaned hollowly. "I'd reelly ought to be in my bed this minute, Abby Whiton," she replied. "But when dooty calls I'm ever to be found in the front ranks."

"What pertic'ler dooty 's ketched a-holt of you now?" demanded Miss Whiton tartly, as she applied her broom to the large rubber-clad feet which Mrs. Buckthorn deliberately presented for cleansing. "The's times when folks gits their idees of dooty kind o' mixed up with other folk's business."

"Was you at the meetin' last night, Abby?" demanded Mrs. Buckthorn sternly.

"I hed m' bread to set," Miss Whiton replied evasively. "But if it's me you've come to talk to this mornin', I might 's well tell ye right off 'at I've got r'ligion a-plenty. I c'n tell the truth most every time, an' I min' m' own business the endurin' while. Ef everybody done that right along I guess most folks 'ud think the m'lenium had struck 'em!"

"My business here is no concern of yours, Abby," Mrs. Buckthorn said, compressing her lips with an air of pious endurance. "I've come to talk carefully an' prayerfully with Cynthia Day about the state of her immortal soul. You will let her know that I am waitin' to see her. My time is val—u—able!"

"Hern is too," retorted Abby Whiton, with a defiant toss of her head. "I wouldn't wait ef I was you. Miss Cynthy don't need no talkin' to. She's jest a-gittin' so she's cheerful an' happy, an' I ain't a-goin' to hev her bothered, so there!"

"Well, of all things!" Mrs. Buckthorn intoned, with deep-throated indignation. "You will call her at once, or I shall!"

The two women stared truculently at each other for a full minute, then

CONTINUED ON PAGE 587

Copyright, 1905, by Florence Morse Kingsley

A Prominent Horticulturist Writes:

I have found a home insecticide that costs next to nothing and is vastly superior to the expensive ones on the market: Melt a quarter of a pound of Ivory Soap and add to it a pailful of water, and it is ready to apply to your bushes with an ordinary garden spray.

Those who give it a trial will be delighted with the results.

Ivory Soap
99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

$56.50
Portland
AND RETURN

From Chicago, via the Chicago & North-Western Ry., daily, to September 30. Choice of routes via Omaha, Cheyenne and Granger, via St. Paul and Minneapolis, through the mountain scenery of Colorado and Utah, through the Lake McDonald Country of the Canadian Rockies, with tickets via California or via Yellowstone Park at slight advance in rates.

Correspondingly low rates from other points, account

LEWIS AND CLARK CENTENNIAL

A great opportunity to visit one of the greatest grain and fruit raising countries, the largest fishing and lumbering industries, and some of the most aggressive, rich and growing cities in the world.

The Best of Everything.

Full particulars in regard to the exposition and descriptive of the Pacific Northwest sent to any address on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

All agents sell tickets via this line.

W. B. KNISKERN,
Passenger Traffic Manager,
CHICAGO.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

OL157

"Cleanliness is nae pride, dirt's nae honesty." Common sense dictates the use of SAPOLIO

Mail Orders Only. No Agents or Branches. Est. 17 Years

REDUCED PRICE SALE.
Tailor-made Costumes and Shirt-Waist Suits
MADE TO YOUR MEASURE
One-Fifth Reduction from Former Prices
Write To-day for Catalogue and Samples

$6 Suits now $4.80
$10 Suits now $8.00
$18 Suits now $14.40
$25 Suits now $20.00

$4 Skirts now $3.20
$7 Skirts now $5.60
$10 Skirts now $8.00
$12 Skirts now $9.60

Prices also reduced on Jackets, Silk Costumes, Rain Coats, etc.

Your choice of over 150 of the latest New York Styles and 100 of this season's fashionable materials.

For a short time only we will make any garment illustrated in our Catalogue, from any of our Mohairs, Serges, Lansdownes, Taffetas, Eoliennes and other fabrics suitable for Summer and early Fall wear, at a reduction of One-Fifth from our Catalogue prices.

During this sale you can have two suits made by us for about the same amount you would pay for one made at home.

We guarantee to fit you or refund your money

FREE We send free to any part of the United States our Catalogue and Samples, a tape measure and full instructions for taking the simple measurements we require to make perfect-fitting garments. WRITE FOR THEM TO-DAY.

To any lady sending us the names of two of her friends who would like our Catalogue and Samples, we will also send Free a copy of the new booklet, "Fashion Fads in New York."

NATIONAL CLOAK & SUIT CO.
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York

You Can Play Without Learning

Park Avenue Baptist Church Zobo Band, Paterson, N. J.

Special Offer
25c. Prepaid.

The Wonderful Zobo
Solid Metal, Brass Finish.

The most extraordinary musical instrument ever produced, so constructed that it amplifies and changes the human voice so wonderfully as to make it strange, weird and unnatural beyond all comprehension. It seems impossible for it to accomplish so much. It gives you the vocal power of a giant, yet its music may be softened to the cooing of a dove. Money and music-making feature for CHURCH CHOIRS, and other concerts.

Sing into Mouthpiece ZOBO Does the Rest — No musical knowledge required.

Free Zobo Entertainments for home, church and Sunday school sent on receipt of name and address.

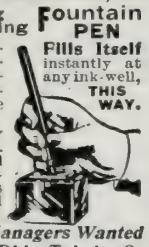
STRAUSS MFG. CO., 395 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

$20 to $50 WEEKLY made selling this NEW INVENTION, the STANDARD SELF-Filling Cleaning Fountain PEN

No ink dropper. No smeared fingers. No twisted rubber. No complication.

$178.00 earned in 32 days by retired business man in Ala.
$35.80 for a month's spare time by G. Jos. Lovett, of Mass.
$5.40 made in first two hours by Mrs. Mary M. Lennon, of Mich.

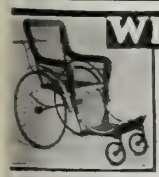
Our free lessons in successful salesmanship make experience unnecessary. We send all particulars and figures to prove above and other records; write to-day.



Fills Itself instantly at any ink-well, THIS WAY.

Energetic Agents and District Managers Wanted
Standard Pen Co., 706 Baker Bld., Toledo, O.

Wheel Chairs



We make a complete line of modern Rolling Chairs for adults and infants, and sell direct at WHOLESALE PRICES. 75 styles to select from. We pay freight and sell on
30 DAYS TRIAL.
Liberal discounts allowed to all sending for FREE Catalogue NOW.

GORDON MFG. CO. 526 Madison Ave., Toledo, O

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bekins Household Shipping Co., 95-97 Washington St. Chicago

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 586

as the visitor made a determined movement toward the door, Abby Whiton threw it dramatically wide, disclosing her mistress in a rose-colored morning-gown, smiling over one of James Blake's voluminous letters.

"Here's Mis' Buckthorn come to talk her kind of religion with ye," she announced, with a trenchant sniff, and withdrew to the kitchen, whence the mundane clash of stove-lids and poker in active conflict was presently heard blending with the warlike strains of the Crusader's hymn.

Mrs. Buckthorn had divested herself of the outer sheath of veils and shawls and stood in the presence of the small rose-clad person, who started to her feet in haste from a deep wicker chair by the fireside.

Miss Cynthia's face was fresh and smiling; her blue eyes shone with a violet light.

"Good morning," she said simply, but an unmistakable pæan of love and joy sounded in her low voice. She motioned her visitor to a seat with a gracious gesture, which somehow brimmed over the deep cup of that worthy matron's wrath and indignation.

"I do grieve to see you in this ungodly frame this morning, Cynthia," Mrs. Buckthorn began in a hollow, majestic bass. "I had hoped in find you with your hands on your mouth and your mouth in the dust crying unclean! unclean! But I see only too plain that you've hardened your heart like Pha—ra—oh!"

Miss Cynthia hastily gathered the scattered pages of her letter with trembling hands. "I don't know what you mean," she said, "I was feeling very happy this morning—very happy. I hope——"

"Happy!" ejaculated Mrs. Buckthorn, sinking heavily into a chair, "Happy!" Her eyes roved inquisitively over Miss Cynthia's gown. "It's been on my heart for a long time to deal plainly with you, Cynthia; an' now I'm here to do it. I fear that all is not right with you, judgin' from what I see an' hear."

Her curious eyes again busied themselves with the tips of Miss Cynthia's little slippers, ascending by slow degrees up the lace-trimmed front of the pink morning-gown, and coming to a full stop upon the modest brooch which fastened the lace at her throat.

"Di'monds, I do believe!" she whispered, with a heart-rending sigh. "Cynthia, I'm a-goin'to put a solemn question, an' I want you should answer it as if you was on your dyin' bed. What do you think your sainted ma would say to all this, if she was here?" An inclusive hand-sweep indicated Miss Cynthia's immediate environment, including the rose-colored gown and the appurtenances thereof.

"I don't know," answered Miss Cynthia in a low voice. She had grown very pale, and her hand stole unconsciously to the laces on her breast.

"And what——" pursued her inquisitor mercilessly, "do you think your dear, departed grandfather—who was a pillar in Zion if anybody ever was—would say to the terrible set-back you gave our blessed r'vival las' night? Wait before you an swer me, Cynthia! fer I see you don't realize what you done. An' the terrible responsibility's a-layin' at your door! I don't see how you can set there in my presence, dressed up like the scarlet woman, with your di'monds a-glitterin'."

Mrs. Buckthorn closed her eyes after this burst of fervid eloquence and rocked back and forth in wordless anguish of spirit.

She opened them suddenly at sound of a harsh exclamation. Abby Whiton stood over her mistress white with fury. "I hope you're satisfied now!" she said in a hissing whisper. "The' don't anybody need to talk to me 'bout r'vivals! The's folks in this 'ere town 'at need to git manners more'n they do r'ligion, an' they ain't fur off, neither!"

She was plying the camphor bottle as she talked. Miss Cynthia struggled weakly to her feet to avoid a second blinding dash of the pungent fluid.

"That will do, Abby," she said, with dignity. "I—I was so surprised at what Mrs. Buckthorn said that I hardly knew for the moment what I was doing."

"I'm glad to see you ain't calloused, Cynthia," observed that lady in her deepest bass.

"Don't you da's to call her no seeh names," snapped Abby Whiton. "The simple idee of your a'settin' up to be a pattern to her!"

"Abby!" Miss Cynthia spoke very quietly; but Miss Whiton retreated kitchenward, after depositing the camphor bottle in a defiantly prominent position on the mantel-shelf.

"I declare, that woman's got the worst tongue in this town," observed Mrs. Buckthorn feelingly. "I wonder you keep her in your house."

"She loves me," Miss Cynthia answered gently.

Mrs. Buckthorn arose stiffly. "I've got to go now," she sighed. "I've got pie an' cake to bake an' m' dishes to wash up. I felt as though I couldn't get here too soon. I want you should spend the hours between now an' the evenin' meetin' on your knees, Cynthia. Then come to that blessed meetin' prepared to do your Christian dooty. You'd ought to take back every word of what you said las' night. If you humble your proud heart in the dust maybe the Lord 'll forgive you."

"Thank you," said Miss Cynthia, looking down at the toes of her slippers.

"An' will you promise me to do what I ask, my dear child?" gurgled Mrs. Buckthorn, with watering eyes. "I sh'll feel that I've accomplished my whole dooty if you only will." She possessed herself of one of Miss Cynthia's reluctant hands and fondled it damply in both her own, then stooping suddenly, kissed her full upon the mouth.

"But I haven't promised," said Miss Cynthia doggedly. She shrank away from the woman's large body with an almost overpowering sense of physical aversion. "I shall not come to the service," she finished positively.

"Why not?"

"Because I believe that what I said last night is true."

A red fury blazed in Mrs. Buckthorn's dull, flaccid face. She turned away without another word, and Miss Cynthia standing mute and motionless heard two successive slams of two distant doors, which announced her hasty exit.

Could she have followed the wrathful progress of her departing guest she might have witnessed a brief interview with the Rev. G. Algernon Guffey, which took place at the corner of the street. Mr. Guffey was striding briskly through the snow with a cheerful expression of countenance, which still further incensed the irate lady.

"I've just come from laborin' with that poor, sinful, misguided soul, Cynthia Day—her that spoke those wicked words in our blessed meetin' las' night," began Mrs. Buckthorn, with a hollow intonation of despair. "I couldn't rest nor sleep till I'd gone forth to deal with her heart to heart. She wouldn't listen to me. But I feel I've done my full dooty."

A glance of something like amusement shone for an instant in Mr. Guffey's gray eyes, but he answered seriously. "I was just going to see Miss Day."

"Well, I don't think you're called

CONTINUED ON PAGE 588

"The Original"

Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and the Civil War Veteran are old friends." The Eagle Brand is still the standard. It is sold by all first-class grocers. Avoid unknown brands.

THE WORSTED FLEISHER'S BEST YARNS

During the Summer months is the time to knit and crochet garments to wear next fall — sweaters, caps, shawls, capes, afghans, slippers, kimonos, etc.,— and garments for the children. Nothing else will so pleasantly relieve the tedium of these days. To reap the full benefit and pleasure, however, only the best yarns should be used.

The "Fleisher" Yarns combine all the excellent qualities required — evenness, elasticity and loftiness. The colors are bright and lasting. Your dealer should carry them.

A garment made of The "Fleisher" Yarns will stand the test of wear and wash.

Knitting Worsted	Germantown Zephyr
Dresden Saxony	Spanish Worsted
Shetland Floss	Ice Wool
Cashmere Yarn	Shetland Zephyr
Pamela Shetland	Spiral Yarn

Every skein bears the "FLEISHER" trade-mark ticket.

Free booklet, "A SHORT TALK ABOUT YARNS," mailed upon request.

"FLEISHER'S KNITTING AND CROCHETING MANUAL," mailed for four tickets from 1 oz. "Fleisher" Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER
Department "B." PHILADELPHIA

Your idle money doesn't need to stay idle. No reason for having money that doesn't work. You can deposit any amount with us and get 5% interest for every day it's here, and the interest is compounded semi-annually.

Our business is non-speculative and has been established for 11 years. We loan money only on improved real estate and the security must be of the very best.

If you want your money, or any part of it, you get it immediately by notifying us.

Write for booklet that tells all about our proposition.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
Dept. E, Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

SUMMER HOMES IN GREEN HILLS OF
Vermont and Lake Champlain
Terms, $4 to $10 per week.

New trains between Boston, New York, So[illegible] and Vermont points. As good as any on the [illegible]. 120 page illustrated brochure mailed free [illegible] of 6c. in stamps or [illegible] stage.
Address A. W. ECCLESTONE, So. Pass. Agent, 385 Broadway, New York City.

BOMOSA COFFEE

BIG INCOMES
$25.00 TO $30.00 A WEEK
[illegible] Celebrated Teas, Coffees, Baking Powder Spices, [illegible] Extracts. [illegible] Stapled [illegible] of [illegible] M. F. [illegible] Co.
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO
P. O. Box 289 31-33 Vesey St., New York

The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 587

upon to waste your precious moments with her," said Mrs. Buckthorn acrimoniously. "I said all that anybody could say. I found her sittin' there all dressed in pink flounces, trimmed up with lace an' di'monds, entirely dead in trespasses an' sins. I declare, I'm fairly boilin' over. If you will insist on goin', I hope an' trust you'll rebuke her sharply. She needs it!"

Mr. Guffey smiled understandingly. "I shall remember what you have told me," he said pleasantly. "By the way, Sister Buckthorn, will you do something for the cause? I am asking you because there is no one else to whom I can turn with confidence at the moment."

Mrs. Buckthorn's fat face creased itself into a dubious smile. "I'm gene'ally to be found waitin' in the front ranks, ready an' willin' for the call of dooty," she remarked, with a tentative cough. "What was it you wanted I should do?"

"It occurred to me that if a lady of your standing in the community should personally visit the outlying houses in the neighborhood of the tin-can factory, and invite the operatives, their wives and children to attend the meetings, great good might be done."

"What! Go into all those dirty houses and talk with those shiftless women? No, Mr. Guffey, I don't feel that dooty calls me that way. My health is delicate, you know—very delicate. I have to be very cautious. But I can tell you who ought to be doin' that blessed work, an' that's our pastor's wife. That's what they're paid for. An' while we're speaking of Mis' Pettibone, I feel as though I'd ought to tell you that she needs a serious talkin' to on the subjec' of her dooty to this church. I've had it on my heart for a long time to mention it. She's very far from bein' the kind of a pastor's wife we need in this community. I do grieve to say it, but her influence on the pastor is very bad. He ain't the same man 'at he was before he married Philura Rice."

"I can well believe it," Mr. Guffey said gravely. "Mrs. Pettibone is a remarkable woman, in many ways."

Mrs. Buckthorn compressed her lips. "You can't tell me anything I don't know about Philura Rice," she syllabled conclusively. "No stranger is capable of understandin' her as I do. There's a great deal of dissatisfaction. P'rhaps you've heard of it?"

Mr. Guffey looked steadily at Mrs. Buckthorn, and the lady's lids presently fell before the direct gaze of the evangelist's greenish-gray orbs. "I make it a point never to hear anything of the sort while employed in my special work," he remarked, in a gentle but particularly distinct tone of voice.

Mr. Guffey actually laughed aloud to himself and the surrounding silence as he opened the gate of the old Breyfogle place, and the light of his inward cogitations still shone pleasantly on his grave, composed face, when Abby Whiton admitted him to Miss Cynthia's parlor.

Miss Cynthia, in quite a flutter of apprehension and rose-colored flounces, came in to greet him. Mr. Guffey's experienced eyes noted the half-shed tears which sparkled on her lashes and the agitated blushes fluttering over the delicate oval of her cheek.

"A bruised reed," he thought to himself, and wondered.

"You you must have been very much displeased—and—and shocked at what I did last night," began Miss Cynthia, with a desperate effort to appear quite composed and dignified. "I was thinking of the children, you know; they seemed so so frightened."

Mr. Guffey was looking at her very kindly indeed. "I am always sorry to see young children at our evening meetings," he said, in his low, sympathetic voice. "Little children need loving into the Kingdom; but for the careless, stupid, hardened grown-ups one must sometimes use spiritual dynamite. It does frighten the children and such as you. I am sorry."

Miss Cynthia's eyes brightened. "Oh, how kind you are!" she exclaimed. "I was so so——"

TO BE CONTINUED

Message of the Flowers*

HOW dull this world would be without the flowers! What a lesson they teach to the materialist, who can see no use for them but to turn them into perfume that may be sold. Nature, hard and unsympathetic as we often find her, was in her kindest mood when she sprinkled the world with flowers. We might have done without them, so long as we had the wheat for ourselves and the grass for the cattle, but nature seems to have said, "Now I will give the human race something for their pure pleasure, something to cheer them and delight them. It must not be all prose in their lives, they will become sordid, if all my gifts are of things that may be turned to sober use." So in playful mood she strewed flowers, in infinite variety of hue and perfume, over the whole world, and set them growing, not only in cultivated ground but in desert places and in the chinks of the rocks. "They are of no use," the misanthrope may say, "root them up and plant cabbages or potatoes in their place." But flowers are needed, if for nothing else but to teach us that "man does not live by bread alone." There is in him a love of beauty that must be nurtured, and the flowers are placed here for its sustenance. As we refresh our mental nature by turning from a scientific treatise to a volume of poems, so we get pleasure from the color or fragrance of the flowers.

Our Lord evidently admired them. Not Solomon in all his glory, he declared, had such perfection of attire as the lily. The botanist can tell us wonderful things about the life and the formation of the flowers, and as we listen to him we are overwhelmed with astonishment, as he tells us more of their strange adaptations; but Christ was not impressed with the scientific view; it was pure beauty that he admired in them, beauty such as the weavers and jewelers of the Orient could not produce for the appareling of a monarch. It is a new revelation of his varied character, that notwithstanding the stupendous task he came to perform, he had leisure and taste to admire a wild flower.

The comparison Christ used has its own special lesson. The grandeur and magnificence of Solomon were exterior to the man; the beauty of the flower was all its own. We know from even the partial chroniclers what a weak voluptuary he became, how the God who had endowed him with wisdom and wealth was deserted by the ungrateful king, and what a miserable spectacle he became of a being who, knowing the good and the noble, voluntarily turned to the swine trough of the hideous worship of Aphrodite. The magnificence of his robes covered a man polluted and corrupt. No wonder that Jesus could see more beauty in the unconscious flower. Many a pure working girl, with scacely a dollar she can call her own, is more beautiful in the glorious virtue of her character, than the bedizened creatures clad in silks and jewels, whose lives are coarse and base. This beauty the poorest can aspire to; besides, it is a beauty that bears examination. Under the microscope the richest and finest product shows coarseness and clumsiness of texture, while the stronger the lens under which a flower is put, the more beautiful it appears. It is always so with God's work, and it is his work that produces character, and he is always ready to do it for those who ask.

The message, however, that Jesus drew from the flowers was that of faith. Why do you worry? he said, in effect. You strive and toil and harass yourselves that you may make a display in the world, yet you can never hope to equal these little flowers, that God clothes with beauty. It is the same God that adorns them, who cares for you. Is it likely that he will lavish on the flowers, which are cut down to make a fire after a day's life, his thought and care, and yet neglect his intelligent creatures who love him? It was not idleness that he counseled; the flowers cannot toil or spin, but they fulfil their mission. He would have his people fulfil their's, but do it without the fret and worry and anxiety that consume life. To do one's duty, to do all in our power to brighten the world as the flowers do, and to leave the future in God's hand, confident that he careth for us—that was the message of the flowers, as Christ interpreted it.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for July 16. Matt. 6: 28-34; James 1: 9-11.

The Christian Endeavor Memorial

The United Society of Christian Endeavor has formulated a plan for the recognition of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Christian Endeavor Society, which occurs February 2, 1906. The plan is for the erection and endowment, by the Endeavorers of the world, of an international headquarters building, in honor of the founder of the society, the Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., and to perpetuate its work for the young people of the churches of all denominations, and in all the world. The amounts suggested as suitable range from $500,000 to $1,000,000, and even the latter sum could easily be raised by a small gift from each Endeavorer.

The plan is the result of suggestions from many lands and people during the last few years, and of conferences of leading pastors, officials of missionary societies, and distinguished laymen, in Boston, New York, and Washington. The plan has also been submitted to numerous editors, clergymen, home and foreign missionary workers, and distinguished laymen in this country and abroad, and hearty approval has been received.

The plan will be submitted to the International Christian Endeavor Convention in Baltimore, July 5-10, and it is expected that an international committee will be appointed to carry out the details within the period intervening between the present time and February, 1906.

For Free Distribution

Hon. Thomas Kearns, United States Senator from Utah, made a remarkable speech before the Senate last March, in which he told clearly and concisely the "Conditions in Utah." He is one of the leading business men of Utah, and is thoroughly acquaintod with the commercial and political situation there. It is very important that every one should know the facts concerning the Mormon hierarchy, and, by the courtesy of Senator Kearns, the National League of Women's Organizations is able to send a copy of this speech to any individual, or it will send as many thousands of copies to any organization as it will promise to distribute. The addresses are franked until September 1, and are ready for mailing, with no expense or work other than addressing them. The address is of interest to men and women. Those who desire copies, may send orders to Mrs. Frederic Schoff, Chairman Executive Committee, Box 4043, West Philadelphia, Philadelphia, Pa.

3% or vastly more—
as you choose.

The bank may pay 3% interest the cash difference between the co of putting in a hot air furnace or stov and the cost of

AMERICAN & IDEAL
RADIATORS & BOILERS

But this difference invested in ou outfit for steam and water warmin will yield many times the 3% (man users save as high as 40%) by th great economy in fuel and labor, at sence of repairs and in household cleanliness. Then, too, the outfi outwears the building—is a perma nent investment. These facts ar established. It is not the first cos but the low cost of running tha decides shrewd investors our way

After all, the comfort, convenience and abso lute control of inside temperature in any weather are most important. These benefits represent th real economy—the dividends which figures do no and cannot measure.

Whether your building is OLD or new, SMALL or large, farm or city, send for our booklet (free) "Heating Investments Successful." It will make you a better judge of heating values. This is the best season to buy!

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY
Dept. 29. CHICAGO

IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL IDEAL

A QUESTION ANSWERED

How Best to Invest Your Savings

Money invested with the Industrial Savings and Loan Co is free from speculative dangers, yields a fair profit, as large as is consistent with safe methods, and is always subject to control of the investor.

We Will Pay 5% PER ANNUM On Your Savings which may be withdrawn at any time, and bear earnings for every day in our care. Our business conducted under supervision of New York Banking Dept. and regularly examined by same. Write us for full particulars and letters of endorsement from clergymen, professional and business men, some doubtless in your vicinity, to whom we are privileged to refer you.

Assets . . . $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, $150,000

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.
2 Times Building, Broadway, N. Y. City

OSTERMOOR CHURCH CUSHIONS

Used by 25,000 Churches.

Samples, Prices, Handsome Book "Church Cushions" Free
OSTERMOOR & COMPANY, 112-118 ELIZABETH STREET, NEW YORK

Old cushions made over cheaply.

PROMINENT MEN OF THE HOUR

JUSTICE BREWER MGR. DALRYMPLE M. ROUVIER MAXIMO GOMEZ

Maximo Gomez, the great Cuban patriot, has fought his last battle, and on the 20th of last month was buried, in the island he loved so well. He was born in San Domingo in 1838, and served as lieutenant in the last Spanish army of occupation. He went with the army to Cuba, but left it on account of his resentment of the maltreatment of refugees. From 1868 his history is that of Cuba. In 1898 he became a Major-General, and his conduct won the admiration of the American Army. The Cuban insurrection owed its success to him more than to any other man. He had been mentioned as a candidate for the Cuban Presidency a short time before his death.

Manager Dalrymple of the Glasgow Street Railways of Glasgow, Scotland, has recently been in America, to aid the advocates of municipal ownership of public utilities. In Glasgow, the city has run its street cars for a number of years. Before returning to Scotland, Mr. Dalrymple issued a statement to the press, in which he declared that municipal ownership is impossible in America, as it would put millions of dollars and thousands of men in the hands of party bosses, and make their position impregnable. He says that their control of police and other departments, has made them almost tyrants in our cities.

Minister Rouvier of the French Cabinet, has taken the place of Delcasse, in the endeavor to maintain the prestige of his country, and yet avoid an armed conflict with Germany over Morocco. He has consented to a European conference over the matter, Germany threatening to declare war unless such a step was taken. Rouvier is a man of rare tact, but he has undertaken a work which was too great even for the greatest of French diplomatists, Delcasse.

Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, keeps well before the public as a speaker on up-to-date topics. He has taken an active interest in the peace movement, and recently delivered the address to the Vassar graduates. This address has caused much discussion, as he claimed that at a not far distant period we would have a woman for President of the United States.

Among Liberia's Heathen Tribes

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 575

his heart. He wants to get his little sister to come to the Mission; but she cannot, because she is held as hostage for a debt. A year or more ago a 'big man' of the family died, and of course they must eat a bullock; but because they did not have a bullock, they sold this girl and bought one. The girl will virtually be a slave until the bullock is repaid.

A number of native heathen children are now being supported at the Mission by American contributors. These children are learning to read and write, and their letters are full of expressions of gratitude to their benefactors, and of love for the Saviour. 'Oh! how anxious I am to do for Jesus,' writes one girl. 'Pray for me that I may be strong. We need prayers this year.' "We believe it is almost universally conceded that to Christianize a heathen people, it is necessary to raise up native evangelists," said Mr. Perkins. "We aim to do this. We had one man who was sick with rheumatism. His people declared that 'the devil was in him,' and that he would never get well until he himself became a 'devil-doctor.' It was against his will that he was carried to a 'devil doctor' to learn the art. Various juju (charms) were hung about his neck, but he did not get better; and after some months of suffering, he was brought home, for the 'devil-doctor' would keep him no longer unless his family paid one bullock. He determined to come to the Mission. What made a lasting impression on his mind was that the missionary spoke to him about salvation before he asked him about his sickness. 'It was just the thing that my heart wanted,' he said. 'When my people had learned that I had gone to the Mission, they were vexed.' Real trouble came when the missionary asked him to pass the Word. 'The missionary preached against jujus,' he said; 'I took some of them up in my hand, and told them that these things had no power to do good, neither was it in them to do evil. There was one God, and he alone had power to help. The truth did not please the people.' They said: 'If you do so, you will break down our country; you must not say that the thing our fathers believed in is nothing.' They went to my mother, and told her that I must not interpret again. My mother called me, and weeping, told me what the people had said, and begged me not to go to the missionary again. I said: 'Mother, God has opened my eyes, I am a different man now.' "

"This native convert was cruelly persecuted. His heathen acquaintances seized him, and one said: 'Why not tie him and beat him and rub pepper in his eyes?' Suiting the action to the word, they caught his arms and began striking him. He sang in the native language, 'I am so glad that Jesus came to save me.' One man said, 'Let him alone; don't you see that he has no fear?' but soon they began beating him again, and at last one man struck him across the eyes so that the blood flowed and he could scarcely see. 'To-day preaching in this town finish,' they threatened. 'We go do our own devil-way.'

"On another occasion, he was taken into a little house, his feet tied to the door sill, his hands to a stake driven into the ground, and red pepper rubbed into his eyes. He was kept there for more than two hours, after which they loosened him and fastened a big stick to his feet and let him go back to the Mission.

"Things have changed now. The men who persecuted him are now his friends, and a few of them have accepted the same Jesus who so wonderfully helped him in the time of trouble, sustaining him by His grace."

Mr. and Mrs. Perkins may be addressed to the care of this journal, or to care of J. T. Painter, Spencer, Ia., by any readers who are interested in their work and who may wish to encourage them in their efforts to redeem the heathen tribes of Liberia.

The Dead Missionary

Verses in memory of the late Rev. Richard Winsor, missionary, Sirur, Poona District, India.

RETURN, oh spirit, to thy God!
In heaven enjoy thy promised rest.
Called by the Christ to his abode!
He honors those who him confessed.
Already of thy home possessed
Reward of faith hast thou not gained
Desideratum there obtained?

Why should we weep, for thou art free?
Ineffable the glory there:
Now may we live, that we may see
Sublimest joy, and with thee share.
Oh! for such faith as dwelt in thee.
Reflectors of the Saviour be.

New York City. John Robinson.

Ice Cream in Ten Minutes
EVERYTHING BUT THE ICE.

Simply stir the contents of one package of

Jell-O Ice Cream Powder

into a quart of milk and freeze. Makes the best ice cream you ever ate. Pure and wholesome; approved by Pure Food Commissioners; Highest Award at St. Louis Exposition. If your grocer can't supply you send us 25c. for two packages, enough for a gallon of ice cream.

Four kinds: Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry and Unflavored.

Send for new illustrated Recipe Book just issued.

The Genesee Pure Food Co., Le Roy, N. Y.

Nothing equals Jell-O for making jelly desserts. 6 flavors. 10 cts. per package.

Valuable Information Pertaining to Oil

A new Free, copyrighted book by Otto G. Tague, Editor of The Oil News, the recognized oil organ, will be mailed to any address.

This book gives detailed information that all persons interested in oil should have. It tells how leases are obtained, how companies should be organized, how companies in which stockholders lost money during the past three years were organized and mismanaged, how money was lost; the only manner in which oil can be produced profitably, the percentage of profits; gives data as to cost of obtaining leases, drilling wells and operating same—in fact, contains reliable information that leaves the reader fully posted on the production of petroleum and the profits to be made therefrom.

This Book is Free for the Asking

A postal card will bring it. It offers nothing for sale, but is given as a souvenir for the purpose of increasing the patronage of The Oil News.

OTTO G. TAGUE, Editor The Oil News
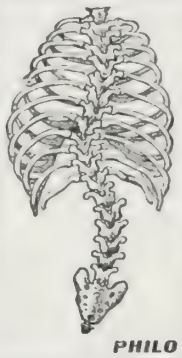
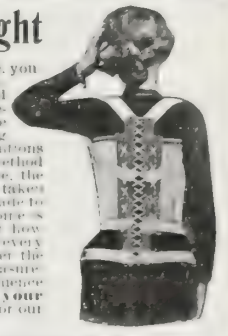
319 Opera House Block, Lima, O., U. S. A.



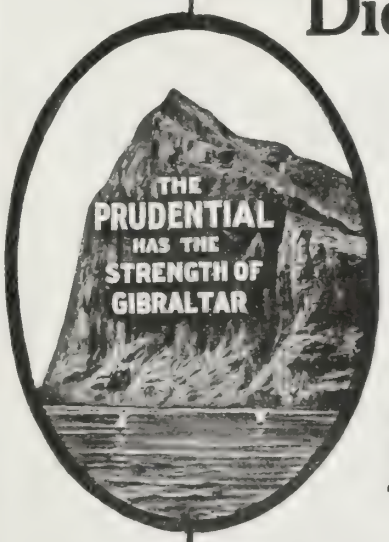
Crooked Spines Made Straight

If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected. Noted physicians in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheldon Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction, or refund your money at the end of thirty days' trial. Write for our new book giving full information and references.



PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 207 Seventh St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Did You Save It?



Look back over your accounts. Open your purse and see how plainly you can see the bottom. Look at the bank book, and compare last month's balance with this.

Where is the dollar, or five, or ten that you meant to save? Did you save what you meant to?

The Prudential

can and will help you. It can provide a way of saving, and make it decidedly to your own and your family's advantage to save systematically. It can also make your savings earn something from the start.

And if, while you are saving, you should be suddenly taken away, your family will receive immediately the insurance money which your payments secured from the very beginning.

All this sets a man thinking. The six million Prudential policies now in force bear witness to their endorsement by millions of provident people.

Send coupon today for information of Profit-Sharing Endowment Policies.

Without committing myself to any action, I shall be glad to receive full particulars and rates of Endowment Policies.

For $.....

Name.....Age.....

Address.....

Occupation.....Dept. 70

The Prudential Insurance Co. of America

Incorporated as a Stock Co. by the State of New Jersey.

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President

Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.

SEND COUPON TODAY

REVERSIBLE
Linene
Collars and Cuffs

Have You Worn Them?
Not "celluloid," not "paper collars"; but made of muslin, exactly resemble fashionable linen goods and cost of dealers, for box of ten, 25c. 15c each
No Washing or Ironing
When soiled, discard. By mail, 10 collars or 5 pairs of cuffs, 30c. Sample Collar or Pair Cuffs for 6c. in U. S. stamps. Give size and style.
REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. P, BOSTON, MASS.

COILED SPRING
FENCE
That is Horse High, Bull Strong, Pig-chicken tight.
SOLD DIRECT TO YOU
At less than dealers' price and we pay the Freight.
Our Catalogue tells how Wire is made, how Wire is galvanized,—why some is good and some bad. You should have this information. Write for Catalogue.
KITSELMAN BROTHERS, Box 297, Muncie Indiana

WE WANT AGENTS
in every town to ride and sell our bicycles. Good pay. Finest guaranteed 1905 MODELS, with Puncture-Proof tires, Coaster Brakes
1903 & 1904 Models of Best Makes, $10 to $24
$7 to $12
500 Second-Hand Wheels
All makes & Models good as new $3 to $8
CLEARING SALE at half cost.
We SHIP ON APPROVAL and
TEN DAYS TRIAL to anyone without a cent deposit. Write at once for Special Offer on sample bicycle.
TIRES, SUNDRIES, AUTOMOBILES.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. H 71 CHICAGO

BURN AIR-IT'S CHEAP NO STOVE LIKE IT!
Consumes 895 Barrels of Air to 1 gallon of Kerosene. Penny fuel, burns like gas, hottest fire, won't explode, saves work and fuel bills. No coal, wood, dirt, ashes—no wick, no valves, easy operated, handsome, durable. Grand cooker, baker, quick work, cool kitchens. 15000 Harrison Wickless, Valveless Oil-Gas and Air Burners sold 1 month. AGENTS WANTED—$40 Weekly. GREATEST MONEY MAKER. Guaranteed, all sizes, sent anywhere, $3 up. Write, FREE proposition, 30 day trial offer. Address only mfgrs.
World Mfg. Co., 5909 World B'ld'g, Cincinnati, O

GINSENG
Culture is the "Only Way" to make big money on little capital. Large incomes from small gardens. Pays 800 per cent. profit in 4 years, if my advice is followed. One-quarter acre is worth $10,000 and yields more revenue than a 25 acre farm. No other safe enterprise will do this. Demand is heavy. Supply is light. Pure American bedded Roots and stratified seed for sale. Prices low. 5 years' experience. Sales now exceed $12,500. I buy your dry roots and surplus seed. I show you how, save you money, and pilot you to success. Write to-day. Special inducements to early buyers.
T. H. SUTTON, 530 Sherwood Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

Corns removed by the safe, sure and quick method—A-CORN SALVE. No cutting, no risk of blood-poisoning. 15c at your druggist's or by mail.

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy.
The Newton Horse Remedy Co.
Toledo, Ohio.

MUSIC LESSONS Send for our booklet, it is FREE
It tells how to learn to play any instrument. Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, etc. Write American School of Music, 319 Manhattan Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

ARE YOU DEAF?
We have 25 kinds of Instruments to Assist Hearing. Sent on approval. Write for Catalogue.
WM. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 S. 11th St., Philadelphia

WANTED A few live, energetic persons to become associated with us. A rare chance. Write for particulars. Address,
THE NEW JERSEY MFG. CO. Jersey City, N. J. (Inc. 1890).

THE RIVAL OF THE STREETS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 578

families know little or nothing. As early as 1894, such activities as are described above, were conducted in public school buildings by the "New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor," but it was not until three years later that the work was taken over by the Board of Education, and made a part of the regular school work. For several years the vacation schools, recreation centres and playgrounds, have been under the management of Miss Evangeline C. Whitney, to whose untiring efforts their pronounced success is largely due.

When the doors of the vacation school close at noon, the various activities are transferred to the vacation playgrounds. For the most part these are situated out-of-doors. Corners of parks and vacant lots are given over to the Board of Education. When a few wagon loads of gymnastic apparatus are installed, the vacation playground is ready for business.

Under the guidance of a competent instructor of athletics the boys receive instruction in all kinds of gymnastics and acrobatic feats. At the close of the season, tournaments are held and prizes awarded. In some playgrounds as many as 2,000 children have, in a single afternoon, striven for the victor's laurels. The prize winners meet subsequently on neutral ground, to engage in a grand contest for the city championship, and victory is just as sweet to the child of the East Side tenement, as it was to the mediæval knight who jousted successfully in the tournament under the eye of the fair lady whose token he wore.

To teach the children orderliness and cleanliness, a number are organized into a brigade called "white wings." At five o'clock these volunteer street cleaners push the refuse carts around, and almost before one realizes it, the paper and rubbish disappear as if by magic, and the yards are as clean as any number of "grown up" janitors could make them.

On the summer evenings the flat roofs of the school buildings are thrown open, and numbers of young and old climb the long flights of stairs to where, in the manner of the Orient, they may enjoy themselves under the starry sky, and inhale the fresh air and cool breezes after the day's work in stuffy shops or houses. A band is stationed in each roof garden, selections from the classical composers are interspersed with popular melodies.

The city has built ten long double-decked piers, which stretch hundreds of yards into the cool waters of the North and East Rivers. To these tired mothers bring their babies and leave them to the care of the two kindergarteners who are assigned to each pier. Here they engage in all kinds of games, and the salt water breezes bring the glow of health to many a baby's face, who would otherwise grow up sickly and stunted.

The present-day school aims to train the hand and the eye as well as the mind. No longer does it cease its beneficent work when the electric clocks sound the bells at three, but it remains open all afternoon, all evening, Saturdays and holiday terms. No longer is it merely a place of instruction for children, but it has become a place of resort for the whole family.

In this extension of the use of the school buildings in the evenings, holidays and vacations, and for a great variety of purposes the school is becoming more and more a social settlement, a neighborhood house, and a centre for the gathering of the whole family. The school fills a new and broader mission, the term "Education" acquires a new significance, and the influence for moral and physical upbuilding is incalculable.

LAWRENCE H. TASKER
New York. Asst. Supervisor of Public Lectures

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Mrs. S. A. K., Ohio. "I know that God does answer prayers, and that he will help in every time of trouble."

Minnie McC., Arkansas. "For the life of a dear one who was spared to us, we want to give thanks to God."

K. C. S., Florida. "I prayed that a dearly loved one's life be spared, and He heard and answered my prayer."

Mrs. M. C. F., Maine. "I was shut in on every side, but I thank God the way upward is always open. None but God could have helped me."

Mrs. S. M., N. Y. "I wish to add my testimony in favor of 'Answered Prayers.' I was in great trouble; I prayed earnestly; the Lord heard and answered."

Reader, Brooklyn. "The dear Father, in the name of Jesus Christ, has answered many prayers of mine, and I will trust him to continue to do so in the future."

A Constant Reader, Washington, D. C. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me, and how often he has delivered me when the way looked so dark. I will still trust him."

Mrs. J. H. W., L. I. "God has answered many prayers for me in an unmistakable way. I am praying him to remove a burden, and I know he will answer in his own good time and way."

Mrs. C. E. A., Conn. "We have the promise if we will call on the Lord he will answer. I called upon him when in sickness, and he heard me and answered my prayer. I laid my burdens upon him and he helped me."

Mrs. L. O. M., Indiana. "I have been under a great cloud. I feel it my duty to acknowledge my faith in God's power and answer to prayer. God has miraculously delivered me from temptation and falling many times, when I did not realize my own danger."

A Mother, California. "I believe that the Lord hears the prayers of his children. My own prayer, for the conversion of two sons, is as constant as my life, but in my extremity I desire to ask the prayers of each reader that the hearts of my sons may be turned to God's love and service."

Student, Pa. "I believe prayer to be a most wonderful privilege, and a powerful means by which to bring others to Christ. Prayer made in the right spirit, about ever so insignificant a thing, is always heard and answered, according to the wondrous love of the Heavenly Father."

R. S. A. L., Louisville, Ky. "Truly, Christ suffers little ones to come unto him! This little boy is three years and six months old, and I am his grandmother. He had an inherited fear of the black shadows of nightfall, and was terrorized upon looking out of a window after dark. It was indeed pitiful to see him looking here and there in fear of night's gloom. The dear little fellow kneeled by my side to lisp his accustomed evening prayer before being tucked into bed, and after 'Now I lay me' was finished, I bade him ask Jesus to take away all his fears and help him to feel that no harm could reach him, because Jesus himself loved him and was keeping him safe from all danger. For several nights he repeated this prayer after me, but one night he looked up happily into my face and said: 'I am not afraid any more Jesus will take care of me.' He was observed closely by the family, and all realized that his fear was gone. He now looks bravely through the window into the blackness of the darkest night, and says, with a sweet, triumphant ring in his tiny voice: 'I am not afraid.' May God forever bless and uphold all his troubled children with the same child-like faith. This dear little grandchild was almost all the comfort and pleasure in life that God had seen fit to vouchsafe to me through the sorrows of the years. I beg of you, dear brothers and sisters, pray that God may return him to my home again. He has been taken from my care and I am heartbroken. Oh, pray with me!"

Mrs. John S., Pennsylvania. "My daughter began teaching a term of school, in which occupation I was not sure she would succeed, on account of her youth. I prayed that God would help her through, and he brought her through successfully. He has answered many prayers for me."

MELLIN'S
For the Baby
FOOD

The adjustability of Mellin's Food is one of its good points. Mellin's Food can be adjusted and is suitable to the needs of the youngest infant as well as children of the more advanced age. It only takes a minute to prepare it as there is no cooking necessary. Send for a free sample.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, 1904. Higher than a gold medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

FROM THE EDITOR

He Forgot That He Had a Stoma

Talking of food, there is probably no professional man subjected to a greater, wearing mental strain than the respon editor of a modern newspaper.

To keep his mental faculties constant good working order, the editor must kee physical powers up to the highest rate of ciency. Nothing will so quickly upset whole system as badly selected food a disordered stomach. It therefore fol that he should have right food, which ca readily assimilated, and which furnishes brain nourishment.

"My personal experience in the us Grape-Nuts and Postum Food Coffee," w a Philadelphia editor, "so exactly agrees your advertised claim as to their merits any further exposition in that direction w seem to be superfluous. They have bene me so much, however, during the five y that I have used them, that I do not justified in withholding my testimony.

"General 'high living' with all that the pression implies as to a generous t brought about indigestion, in my case, restlessness at night, and lassitude in morning, accompanied by various pains distressing sensations during working ho The doctor diagnosed the condition as tarrh of the stomach,' and prescribed var medicines, which did me no good. I fin 'threw physics to the dogs,' gave up tea coffee and heavy meat dishes, and adop Grape-Nuts and Postum Food Coffee as chief articles of my diet.

"I can conscientiously say, and I wish say it with all the emphasis possible to English language, that they have benef me as medicines never did, and more t any other food that ever came on my ta My experience is that the Grape-Nuts f has steadied and strengthened both b and nerves to a most positive degree. H it does it, I cannot say, but I know that a breakfasting on Grape-Nuts food one actu forgets he has a stomach, let alone 'stom trouble.' It is, in my opinion, the most be ficial as well as the most economical food the market, and has absolutely no riv Name given by Postum Co., Battle Cre Mich.

There's a reason.

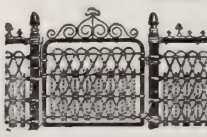
MEN AND WOMEN AGENTS
You can make a STEADY AND BIG income, selling

IDEAL COMBINATION COOKER BAKERS
The season is now on—every household keeper buys, and every sale means to you a Profit That Is Worth While. Ideal Cookers are widely advertised. Thousands in use. Cooks a entire meal over one burner of a stove. Cuts cost of fuel in half. Some of our agents sell a whole can load a season. General, State and County Agents given exclusive territory and a most liberal Money Making Offer. No capital required. Write to-day for our 48-page catalogue and full particulars.
Toledo Cooker Co., Desk H, Toledo, O

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all styles. Handsome, durable. Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemeteries. Catalogue free
KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO., 445 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

GINSENG
Detailed advice and special instructions regarding its culture. It will pay you to investigate our practical and common sense methods. We supply choicest American Roots and Seeds, at most reasonable prices, help you towards successful cultivation, and pay you highest market price for your Dry Roots. Send stamp for illustrated booklet "E."
NORTH AMERICAN GINSENG CO., Station C, Louisville, Ky



LAWN FENCE
Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address
COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box D Winchester, Ind.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

STARK FRUIT BOOK
shows in NATURAL COLORS and accurately describes 216 varieties of fruit. Send for our terms of distribution.
We want more salesmen.—Stark Bro's, Louisiana, Mo

LOANED FREE
32 page pamphlets of new and suitable Sacred Songs for Camp Meetings and Evangelistic Services.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Delight, Biscuit, Cake and Doughnut Cutter, Apple Corer, and Strainer 5 articles in one. Sells on sight. Large Catalog free
RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N.Y.

OOD CAUSES HELPED

The following sums have been contributed by our readers for the support of the orthy causes mentioned below:

Any Good Cause

s T D Benton. 10
, Christiansburg, a 1 52
R H Burch 50
ristina B Love 50
Friend, Hardy, Neb 2 00
B Bentley 1 00
C's Tenth, Millom, Pa 2 00
n Spence 3 50
H, Allentown, Pa.. 1 00
s F A Remington. 25
s H Matthews 50
H Roco 50
.am Stull 84

Foreign Missions

Ira Mitchell.. .. 1 00
ve Thompson..... 5 50
eph Bignall..... 10 00
J Remley (for Chas Seals' House Boat) 1 00
Friend (for Rev J aton) Ocean City, J 5 00
H Rolph(for China) 1 00
W Pickering (for apan) 1 00

Jry McAuley Mission

'ra N Hill..... 4 00

'rison-Gate Mission

Walla Walla Girl. Wash 3 00
S W Hovey . . 1 00
—— 3 00

Jv. H. Loomis, Japan and Mrs T, Manso, N C 5 00

s M Nairn..... 1 00
Franklin Sawyer 1 00

Wrk Among Eskimos

s V O Robertson.. 1 00
Franklin Sawyer 1 00

Pundita Ramabai

Friend, Ocean City, J..... 10 73

The White Door

B Bradford..... 5 00

Beacon Light Mission

Walla Walla Boy, Wash 3 00

Relief Wk. Among Poor

Eliz R Stoddard.. 5 00

E. Olsson's Work

H Farnsworth. 2 00
Joseph Perkins 10 00

S. Home for Blind Babies

Miss Maria Hahn.... 1 00

Tr'ni'g Nurses in Turkey

In His Name, Des Moines, Ia..... 2 50
Cora Roe..... 5 00
M N Mitchell..... 5 00
Mrs L A Matthews . 2 00
Franklin Sawyer. .. 1 00

C. Library in Turkey

Miss Bessie Geddes . 5 00

I.H. Sobey's W. in Panama

Franklin Sawyer..... 1 00

Mrs. Gray's Wk. in C. I.

In His Name, Des Moines..... 2 50
Joseph Perkins .. 10 00
Cora Roe..... 5 00
Matilda J Parmley.. 5 00
Franklin Sawyer.... 1 00

Rev. & Mrs. K. S. Stokke (CHINA)

Matilda J Parmley...10 00

Living Waters Mission

Y.M.C.A. Bible Class, Allentown, Pa. 5 00

Y.M.C.A. Wk. in Japan

J. G. Bell 1 00

'ICARIOUS SUFFERING

By MRS. M. BAXTER

ROM the manger to the cross Jesus was "despised and rejected of men." ere was nothing in him to feed the pride men, or to justify their self-exaltation. Eternal dignity and honor were distaste- to him. He lived to glorify not him- f, but another in heaven, "I honor my ther" (John 8: 49). There was nothing the Lord Jesus to make men satisfied th themselves. The heart of fallen man s become so corrupt that its wicked tenncy is to exalt itself, and to seek for miration from others. And here was e "fairer than the children of men," of om it could indeed be said, "Grace is ured into thy lips" (Ps. 45: 2), and yet is "despised and rejected of men, a n of sorrows and acquainted with sickss" (Heb.). And it was his own will to me down so low, "Lo, I come; in the lume of the book it is written of me, I light to do thy will; O my God, yea thy w is within my heart" (Ps. 40: 7, 8). t men did not understand. They knew n as a healing prophet, as a worker of racles, as a wondrous healer and teach; but as God's Messiah he was unknown; lespised and rejected of men."

And to this day it is the same; many of e Jews are proud to own Jesus of Nazath as their countryman and prophet; but Saviour who died for their sins they will t hear of. He was a man of sorrows, or ins, and acquainted with sickness (Heb.). d he hid, as it were, his face from us argin), he was despised, and we esteem him not. And this is not only the case th the Jews, his own people. How few ere are of us Gentiles who really accept d follow a suffering Saviour in his lonesss and humiliation! How few are ally for his sake "despised and rejected men." Yet "all that will live godly in rist Jesus must suffer persecution" (II. m. 3: 12). It may not be the cross or e stake, but, in some way or other, every al follower of Christ is persecuted, and e his Lord, "despised and rejected of en." Men make an ideal, artistic Christ, ter their own imagination, and bow wn to this ideal; but it is only worship- g the work of their own hands. The al Christ at the right hand of God can ver minister to that which gratifies or alts the flesh.

But he has done his part. No soul of an can ever perish without an opportuni- of salvation, since Christ, by the grace of God, has tasted death for every man, and every man's sins have been atoned for by him. He has fully stood in the stead of man, and has borne our sicknesses and our sorrows. "Surely he hath borne our sicknesses [R. V., margin], and carried our sorrows." When he was on earth he healed the sick that he might fulfil this very passage (Matt. 8: 16, 17). He bore our sins, that he might not only endure our punishment, but also heal us of our sinful tendencies and desires, by faith in him and dependence upon him. Therefore, just as he bore our sicknesses, he was also "wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace"—due to us—"was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed from sin."

Oh, the unspeakable love of our wondrous Lord! As the God-man he suffered the punishment of a whole race to vindicate God's holy law! Oh, how holy! Oh, how merciful! Oh, how just! Oh, how infinitely loving is our God, who can thus be just and yet justify him who, a sinner, a transgressor of the law, falls down broken, humbled, conquered, by such justice and such unspeakable love! He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." Oh, how much these words mean for us, wicked, shameful, but redeemed and pardoned, sinners! Who can describe all we owe to Him who thus gave himself for us?

"He was wounded for our transgressions." That wound was our due. The sword which should have slain us brought him to death upon the cross. "Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts" (Zech. 13: 7). "He was bruised for our iniquities." There was no other way. Sin must be punished; righteousness demands it. And the Righteous One stands in the breach, and suffers the penalty unto death, and then by virtue of his own sinlessness he shook off the hand of death, because "He, the Sinless One, could not be holden of it," and rose again for our justification—the proof that our sin had been fully expiated. "The chastisement of our peace was upon him." He had borne it to the full.

Mormons to be Prosecuted

At the instance of the Department of Justice, United States Attorney Reve, of Phoenix, Ariz., will proceed against several Mormons in Apache County on the charge of polygamy. Where the charges originated is not known, and the local officials had no knowledge of them until the recent visit of Senator Dubois of Idaho, who inquired concerning the progress of the prosecutions which he understood were going on. As the local authorities in Phoenix were unaware of any charges having been prepared, Senator Dubois wired Washington, and complaints were soon forwarded. Subpœnas have been issued for about thirty witnesses, some of whom live in Utah.

IN COLONEL'S TOWN

Things Happen.

From the home of the famous "Keyhnel Keeyartah of Cartersville," away down South, comes an enthusiastic letter about Postum.

"I was in very delicate health, suffering from indigestion and a nervous trouble so severe that I could hardly sleep. The doctor ordered me to discontinue the use of the old kind of coffee, which was like poison to me, producing such extreme disturbance that I could not control myself. But such was my love for it that I could not get my own consent to give it up for some time, and continued to suffer, till my father one day brought home a package of Postum Food Coffee.

"I had the new food drink carefully prepared according to directions, and gave it a fair trial. It proved to have a rich flavor and made a healthy, wholesome and delightful drink. To my taste the addition of cream greatly improves it.

"My health began to improve as soon as the drug effect of the old coffee was removed and the Postum Coffee had time to make its influence felt. My nervous troubles were speedily relieved and the sleep which the old coffee drove from my pillow always came to soothe and strengthen me after I had drunk Postum—in a very short time I began to sleep better than I had for years before. I have now used Postum Coffee for several years and like it better and find it more beneficial than when I first began. It is an unspeakable joy to be relieved of the old distress and sickness." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

30 DAYS' WASH NOTHING TO PAY

You may have a Spotless Washer free for thirty days' trial. We will ship it at once and pay the freight. Use it every day if you like. Wash a dozen or a thousand pieces with it, and if it doesn't do the wash quicker, better, and with less labor than any other machine, return it, we'll pay the freight back, too. We are sure that you will say it is the best machine you ever saw, and if you like we will make the terms of payment so easy that you will never miss the money on our plan of a few cents a week. The

SPOTLESS WASHER

is made of the finest selected Virginia White Cedar—steam tight, never breaks or comes loose. Only machine made with mechanism enclosed, preventing hands or clothing being caught. Absolutely dirt and dust proof. Ball bearing—lightest running machine made; can be turned right or left handed, while sitting or standing. The machine does most the work, your hand merely guides it. We know what the Spotless Washer will do—but to convince you, we make the above remarkable offer.

Write to-day for our Proposition.
SPOTLESS WASHING MACHINE CO., Inc.,
Box 564 S, Chicago. 898, New York. 648, Richmond, Va.

$5.80 A DAY is the average salary made by agents selling our COOKER and line of KITCHEN SPECIALTIES. Free samples. Write at once.
H. S. ROBINSON, 899 Jefferson Ave., Toledo, Ohio

Four Little Bee Books FREE
All intensely interesting and helpful in a hundred different ways to beginners in Bee Culture. Write for them to-day.
A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Medina, Ohio

ARE YOU DEAF?

"Whereas I Was Deaf, Now I Hear."

Rev. John P. Sanderson, the Well-Known Clergyman, Testifies to the Wonderful Relief Effected by the Way Ear Drum.

It would take a large book to record all the wonderful cases which have been benefited by the WAY EAR DRUM. Since Mr. Way first invented this remarkable little contrivance over six years ago, and relieved his own deafness of 25 years' standing, there have been literally thousands to whom this wonderful invention has brought the blessing of restored hearing.

One of the most interesting cases that has recently transpired is that of Rev. John P. Sanderson, of Lansing, Mich. Mr. Way first placed the drums in Mr. Sanderson's ears about a month ago. Read what he says of the wonderful results achieved:

Lansing, Mich., Apr. 24, 1905.

Dear Mr. Way,

I wish to bear testimony to the marvelous results I have experienced from the use of your ear drum. I have been dull of hearing for more than fifteen years, and my hearing was not normal for many years previous to that time. By the insertion of your ear drum I heard instantly and with such positiveness that I at first shrank from the intensity of the sounds.

It took me some days to become accustomed to the volume of sound, but a better adjustment of the drum, which becomes easy after experience, has brought about natural results. It was impossible for me to hear ordinary conversation and the dullness was steadily increasing, causing me much and increasing embarrassment. Now I hear with ease and I have tested the drum in a large auditorium with remarkable result; words I could not formerly hear when near the platform, I now hear distinctly at the extreme end of the building.

All sounds have a new meaning to me, because of their greater distinctness and their full, clear tone; in musical renderings the result is most astonishing and gratifying.

I cannot express my satisfaction after a few weeks trial. My deafness was caused by an acute attack of catarrhal la grippe and the drum became depressed and subsequently punctured. This wonderful little drum affords instant and most satisfactory relief. What it may do for others I, of course, cannot say, but this I know—"that whereas I was deaf, now I hear."

You are perfectly welcome to use my testimony in any way you please, as I sincerely hope that others afflicted as I have been, may through it, find like relief.

With sincere regards, believe me always,

Gratefully,

John P. Sanderson

THE WAY EAR DRUM is comfortable to wear, as it is made of the softest silk rubber. It slips into the ear, and is worn entirely out of sight. No one but yourself need ever know you are wearing it, or that you are not naturally provided with perfect hearing.

It takes the place of the natural ear drums when they have become defective through disease, and conveys the slightest vibration to the inner ear, where is located the true sense of hearing.

If you are deaf you should write at once to MR. GEO P. WAY, Room 1003 Majestic Building, Detroit, Mich., stating fully the cause and nature of your deafness. He will tell you if in his opinion your hearing can be restored. Do it now, before you forget about it.

℞ Take one glass of Coca Cola
when weary with shopping
It imparts energy and vigor

CHRISTIAN HERALD

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
UBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JULY 12, 1905

Copyright, 1905, by Louis Klopsch
VOL. 28 NO. 28. PRICE FIVE CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

SEE PAGE 604

A Missionary Hero—The Late J. Hudson Taylor, Founder of the China Inland Mission

OUR MAIL BAG

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but in order that an answer may be sent by mail in cases where the inquiry is not of general interest.

Reader, Abilene, Kans. What is the duty of a wife whose husband is a Christian, but is averse to holding family worship? Is it her duty to take it up or not?

It is very probable that he would not object, if she were to have Bible reading and prayer in the home. With tact and the avoidance of all antagonism, he might even be won over, so that his opposition would wholly disappear. If he is a Christian, he will certainly not oppose the performance of what his wife deems to be her Christian duty.

Mrs. E. W. G., Portsmouth, N. H. What structure occupies the site called Penn Square, in Philadelphia, Pa.?

At the intersection of Broad and Market Streets is a piece of ground formerly called Penn Square. Here now stands the City Hall, usually called the Public Building, said to be the largest building in the United States. It is built of white marble and granite, and is 486 feet long by 470 feet wide. It contains 520 rooms, including a courtyard 200 feet square in the centre, and covers nearly four and a-half acres. The central tower rises to a height of over 547 feet, and is surmounted by a colossal statue of William Penn, thirty-seven feet in height. The cost of this magnificent building was over $20,000,000.

A. W. J., Jefferson, Mo. It seems to me impossible that guilt can be put away by the punishment of the innocent. In what sense can Christ be said to have died for sin?

Theologians have been striving for centuries to expound the doctrine of the atonement. The theories about it are many, but are not satisfactory. All that we know positively is the fact; we know that Christ did atone for sin, because he said so, and we know that the effect follows, as he said it would. Men are changed in life and character by believing in him, and there is no other belief or event that does this. Preaching Christ crucified saves souls. Perhaps an illustration, even though defective, may help to make it plain. Suppose a king had a number of subjects in rebellion against his authority. He loves them, and desires to save them. His son goes among them, and tries to bring them back to his father. They ill-treat him, and finally kill him. But the king's love is inexhaustible. Those for whom his son died, must not be lost. His son's sacrifice must not go for nothing. To those who grieve, who repent, who plead for the son's sake to be forgiven, the king offers pardon. They are guilty, but for the sake of him who gave up his life for them, they may be pardoned. That is not an inconceivable case. There is infinitely more than this in the atonement, but this you may accept as the first step to understanding it.

Mrs. J. F., Akron, N. Y. Does an employee need to trade in a store belonging to the firm he works for?

Not necessarily. It may, however, be wiser for him to do so, rather than to take his patronage elsewhere.

J. DeN., Hackensack, N. J. Truth is so precious that no man can pay too high a price for it. It is so rare that we may go through the whole of life's journey without finding it. It is so noble that, once seen, its beauty and majesty can never be effaced from memory. It is so pure, that spring water and the polished crystal seem dull beside it. It is so strong, that it will break in pieces the stoutest opponent and bend the sternest will. It is so bright, that none but the pure can bear to look at it. It is divine.

Subscriber, Richmond, Ind. Why is the Czar often designated the "White Czar?"

It is simply a pet name, like "Little Father," and by no means a title. Many of his subjects are dark-skinned, and these may have employed the appellation to distinguish him from other Czars or rulers, who are not white.

O. P. F., Milton, Wis. If Christ came to fulfil the law, as he said, how can he be said to have abolished the law?

When a system has fulfilled its purpose, it becomes useless, and may be dispensed with. As Paul explains (Gal. 3:24, 25), the law was a schoolmaster to bring men to Christ. But when it had done that, by the types and symbols, which were shadows of the things to come, it was no longer needed. Having the substance, the shadow had become superfluous. A boy is under laws and rules until he grows up. When he is a man, he is free from the law of the home, but he does spontaneously and willingly the things that, as a boy, he was compelled to do. The law is abolished by being fulfilled in the goodness of his character, which it was designed to produce.

FORMER CABINET AND PRESENT PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT OF NORWAY

1. Michelsen, Premier; 2. Bothner, Minister of Finance; 3. Bull, Minister of Justice; 4. Lehmkuhl; 5. Rev. Knudsen, Ecclesiastical Department; 6. General Olsson, Minister of War; 7. Arctander, Minister of Industry; 8. Lovland, Minister of Foreign Affairs; 9. M. Knudsen; 10. M. Vinje. The cabinet now forms the provincial government of Norway, and are endeavoring to secure recognition from other countries. They are also in quest of a prince to occupy the throne. It has been refused by two, and is under consideration by a third.

P. G. Somersworth. In what States has a flower been selected by the legislature, to serve as a State emblem?

State flowers have been adopted by the legislatures of Arkansas, California, Kansas, Louisiana and Texas. In many other States the selection was made by a vote of the school children.

S. J., Massachusetts. When and where was the first State board bureau of labor statistics established?

The first one was established in Massachusetts, in 1869. The United States bureau was not established until 1885.

San Antonio, Tex. 1. What is the present Indian population in the United States? 2. How many of the Six Nations are there living in the State of New York?

1. The last census of the Indians of the United States was taken in 1900. At that time there were 270,544. 2. At the present time the Six Nations, the St. Regis Indians, and others, in the State of New York, number 5,304.

Reader, Salem, Mass. Is it known whether the Mayflower, that brought the Pilgrims to America in 1620, was the same ship that came later with colonists to Salem?

Yes; our authority for the statement being the historian Higginson. Other writers on colonial history have also considered the two vessels as identical.

Reader. When and where did a Russian fleet ever come to the aid of the United States?

James Ford Rhodes, the American historian, writes that a Russian fleet reached the port of New York in September, 1863, during the critical period of our Civil War.

A. K. Bery, of Curtis, Wis., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

A tornado passed over this place on June 3, with such terrible effect that most of the barns and large houses went down and almost everything on the ground was completely destroyed. I had three acres of rye and three of oats; the rye is a total loss, but the oats are starting in again, but it is doubtful if they will amount to anything. It was all I had for next winter's supply. We can expect a half crop of grass; my barn is down, too. It was only completed last year. It should be rebuilt as soon as possible, but I have no money. The outhouse tipped and rolled over several times while I was inside. I was knocked senseless, and the building went to pieces; but, blessed be the name of the Lord! I am now able to be around again.

There are doubtless others in the same condition in the tornado section. Any reader who sympathizes with the sufferings of these Wisconsin farmers, can address Mr. Bery.

Apropos of the poverty and suffering in New York, W. L., of Vandyne, ..., writes:

On the farms there is great scarcity of male and female help. Thousands of factory girls and idle men could find good wages and homes on farms, where they would be treated as members of the family and all eat together at one table. I wish every large city would raise money, and ship cars, and ship all idle people into the rural districts to find work.

A very laudable wish, but somewhat difficult of realization. Overcrowding is, of course, one of the principal causes of wretchedness and suffering, but until the congestion is relieved by proper legislation, the situation will not greatly improve. Meanwhile, no one who understands the facts would think of blaming the victims of these conditions.

Reader, Idaho. Is it proper to decorate the inside of churches ornamently with the American flag?

Except in a military or naval church or chapel, or in regular churches on special occasions, it is not customary to use the flag for decorative purposes. There is nothing wrong about it, except that its use at all times would be in very questionable taste.

E. S. S., Memphis, Tenn. In trying to tithe one's income, is it right to charge to the tithed portion fares to and from church; or, if I take a day off from business to attend to church affairs, am I entitled to charge loss of income to the tithed portion?

These difficulties arise from misunderstanding to the Pharisaic custom of tithing mint, anise, and cummin. Why worry about such minute questions? Give freely and cheerfully, as you can afford, and if you are able, do not limit your gifts to a tenth of your income. Obey your conscience, and do not suffer it to come under any law. Freely ye have received, freely give. It is ridiculous to keep a debtor and creditor account with God.

Miscellaneous

Inquirer, Pa. A good many years ago there was a stirring patriotic song in the form of a dialog between a boy and his father, the first verse of which was:

"Father, look up and see that flag,
How gracefully it flies!
Those pretty stripes, they seem to be Like rainbows in the skies!"

I have been unable to find it in any collection of songs here, and have thought that some of your readers might know where it could be found.

J. K., Port Elgin, Ont. We know nothing whatever of the concern mentioned in your letter and would warn you against sending your money to strangers of whom you know nothing. In these days of wild speculation you will find plenty of people who are ready to promise you fabulous wealth for a small investment. Don't trust them. As a rule, they are humbugs. Remember the old verse, which is still very good advice to-day:

"If a friend have a scheme, which he shows very clear
Will net you a cool twenty thousand a-year,
Tho' it seem like a fortune to other hands throw
Take counsel from caution and let it alone!"

Jennie D., Detroit, Mich. Christian Heinrich Heinecken, who was called the "Wonderful Infant of Lubeck," was born in 1721 and lived only five years. He was one of the most precocious children of whom we have any record. At the age of one year, he knew the chief events of the Pentateuch (so it was said); at thirteen months he was familiar with Old Testament history; a little later he knew New Testament history, and at two and-a-half years of age, he surprised questioners by his knowledge of general history and geography. At three years, according to Schoneich, his preceptor, he could speak both French and Latin. All of which, no doubt, has been greatly exaggerated by the chroniclers.

The women of Utah are enthusiastic for the movement to expel Senator Smoot. One lady writes from Salt Lake City:

Please send me a couple of copies of the Memorial to Congress against our Mormon Senator, Reed Smoot. They say that he was elected by the help of the Gentiles. But I desire to present my protest against his retaining his seat, to show that I and my friends did not vote for him.

The Memorials have been forwarded as requested.

D. P. R., Broadway, Va. If Samson was a Nazarite, holy to the Lord, must we regard his conduct as commendable?

Samson, in common with other Bible characters, is held up for our warning as much as for our admiration. He was a combination of physical strength with moral weakness. It was a crude age in which he lived, and allowance must be made for that fact, but even for that age he was deplorably weak and foolish. His faults, like those of Abraham, Jacob, David, etc., show how imperfect are the characters of good men.

NEW YORK, JULY 12, 1905

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

THE "TREE OF KNOWLEDGE" ARAB WOMEN OF KOURNA CARRYING SALT IN DATE-LEAF BASKETS THE TEMPTATION—AN ASSYRIAN SKETCH

A VISIT TO THE GARDEN OF EDEN

BY PROF. EDGAR JAMES BANKS

OF all the controversies of theologians and Biblical scholars, none have been more animated, or displayed a greater variety of opinions than those relating to the location of the Garden of Eden. Some theologians have maintained that the Garden in which our common ancestors, Adam and Eve, were created, is in heaven; others, that it rests in the "tenth layer" of atmosphere, far above the earth; a few have placed it in the moon, and others in the mountains of Central Africa.

An American has found it at the North Pole; a German has discovered it in America; the Moslem is confident that it is in Northern India; a few have located it on the shore of the Egyptian Nile; a very recent writer has excavated it in the Semaitic Penninsula, and one theologian, apparently desiring to include it in the region which he describes, has identified it with the entire earth.

Whatever the theories of the scholars of the past and present may be, the author of the second chapter of Genesis, in describing the Garden of Eden, distinctly had in mind the fertile country, as rich as any garden in the world, near the confluence of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. Scholars may search in vain for the Pison and the Gihon, the two remaining rivers of the Biblical story, or identify them with the Babylonian canals; the critic may call the story a myth, and the scientist may prove that six thousand years ago the Persian Gulf, which is growing shorter a mile every thirty years, extended far above the confluence of the rivers, and that all Babylonia, as far north as Bagdad, is the alluvial deposit of the two great streams; yet it matters little, for, according to Scripture, the Biblical Garden of Eden was in the date-bearing region between the Tigris and Euphrates.

KOURNA ON THE EUPHRATES, WITH THE TRADITIONAL "TREE OF KNOWLEDGE"

The topography of Babylonia is constantly changing. In the time of the Bagdad califs, the Tigris left its course, and, crossing Babylonia, followed along the Shatt el-Hai, to the Euphrates at Nasarieh. Of the time when it returned to its present course we have no record. Two years ago, the Euphrates escaped into the desert to the west of the ruins of Babylon, and following the Hindieh canal, returned to its old course in southern Babylonia. I have ridden for miles along its dry bed. Six thousand years ago, the two great Babylonian rivers emptied into the Persian Gulf by separate mouths. The marvel is that the Biblical description of the Garden of Eden is not at greater variance with the modern topography.

About a hundred miles north of the Persian Gulf, in the angle formed by the union of the two great rivers, the Tigris and Euphrates, and where their waters, mingling together, continue southward in the larger stream, called by the natives the Shatt el-Arab (or the Arabic river), is a bit of country which might be a perfect paradise. Among the people of Mesopotamia, it is known far and near as the Garden of Eden, where Adam and Eve were created, where they lived in happiness with themselves and the animal world until they ate the forbidden fruit and were driven away. There, too, the imaginative natives point out the Tree of Knowledge, and I have heard more than one assertion that the serpent which tempted Eve still lingers about it. Few but the native Arabs and the official Turk have ever visited the place.

It was last December, while traveling in a small bitumen boat down the Euphrates, that I stopped there to purchase provisions, and I spent half of the night beneath its palms. Kourna, the Arab village now nestling among its tall date palms, extends from the point between the rivers for a mile or more along the Tigris shore. Its population, with the exception of a few Jews, is mostly Arab of the poorest class, and numbers more than a thousand. The Ottoman government, as in all accessible places along the rivers, is represented by a Kaimakam, at present a dissipated Turk named Yakub (Jacob) Effendi, with a few assistants and soldiers to enforce his demands. A generation ago, a Bagdad Christian occupied a house near the point, but now its ruin is the most conspicuous thing in the village. Strange as it may seem, when first I stepped from my boat upon the shore at the Garden of Eden, I inquired for the telegraph office! A station of the international line which follows down the Tigris and connects Europe with India, is there. The central point of the village is the serai, or government headquarters, a two-story brick building, provided with grated windows. The best of the houses are of adobe, or mud, with a roof of the trunks of date trees, covered with reeds and dirt. A few of the other houses are constructed of bunches of reeds, arranged in double rows like the columns of a Greek temple, and covered over with reeds and dirt, making a delightfully shady and airy place for the hot summer days, but the most common house is simply a reed mat laid over a rounded framework of reeds.

The spot is a veritable garden. The date-palm flourishes wonderfully upon the rich soil, and during the terrific moist heat of summer, when the thermometer

CONTINUED ON PAGE 607

SERAI OR GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT KOURNA

A NATIVE HOUSE IN THE GARDEN OF EDEN

THE AMERICAN PULPIT

SERMON BY

Rev. Charles M. Sheldon*

How the Atonement Saves

TEXT—John 11: 49-52; "It is expedient for you that one man should die for the people" etc.

THE atonement is not altogether a mystery. In a certain sense, very many people at different times in the history of the word, have died for others. In one sense very true—Abraham Lincoln died for this nation. During the war he carried upon his own heart, not the individual burden and care of one lover of his country, but in a certain true sense, he bore the entire burden of the nation, and when he died, in a certain sense, his martyrdom was woven into the history of this republic, not as the death of an individual dying by himself, but the death of one who, by his national integrity, and his bearing up of the ideals of a national life, will always serve as an inspiration to all young men. The thought of Lincoln's life and death helps to keep young men to-day from doing things that will dishonor the State. In that sense they are saved from the guilt of treason, from the sin of dishonor to the nation. Florence Nightingale, in a certain sense, gave her life for thousands of others. Elizabeth Fry gave her life for the nation in its prison reform. John Howard, visiting the prisons, and sending out his plea for the reform of the wrongs in English prisons, gave his life for the nation. David Livingstone, sacrificing his ease and pleasure that he might bring light into the Dark Continent, gave his life for that Continent. Carey and Judson and John Paton and Mary Reed, and the long and glorious list of martyred missionaries, have, in a certain true sense, given their lives for the nations which they have served.

Jesus Forgives Sin

The distinction between the atonement of Jesus and that of these others whom we have mentioned, lies in the fact that Jesus alone forgives sin. "Who can forgive sin but God alone?" The missionaries who gladly threw their lives down on the dark soil of heathendom were powerless to forgive sins. This the Son of Man could do, and did do, and it makes his redemption of the world infinitely superior to that of any other person.

The attractive power of Jesus to save the whole world lies in the fact, first, that he is the Son of God. Sixteen years ago there was a peculiar accident on a New England road on a high embankment which slopes to a river. A heavy Mogul engine, one of the heaviest patterns of that type, through a landslide beneath the rails, fell over and rolled down the embankment into the river. It was not damaged to any extent, and the railroad wished to recover its property. It brought up the road what it thought was a proper apparatus for dragging the engine up the slope and putting it on the track, but when the power was applied, it was found to be insufficient. Chains, tackling of various kinds, and the engines for the motive power itself, proved to be so weak, that first one part, and then another, broke down under the strain, and the entire outfit was sent back to the shops, and an entirely new engine with hoisting derrick, sent to the embankment in its place. The minute this new engine appeared, all the men who had been at work in a vain endeavor to lift the ponderous engine out of its position at the bottom of the river, exclaimed: "That is something like." "Now we have it." The first attempt proved successful. The engine and the hoisting apparatus proved to be more than sufficient, and the ponderous weight of several tons was lifted out of the water and up the bank as easily as a child would lift a toy.

The Power to Elevate

The world has no uneasiness after two thousand years of Christ concerning the power of his life to lift lives out of the broken places of sin. No one has any need to apologize or excuse or antieipate weakness in the case of Christ confronting broken-down humanity. He is all-powerful to save. "He is able to save to the uttermost." "He is able to save to the ends of the earth." "He came to seek and to save that which was lost." The centuries have witnessed no diminution of his power, although it has been put to the most severe test. Consider the strain which would be put upon any human being to face the tremendous sin of the whole world and lift on it for twenty centuries. What is the use of quibbling about the metaphysics of theological distinctions in regard to the person of Christ? It is time after all these years of proving and testing of his power for the Church of Christ to assert his divine Lordship. He who calmed the tempest by a word as he rose out of his need of sleep and faced the howling wind, has just as calmly in thousands of instances since hushed the wilder hurricane of passion and unrest and trouble of the sin-sick and sorrowing world; and there is to-day a reserve power about his ability to draw all men unto him, which is magnificent in its promise of future victory.

Jesus Knows our Needs

The world will never be attracted to a human redeemer who has no marks of the power of Almighty God. It ought to make no difference with us if Jesus exhibited all the marks of the human life, meeting our temptations as we have to meet them, growing weary in his physical structure on account of the tremendous day's work, and walking along the path of physical death in order to comfort us. With all this true of him, he was God Immanuel. The manifestation of God's divinity in Christ through the human form, does not detract from his dignity or his power. It is simply one more manifestation of it. If God exhibits his power through the creation of a tree, or a flower, or the planets, or the laws of the universe, how much more might he, if he chose, exhibit his power by becoming man himself, as he did in the person of our Lord.

And it is an absolute impossibility that Jesus should save a nation from sin, and be nothing but a good man. Who can forgive sins but God alone? We all of us need to be conscious of the sublime fact that we have an all-sufficient Redeemer. The missionary of the Cross of Christ can go to any country, to any people and calmly say, "All that is good in your religion is caught up and made perfect in the person of Christ. If Buddha contained many elements of goodness, if Confucius taught many maxims of righteousness, if even Mohammed had some truth with vast error, Christ himself, the sinless one, contains all that these possess, and far more." We have sung that old hymn, "All hail the power of Jesus name, Crown him Lord of all," lo these many years. Let the Church and the Christian disciple believe absolutely and unhesitatingly in the divine power of Christ to draw the nations to himself, and let it believe that this power is resident in him because he is the best and most perfect expression of God to a sinful world. I am not saved by philosophy. I am not saved simply because Christ was a good example for moral conduct, but I am saved because Christ is able to save, because he is God. It takes that much power to save. A world lying in sin cannot be lifted out of it by any human philosophy, cannot be rescued from its terrible condition by any precepts, cannot be dragged out of the depths to which it has sunk by any shining example. The strong arm of Almighty Omnipotence must reach down and lift up, and it did so in the Christ, and it did for all time. Hence his own consciousness of his almighty power when he said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Such a statement could come only out of a most profound knowledge of a most profound and undying power to save.

Adapted to all Conditions

Second. The attractive power of Jesus to draw the nations to himself and save them with a perfect salvation, is due to the fact that his teachings, which include his own character, fit the individual need of mankind. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God. There is not one that doeth good, no not one." The fact of a universal condition of transgression calls for the fact of universal atonement, and while it is true that each individual is always saved along the line of his own individual need, it is no less true that every individual has the same needs in the widest sense as every other. Now it is an historical fact that Jesus combined in his own person all the needs of the entire human race. There are certain things which all the nations need alike. The differences between them on account of racial characteristics, of climate, customs, inherited habits, etc., cannot destroy the fact of their common need of righteousness.

Jesus presents to all the nations of the world, love as the answer to all problems and the foundation bas[is] all human growth and development. Wherever C[hrist] has been adopted and accepted by any people, and [its] principles even in part have been put to work, the[re] nation has begun to grow. Its redemption has be[gun]. It makes no difference what the nation may be his[torically], it can be permanently changed by the introd[uc]tion of the Christ life. In 1831 the Trade Islands [were] peopled by a race of fighting, depraved savages, [who] for centuries had lived the same life. John Willi[ams], the missionary, went there, and at the end of ele[ven] years the people had been so marvelously transfor[med] that he was able to say, "I found these people [all] heathen, and I leave them all Christian." The nat[ives] of the Sandwich Islands, when Captain Cook first fo[und] them were given up to cannibalism and every form [of] heathen idolatry. When the American Board [had] done its marvelous work of fifty years, the entire po[pu]lation of the various islands was civilized, sitting at [the] feet of Christ, clothed and in its right mind. Where [the] Christ has been accepted by any people, he has dra[wn] them to him, and immediately the development o[f] civilization, the highest known to the earth, has b[een] begun. The universality of Christ's remedy for sin [has] been proved again and again in the lives of the races [of] the earth.

All-Compelling Attraction

The attractive power of Jesus is the attractive pow[er] of that which keeps the magnetic needle point alw[ays] towards the north, no matter where the compass is c[ar]ried, on the Atlantic or the Pacific, a thousand mi[les] north of the equator or a thousand miles south of [it]. The mariner can trust it, in whatever part of the gl[obe] he may be, to tell the truth and point in the sa[me] direction. So the races of the world, wherever th[ey] may be, must turn irresistibly towards the one gr[eat] and compelling attraction of the universe, which [is] Christ. No one has risen since who equals his univer[sal] manhood. No one has been able to offer to the worl[d] better system of redemption. All that God is waiti[ng] for now is for the world to accept the Christ and beg[in] to enjoy the application of his teaching.

The nations that reject this redemption are perishin[g] and will perish. The nations that accept it and live [up] to its life, are living, and will continue to live. Bo[th] as we are within the compass of at least a nominal[ly] Christian country, it is easy to sneer at the so-call[ed] weaknesses and shortcomings of a religion which [we] ourselves often do not practice, but easily criticize [in] the lives of others. But step out of the United Stat[es] into the heart of Turkey, or Russia, or Spain, or an[y] other nation where Christ has not been allowed to [go] in any degree his redemptive work, and instantly you wi[ll] notice the tremendous difference. We go our ways da[y] after day, year after year, at peace with our neighbor[s]. In spite of the fact that lawlessness in certain direction[s] is allowed to prevail because godless men are in autho[r]ity, as a whole, it is an unquestionable fact that we i[n] this country enjoy a degree of peace, of protection fro[m] lawlessness, and liberty to live our lives in happiness, [to] a degree not known by millions of other people wh[o] live in Christless countries. The outrages perpetrate[d] in the heart of Russia, Spain or Turkey would not fo[r] one moment be permitted in any State in the Unite[d] States, and our condition is absolutely due to the fac[t] that Christ's principles have prevailed, and the natio[n] in so far as it is safe and happy and just, literally owe[s] its salvation to that fact.

A Living Force

The atonement, therefore, is not a visionary or mys[te]tical theory of some theological abstraction to be dis[-] cussed in the class-room, but it is a practical livin[g] force at work to-day among the nations, and redemp[-] tion of the national life is not a saving of the soul afte[r] death for some future heaven, but an actual physica[l] and spiritual uplift going on all the time, just so fas[t] and so far as the principles of the Redeemer are incor[-] porated in the national life. If, for example, thi[s] republic should begin to obey the teachings of Christ i[n] regard to the love of one's neighbor as himself, and [to] abolish the saloon as an existent evil, because it is a[n] institution which does not obey this rule, this whol[e]

* Preached at Topeka, Kans.

nation would at once begin to enjoy a practical physical prosperity such as it has never known. It is something which Christian people need constantly to learn, that their religion is good for every day, and embraces every act of life and adds beauty and power, and comfort and happiness for every department of the republic. So that when the theologian says it was expedient for Jesus to die in order that the nation might be saved, interpreted in terms of every-day living, it means literally physical, intellectual and spiritual enlargement of life. Thus God gives to the world constant living witness of his power, and we are not saved for a future heaven, but we are saved now.

A Wide Experience

Third. The attractive power of Jesus to draw men to himself and to save the nations, is due to the fact not only that he is the representative from God and has the universal remedy for sin, but because his own human experience covers the entire range of every other human experience. This makes him the hope of the world, it makes him the courage of the world, it makes him the example of the world. The Son of Man "was tempted at all points like as we are." "He bore our burdens in his own body on the cross." In the Temptation he faced every experience that any human being could have and fought out the battle on its own ground just as we have to. If you could only realize once that no trouble has ever come to you so great that the Son of God did not also know it, that no ambition has ever been thwarted which was not paralleled once by his; if you could once have borne in upon you the tremendous reality of the struggle which he waged for the sake of the world when he overcame Satan—that consciousness of ultimate victory would give you the "peace of God which passeth all understanding," and tide you over the period of passion or of possible defeat.

The example of Jesus in treading our human path has given to his disciples in every age the courage to tread the same. The track is bordered by sacrifice. This is through the desert of Africa, where the caravan have passed for centuries. a white streak which is visible for miles. As the traveler approaches, he wonders what this broad white band can be as it stretches across the yellow sands shimmering in the unspeakable heat, and he is astonished as he draws nearer to find that this path, this glistering white ribbon across the desert as far as the eye could reach, is made of the skeletons of animals and men that have perished in their track across the desert. One would think living caravans of men as they enter upon this path would shrink back anticipatory of a possible fate similar to that which has overtaken so many who have tried this path before. Yet the caravans continue to tread calmly along the same way, because it is the best way in the end; and the Christian disciple in every age of the world has not feared to walk along the way of death, because the great Leader has gone that way himself and laid down his own life in order to show the whole world that the last great enemy is nothing to be feared.

